W. T. C., Newell, W. Va. As explained re cently in THE MAIL-BAG, in the ancient churc the term "elect" was sometimes applied (1) t the whole body of baptized Christians; (2) t those elected to baptism; (3) to the newly baptized; (4) to the saints or those who live purely and whose memories are venerated or account of their sanctity. The prophecy o Matthew 24, Mark 13, and Luke 21 referred t the impending destruction of Jerusalem and includes the warnings suggested by it to pre pare for Christ's second coming. Luke 18: is the application of the parable to show how God will redeem from oppression those who have been persecuted for his sake and who are dear to him. In a general way, the "elect" are the sanctified—those chosen to salvation through sanctification of the spirit as explained in Peter 1: 2 and similar passages. They are the special vessels of the Spirit chosen in God's good pleasure to carry out his purposes. This election is of grace and not of works (see Rom. 9: 18, 22, 23). In all ages such men have been evidently chosen by the Lord as his witnesses. This choice is at once an expression of his sovereignty and his grace. Paul himself was so chosen. On the other hand, it should not be forgotten that salvation is by grace. The whole subject of election has been one of acute controversy for ages and has given rise to many differences of opinion. The attitude of Christians with regard to the Second Coming should be one of prayer, expectancy and constant preparation.

An Exceptional Opportunity

ANY ONE, not now a subscriber, wishing to avail himself or herself of the advantages of a Four Months' Trial Order, on the terms set forth on pages 787 to 790 of this issue, may fill out one of the coupons and send it, accompanied by twenty-five cents, to this office, and it will afford us pleasure to enter the name accordingly. It is our desire to introduce THE CHRISTIAN HERALD in every Christian home where a religious paper is not now regularly received.

* * *

The monopoly of large circulations need not, in a Christian community, be necessarily accorded to secular papers, and there is no valid reason why a clean, beautifully illustrated, carefully edited, well printed journal like THE CHRISTIAN HERALD should not stand in the front rank, or even take the lead. Several of the popular magazines of the day have passed the million mark. Why should we not have our million? We represent the best Cause in the world! With a million subscribers we could do more for this cause in this country than any other known agency.

This nation can work wonders. It can be the means of converting the whole world. If it upholds the Banner of the Cross, its beneficent influence will be felt to the very ends of the earth. A larger circulation of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD will contribute to this result, and the present movement is, consequently, in the right direction. The friends we are now putting on our list will soon appreciate the fact that THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is indeed what has been claimed for it, the brightest and best family paper in the world. In due time they will feel in their hearts the effect of the soul-inspiring messages from all parts of the earth, which THE CHRISTIAN HERALD voices each week, and before long their interest will be thoroughly aroused in behalf of the Master's cause, and their active co-operation secured for the extension of the Redeemer's kingdom.

Esther James, St. Louis, Mo. I am a little girl, eight years old, my grandpa takes THE CHRISTIAN HERALD and I read in it about the poor at Mont-Lawn. Feeling sorry for them, I went to all my little cousins and asked them all to help me to make up a dollar to send a poor little girl to Mont-Lawn. . . . I want THE CHRISTIAN HERALD to know about my little Cousin Herald; he came to us on the 6th of June, and he is named after THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, for we all love it so much, and that is the reason we named the baby "Herald."

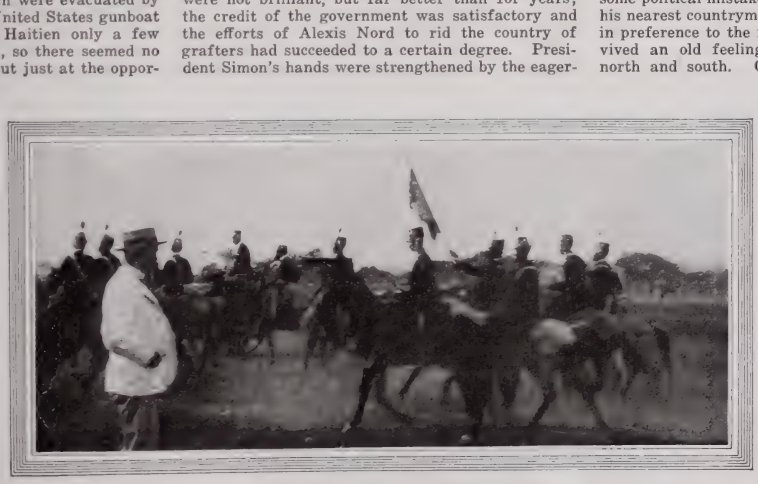
Little Miss Esther's letter is welcome, and this journal feels duly honored. We pray that Cousin Herald may grow up to be a noble man and a thorough Christian. We are sending a souvenir to be kept for him until he is big enough to read it. He is a fortunate baby in having such a fine lot of cousins. Here is list of those who joined Esther in providing for her tenement waif at Mont-Lawn: Jennie Lewis, David Lincoln James, Hannah Thomas, David John Thomas; and of course Cousin Herald, too. "Jesus loves the little children."

NEW YORK, AUGUST 9, 1911

THE · CHRISTIAN · HERALD

A WEEKLY ILLUSTRATED NEWSPAPER FOR THE HOME

A Guard of Infantry at the President's Palace



A Parade of Haitian Troops at Port-au-Prince

HAITI AGAIN FACES A REVOLT

HAITI, the little Black Republic of the West Indies, is once more in the throes of rebellion. There have been periodical uprisings in Haiti many times within the memory of those now living, but the latest revolt against the government of President Simon seems to have been planned on a larger scale than usual. The revolt began on July 9, when the revolutionists took possession of Cape Haitien and Fort Liberté, which were evacuated by the government troops. The United States gunboat Petrel had sailed from Cape Haitien only a few hours before the trouble began, so there seemed no protection for the foreigners, but just at the opportune moment the cruising yacht of Mr. Evans R. Dick of New York steamed into the harbor. When it was reported that Haiti's one warship was about to bombard the rebels in the town, Mr. Dick informed the officials that he would not permit any such thing to take place, and that he would protect the foreigners.

At eight o'clock that night fighting broke out in the streets. The searchlight of the yacht was kept playing on the house in which the Americans and other foreigners who were brought in from work on the railway had collected with their families. At daybreak, however, the government was completely overthrown, and the revolutionists occupied the town. As great disorder prevailed in the town, all the American women were taken aboard the yacht for safety. Our navy department immediately took the matter in hand, and dispatched the scout cruiser Chester from Long Island Sound, the Des Moines from Boston, and the Peoria from Porto Rico to Haitian waters. These ships, with the Petrel already there, will give thorough protection to foreign interests on the island. According to the latest reports, the Haitian Government had decided to declare a blockade of the ports of Fort Liberté, Gonaives, and St. Marc, which are in the hands of the revolutionists. The rebel forces on July 24 were within ten miles of Port-au-Prince, the capital, and it was expected that President Simon might have to flee.

President Simon and His Bodyguard Leaving the Palace

A gentleman in New York, long officially connected with Haitian affairs, gives this explanation of the situation antecedent to the present uprising:

"When General Antoine Simon became President of Haiti, he had a fairly clear situation left by President Alexis Nord. The finances of the country were not brilliant, but far better than for years; the credit of the government was satisfactory and the efforts of Alexis Nord to rid the country of grafters had succeeded to a certain degree. President Simon's hands were strengthened by the eagerness of capitalists in the United States and Europe to invest money in Haiti for railroads, harbor improvements and accessories to cut and export hardwoods, etc. Unfortunately, however, he did not administer his office wisely in the interest of the republic. The credit of the country was used to make a loan of $15,000,000, of which about $12,000,000 were paid over in March of this year to the Haitian Government; the balance remained in the pockets of the loaning syndicate. Of the paid-in money, not a dollar is left. To pass this loan and a new concession for a so-called national bank (which is, by the way, in the hands of this same loaning syndicate) it is common knowledge in Haiti that every member of the government has been approached and influenced. The exiled politicians of the little republic who could not participate, would not look on without envy and protest; and the efforts to start a revolution were the result.

"The revolutionary movement was accelerated by some political mistakes made by Simon, who favored his nearest countrymen from the south of the island in preference to the men from the north. This revived an old feeling of antagonism between the north and south. On account of important railroad concessions given to citizens of the United States and to Europeans, the political disturbance in Haiti now attracts more attention from foreign governments than formerly. Practically, it is really immaterial who is at the helm of affairs in Haiti. There will be uprisings and revolutions until the real cause is taken away, and the control of the finances by some strong and responsible power is assured. Once the means of 'grafting' through the control of the custom houses is taken away, the principal, if not the sole, reason for political disturbances will be removed.

"If Antoine Simon falls, the two principal candidates would be Antoine Fermin and General Lecomte. Fermin is at heart anti-foreign; but in course of years he may have changed. It is also possible that a combination has already been made between Lecomte and Fermin in case of success for the revolutionary arms."

On July 27, the rebel troops in considerable force were menacing the capital. A strong rebel army was within a short march and President Simon's departure was hourly expected. The United States cruiser Des Moines arrived at Port-au-Prince on July 27 and three American ships (the gunboats Peoria and Petrel and the cruiser Chester) were on duty at Haitian ports, forming a sufficient force for the protection of American and foreign interests.

The American Pulpit

A SERMON BY

Rev. J. H. Ainsworth*

THE ART OF APPRECIATION

TEXT: Rom. 13:7—"Honor to whom honor is due."

IN MODERN life there is far too much cynicism and disparagement, and far too little appreciation and encouragement. One of the greatest needs of the world to-day is the spirit of the Master when he said: "She hath done what she could." John Ruskin says: "The question is not what a man can scorn, but what he can love." That is a very great truth. The question is not what a man can scorn and disparage and find fault with, but what he can love and value and appreciate. If we wish to discover a man's character we must find out that which he appreciates, and then we have a key to his inner life.

Tom Hood sang of "the rarity of Christian charity under the sun," and there is another thing equally scarce, and that is encouragement, cheer, praise. When an irksome duty has been bravely done, when some strenuous effort has been nobly made, or a difficult cross has been manfully shouldered, we do not waste many words in generous appreciation, lest (we say) the praised should become proud and conceited. The great business in life of far too many nowadays seems to be to keep other people humble! So we are slow to speak in kindly and generous terms even when conscience and duty cry aloud to us, saying: "Speak that kindly word, express that appreciation of yours, cheer that brother for a deed so brave."

Alas! we are niggardly of our words of praise, but if there is fault to be found how eloquent we can be, how the words leap to our lips! We are always more ready to take up a tale of blame than a tale of praise. Is it not one of the saddest things conceivable that bitter words come so glibly, and kindly words have to be dragged so slowly from the unwilling heart? When we cannot commend it is generally well to hold our peace; but when we can give the word of cheer, it is a crime of the baser sort to withhold it. If we see anything that is worthy of praise let us speak of it. Even if we cannot do a worthy deed ourselves, let us not fail to commend one who does. Praise is a power for good; both God and man prize it. No true prayer is complete without praise.

The Sunshine of Praise

Mrs. Stowe states the truth effectively when she says: "Praise is sunshine; it warms, it inspires, it promotes growth; blame and rebuke are rain and hail; they beat down and bedraggle, even though they may at times be necessary."

John Ruskin in his book Sesame and Lilies says: "The greatest efforts of the race have always been traceable to the love of praise." "We live by admiration," says another writer, but I prefer to say: "We live not by admiration but by appreciation." For lack of appreciation many a fine spirit has fainted by the way, many a loving heart has shut itself up in loneliness, many an aspiring soul has fallen short of success. A man does a piece of work in the home, or the church, or the community, and he does it with all the earnestness and skill of which he is capable, and he feels he has done it well, and yet not one word of encouragement comes to him. His enthusiasm is chilled, and he says: "What's the use of excelling if nobody cares?" "There is nothing more pathetic in life than to see men, women, and children every day hungering and thirsting with the deepest, direst longing, while all around are those who could satisfy the yearning, if only they would let fall a few gracious, kindly words. Alas! these words are never spoken, and hearts pine that might have been inspired to do magnificent deeds, and lives that might have made immortal music pass into the dark and hopeless silence."

And it is a remarkable fact that we all need appreciation—the strong as well as the weak, the rich as well as the poor, the hopeful as well as the despairing. The people most in need of praise are often those whom we least suspect, and therefore life is crowded with opportunities to hearten, stimulate and encourage others. The mother needs it. Household duties and household cares are her portion day by day, and when the members of the family return in the evening they should not forget that though they have been out in life's conflict, the mother too has had her struggle, and she needs a word of cheer to keep the heart fresh and strong. The teacher needs it. Many teachers at the close of the day feel like saying: "I have labored in vain, and spent my strength for nought." Teachers both in week-day school and Sunday School after having given their best often feel as if it had gone for nothing. Therefore say a kindly word to the teacher. The old people need it—the men and women who once were the very centre of the circle in which they moved. Nothing went on without them, and now they sit at the corner of the fireside and feel sometimes as if they were cast aside and useless. Let us give them our appreciation now and not wait till they are gone before we wake up to their real worth.

The Preacher's Need

The preacher needs it, yes, even the preacher! Ministers are very human, and very susceptible to the encouragement which an appreciative people offer them.

The Rev. R. W. Dale, the great Congregational preacher of Birmingham, England, at one time went to Australia for a three months' vacation. When he returned his people gave him a welcome home. The church was decorated and amongst other things was a banner bearing these words: "We love you, and we tell you so." No wonder Dr. Dale was such a great preacher. A congregation to a large extent makes or mars the preacher and his work. The mere negative attitude, the critical and the repressive, has blighted many a man's life. Dr. Jowett, now of New York, tells the story that when Ian Maclaren was in his first pastorate in Edinburgh he was assistant to a man who chilled his young colleague with negative counsels and with the cold and blighting atmosphere of constant criticism. The young preacher began to feel that the ministry was not his appointed sphere, and he almost decided to abandon it. Then came a call to the secluded ministry of Glenalmond and here he passed out of negations into affirmatives. The atmosphere became genial and inviting. The young minister still stumbled in his speech and was often awkward in his delivery. But mark how an old Highlander spoke to him after a more than usually difficult morning: "If you are a-getting fast for a word or a thought, just give out a psalm and we'll sing it, for we are all a-loving you and praying for you." And that atmosphere made John Watson a preacher. Years and years ago a Methodist lay preacher was returning home to the city after a hard day's work in the country. He was discouraged and resolved on his homeward journey to give up preaching. He was trudging along in the dark, and passed through a village, when a door opened, and a woman called out: "Robert Brierley, is that you?" "Yes," he said, "poor old Robert is going home once more." She replied: "God bless you, for under a sermon you preached I was converted. I shall always bless the Lord for you, Robert." It was just the word he needed, and he went on his way singing and rejoicing in God. All his thoughts of giving up preaching had fled like mist before the rising sun. The preacher needs a word of cheer; indeed he does. And of course there are many others, men in public life—honest politicians, righteous judges, conscientious editors, faithful doctors and nurses, the earnest artisans—these and a host of others could serve God and humanity all the better if they received their due meed of praise.

The World's Failure

Is it not pathetic to remember how the world has failed to appreciate its great ones, till long after they had been in the grave? Columbus was denied civil treatment at the hands of his countrymen, and placed in irons; but how we honor him to-day! Galileo was threatened with the dungeon of darkness. Yet a century or more after his death neither money nor genius were spared in erecting monuments to his greatness. Joan of Arc, the maid of Orleans, was burned at the stake in 1431. Four hundred and eighty years later the world is engaged in erecting monuments to her memory. Turner, that master artist, was not appreciated while he lived. The world of his day called his paintings "color blotches." To-day the rich pay fabulous prices for his works, and the highest fame has come to him—seventy years too late. Millet painted in Paris his masterpiece, "The Gleaners." When finished it was exhibited in the Salon of that city in 1857. By a very few it was hailed as one of the masterpi of modern art; by many it was shamefully critici With difficulty a purchaser was found at two t sand francs. Twenty-two years later it was bou for three hundred thousand francs and presente the Louvre. But then the great painter had l sleeping for many years in the little cemeter Chailby.

The lesson for us is to appreciate the living w they are living. Try and see the best in peo Look for instances of honor, purity, industry, alty, family devotion, self-sacrifice, and you find them among your friends. Do not wait u your friends are dead or dying before you begi appreciate them. Do it now.

We sometimes appreciate when it is too l Bereavement is most bitter when we feel that we not do all we could for the dear one who has g from us, when

> We think with vain regret of some fond word
> That once we might have said, and they have heard.

We love our own; of course we do; but alas! we often fail to say so until the loved one has gone. lady was dying. "George, my dear," she breathed out, "I am a poor silly girl, but I alw loved you." Then she was gone. Her husb tried to prevent her saying more, and he was go to tell her all she had been to him, but it was late. Death prevented him, and how he mour afterwards, to think she had gone without know how precious she had been to him! We crown departed with laurels, and with quivering lips speak of their worth, but what a difference it wo have made if, like Mary, we had broken our alab ter box while they had been in the heat of the c flict! How much better to praise the living t to eulogize the dead. Show kindness now. App ciate their worth now. Encourage them now. dear little girl approached the lifeless form of grandfather, and taking his cold hand exclaim "Dear grandpa, you know I was always good to while you lived." It is worth more than a world be able to say that to our departed friends. fulsome praise of the dead can bring such comf as that.

Do We Appreciate?

Where do we stand this morning in relation to t theme? Are we cultivating this art of appreciati

Do we appreciate God's gifts to us? Do we preciate the joy of living? Do we appreciate spiritual heritage? Do we appreciate the gift Jesus—God's unspeakable gift to all the children men? Does your heart well up with joy as y think of the "sweetest name on mortal tongue," his winsome words, his beautiful deeds, his pure a perfect life, and his all-atoning death? Is th any one of us here this morning who really app ciates the death of Jesus on the cross? Try to thi of it—"Redeemed not with the blood of bulls a goats, but with the precious blood of the Son God," the pure and spotless One dying for c demned and guilty sinners. "Glory be to God, died for me," said a poor woman in a testimo meeting. Do we realize that truth—"He di me"? Alone he trod the winepress—for you a for me. Alone he bore the pain—for you and me. Behold him, the Perfect One dying, the S less One suffering for you and for me. Behold t Lamb of God, which taketh away your sin and mi "Who his own self bare our sin in his body on t tree." "He was wounded for our transgressions, was bruised for our iniquities; the chastisement our peace was laid upon him, and by his stripes are healed."

The peace of God is in our hearts. Do we appr ciate that? If so, why do we not sing for joy, a tell it all around? Thousands upon thousands wo give almost all they possess for peace, for rest heart and conscience. And this runs through our spiritual possessions—saving grace, pray communion with God, reading of the Word, pub worship, preaching, godly lives—do we apprecia all these? Let us get right with God. "There mu needs be in the soul grandeur to perceive grandeu courage to appreciate courage, beauty to apprecia beauty, a noble soul to appreciate a noble soul, Christlike man to appreciate Christlike things Get very near to God, and you shall learn the secr of appreciation.

* Pastor, Congregational Church, Cloverdale, Calif.

PEACE

SOUND it out o'er many waters,
Voice it o'er the land to-day
To old Eden's sons and daughters
Wheresoe'er they dwell or stray;
Paint it on a banner golden,
Fling it wide to every breeze,
Tell it to the cities olden,
Tropic isles and frozen seas.

Blazon it with trumpet voices
Where they build the men-o'-war,
Where brisk industry rejoices,
Ever planning on before;
Where the mighty armies drilling
With the rifle, gun, and drum—
All a nation's ardor filling—
That the Day of Peace must come.

Keenest swords to plowshares beaten,
And to pruning hooks their spears,
Where the waving acres sweeten,
And the vine in plenty bears.
Youth no more to train for battles,
Men no more to fight and die,
Where the cannon's thunder rattles
And the bullets "ping" is nigh.

Sown the earth with tumults deadly,
Strewn the air with groans and cries,
While grim Passion's cruel medley
Darkens horror to the skies—
Sweeping to us grand and stately,
Nears a day we all may see,
When we shall, rejoicing greatly,
From the lust of war be free.

MARIE BATTERHAM LINDESAY.

Chattanooga, Tenn.

Wouldn't Lie to Keep His Job

AN incident is related of the rise in life of Frederick T. Gates, the confidential adviser, almoner and private business manager of John D. Rockefeller. Gates' first employment was that of letter writer or secretary for a local banker at Highland, Kan. One day the banker dictated a letter to him in which he sought to evade a certain responsibility by making his communication appear to have been written some days previous. He instructed the boy to antedate the letter, and the latter respectfully requested that he do it himself. The banker bade him do as he was told, declaring that he (the banker) was responsible for the letter and for its date as well. But young Gates refused, although he felt that it would cost him his position. "I can't make my hand perform a lie just because you are responsible, sir," he said. "As well ask me to steal from a safe for the same reason." To his surprise he was not discharged. Instead, on the first of the month following, his wages were doubled and the banker ever after trusted him as he had never before trusted any one in a matter of business. Thus truthfulness was the foundation stone of what has turned out to be a successful business career.

Men Who Cry on the Street

"I WAS standing on the street corner to-day waiting for a car," said a caller at the Deaconess Home in Chicago, "and I saw a man walking along with bowed head, crying! No, he had not been drinking. He looked like a respectable working man of middle age. I wanted to speak to him, but—I didn't. What do you suppose was the matter?"

The deaconess whom he was addressing said nothing; but she knew why some "respectable middle-aged men" walk the city streets crying. Visions rose before her: A man who had just visited his boy, in jail for stealing—a man who had been hunting work for three weeks and "lost out" every time, till the dearly loved wife and baby at home were literally starving—a man who had just had a flashlight of his own degradation and was comparing it with the innocence of the clean-hearted lad that used to cuddle into his mother's lap. The men go weeping along the streets sometimes; but oftener far, they go too dead at heart to weep.

Businessman's Luck

By EUGENE THWING

ONE of the fascinations of business lies in its uncertainty. As Dr. Van Dyke said of angling, so many a man has said of business, "'Tis an affair of luck," and the great majority get on the wrong side of the luck.

For every fisherman who brings back his basket full of shining fish, there are hundreds who catch nothing, but somehow they've enjoyed it, and they always go again. Some mercantile agencies claim that of every hundred concerns starting in business, ninety fail. Not long ago a mercantile agency published a list of failures in the United States, showing 51,460 failures during the preceding four years, an average of nearly 13,000 a year.

Of course the unimaginative critic declares solemnly that the failures are due, in nine-tenths of the cases, to "mismanagement." You can't make the men who have failed believe that. You can't make the men who are starting new enterprises to-day believe that success or failure rests wholly with them and is not very largely dependent upon conditions over which they have no control.

. . .

WITH the fate of a business enterprise, as with fishing, they say, like Dr. Van Dyke:

> No amount of preparation in the matter of rods and lines and hooks and nets and creels can change its essential character. No excellence of skill in casting the delusive fly or adjusting the tempting bait upon the hook can make the result secure. You may reduce the chances, but you can not eliminate them. There are a thousand points at which fortune may intervene. The state of the weather, the height of the water, the appetite of the fish, the presence or absence of other anglers—all these interminable elements enter into the reckoning of your success. There is no combination of stars in the firmament by which you can forecast the piscatorial future. When you go a-fishing, you just take your chances; you offer yourself as a candidate for anything that may be going; you try your luck.

It would be very easy to make the businessman's parallel, step by step, with this description of the fisherman's luck; every reader can do it for himself. We are accustomed to hearing Jones spoken of as "the luckiest fellow; everything he touches turns into money." On the other hand, "Smith was all right, a squarer man never lived, and he has real ability; but luck was against him."

. . .

NOT much can be accomplished by preaching against "luck" as an element to be reckoned with in business. Every man will believe in it, or in his own cleverness—and that isn't much better—until he has something better to believe in. Even the hard-headed, well-seasoned business man is apt to be looking for a lucky strike, or to anathematize his luck when things go wrong. The lucky pocket piece, the good or bad omen, the mascot, all are regarded with some degree of respect by men who certainly are old enough to know better.

. . .

NOT long ago, a well-known business man in New York was passing through a period of great stress. The life of his concern was hanging in the balance. Great interests, involving many persons, were at stake. He was fighting a determined battle against odds. Every step was taken only after the most careful thought and planning.

One day a large note was due at the bank. It represented part of the account of one of his principal creditors. Already the note had been renewed twice. The creditor was angry, and had served positive notice that under no circumstances would the note be renewed again. It must be paid now, or the work on existing contracts would stop. That meant disaster. No matter, the creditor had fully weighed the matter and had decided to stop, and get what he could out of the wreck rather than go on and increase the account.

It was the day before the note was due. For several days the man had tried to see the creditor and adjust the matter. No interview would be granted. He had written, but the reply was only a curt ultimatum that no adjustment except payment would be considered. Telephone communications met the same result. If disaster must come let it come; the creditor had already made up his mind to accept it; there was nothing more to be said.

. . .

ON THE afternoon of the day before the note would be due, the business man decided to make one last effort to see his creditor in a personal interview. He learned that the man he wanted was at his office. Before starting, and even on the way, the business man, as his habit was, had prayed earnestly for help; he had prayed that the heart of the man he was to see might be softened toward him, and that his own temper might be kept under control, so that no hard words should be spoken. Yet his heart was very anxious.

About three o'clock he came out of the subway and turned down a side street. The sun was hot. Just a few hundred feet beyond was his destination. Suddenly he glanced down, and at his feet lay a bright new pin shining in the sunlight. How much can happen in an instant of time! This business man was not superstitious, yet instinctively he stooped to pick up the pin, saying to himself the childish rhyme, "See a pin and pick it up; all that day you'll have good luck." Surely he wanted good luck that day, and here almost at the threshold of his most desperate need was a good omen.

. . .

THEN, instantly, before his fingers touched the little omen, came another thought, flashing into his brain. Clear and decisive as the voice of one who would snatch him back from the act of foolishness, came the words, "My help is in the Lord which made heaven and earth. He will not suffer thy foot to be moved."

The man straightened up and a thrill ran through him. "What a fool! grasping at a pin, when I can lean upon the Lord which made heaven and earth!"

His shoulders went back and his head was lifted to the skies; his feet trod the pavement like a conqueror; his jaw squared, and his eyes sparkled. In such fashion he entered the office of his creditor. The interview was one of the friendliest and most successful he ever had. Not only was the note renewed, but the creditor actually promised financial assistance outside of the note.

I have the facts from the man himself. He believes the Lord spoke to him just as truly as he did to Saul on the road to Damascus. You may be sure what his idea is regarding "business man's luck."

CHARITY

CHARITY, sweet Charity!
May we follow after thee!
May our thought and word ever be,
Charity, sweet Charity!

Charity, sweet Charity!
Let us covet earnestly
All that may pertain to thee!
Charity, sweet Charity!

Charity, sweet Charity!
Suffering long and patiently,
Loving all unselfishly,
Charity, sweet Charity!

Charity, sweet Charity!
No thought of ill, but trustingly
Rejoicing in all purity,
Charity, sweet Charity!

Charity, sweet Charity!
Believing, hoping still in thee,
E'er unfailing thou shalt be
Charity, sweet Charity!

Perry, Ia. MRS. MARY E. STEPHENS.

Maine's Coming Battle

By Hon. Henry W. Blair, ex-U. S. Senator

IT IS unthinkable that the people of Maine will repeal State Constitutional Prohibition at the coming September election—or at any other time whatever. It would be like removing a landmark on the highway to the millennium. That great State will not herself destroy one of the chief glories of her own history by advertising to the world that the vaunted "Maine Law," her most distinguishing contribution to the advancement and happiness of the world, has been proven by her own experience for sixty years a sorry failure, and still worse, a miserable humbug and fraud.

I was with Neal Dow in the battle of Port Hudson and made the certificate upon which his pension was granted for the wound then received which closed his active military career although he suffered later as a prisoner of war. He was as stanch for Prohibition in war as in peace, and I know that, with other men, he would, if living, feel that the final failure of Prohibition would be a greater calamity to our country and our world, than the dissolution of the Union of these States.

Thousands of our greatest and best men and women who for three generations gave their lives and prayers to the great cause of temperance will turn over in their graves, in shame and grief, if the sons and daughters of the Pine Tree State should not vindicate the memory of their ancestors in the historic struggle now pending on the soil where prohibition of the liquor traffic was born. On a like occasion Patrick Henry exclaimed, "Forbid it, almighty God!" I have no fear of the result. Prohibition will win—now in Maine, soon in the nation, and then for the world. Let the battle be set for them all at once—and now.

Washington, D. C.

Anvil Sparks

..SLEEP is good for all, but all are not good when asleep.

..THE Word of God is a lamp only to him who wants light.

..IN GOING through life take and give—take time to give your best.

..LET men practise as they preach, and Satan will stay out of reach.

..THE minister who is long on short sermons may not be short of long pastorates.

..WHAT some women need more than a hobble to bridle their feet is some sort of a hobble to bridle their tongues.

..BE LIBERAL with your advice only when you know it is good; that it is needed, and when you have some assurance that it will be heeded.

..DANIEL kneeled upon his knees three times a day and prayed. Many of his admirers to-day do not even kneel during the Sunday prayers at church.

CHILD-LABOR AND ITS VICTIMS

Holding-Mould Boy in a Glass Factory

"Doffer" Boys in a Southern Mill

SINCE the middle of July, and until the first of September, an interesting exhibition of facts and pictures illustrating the evils of child labor has been displayed in a vacant store on the corner of Fourth Avenue and Twentieth Street in New York City. It is under the charge of the National Child Labor Committee.

For seven years this Committee has been striving to abolish the employment in business of all children under fourteen years of age; and night work for all under sixteen; and to secure a uniform eight-hour day. The exhibition, which is under the charge of Miss Elizabeth McMurtrie Dinwiddie, travels from city to city and should convince every beholder of the wrong and cruelty of child labor.

A Six-Year-Old Cincinnati Newsboy

An Eleven-Year-Old Shrimp-Picker

In an interview printed in the New York World, Miss Dinwiddie describes some of the children whose pictures, and the stories of whose lives, figure in the exhibition.

"Little Grace shucks oysters on the Gulf Coast. She gets five cents a day—beginning at four in the morning, sometimes three, when the catch is good—and working till four in the afternoon. The only lunch she has is snatched while she works.

"Bill's mother says, 'He is lazy. He could earn 15 cents a day if he would.'

"Eight-year-old Mary can earn more. She says proudly, 'I shucks two pots a day when I got de baby wid me, and six pots when I don't got him.'

"Mary and Grace and Bill and hundreds like them, who shuck oysters and pick shrimps for the canneries on the Gulf Coast in the winter, travel to Maryland for the berry season, and later go to Delaware to help in tomato canning."

Here is Leo, eight years old. He spends a long day in the lint-laden air of the cotton mill, and receives 15 cents for his work of picking up bobbins. He is very proud because he has a "steady job," and does not merely go to the mill to help a mother or sister, as many of the children do. Lonnie is also a steady worker in the same mill. He has to swear that he is twelve years old, for that is the legal age for workers in his State, but he looks to be about eight.

In the same way, a certain little Willie of nine years was sworn by his father to be three years older, in order that he might get an "underground job" in a coal mine.

One of the worst features of the cranberry industry, in which many children are engaged, is the fashion which the proprietors have of calling a peck ten quarts when measuring the children's "pick," and eight quarts when selling it to customers. Another is the constant stooping necessary. The soft bones of the child sometimes become permanently curved or displaced. The pictures of the workers remind one of Millet's celebrated "Gleaners," for they occupy precisely the same attitude. In many other occupations also, children become permanently deformed, and among the most painful pictures in the exposition are several of these poor, bent little ones. Some of them are so small that they have to stand on stools in order to reach their machines, and even then have to stretch their arms cruelly.

Many of the pictures are taken outside of the mills. Photographers are prohibited from entering the buildings. It is easy to see why.

A large number of children are employed in the glass industry. Tobacco has impressed into service 5,090 boys under twelve and 6,372 girls. The artificial-flower industry employs many little girls.

The newsboys and the night venders are among the most recklessly overworked of these unfortunate little ones. They cannot bear to go home until they have "sold out" their stock. Sometimes they do not dare to, for harsh parents await them there, who are merciless if the expected coins are not forthcoming.

But the messenger boys have, perhaps, been most brutally sacrificed of all classes of child-laborer A certain Chinese restaurant has for years adve tised to supply boys for doing any sort of errand a night long. These bright little fellows have bee sent in the small hours of the morning to purcha cocaine, opium, "knockout drops" and worse thing The boys learn every vice at shockingly tender ag One messenger boy said, "Not many of us ever g anywhere. We get drunk and lose our jobs, an then we go down hill quick and fast." A triump of legislation in New York State has been the passage of a law making it a crime to employ for night messages any boy under twenty-one. The exhibition contains encouraging pictures of factories in which no child-labor is employed and which yet pay large dividends, showing the groundlessness of the plea made by the manufacturers, that they would lose money and have to close their mills unless they could use child-labor.

A Baby "Doffer," About Eight Years Old

A Child Spinner in a Cotton Mill

By displaying these pictures, the committee hopes to quicken public interest in this vital question until child-labor is utterly banished from our nation. Here is something for our women's clubs to attack. Many of them have already done noble work in the cause. Let them only unite their efforts and they can surely win it.

We are conserving our water and our forests. Let us conserve the far more important child-life for which they are to be used.

KATE UPSON CLARK.

TOPICS OF INTEREST THROUGHOUT THE WORLD

—DURING FESTIVITIES ON the afternoon of July 23 in celebration of the anniversary of the granting of the new constitution, fire broke out in Stamboul, Turkey. A violent north wind fanned the blaze which swept over a residential district of about two square miles, leveling several thousand houses, chiefly in the Turkish quarter, in the vicinity of the Suleimaniyeh Mosque. Several persons were injured, including the former Minister of War, Mahmoud Shefket Pasha. Stamboul covers the whole area inclosed by the Theodosian walls of Constantinople. It is the Mohammedan part of the city. Within its walls are the seraglio, the principal mosques, the mausoleums of the Sultans, the baths, the bazaars, the public offices of the Government, and the existing remains of ancient Constantinople. Separate quarters are allotted to the Armenians, the Turks, the Greeks, and the Jews. It is believed that these fires were the work of political incendiaries.

—SIR ELDON GORST, British Agent and Consul-General in Egypt since 1907, died in London, England, on July 12. Sir Eldon Gorst followed Lord Cromer as British Agent and Consul-General to Egypt. He took office in 1907, and it was upon his policy with regard to the natives of that part of the empire that ex-President Roosevelt cast reflections in his Guildhall speech which set the whole world a-flutter a little more than a year ago. Sir Eldon was not without his own misgivings as to the wisdom of the recent British governmental attitude in Egypt. He took the office of Consul-General after twenty years of familiar intercourse with the Egyptians, and he felt qualified to deal with them sympathetically. He tried to develop self-government, but only recently he had been obliged to realize that the Legislative Council and the General Assembly were obstreperous with foolish nationalist agitations. As a long illness had rendered it impossible for him to attend to his duties it had been whispered about that he would be retired and Lord Kitchener would be appointed to succeed him. This appointment is now almost certain. Many points in Sir Eldon's career parallel that absorbing story of Sir Gilbert Parker, The Weavers.

—MONTHS OF PLANNING and replanning of the proposed new subways for New York City culminated in a gathering at the old City Hall on July 25 which signed, sealed and delivered some of the largest and most important contracts that the city has ever awarded. Earlier in the day the second vote on the resolution to accept the offer of the Brooklyn Rapid Transit Company was taken and its adoption made final. Under the extended plan which this offer puts into force the Transit Company is to build and operate 37.3 miles of new subway, 41.1 miles of new elevated railway and 9.3 miles of third track upon existing elevated structures. When the new portions are completed New York will have approximately 166 miles of tunnel, subway and elevated lines. Twenty-seven million eight hundred thousand dollars' worth of subway is already under construction. The City of New York will put $135,400,000 into the new project, while the company will put $71,400,000 into construction and equipment. This makes the total investment in new rapid transit facilities $234,600,000. As every one in the greater city is anxious to see "the dirt begin to fly" no time was lost in making the preparations for actual digging. The president of the Bradley Construction Company, which secured four of the five contracts, announces that he has depots established and everything in readiness to begin work as soon as the Public Service Commission instructs him to do so. The contracts for the five sections to be started immediately involve a total of $16,139,428.95, and upward of six thousand men and one thousand carts will be employed.

THE MOUNTAIN FARMERS OF CEBU

T IS now a little over ten years since the Gospel began to be taught in Cebu Island in the Philippines. The two pioneer missionaries who went ere found a strange condition of things. Cholera as raging in Cebu at the time; but the chief effort ade by the people to arrest its spread was to send hot air balloons, as they believed at by doing this they sent the evil irits of cholera into the clouds. nfires on the mountains (which lf circle the city) nightly sig- led messages to the revolutionary aders in Cebu. Many of the Ce- an leaders were friendly to the mericans. Some hundred of the remost Filipino gentlemen of the y sent one of their number to quest the missionaries to organ- e Bible lectures at their club- use. But as the evident desire of ese gentlemen was to strengthen emselves to fight against Roman- m and its priests, the missionaries nfined themselves to the giving of e Gospel to the poorer people, even ing through the mountains to ve it to the outlaws who desired have the "good news" taught em.

During the ten years of Gospel ork in Cebu, the older native hristians have been toiling faith- lly and there are now thousands Cebuan Christians who pray to od that he will long give them the rotection of America's flag, since s people have brought to them the nowledge of the Saviour.

Meanwhile the younger genera- on is learning to do its part. In ne instance four young girls have ven up their career as school achers in order to teach the Gos- el to the women and children mong their own people. One of ese young women was receiving vice the salary which she can hope receive as a Bible woman! These irls are now at a training school r Christian girls in Manila. Many f the young men also are eager to ake known the good news to their eople. Some are in training at ne Silliman Missionary School. hey give proof of their sincerity of urpose in many ways. After the ork of one of these young men uring the summer vacation of last ear, one hundred of the villagers here he had labored as evangel- st asked for baptism a short time after he returned to school. This young Christian's few months' effort in the village—where at one time the bolo was the only power recognized—has shown the marvelous power of the Gospel, when believed and obeyed.

The transformation which the Gospel has brought to the mountain farmers of Cebu is almost incredible. In spite of the apparently hopeless obstacle of not having plow animals, these Christian mountain farmers are struggling in the direction of progress. Our soldiers, after the relief of the foreign embassies at Peking, went to the Philippines, taking with their horses the deadly Chinese plague of surra, which has swept away thousands of the carabao (the Philippine plow animal). Today in Cebu a carabao would cost thirty dollars, which is an immense sum to a poor Filipino farmer. So the great fertile valleys, lying between the mountain chains through Cebu Island, must go to waste, for nothing but plowing could uproot the gigantic grass. The Christian farmers, however, scrape out a living on the rocky mountain sides. But poverty and unfruitful toil cannot crush the ambition the Gospel has awakened in the hearts of these people for their children's future, and they make many sacrifices for their children's education. Yet with all these striking changes wrought in Cebu, it is still the most anti-American island of the Philippines. The missionary work there has been marked by self-denial and privation. As an illustration of this, one of the Cebu missionaries has given up going home on furlough this year in order that his traveling money might be used to purchase needed nourishment for sick evangelistic students and workers, and to help in sending some of the young people for training at the missionary school. Still, even this fades into an ordinary phase of sacrifice when viewed beside the long years of patient service of the native evangelists. Through wearing persecution and hardship, sometimes in company with their missionary and oftentimes alone, these faithful native Christians unwearyingly persevere in spreading the knowledge of the Lord Jesus among their people.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Gospel Launch, which has done such excellent service the last year or two, is making much evangelistic work possible which could not be reached without it, in our great ocean parish of a hundred islands. The launch has been specially serviceable this year in our mission work on the island of Bohol.

ELIZABETH W. JANSEN.

Sons of Village and Mountain Farmers Studying for the Christian Ministry

Cebuan Farmers as They Were Before the Gospel Reached Them

SUNDAY JOYS AT MONT-LAWN

THERE have been many visitors at our Children's Paradise this summer. On Sundays they come to the service in our beautiful Children's Temple and listen with evident interest not only to the short evangelical platform addresses—which being especially intended for the children are usually simple and made attractive with anecdote and object lesson—but join heartily in the hymns. It is a pleasant sight to see the rear aisle and the wide ambulatory (or open passageway) filled with these adult friends of the Home. Some come from the nearby villages, and frequently here are little groups of visitors from New York, ll of whom are warmly welcomed.

In a long column—the girls first—our little folk narch down the maple-fringed path from the Home- tead to the Temple and take their seats. They ing with fine spirit the hymns they have practised uring the week with Professor Noll at the organ— ncluding "Jesus Loves the Little Children," "The lory Song," "I Think When I Read the Sweet tory of Old," "It Never Pays to be Bad," "Water Bright," "Can We See the Flowers Grow?" "Bring hem In," etc. They dearly love a story, as all ittle folks do, and whenever the pastor or mission- ry who is the speaker of the afternoon relates some right anecdote, they show their appreciation in the liveliest manner. Never is a Sunday afternoon service dull at Mont-Lawn.

Matron Goering and her staff of teachers, all of whom love the children, have them under splendid discipline, and their training is such as would do credit to any group of little folks in the world. They are happy, obedient and responsive because love is over all at the Children's Paradise. No child is neglected there and even the poorest, most forlorn little waif becomes transformed into a bright and happy creature, among such inspiring influences and surrounded by happy playmates.

Scattered over the shady green lawn on Sunday are groups of eager little folks, with bright eyes intently fastened on "Teacher" in the centre, who is telling the story of "David and Goliath," or perhaps of "Noah and the Ark," ably assisted by such interpolations as "Yesman, Teacher; it rained awful long an' then——" or "Teacher, Noah lived in a house that could swim." Suddenly one group becomes tense with excitement, eyes fairly popping out of a dozen heads, while each child strives valiantly to suppress feelings almost beyond control.

"Oh, teacher, look! look!" at last came in an explosive whisper from one small but always prominent personage, with beguiling eyes and a smile that was the reflection of his own sunny Italy.

"Teacher" hardly dared look or move; for, perched saucily on her shoulder, was a small chippy (sparrow) gaily chattering at the delighted children. Taking the intruder in her hand, "Teacher" allowed a closer inspection. Curious but trembling forefingers were put forth to touch the little bird, which seemed quite contented—in fact very much flattered by so much attention—judging from the way he piped a tiny and not unmusical song, to the great glee of his audience.

"Teacher! Teacher! you must be awful nice," came from the irrepressible one.

"Why, boy?"

"'Cause, teacher, yesman—anybody chippy likes must be nice," was the philosophical answer, accompanied by a dazzling smile.

"Why do you think the chippy came to visit us?"

"'Cause he likes us; yesman. We don't trow stones and kill him."

"Who else likes him?"

"God, teacher. He likes chippy an' me an' you an'—everybody!" with an all-embracing wave of short arms.

Just then the dinner bell rang and as this group joined others on the way to Fort Plenty, the irrepressible one was heard to make the impressive statement to a passing friend: "If youse don't t'row stones and kill him, chippies will come and sit on your shoulder—some days—yes!"

. . .

In the midst of its seventeenth season, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Children's Home welcomes the aid of its readers in giving the tenement waifs an outing. A gift of $3 will send some poor child to Mont-Lawn for ten happy days. There are no sectarian lines at the Children's Paradise. All sing the same dear old Gospel hymns and join in the same simple evangelical Christian prayers. Let every reader do his or her share towards making some poor little waif healthier and happier, and thus add to the pleasure of your own holiday. Address all contributions to the care of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, New York.

OUR EDITORIAL FORUM

OTTO KOENIG, President GEO. H. SANDISON, Managing Editor THEODORE WATERS, Secretary

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is published weekly by "The Christian Herald," at the Bible House, Fourth Avenue, 8th and 9th Sts., New York City. The officers are: Otto Koenig, President and Treasurer, Bible House, N.Y.City; Geo. H. Sandison, Vice-President, Bible House, N. Y. City; Theodore Waters, Secretary, Bible House, N. Y. City.

Subscription Price, $1.50 a year, in advance.
Remittances should always be made in the safest manner available to the remitter. Register cash remittances.
Foreign Postage.—For each copy to be mailed outside the United States, Canada, and Mexico, add one dollar a year.

Change of Date.—It takes at least two weeks to change the date, after your subscription is renewed.
Expiration of Subscription.—The date on the wrapper indicates when your subscription ends.
Change of Address.—It requires three weeks' time to make the change. Give both old and new address.

Subscriptions may commence with any issue.
Letters should be addressed, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, New York.

Entered at Post Office, New York, as Second-class Matter
Entered as Second-class Matter at the Post Office Department, Ottawa

Texas "Wet"

ONE year ago, the popular election in Texas indicated a desire that the next session of the legislature should submit to a popular vote an amendment to the Constitution substituting State-wide prohibition for local option by counties as a unit, which has existed for a long number of years. It was voted upon on Saturday, July 22. One of the hottest moral contests ever fought in this country was waged, and prohibition was defeated by the small majority of 5,000 in a popular vote of nearly 500,000. Governor Colquitt, champion of the anti-prohibitionists, predicted 100,000 majority for the "wets." The Houston Post had looked for a landslide of 200,000 majority against prohibition. Chairman Ball of the allied anti-saloon forces charges fraud, alleging ballot-box stuffing, bribery, and "doctoring" of the returns, and steps may be taken for a legislative investigation of the election. Very much of Texas has been dry through local option by counties as a unit, and by that same law the people will go on eliminating the saloons. In the report of the Department of Agriculture, it is seen that Texas has outstripped Illinois in its farm products and is now the first agricultural State in the Union. Its immense cotton crop put it ahead. It has a superb civilization, is opposed to gambling, and is at heart dissatisfied with the saloon. Notwithstanding the present temporary reverse, it is still a clear contest in that State between the church and the saloon. Defeat will nerve the friends of temperance to renewed efforts and more determined warfare against the drink evil. When the reaction comes, it may be shown that the immense popular vote against the liquor traffic will mark the passing from political leadership of some of those who took a prominent part in the latest campaign against prohibition, and the substitution of men who would protect the State from the influence of the saloon. Texas can wisely learn the lesson of ultimate victory through present defeat.

Faith Versus Science

AFTER hammering away at the old Bible for several years and cunningly drilling into the Rock of Scripture, in an effort, by the application of scientific methods, to undermine faith in the miracles, in the authenticity of the historical and prophetical books, and even in the Gospel itself, the "new theology" advocates, who bulletin the results of their theological explorations in the Biblical World of Chicago University, seem to have come to a sudden halt. They have struck an impassable barrier. This fact is announced in a recent issue of that journal in these words:

> We may consent to the multiple authorship of the prophecies ascribed to Isaiah; we may come to admit the existence of unhistorical elements in the Gospels and of doctrinal misapprehensions in Paul. But we shall also have to face the question of the immortality of the soul, the nature of the soul itself, and even of the basis and security of our belief in God. . . . It is most important to remember that in every realm of life there is and must probably always remain a broad penumbral band surrounding the area of scientifically ascertained fact. There are immense tracts which science has not entered; perhaps they can never be entered.

So frank an admission proves that the purpose of their investigation was at least an honest one. We have never doubted their sincerity, even while we deplored their methods and their magnified exploitation of results which, dealing as they did largely with the non-essentials, left the main problems unsolved and untouched. They have only now found that it is impossible to eliminate the supernatural in dealing with God's Word and that to test the Bible by the scientific formulæ of the schools is simply to court failure at every vital point. They omitted the only solvent that could be successfully applied—faith. Faith is the basis of all spiritual knowledge and the beginning and foundation of all spiritual life. There is nothing in the whole field of human research which points to a substitute for faith, in dealing with the Scriptures, and this fact is known to every believer who has already entered upon the spiritual life. Faith in God himself as he is revealed in his inspired Word; faith in his promises, in his readiness to hear our petitions and to help and strengthen us; faith in his revelation of himself to us through his Son and in his power to keep us through this life and the next.

Those difficulties which now beset the investigators are the uniform experience of all who have gone along the same road, and who have endeavored to "search out God" through the intellect rather than through the heart. Faith constitutes the only common ground upon which the wise and simple may meet in their religious belief. Here the man of learning, who has taken the first step in the spiritual life, finds the reason why his science, his culture, his wisdom were unequal to the task he had set to accomplish. He finds that he must humbly lay them all down and, taking up faith alone, must go forward step by step, as a little child. On this common ground he is no more than the equal of the simplest soul; for in the spiritual life, all are equally unlearned and inexperienced until taught by the Holy Spirit—the Divine interpreter. That this has become partially evident to some of these investigators is now made clear. They have grown weary of their ill success in the scientific battle—which is always a lost battle when directed against the things of the Spirit. Let us hope that they may follow the light that now beckons them and concerning which they write:

> What ought to follow is the conscious, deliberate, joyous adventure of faith, the appropriation to oneself from out of the realm where science has not gone, and perhaps never can go, of that conception of things, and of that faith in the God of the human soul and of human life, which brings courage to the soul and inspiration into life. Such faith science neither contradicts nor forbids.

They are not at the end of their adventure, by any means. Let them press forward and they will discover to their joy and satisfaction, that in the realm of faith there is solid ground upon which the earnest, inquiring soul may go forward to greater and better things than science ever dreamed of.

As to Letters

OUR MAIL-BAG is a feature of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD to which thousands of our readers contribute every year. Ordinarily, it is impossible to give more than a small proportion of this voluminous correspondence, but our friends understand our space limitations and are tolerant accordingly. While it is our endeavor to exclude no letter that will conduce to general interest or information, we find that some of our friends overlook or forget the repeated admonition that THE MAIL-BAG is not open for profitless controversy, scientific, theological, social or political. There are many topics, to discuss which is to walk around in a circle, ending where you began, and if the ablest minds have wrestled with these unavailingly, we may very well let them alone. The mission of THE MAIL-BAG is to diffuse light where real light is to be had; to give sound, helpful advice; to straighten out entanglements and lift folks over the rocks of difficulty; to interpret difficult Biblical problems in a simple way with the aid of the best scholarship available. Mere partisanship and sectarianism are there out of place. If our friends would keep these suggestions in view when they write us in the future, they would lighten our task amazingly and make us correspondingly happy.

Where the Farmer Stands

ONE of the most interesting statements that has emanated from the Census Bureau in a long time is that which was recently made public regarding the farm values of the United States. It shows that, during the last decade, the farms of our land have doubled in value, though they have only increased one-tenth in number and one-twentieth in acreage. In 1900 they were valued at $13,051,033,000, while the returns for the census of 1910 value them at $28,383,821,000. The average value per acre has risen in ten years from $15.60 to $32.50, an increase of 108 per cent. The farm buildings of the country, valued at $3,556,614,000 in 1900, were reported to be worth $6,294,025,000 in 1910. These figures tell the tale of an increasing efficiency, of which any modern industry might well be proud. And the best of it is that it is an efficiency and improvement that goes all the way down the line, from the farmer who owns and manages a great estate to his colleague who tills a humble acre. Both have come to realize the value of intensive cultivation and the advice of those laboratory farmers, the scientists. Then, too, the carrying into the country districts of modern inventions and improvements, which so greatly tend to sweeten life, has had its influence. Increased and improved transit facilities, the telephone and telegraph, modern methods of heating and lighting, sanitary plumbing and water supplies, have all played their important parts in making a reality the much discussed "back-to-the-land" movement. A wholesome change is visible in our national attitude toward agriculture. In contradistinction to his English cousin, the American who has accumulated a competence has moved toward the centres of population, the cities. The Englishman's ambition has always been to own a place in the country and this is becoming more and more the case with us. A new era of agriculture has come, and is bringing in its train a new conception of education for the farmer and his enviable place in the economy of the nation, that makes the words "country life" almost a phrase to conjure with.

Canada and Ourselves

IN GIVING credit to those Senators who voted for reciprocity, irrespective of party lines, President Taft showed not only good diplomacy but broad American common-sense. Although the success of the measure has been to a very large extent due to the President himself, he magnanimously gave most of the credit to the public spirit of the Democrats, whose votes carried it through in the Senate. There is little doubt that the Dominion Parliament will now pass the measure, and with its ratification, the two countries will soon have a practical experience of the benefits of reciprocity. But it is not in the commercial aspect alone that it is to be regarded. It will bring the two peoples into closer and friendlier relations and each will benefit by the change. The tariff wall has not only been a barrier against international trade; it has been a blockade to mutual acquaintance and appreciation. Henceforth there can be a mutual interchange of social as well as business amenities. There is much that is admirable in the Canadian character. It is loyal, straightforward, broadly enterprising and has a profound respect for law and authority. It is not a country of millionaires, nor has it a labor question as acute and troublesome as ours. Its people, while they do not seem to make so serious a business of money-making, take more leisure and get a good deal of solid enjoyment out of life. Reciprocally, Canadians will be in a position to benefit by closer contact with American enterprise and with our characteristic knack of "making things come to pass," which in some respects is probably more highly developed here than across the border. Moreover, closer relations will bring the two countries into still more harmonious accord in all that relates to international peace and goodwill. Let us hope it will prove the best of all panaceas for international jealousy and that, when we know each other better, we shall realize more and more the advantages of an understanding that should forever preclude all serious disputes between the two great peoples of the Western Continent.

Contents of this Number

Wednesday, August 9, 1911

	PAGE
Our Mail-Bag	778
Haiti Again Faces a Revolt (Illustrated)	779
The Art of Appreciation. Sermon By Rev. J. H. Ainsworth	780
Businessman's Luck. By Eugene Thwing	781
Child Labor and its Victims (Illustrated) By Kate Upson Clark	782
The Mountain Farmers of Cebu (Illustrated) By Elizabeth W. Jansen	783
OUR EDITORIAL FORUM	784
THE BIBLE AND NEWSPAPER (Illustrated)	785
Korea Sends a Call for Workers (Illustrated)	786
The Little Landers of San Ysidro (Illustrated) By John L. Cowan	791
In My Veranda Easy Chair (Illustrated) By Margaret E. Sangster	792
From Mohammed to Christ (Illustrated) By Raymond P. Dougherty	793
Young People's Societies	793
Our Boys and Girls (Illustrated) By Miss Janet Porter	794
A Heart of Stone. By Mabel L. Stuart	795, 799
A Life on Christ's Level Sunday School Lesson, by Dr. and Mrs. W. F. Crafts	796
Many Peace Circles Forming	798

THE BIBLE AND NEWSPAPER

Conducted by FERDINAND C. IGLEHART, D.D.

President at Bull Run

HE Bull Run Reunion was a memorable one. The Jubilee Reunion at Manassas was planned by committees of the Grand Army of the Re- c and the United Confederate Veterans. The ises were continued for about five days. The ee closed July 21 with sessions of the national nization of the Blue and the Gray and their At four o'clock in the afternoon President made an address on the battlefield of Bull Run. e hundred and fifty ex-Confederates formed in le line facing north, while a dozen yards away l a hundred and fifty Union veterans facing h. At a signal the veterans advanced with out- ched hands. Above the Southern line waved a l Virginian flag. As the veterans of the South North met they clasped hands, and stood for five ites grouped about a little blue flag, vowing ial friendship and recounting incidents of fifty s ago. President Taft in his address referred deep feeling to the loss of life and suffering ng the Civil War, and de- ed that he deplored armed e and wished that it could bolished, saying that men have been to war know t it is, and want no more of Continuing he said, "There- I look to you, veterans of Civil War, to aid in the ement for peace. I am glad announce here to-day that ngland has agreed to enter an arbitration treaty with United States, France has ified her willingness to en- the same treaty. Both ties will be signed within days, and I expect to be to announce within a few s that three other nations e entered into the agree- t. This news I bring to veterans of a real war be- se I know they will most reciate permanent peace." President concluded with a ute to the sentiment which ired the reunion. It is a ng nation that can produce h an historic event as the nion of the Blue and the y at Manassas. The nation not be other than better and nger by such an event. The erans of the Union Army ich at the first battle of ll Run made such quick time Washington, and the vet- ns of the Confederate Army ich, exhausted, surrendered der the apple tree at Appo- ttox, are the fragments of grandest armies that ever rched across the fields of e. Their spirit of magna- nity, fraternity, and loyalty nifested at the reunion at ll Run was an illustra- n of the highest manhood, d of a spirit truly divine. d the message of peace to m by the head of the nation omising international fraternity is in harmony th Christ's mission, and the message of the angels his birth:

lory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, good will toward n. (Luke 2:14.)

ry Young Desperado

It would be hard to match the criminality and cklessness of Jimmie Sloggett, only nine years l, of Broken Bow, Neb. He took a revolver to hool and attempted to kill his teacher with it for ving reprimanded him the day before. Fortu- tely the shot missed its mark. Two days later tried to blow up the schoolhouse with a stick of namite. He hid in the warehouse of a grocery ore, and when the clerk ordered him out, the lad ew a sharp knife and attempted to stab him. mong the lighter offenses he broke into a confec- nery store and robbed it of tobacco and candy. his young bandit, the son of a laboring man in roken Bow, has been committed to the reform hool, where he will be held many years to come, d where it is hoped he will be taught the lessons truth, honor, virtue, benevolence, and piety. ranger things have happened than for Jimmie Sloggett under the proper educational and religious advantages to become the good man, the honored citizen, and the faithful Christian. His terrible record thus far reveals so early in life the natural condition of the human heart of which the prophet speaks when he says:

The heart is deceitful above all things, and desperately wicked. (Jer. 17:9.)

Wreck Haunted Him

Leon C. Barclift was the engineer on the Lackawanna Express that ran into a street car at a crossing at Newark, N. J., and killed nine bright and beautiful children on their way to school. He himself after the collision was taken to the hospital with a fracture of the skull, and to save his own life they kept him in ignorance of the terrible fatality to others. Months afterward, taking up an old newspaper, he read the facts, and from that time in 1903 till his death the other day he brooded over the disaster and never could get out from under the awful shadow of it which haunted him. Though his death was attributed by the doctor to a trouble of the lungs and arteries, the wife insists that the memory of the awful disaster gradually destroyed his life. The trolley track that fatal morning was slippery and the car broke through the gates intended to bar it and the engineer could not stop his train quickly enough to avoid the collision. If sorrow for the things that we cannot help will cause such agony, what must be the torture of a remorse occasioned by damage which we could prevent? Memory with its delights or regrets will be an important record in the last day. This fearful fact is suggested by Christ in the parable where Abraham is made to say to the rich man:

Son, remember that thou in thy lifetime receivedst thy good things, and likewise Lazarus evil things: but now he is comforted, and thou art tormented. (Luke 16:25).

President Taft Speaking at Manassas Court House

Copyright American Press Ass'n

The Second Meeting on the Battlefield of Bull Run

German Duelist Punished

Baron Oswald von Richthofen and Wilhelm von Gaffron, two German army officers, had a quarrel over money matters and fought a duel recently, in which Gaffron was killed. The Baron was tried the other day and sentenced to two years' imprisonment in a fortress. We note with satisfaction the improvement in the public sentiment of the world on dueling, and commend the action of the German Government in shutting this gentleman-duelist behind the bars. The commandment is to the duelist as well as to other manslayers:

Thou shalt not kill. (Deut. 5:17.)

Woman's Wastefulness

The Department of Home Economics at the University of Wisconsin issued a bulletin the other day which astonished the whole nation. Among other things it said more than ten billions of dollars is spent in the United States annually for food, shelter and clothing, and 90 per cent. of this vast sum is spent by women who have no adequate knowledge of money values. As an aid in checking the waste the University of Wisconsin has organized a new department connected with the College of Agriculture where specific instruction will be given in home economics in Lathrop Hall, the central building of the 800 women students. A summer course with sixty women students enrolled has already been begun, Miss Alice May Loomis being in charge of the summer work, while Miss Abby Marlett will be in charge of the new department during the regular session. The bulletin is pretty severe in charging so large a percentage of the wastefulness on the women. That there is manifest business incompetency and reckless extravagance by vast numbers of women in spending money for the support of the household must be admitted, but it is a question whether men with their business sense and providence would make much better economists in marketing and shopping than women do. When we look at the fine clothing the men wear, at the expensive lunch and dinner checks, at the yachts on bay and river, at their horses and cars on the road—when we think of the colossal fortunes thrown away in gambling, the hundreds of millions spent on tobacco, and the more than a billion thrown away on drink, we doubt whether the home exchequer would be any fuller if the domestic expenditure were entrusted to men. Whatever may be the comparative economic instinct of women or men, it must be admitted that there is widespread cruel and wicked extravagance upon the part of multitudes of both men and women in the United States, and the course in economics in the University of Wisconsin is a splendid thing, which will not only train the women of the country to be prudent spenders, but will set a wholesome example of wise economy to the men of the nation as well. The professor in this new department of economics will no doubt call the attention of the students to the ideal wife as described in the Proverbs, of whom among other things it is said:

She looketh well to the ways of her household, and eateth not the bread of idleness. (Prov. 31:27.)

Fly Kills Child

Thomas Halloran, a boy five years old, of Union Hill, N. J., had a swelling in his left ear which became so serious that it caused his death. An autopsy revealed the remains of a large house-fly within the cavity of the ear. The insect had penetrated beyond the drum and died, causing blood poison, which resulted in the child's death. German children are told to be very careful when they sit under the linden trees for fear that a flying insect called the ohrenkrieger will crawl into the ear and produce death. On the heavenward side there is brightness; even the tragedies of earth are the unfastening of the gateways of everlasting life. When we look at the earthly side, at such a strange removal as that of the little Halloran boy, we are reminded of these words:

He cometh forth like a flower, and is cut down: he fleeth also as a shadow, and continueth not. (Job 14:2.)

Korea Sends a Call for Workers

A Korean Funeral Procession

Water-Carriers Outside the South Gate of Seoul

Ta Toddy, an Orphan Barber

ALTHOUGH it is only a little over a quarter of a century since the first Protestant missions began work in Korea, the spiritual results since that time have been amazing. In probably no other missionary field in the world has the Gospel met a more generous welcome. Korea is to-day open to the religion of Christ; churches and schools are scattered throughout the land, and in the last ten years a general spiritual ingathering has been reported by the missions and native Christian churches which has exceeded all the hopes and expectations of the workers.

Now, a new emergency confronts the missionaries in Cho-sen (the ancient name of Korea). They find that in order to secure continued progress in the field, reinforcements are necessary. There are now represented in Korea the American Presbyterian Board, the Methodist Episcopal Church of America, the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society of the same church, beside several independent missions, medical missions, and missions for the blind. All the leading missions are in need of workers. The Southern Presbyterian Mission with head of workers at Kwang-ju, has sent to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD a stirring call for reinforcements. It needs nine laymen, four single women teachers and evangelists, two doctors, three trained nurses, a builder, and an industrial teacher. The call adds: "We believe that if these reinforcements are sent not later than the fall of 1911, the numerical force of men and women then on the field should be, if maintained, sufficient to evangelize our share of Korea in this generation."

A few far-sighted laymen, appreciating the influence that one field thoroughly evangelized would exert in the movement for world-wide evangelization, have offered a fund of $75,000 for material equipment of this field, on condition that the mission itself provide a sufficient force of workers. The managers have just designed fifteen new buildings, some of which are in process of erection. The execution of these plans is bound up with the presence of new workers, without whom actual advance is impossible. "Money without men is useless," continues the call. "Not only so, but unless the young men and women of our church accept this challenge of our laymen, and offer themselves for Korea, it will have a discouraging effect upon the Laymen's Movement, and their plans for other missions. For the first time in the history of our church, there is a prospect of having the equipment and buildings in advance of the volunteers. Let there be at this time as splendid an offering of life as of means."

The Southern Presbyterian Mission has the only workers in a territory with a population of 2,243,000. Assuming that one missionary with native helpers might evangelize 25,000 natives in a generation, it would require 89 men and single women workers on the field. The call is for a force of only 32 men and 18 single women, which would give each worker, clerical and lay, 44,860 population. The maximum number of churches that an ordained foreign missionary in Korea can properly supervise and train, is twenty. The present average is 34 churches, and 249,222 population for each ordained worker.

There are wonderful Gospel opportunities in Korea. "The manifest approval and presence of the Holy Spirit, the open mind of the people and their favorable reception of the Gospel message" (the call declares) "the marvelous ingathering of converts—these are all well known. While we are calling for our total force now, we are asking for these men for work in this generation—a life-work. Let it not be thought for an instant that the work is almost done, or that our task is growing easier.

"This spring, in a remote section of our field, a bright young man, superintendent of a school with 125 students, met the presentation of the Gospel with the emphatic reiteration, Hananim Upso! Hananim Upso! (There is no God! There is no God!); and the missionary was refused a hearing in the school. Such a thing was formerly unknown in Korea. With changing conditions, new and grosser forms of temptation to licentiousness, intemperance and unbelief are sweeping the country like a flood. We cannot, therefore, expect that the former conditions so favorable to the Gospel will continue, or that anything short of an immediate improvement of our opportunity will achieve its evangelization. We mean the carrying of the Gospel to every creature and the planting of a native church here which, without the presence of the foreign missionary, shall be self-sustaining, self-governing, and self-propagating. We are not calling for the year 1912 or 1913, but the year 1911. There are, of course, other calls, urgent and immediate; but in the light of facts, are they as urgent as this call from Korea?"

A Few of the Nine Hundred Idols in a Korean Temple

This is a case where the fields are "white with the harvest and laborers are few."

R. M. Wilson, M.D., a medical missionary at Kwang-ju, sends this interesting description of a heathen funeral in Korea:

"The Christian funeral service is in marked contrast to the heathen service, which consists of a red, fancily decorated sort of hearse, which is carried on the backs of a lot of drunken men, dancing and singing as they go along. An old rooster is placed on the coffin to entertain the good spirits. A few of the relatives and hired mourners follow the procession, and boys bearing fancy flags lead the way to the grave. A good part of a day is spent at the grave drinking, eating and having a good time generally.

"Walking along a beautiful grove near the city yesterday, one of my assistants said: 'This grove, just a few years ago or before the church was organized, was a fearful place, for almost every tree had from one to five or six babies' bodies tied in its branches. No such sights are seen there now. There are thousands of these strange and heathen customs which are done away with by the influence of the Gospel."

One Million Subscribers

FEW papers are read and re-read as is THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, and none affords greater pleasure and delight, or makes warmer or more lasting friends. It is indisputable that THE CHRISTIAN HERALD has a larger percentage of renewals than any other paper, and that, from its very beginning, it has retained a larger percentage of permanent subscriptions than any other publication; and its subscription list is constantly increasing. What has been done in the past is only an indication of what may be done in the future, provided we all work heartily together with a view to securing the object upon which we have now set our hearts.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD has the faith to believe that there are a million families in this country who would be glad to subscribe for it were they acquainted with its surpassing worth. We further believe that all of our present subscribers are so thoroughly pleased with the paper that they would be glad to see our faith fully realized. They know the blessed influence THE CHRISTIAN HERALD exerts, for they themselves have felt it. Week after week they have scanned its beautiful pages, have read its inspiring messages, have reveled in its literary and artistic wealth, have been deeply interested, edified and instructed, and, after having read it from beginning to end, have sent it to some distant friends that they also might enjoy its perennial riches.

Almoner of Nations

The achievements of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD have never been equaled by any other publication. It has collected and distributed nearly four million dollars in charity. The farmers of Finland, Sweden, Norway and Russia, the martyrs of Armenia, the orphans of India, the reconcentrados of Cuba, the famine sufferers in China, the rescued men of the Bowery, the thousands of waifs from the tenements happy in The Christian Herald Children's Home, all rise up and call it blessed. God be thanked for the opportunities and the privileges which were ours in the past; and may he graciously continue to pour out his blessing upon THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, its editors and proprietors and readers, and make us increasingly useful in his service.

But, in addition to these great monumental charities, there is the mission of blessedness and usefulness of the paper itself, which results in light, cheer, hope and happiness in the home circle. And it is this which we now wish to extend. We are engaged in a great Home Missionary effort. You can help us. We know you will help us, and thus have part and parcel in all the good which, under divine blessing, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD will accomplish in years to come.

We know that we are making a good paper and we are glad of it. Started for the sole purpose of disseminating spiritual truth, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD has been true and loyal to its mission, and tens of thousands have been led by its means into the clearer, fuller light that now irradiates their lives and makes the world through them brighter, better and happier. And what THE CHRISTIAN HERALD has done for these tens of thousands it can and will and must do for other hundreds of thousands—perhaps even—and may God grant that it be so—for millions.

To bring this about we have determined to enlist the cordial co-operation of our friends, and ourselves to make such a financial sacrifice as will demonstrate our own sincerity in the matter. THE CHRISTIAN HERALD cannot be produced at less than its regular subscription price, which is $1.50 per annum. But to interest those who cannot appreciate its beauties, simply because they do not see the paper, we have decided to accept an unlimited number of one-third year trial subscriptions at twenty-five cents each, subject to the easy conditions set forth in the annexed coupons, and in addition we intend to distribute a number of handsome gifts in token of our appreciation of the efforts of all those friends who will help us in the work.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK CITY

August 9, 1911.

Dear Friend:

These four pages of The Christian Herald contain a message which has a personal application to you. We would ask you therefore to read every word of this insert carefully and to give the plan your very special consideration.

We want the approval of our friends, every one, for only with their co-operation can we accomplish the work which it is in our hearts to do.

So, dear friend, read what follows carefully and let us have your co-operation in any event.

Very cordially yours,

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD.

Our Generous Offer

We could not make this sacrifice but for the experience of the past, that a very large percentage of our subscribers renew, and when they renew, they are glad to pay the regular subscription price, because they are satisfied that THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is well worth all we ask for it.

Let us begin this work by doubling the present number of its subscribers. While this is a great undertaking, an unprecedented task, it is nevertheless an easy one, for it means just one new subscriber for each and every one now on our list. Surely every subscriber can do this, and we believe you will do your share, while we will gladly do everything within our power to help you.

Read the Directions on Following Pages

Read the following pages carefully. You will find there a number of coupons and directions for helping along the work, also a list of the gifts we intend to distribute among those who assist us on our way to the million mark. You, dear friend, can earn any or all of these gifts in return for almost no effort on your part, and you will have the additional satisfaction of knowing you have helped make THE CHRISTIAN HERALD the most influential paper in the world.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

THE greater the circulation of any publication, the greater must be its influence. The greater the circulation of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, the greater will be its power for doing good in the world.

Do you realize what it would mean if THE CHRISTIAN HERALD had one million subscribers? It would mean that the paper would enter one million homes fifty-two times a year, and be read regularly by five million souls. Five million souls banded together by one thought—the welfare, the godspeed of humanity, of which THE CHRISTIAN HERALD would be the instrument.

You, dear reader, are one of the already large army of souls who believe in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. Surely you will be willing to help us make that army more powerful for good than ever before. We need your personal influence, just as we need the collective influence of all our friends.

Can We Reach the Million Mark?

If we can bring THE CHRISTIAN HERALD up to the million mark, the abiding result will accrue to the direct benefit of every one of our readers. We can give you a better and a bigger paper. We can enter into campaigns for the common good, with the assurance of wider success than ever before. We can extend the charitable work of our friends who contribute, through the publication, to the succor of the poor. We can extend these enterprises, your enterprises, as we have never been able to extend them before. And, with the help of our friends, God willing, we mean to do it.

This is Our Plan

Our plan is as follows: On these two pages you will find six coupons. Please tear them apart at the dotted lines, then distribute them among such of your Church and Sunday School friends as will be likely to subscribe. They will thank you for doing so. Explain to them the beauties, the riches, the great attractiveness of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, and urge them to give it a trial.

Tell them that THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is a great national home newspaper, which will keep them up to date on matters of interest; that it describes every event of national interest, whether it happens at home or abroad; that it is illustrated on nearly every page with graphic pictures of men, women, places and events of interest; that in addition to news matter it publishes magazine features of interest to every one in the family—special articles on live topics, short stories, serial stories, a children's department, etc.; that it offers them annually one and a half times the quantity of reading matter offered by the popular magazines; that its large corps of correspondents live in every country on earth; that its readers constitute a great influential family to which it will benefit them to belong.

Tell them of the wonderful offer we are making, and how each coupon which you show them saves them one quarter of a dollar on this one-third year subscription, and you will be surprised how quickly they will avail themselves of the exceptional opportunity thus offered.

If six coupons are not enough for your purpose, write us, and we will send you as many more as you may require, absolutely free of all charge. Do not forget, however, that the coupons are good only until August 31, and cannot be mailed after that date..

Your Reward

In return for your trouble in doing this, and quite aside from the satisfaction you will feel in helping to bring THE CHRISTIAN HERALD up to the million mark, we offer you any one or more of sixteen different rewards.

Among these rewards you will be sure to find some which you will be eager to possess for so little trouble. These rewards are for you, remember, not for those whom you will induce to subscribe, and you should take advantage of the opportunity to possess them. For instance:

FOR 2 COUPONS: Suppose you have but two friends who are lucky enough to be invited to subscribe, and who will sign only two of the coupons, accompanied by 25 cents each. In return for your service in forwarding us these coupons, you may have your choice of any one volume of the now famous Christian Herald Home Library, which contains a volume of interest for every one in the family. The titles of these books are as follows: Entertainments for Home, Church and School—Handy Man's Manual of Facts and Figures—Business

A SUBSTANTIAL REWARD

52 Times A Year THE CHRISTIAN HERALD BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK CITY $1.50 per Year

IN ACCORDANCE with your offer to accept this Coupon and Twenty-five Cents for a Four-Months' Subscription to The Christian Herald, beginning August 1, 1911, I send herewith 25 Cents, and I hereby certify that I am not now a subscriber to The Christian Herald, and that this subscription is not intended to take the place of any subscription now on your books.

25 Cents

Good Only until August 31, 1911

Name of person influencing this subscription:

Name.....

Street.....

Town..... State.....

52 Times A Year THE CHRISTIAN HERALD BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK CITY $1.50 per Year

IN ACCORDANCE with your offer to accept this Coupon and Twenty-five Cents for a Four-Months' Subscription to The Christian Herald, beginning August 1, 1911, I send herewith 25 Cents, and I hereby certify that I am not now a subscriber to The Christian Herald, and that this subscription is not intended to take the place of any subscription now on your books.

25 Cents

Good Only until August 31, 1911

Name of person influencing this subscription:

Name.....

Street.....

Town..... State.....

52 Times A Year THE CHRISTIAN HERALD BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK CITY $1.50 per Year

IN ACCORDANCE with your offer to accept this Coupon and Twenty-five Cents for a Four-Months' Subscription to The Christian Herald, beginning August 1, 1911, I send herewith 25 Cents, and I hereby certify that I am not now a subscriber to The Christian Herald, and that this subscription is not intended to take the place of any subscription now on your books.

25 Cents

Good Only until August 31, 1911

Name of person influencing this subscription:

Name.....

Street.....

Town..... State.....

Read the Coupons Carefully

Each Coupon attached hereto will be accepted in lieu of ONE QUARTER DOLLAR if accompanied by 25 Cents for a FOUR MONTHS' Subscription to The Christian Herald. But no subscription induced through this offer will be permitted to take the place of one now on our books. Each subscription must be NEW.

Copyrighted, 1896, by Braun & Co.

THE FAMOUS DREAMLAND PICTURE IN COLORS
18 x 13 Inches, ready for framing. SEE OPPOSITE PAGE

SPECIAL NOTICE! Remember, this offer will hold good only until August 31, and we reserve the right to return any coupons and money sent us after that date. All subscriptions must date from the first issue in August.

Address: Special Coupon Offer,

MID-SUMMER OFFER!

Hints for Men and Women—Helpful Talks With Girls—Healthful Sports for Boys—How to Speak and Write Correctly—Marvels of Modern Science—and Practical Suggestions for Mother and Housewife. If this does not attract you, you may have one volume of the set, Masterpieces of the World's Best Literature. Or you may have a life-size fac-simile of the Declaration of Independence, that priceless document which should hang framed on the wall of every American home, and with this we will give you a copy of The Story of the Flag.

FOR 3 COUPONS: If you have three friends who will sign coupons, and you will send them to us, accompanied by 25 cents each, we will send you a copy of The Life of the Rev. T. De Witt Talmage, or we will send you one volume of his celebrated sermons, although we have but a limited number of the latter, and in case they run out before your order arrives we will reserve the right to have you substitute some other reward.

FOR 4 COUPONS: If you induce four of your friends to subscribe, we will send you as a reward a new volume of sermons by the late Rev. Dwight L. Moody, which have never before been published. Or we will send you a Music Simplifier whereby you may learn to play the piano at home without a teacher. Or we will send you a volume which will teach you how to write shorthand without an instructor. The practical utility of these three rewards will be appreciated.

For 5 Coupons: Have you read The Life Work of Louis Klopsch? Although many thousands of our readers are the fortunate possessors of this volume, there are probably some who would like to possess this account of the achievements of the greatest "Captain of Philanthropy" the world has seen. You may have this splendidly illustrated volume in return for inducing five of your friends to sign coupons, and send them to us accompanied by 25 cents each.

FOR 6 COUPONS: We are sure that a majority of our friends will send us six signed coupons, accompanied by 25 cents each. For all who do, we offer splendid inducements. For sending us six coupons you may have as a reward a complete set of The Christian Herald Home Library of eight volumes, the titles of which have already been mentioned. Or you may have a beautiful American flag, 4 x 6 feet in dimension, worthy to float proudly over any home in the Nation. Or we will send you a Red Letter New Testament, beautifully bound in leather, soft and flexible, with overlapping edges, red under gold, and with every word recorded as having been spoken by our Lord, printed in red. Or we will send you a copy of that fascinating volume entitled The Great Hereafter, by Rev. Madison C. Peters. Or we will send you a copy of Hero Tales, that interesting volume containing accounts of glowing deeds of American citizens. Or we will send you that useful book entitled Before the Doctor Comes, containing information which will tell you just what to do in case of an accident or sickness, before the arrival of a physician. Or we will send you a copy of the volume entitled The True Life of Christ, from the testimony of the apostles.

Extra Reward for Six Coupons

Think of being able to secure for nothing but a little effort any one or more of the above rewards! We are sure you will try to induce SIX friends to sign coupons. But now comes the most enjoyable surprise of all!

Do you remember "Dreamland," that beautiful photogravure of a little child asleep? "Dreamland" evoked the praise and admiration of hundreds of thousands of our readers who now have the picture framed upon their walls. It was, indeed, so popular with our readers that we felt that many of them would like to have the picture in colors. We inquired if this could not be done, and we have succeeded in procuring a number of copies of "Dreamland," in water colors applied by hand.

You know how beautiful was the photogravure, but you can hardly have a conception of how much more beautiful is the picture since it has been rendered into colors. If the child seemed to be a living, breathing specimen of human beauty before, it now seems as much more so as day is more beautiful than night.

You May Have this Picture, Too

We have secured One Thousand of these beautiful pictures, and we will present a copy Free to all friends sending us Six Coupons, accompanied by 25 cents each, as long as the pictures last. Send in your coupons AT ONCE, so you will receive one of the thousand copies of "Dreamland."

Now for Victory!

Whichever rewards you select, may success attend your efforts. We feel sure that the most active friends in this aggressive campaign will be our present subscribers, who know and appreciate the good THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is doing, and will be glad of this opportunity to encourage the efforts of its editors and proprietors to maintain its high standard as the brightest and best family paper in the wide, wide world. On the following page you will find a description of these rewards and a list from which to select those which please you.

AWAITS YOUR CO-OPERATION!

Resolve to Act at Once!

Do not feel hampered by lack of material. If you have more friends who want to subscribe than you have coupons let us know, and we will send you more free of charge. Do not forget that no name will be accepted for a subscription which is now on our books.

DREAMLAND—In Colors

The miniature reproduction in black and white on the opposite page cannot give more than a vague idea of the beauty of the hand-colored reproduction of Dreamland, the picture which proved such a favorite with our readers. This was the picture of which Mrs. Sangster wrote:

"There is not a mother, or for that matter a grandmother, in this wide land, from coast to coast, who will not want a Dreamland picture for her own as soon as she sees it. The artist has chosen an ecstatic moment in home life when the household darling, weary with play, has been caught in the toils of slumber. Here she lies, every muscle relaxed, the dimpled hand and the dancing feet quiet in repose. It is all one can do to keep from dropping a kiss on the rosy cheek. But we must not do that, for we might waken the baby and call her back from dreamland. The Christian Herald has offered its readers many beautiful pictures, but this one surpasses all former productions."

FURTHER INDUCEMENT

We have secured just One Thousand of this beautiful hand water-colored picture "Dreamland." To all friends sending us Six Coupons, together with 25 cents for each one-third year subscription to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, we will present a copy Free, as long as the Thousand last. Send in your coupons at once, so you will receive one of the thousand copies of "Dreamland."

Christian Herald, BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK CITY

52 Times A Year — THE CHRISTIAN HERALD — BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK CITY — $1.50 per Year

IN ACCORDANCE with your offer to accept this Coupon and Twenty-five Cents for a Four-Months' Subscription to The Christian Herald, beginning August 1, 1911, I send herewith 25 Cents, and I hereby certify that I am not now a subscriber to The Christian Herald, and that this subscription is not intended to take the place of any subscription now on your books.

25 Cents

Good Only until August 31, 1911

Name of person influencing this subscription:

Name.....

Street.....

Town..... State.....

52 Times A Year — THE CHRISTIAN HERALD — BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK CITY — $1.50 per Year

IN ACCORDANCE with your offer to accept this Coupon and Twenty-five Cents for a Four-Months' Subscription to The Christian Herald, beginning August 1, 1911, I send herewith 25 Cents, and I hereby certify that I am not now a subscriber to The Christian Herald, and that this subscription is not intended to take the place of any subscription now on your books.

25 Cents

Good Only until August 31, 1911

Name of person influencing this subscription:

Name.....

Street.....

Town..... State.....

52 Times A Year — THE CHRISTIAN HERALD — BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK CITY — $1.50 per Year

IN ACCORDANCE with your offer to accept this Coupon and Twenty-five Cents for a Four-Months' Subscription to The Christian Herald, beginning August 1, 1911, I send herewith 25 Cents, and I hereby certify that I am not now a subscriber to The Christian Herald, and that this subscription is not intended to take the place of any subscription now on your books.

25 Cents

Good Only until August 31, 1911

Name of person influencing this subscription:

Name.....

Street.....

Town..... State.....

These Rewards Are For YOU!

One Volume Christian Herald Library

Given for Only Two Coupons

This reward consists of one volume from our celebrated Christian Herald Library, which consists of eight volumes, entitled as follows: Entertainments for Home, Church and School, Handy Man's Manual of Facts and Figures, Business Hints for Men and Women, Helpful Talks with Girls, Healthful Sports for Boys, How to Speak and Write Correctly, Marvels of Modern Science, Practical Suggestions for Mother and Housewife. Note that there is a volume for every one in the household: the man, the woman, the boy, and the girl. Whichever volume you may select, you will find it very useful indeed and well worth the little effort which you will expend in getting only two friends to sign each a coupon. Add 3c. for actual postage when sending for this reward.

One Volume Masterpieces of the World's Best Literature

Given for Only Two Coupons

We have a number of odd volumes of this set on hand, and will be glad to send any one of them as a reward to a subscriber who will seed us 2 coupons properly signed and accompanied by 25 cents each for new four months' subscribers. In case the supply of odd volumes becomes exhausted, the reader should send in a second choice of 2 coupons, accompanied by 25 cents each and the necessary postage. Add 4 cents actual postage for any one of the Masterpieces.

The Declaration of Independence and Story of the Flag

Given for Only Two Coupons

This is an exact life-size facsimile of the Declaration of Independence, that priceless document which was signed by the fathers of the nation, and which is preserved in the State House, Philadelphia. It should hang framed on the wall of every American household. Accompanying the Declaration will be sent a Story of the Flag, which is a vivid history of our National Emblem. In sending for these rewards, add 3 cents for actual postage.

One Volume Talmage's Sermons

Given for Only Three Coupons

We have a number of odd volumes of sermons by the late Rev. T. De Witt Talmage, which we will be glad to send to any of our friends who will send us 3 coupons properly signed, accompanied by 25 cents each. Our stock of these is limited, and if exhausted some other reward will be substituted. In sending for one of these volumes add 14 cents for actual postage.

Life of Rev. T. De Witt Talmage

Given for Only Three Coupons

This Life of the celebrated preacher is an illuminating account of his achievements on the oratorical platform and his travels in the Holy Land. If you have not read it, you should do so. In sending for this reward, add 23 cents for actual postage.

Shorthand Without a Teacher

Given for Only Four Coupons

This volume is a complete manual of shorthand. It has been thoroughly tested and thousands have learned shorthand from its pages. It will impart to you the principles of shorthand very readily, after which your proficiency will depend upon the practice you give the subject. Many people are earning a living to-day who first studied the rudiments of their calling in this little book. If you select this reward, send 4 cents for actual postage.

Life Work of Louis Klopsch

Given for Only Five Coupons

Although a great many readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD have already secured a copy of The Life Work of this great captain of philanthropy, there are still some who would like to secure a copy of this fascinating work if they could easily do so. Simply get five of your friends to sign coupons, and send them to us accompanied by 25 cents each, and as a reward we will send you this beautifully illustrated volume, which contains the story of the Life Work of your late friend, Dr. Louis Klopsch. You must have contributed to many of the charities mentioned in this book, and it will interest you to see how they were dispensed. If you select the Life Work of Dr. Klopsch as a reward, add 19 cents for actual postage.

"Thou Fool" and Other Sermons by Moody

Given for Only Four Coupons

This is a volume of twelve sermons which were delivered by the late Mr. Moody, but which were never before published. They are in Mr. Moody's best vein, and contain an inspirational message which will be appreciated by our readers. Every subscriber of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD should own a copy of these sermons. If you select this reward, add 6 cents for actual postage.

The Music Simplifier

Given for Only Four Coupons

This is a really good method for learning to play the piano or organ without a teacher. It is practical, and has been endorsed by some of the world's best musicians. We believe it to be the best system for teaching music without a teacher on the market. Many a young person who cannot afford the expense of a regular music teacher, might well try this simplifier. If you select this reward, add 4 cents for actual postage.

The American Flag (4 x 6 Feet)

Given for Only Six Coupons

This large American Flag is one of the best rewards we have to offer. It is worthy of being flown from any home or public institution in the land. It will not fade nor shrink, and you will find constant use for it on all of the holidays throughout the year. Six feet long by four feet wide, bigger than the top of your dining room table, and given in return for a little effort on your part in having six of your friends sign coupons. Send them accompanied by 25 cents each, and we will send you the flag without cost, except 9 cents for actual postage. Send the 6 Coupons immediately, so you may be among the thousand friends who will receive a copy of the beautiful picture, "Dreamland," water-colored by hand.

The Christian Herald Home Library, 8 Vols.

Given for Only Six Coupons

This is the celebrated Christian Herald Home Library of eight volumes, containing books for every member of the family. Their titles are as follows: Entertainments for Home, Church and School—Handy Man's Manual of Facts and Figures—Business Hints for Men and Women—Helpful Talks With Girls—Healthful Sports for Boys—How to Speak and Write Correctly—Marvels of Modern Science and Practical Suggestions for Mother and Housewife. You will find this is one of the most useful sets of books ever published, and whether you are head of the family, the housewife, the son or the daughter, you will not regret earning one of these useful sets by having six of your friends sign coupons and sending them to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, accompanied by 25 cents. If you select the Home Library, add 20 cents for actual postage. Send the 6 Coupons immediately, so you may be among the thousand friends who will receive a copy of "Dreamland," water-colored by hand.

Carefully Read Every Word

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is ever ready to give generous recognition to each and every effort kindly put forth by its subscribers, with a view to the enlargement of its sphere of usefulness. So to-day we again come before our subscribers with an opportunity for service in the one hand, and with generous recognition in the other.

We are planning to double our circulation, and to this end we are making a great financial sacrifice to attract new people by offering them a four months' subscription at a great bargain, in the hope of winning them ultimately as permanent subscribers. But it requires the efforts of tens of thousands of people to accomplish what we are seeking to attain, and it is but right and proper that those who co-operate with us in this matter should be duly recognized and properly rewarded: hence we have arranged the following list of

Unusually Liberal Rewards

No. of Subscribers	Rewards	Add for Actual Postage
For 2 Coupons--	Your choice 1 Vol. Christian Herald Library	$ .03
For 2 Coupons--	1 Vol. Masterpieces of the World's Best Literature (Odd volumes as long as they last.)	.04
For 2 Coupons--	Story of the Flag and Declaration of Independence (Life size ready for framing.)	.03
For 3 Coupons--	1 Vol. Talmage's Sermons. (Odd volumes as long as they last.)	.14
For 3 Coupons--	Life of Rev. T. De Witt Talmage	.23
For 4 Coupons--	1 Vol. Shorthand Without a Teacher	.04
For 4 Coupons--	"Thou Fool" and Other Sermons. By Dwight L. Moody (Never before published.)	.06
For 4 Coupons--	The Music Simplifier. (A really good method without a teacher.)	.04
For 5 Coupons--	Life Work of Louis Klopsch	.19
For 6 Coupons--	1 Set, 8 Vols. Christian Herald Home Library (See description elsewhere.)	.20
For 6 Coupons--	American Flag (4 x 6 feet). (Will not fade or shrink.)	.09
For 6 Coupons--	Red Letter Testament. (Flexible Leather, Red under Gold.)	.05
For 6 Coupons--	The Great Hereafter. By Rev. Madison C. Peters	.43
For 6 Coupons--	Hero Tales. By Francis Trevelyan Miller	.15
For 6 Coupons--	The True Life of Christ. (From the writings of the Evangelists.)	.09
For 6 Coupons--	Before the Doctor Comes. (Should be in every house.)	.14

SPECIAL INDUCEMENT

We have secured One Thousand copies of the beautiful hand water-colored picture "Dreamland." To all friends sending us Six Signed Coupons accompanied by 25 cents each for Six New Four Months' Subscriptions, we will present not only the rewards which they select from the above list, but in addition we will send Free a copy of "Dreamland" as long as the thousand copies last. So send in your coupons at once.

WHEN SELECTING REWARDS, You Must Send the Postage Marked Opposite the Reward of Your Choice

Red Letter Testament

Given for Only Six Coupons

This is our regular Red Letter Testament, beautifully bound in Divinity Circuit, overlapping Red under Gold Edges, and a bookmark. Every word recorded as having been spoken by our Lord is printed in red. Every reader of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD should have one of these Testaments, and here is your opportunity to procure one for the simple effort of getting six of your friends to sign coupons. Send them to us accompanied by 25 cents each, and not only the Testament will be yours, but you may be among the thousand friends who will receive a copy of the beautiful picture "Dreamland," water-colored by hand. If you desire the Testament, add 5 cents for postage.

The Great Hereafter. By Rev. M. C. Peters

Given for Only Six Coupons

The title of this volume gives one an inkling of the subject which Dr. Peters selected to discourse upon. It is a philosophical treatise on life after death, and it cannot fail to awaken the most profound reflection in the minds of its readers. It is a large book, and if you select it as a reward, you must add 43 cents for actual postage. Given for only 6 coupons. Send the 6 coupons immediately, so you may be among the thousand friends who will receive a copy of the beautiful picture, "Dreamland," water-colored by hand.

Hero Tales. By Francis Trevelyan Miller

Given for Only Six Coupons

Some of you may have read Hero Tales, but if you have not, there awaits you a real treat in this account of the heroic deeds of men, women and children. The book inspires one to self-sacrifice and patriotism, and will help to pass many an evening spent around the winter lamp. If you succeed in having 6 coupons signed and send them to us accompanied by 25 cents, we will send you Hero Tales, and you may be among the thousand friends who will receive a copy of the beautiful picture "Dreamland," water-colored by hand. Add 15 cents for actual postage if you elect Hero Tales as a reward.

The True Life of Christ

Given for Only Six Coupons

Here is an inspiring work which is based on the writings of the four evangelists, Matthew, Mark, Luke and John. In vivid, forceful manner it portrays the life of the Saviour as perhaps it has never been portrayed, except in the Bible itself. If you desire this great book and send us 6 coupons, properly signed and accompanied by 25 cents each, add 9 cents for actual postage and we will send it to you at once. Send the 6 coupons immediately, so you may be among the thousand friends who will receive a copy of the beautiful picture, "Dreamland," water-colored by hand.

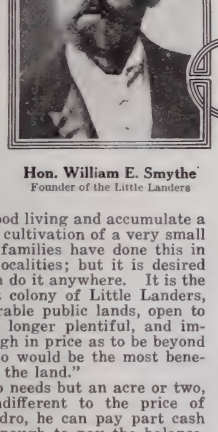
Before the Doctor Comes

Given for Only Six Coupons

Here is a book which should be in every household. It tells you exactly what to do in case of accident or in case of sickness, while waiting for the appearance of the family physician. Under such circumstances the knowledge which you may obtain from this book may mean the difference between life and death. It is a volume full of real utility, and should be in the hands of every one of our readers. Get six of your friends to sign coupons, and send them to us, accompanied by 25 cents each, so that you may be among the thousand friends who will receive a copy of the beautiful picture "Dreamland," water-colored by hand. If you select Before the Doctor Comes, add 14 cents for actual postage.

REMEMBER: August 31st is positively the last mailing date!

Address SPECIAL COUPON OFFER



THE CHRISTIAN HERALD
BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK

The Little Landers of San Ysidro

By JOHN L. COWAN

SEVERAL years ago Bolton Hall wrote a book entitled A Little Land and a Living, telling of the results secured by mixing brains with industry, and growing vegetables on city lots and other small tracts of land. Among the readers of the book was Hon. William E. Smythe, of San Diego, Calif., widely known as the "Father of the National Irrigation Congress," because it was he that secured the organization of the body which was instrumental in securing the passage of the National Reclamation law.

Mr. Smythe was so impressed with the facts and arguments presented in the book that he at once began to talk and write of the possibilities of "a little land." It was not long until he succeeded in enlisting the interest of friends for the formation of a "Little Landers" colony at San Ysidro, Calif., thirteen miles south of San Diego, designed to prove that any family can make a good living and accumulate a surplus by the intelligent cultivation of a very small tract of land. Isolated families have done this in many widely separated localities; but it is desired to prove that any one can do it anywhere. It is the desire, through this first colony of Little Landers, to show the way. Desirable public lands, open to the homesteader, are no longer plentiful, and improved farm land is so high in price as to be beyond the reach of the men who would be the most benefited by getting "back to the land."

Hon. William E. Smythe
Founder of the Little Landers

The Little Lander, who needs but an acre or two, is to a large extent indifferent to the price of land. If, as at San Ysidro, he can pay part cash and have time to earn enough to pay the balance, his savings need not be large to enable him to make a start. It is evident that the tilling of a little land makes the first cost of land per acre much less important. Similarly, there is no need of a large investment in live stock and farm machinery. The live stock is limited to poultry, with, perhaps, a cow or a pig, or maybe both. The requisite implements include no more than a spade, a hoe, a garden rake and a few other inexpensive tools.

There are now forty families of Little Landers at San Ysidro, with a total membership of one hundred and forty. Each family owns from one-quarter of an acre up to seven acres of land. The average size of the "farms" is two and a quarter acres. Most of the colonists think that that is too large. The ideal is just as much land as each family can bring under the highest cultivation without hiring help. Some of the settlers have been established for two full years, and others for shorter periods, ranging down to a family that has just arrived. All of those established for six months or more say they are making a living, and nearly all are accumulating a surplus. It is unfortunate that no one in the colony has kept an exact account of receipts and expenditures. "We have made a living, paid for our improvements, and have money in the bank," is the usual reply to a request for a statement of the profits on a year's labor. That is satisfactory to them, if not to the searcher after exact information.

Nevertheless, the important point is that the Little Landers are making a living and a little more; that they are prosperous, contented, and not desirous of making any change. It seems evident that what these forty families are doing at San Ysidro, millions of families can do throughout America. There are some exceptional people among them; but the most of them are average Americans, from various walks in life, driven by ill health, or by advancing years, or by financial reverses, or by disrian sermon, listened to by people of many beliefs, and of none.

So it is evident that the Little Landers are not so deeply absorbed in growing vegetables and raising chickens as to neglect their moral, intellectual, æsthetic and religious needs. It is with respect to these, in fact, that the cultivation of the "Little Lands" offers the greatest advantages, as compared with ordinary farming. A community, each family of which occupies only a small tract of land, is sufficiently compact to give all its members practically all the social advantages of the town. The isolation of the farm is banished, while the delights of living close to nature, in the open air and sunshine, are preserved.

If the success or failure of the colonists at San Ysidro were all that is involved in this experiment with the "Little Lands," it would not be a matter of very general concern. But it is the hope of those interested in the colony that it may develop into a movement that will help in the solution of grave economic questions. There is no reason why such colonies may not be multiplied indefinitely, provided only that they are established within easy reach of large cities, where a practically unlimited market is at hand for fresh fruits and vegetables, poultry products and other food supplies that can be profitably grown by hand labor upon small tracts of land.

A Bungalow Home, Market Garden and Chicken Yards on the Little Lands content with their work or wages, back to the warm bosom of Mother Earth. They are the pioneers of what appears to be a practicable movement "Back to the Land."

Each man owns his own house, which may be as pretentious or as humble as his means and inclinations dictate. Each man owns his own land, plants upon it whatever he pleases, and cultivates it according to his knowledge and ability. There are no restrictions upon the sale or disposition of property. Some of the Little Landers live upon village lots in San Ysidro, and cultivate their acres, which are a short distance away. Others have built their homes upon their acres. In either case, the distance to the social centre of the community is so short that all enjoy the advantages of both town and country, with the inconveniences of neither.

The Little Landers take particular pride in their park. In view of the fact that the village itself is only two years old, the park is a marvel of floral wealth and beauty, although the trees, which will constitute its greatest charm, are in their infancy. In the park is the club house and assembly hall, with library, reading room and general loafing place. Every Monday evening there is a meeting for entertainment and the discussion of matters of interest. Questions are asked and answered, experiences with crops and poultry are related, and reports are rendered by officers and committees. Then there are songs and stories, a discussion of current events, and a lecture upon some educational theme. The secretary and general manager of the corporation is Rev. Josiah Poeton, a Congregational minister, driven from his flock in Vermont by a nervous breakdown. On Sundays he preaches a non-sectaWhether a genial climate like that of Southern California is better adapted to secure the success of the Little Landers than a colder climate, such as that of the Eastern and New England States, is open to question. Possibly the Little Landers of the future, in the environs of Chicago, New York, and other large cities, will grow their winter vegetables under glass, as is done to a large extent in France. There are some who think that the colder climate of the East and North mean simply great opportunities for men with the courage and skill to combat climatic conditions with the resources of modern science.

Perhaps the aims and objects of the experiment being conducted at San Ysidro are best epitomized in the following from the pen of Mr. Smythe:

"The Hope of the Little Lands"

"That individual independence shall be obtained by millions of men and women, walking in the sunshine without fear of want.

"That in response to the labor of their hands the earth shall answer the prayer, 'Give us this day our daily bread.'

"That they and their children shall be proprietors, rather than tenants—working not for others, but for themselves.

"That theirs shall be the life in the open—the open day and the open heart—fragrant with the breath of flowers, more fragrant with the spirit of fellowship, that makes the good of one the concern of all, and lifts the individual by lifting the mass."

Various Good Causes Helped by Christian Herald Readers

ntributions less than G. 25c; E E W. 50c; S
0 for Various Good M G, 25c; S M G, 25c;
unss. Mrs S B S, 50c; —
C A, 50c; J W A, Mrs B, 25c; A B, 38c; c; Mrs E J B 15c; S L B, 20c; A C, 15c;
s T S B 15c; Mrs F D A F, 85c; I FF, 15c;
C 15c; H A C 50c; Mrs C H D, 30c; Mr J
W C 15c; Mrs J D L M E, 15c; M E F, c; Mrs H H F 50c; 25c; Mrs E H, 15c; Mrs
E F 15c; Mrs E Y G I N H, 15c; Mrs J EH
c; Mrs G W G 15c; 50c; M C H, 50c; Mrs
A G 15c; L H G 15c; L H, 15c; W F H, 50c;
E H 15c; J J 15c; Mrs E K, 15c; E M K, rs E K 50c; Mrs J M 15c; Miss F L, 75c;
10c; L E K 30c; Mrs Mrs E M, 15c; Mrs EM
E K 15c; Mrs N L 50c; Mrs J B M, 15c;
15c; A L L 50c A M A E P, 15c; F W P, 50c; T G L, 25c; Mrs E E S, 25c;
o T L, 15c; Mrs M L Mrs G S S, 50c; Mrs M c; Mrs T D L, 24c; W L U, 35c; M B Y, 82c; L, 15c; Mrs E J M, —, Brampton, 25c;
rs P L 50c; Mrs M S G, Cheviot, 25c; M
S M, 50c; Mrs J H M E C, 50c; Mrs W A c; Mrs S E M, 15c; 50c; Mrs E H B, 25c;
rs H N, 35c; Mrs M Mrs T H B, 50c; W B, 50c; Mrs L M O, 25c; Mrs J W D, 40c; Mrs c; Mrs G L P, 15c; L A D, 15c T G E, 15c;
rs J F B, 15c; J H Mrs A E F, 20c; C E
25c; J L R, 15c; F, 10c J C F, 15c; E J rs P L 15c; W S G, 50c; E C B H, 50c; J
50c; Rev A S, 50c; H H, 35c; W A J, 15c;
L S, 15c; Mrs C B J B L, 25c; E G M, 25c;
15c; Miss A E T, Miss F E M, 15c; Mrs
c; Mrs H M T, 50c; S, 15c; Mrs E A S, 15c;
D T 5c; R RV, 15c; Rev C P, 50c; Mrs N R
K W, 15c; F S W, R, 50c; Mrs E F S, 10c; c; G H C, 50c; S M J T & Sons, 50c; Mrs

A W, 15c; C D W, 75c;
D W W, 50c; Mrs E W
25c; Mrs P S W, 15c;
Mrs J W, 25c; Mrs A
G H, 65c; V T, 50c;
H W, 25c.

(Any Good Cause)

Halse, Mrs M E.. 1 00
Jeffords, C S 2 00
Junad, St P A 5 00
Saunders, Susan . 2 00
E H C. Mrs E
Orange 1 00
H E L, Mrs, E
Orange 1 00
—. Vicksburg . 1 00
Hannah, Mrs J. 1 00
Kean, Hattie E. 1 00
Lear 2 00
Markham, Mrs W 1 00
Wyman, L A.... 1 50
Mrs A M G.... 5 00
Coolidge, Baldwin20 00
A Friend, Bismark, ... 2 25
A Friend, Cornelius1 00

(Amer. Advent Mis. Nanking, China)

Spangler, MissSW 5 00

(Aged Father and Mother in Va.)

Columbia S Car . 2 00

(Rev T J Bach)

Houston, Beckie. 5 00

(Rev Z C Beals)

Miss A M G.... 5 00

(Robt H Bender)

Shellenberger. MJ 2 00

(Mrs Bird)

The Golden Rule Band, Cong S S 10 00

(Attie Bostick, China)

Bronk, Melissa ..10 00

(Arabian Mission)

Brice, S J..... 5 00

(Dr Wm Chamberlain)

A Friend, N Y.. 5 00

(Boston Floating Hosp.

Milton, Mrs I A.. 1 00

(China Presby Mission)

Farnsworth, H .. 4 00

(Christian Mission to Jews)

Miss A M G.... 5 00

Princeton .. 2 00

(Corvelled Priest)

Murray, A G.... 4 90

(East Cen Afr Mission)

Baker, MissM E. 1 04
Rolph, B H..... 2 00

(Missess Ely, Bitlis, Armenia)

Thankoffering, Carlisle 5 00

Florence Crittenton Mission)

Miss A M G.... 5 00

(Five Points Mission)

Miss A M G..... 5 00

(Foreign Missions)

Myers, C F..... 4 00
Ebenezer, S School 5 00
Union SS of Neby17 00
A Friend, Rockfd 5 00
Bennett, W C.... 5 00
Bayne, Mary..... 1 00
Button, W S.... 5 00
Merchant, A H.. 4 95
Mrs J M J 5 00

(Door of Hope)

Miss A M G..... 5 00

(Susan Haswell)

Miss A M G 5 00
Houston, Beckie. 5 00

(Dr Grenfell)

Botsford, MissAH 5 00
Milton, Mrs I A.. 1 00
Miss A M G 5 00
Ferguson, Mrs JL 1 50
Harwell, Miss C. 2 00
Houston, Beckie. 5 00
Williams, A L.. 2 00
A Friend, ...25 00
—, Elkview.... 2 00
—, Walkertow.n 2 00
Botsford, MissAH 5 00
Murray, A G.... 9 80
A Friend, Ohio.. 1 00

(Int'l Sunshine Society)

Howell, E D.... 1 00
Miss A M G.... 5 00
Greenwich Light S S, Phila 1 00
Milton, Mrs I A.. 1 00
Savage, Thos.. 1 00

(Home Missions)

A Friend, Rockfd 5 00
Reader, Alberta.. 1 20
A Friend, Rich wood 2 50

(Korea Mission)

Washburn, W.... 1 00

(St Rose's Free Home)

Kober, Mrs J.... 5 00
Northey Jas..... 1 00

(Lepers at Jerusalem)

Miss A M G 5 00

(McAuley, Cremorne Mission)

Miss A M G 5 00

(Mayesville Institute)

Jennings, Miss E. 2 00
Miss A M G 5 00
Burgess, Sr. Edw 2 00

(McAuley Water Street Mission)

Montgomery, Miss M 1 00

Rose, Ann 4 00
Miss A M G 5 00
H N, N Y City 2 00
Lee, Mary E.... 2 00
Levens, Grant... 5 00

(Meth Miss Society in Australia)

Perrin, Lee 5 00

(Mission Among the Sailors)

Miss A M G 5 00

(Pacific Garden Missn)

Miss A M G 5 00

(Sasha E Perkin)

—, Pittsburgh, Pa 25 00

(Red Cross Society)

Grabbe, Fred 1 00

(Rev Chris Schmitt)

Miss A M G 5 00
Houston, Beckie. 5 00

(Soc of Soul Winners)

Miss A M G 5 00

(South Amer. Mission)

Miss A M G 5 00

(Steele Orphanage)

Miss A M G 5 00

(Sunday Breakfast Phila. Association)

Miss A M G 5 00

(Tennessee Town Miss)

Miss A M G 5 00

Dr Stephen Trowbridge)

—, Columbia SC 2 00

(Union Gospel Mission)

Miss A M G 5 00

(White Door)

Farley, Grace .. 4 74
Finch, Mrs C and Friend 2 00
McAdam, MrsWm 5 00
Miss A M G 5 00
W. Tidioute .. 5 00
In Jesus Name.. 2 50

(Rosetta Sherwood Hall)

Muller, Elizabeth 5 00

(Inland So Amer Missn)

Brice, S J..... 5 00
Kerr, Mrs L E...10 00
Printz, Miss AJH 1 00
Stedman, C C.... 1 00
Woodford, W W. 1 00
A Friend, N Y... 5 00

(Inner Mission)

Townsend, P W. 2 00

(Rev F Jansen)

Houston, Beckie. 5 00

(Jerusalem Lepers Mission)

Northey, Jas..... 1 00

(Emilo Olsson)

Shellenberger, MJ 5 00

(John G Paton)

Shellenberger, MJ 5 00

(Rev Perkins)

Johnson, Mrs M.. 1 00
Longnecker, MrsEJ1 00

(Mary Reed Lepers)

Northey, Jas.... 1 00

(National Temp Soc)

Robertson, J R. 5 00
Styles, W W... 1 00
Yoder, Rev J O.. 1 00

Bolles, Edgar W and Lee R..... 2 00
Parker, Mrs H E. 2 00
Sitler, Mrs C P.. 1 00

(Sarah Wray)

—, Middletown, 5 00

Nicholas Zamora)

Shellenberger, MJ 5 00

IN MY VERANDA EASY CHAIR

In the Invalid's Room

By MARGARET E. SANGSTER

THE ideal condition to which we more and more are tending in this period is that of perfect health. If ever the time shall come when children, as a rule, shall be well born in the sense of receiving a good inheritance from parents who have no record of physical weakness, the world will enter upon a new era of joy in living. To be immune from disease is to walk the earth with freedom, to attack life's daily duties with courage and to go and come on life's errands without the bearing of too heavy a burden. This being admitted, the wonder rises in the mind whether we might not all lose something very precious, something that takes away the dross and refines the gold of the soul, if we were never ill ourselves and if we never had the privilege of ministry to invalids. Think of the heroic efforts of physicians and the almost miraculous skill of surgeons, and the development of medical science; think of the hospitals springing up to-day in foreign lands and of the army of trained nurses alike useful in war and peace, and are we quite ready to dismiss all these and with them forego our opportunity of showing sympathy to the afflicted?

The presence in a home of a gentle and patient invalid is always a blessing. A difficult and inconsiderate invalid, for this variety, too, exists, may be likewise a blessing in that those who surround the sufferer are forced to bear with petulance, and deal tenderly with moods of depression following in the wake of exhausted nerves.

Dr. Thomas Arnold, the famous Arnold of Rugby, in a letter to a friend, drew the portrait of an invalid with a touch so sure and in language so affectionate that it is worth our reading. Some of us have known invalids as saintly as Miss Arnold. Most of us might imitate her in the resolution never to talk about our ailments or our pains.

"I must conclude with a more delightful subject, my most dear and blessed sister. I never saw a more perfect instance of the spirit of power and of love, and of a sound mind; intense love, almost to the annihilation of selfishness—a daily martyrdom for twenty years, during which she adhered to her early-formed resolution of never talking about herself; thoughtful about the very pins and ribands of my wife's dress, about the making of a doll's cap for a child—but of herself, save only as regarded her ripening in all goodness, wholly thoughtless; enjoying everything lovely, graceful, beautiful, high-minded, whether in God's works or man's, with the keenest relish; inheriting the earth to the very fulness of promise, though never leaving her crib, nor changing her posture; and preserved, through the very valley of the shadow of death, from all fear or impatience, or from every cloud of impaired reason, which might mar the beauty of Christ's Spirit's glorious work."

. . .

Naming a Son for His Father

HERE is another ball tossed into the arena with a view to discussion. Who will first catch and toss it back? A wife writes, "Is it well to name a son for his father, providing the father be a man of integrity and discretion?" As a rule, a father's name should be a good inheritance for a son, and there are families in which there has been a brave succession of Johns, Peters, Georges, and Harrys down to the fifth or sixth generation. If there is any reason for preferring not to give father's name to the boy, if the father's name be Shadrack, Meshach or Abednego, for instance, ought not he to have the first choice in naming the lad? What do our readers think about this?

. . .

A Beautiful Vision

"ARE you a believer in dreams? If so, dear editor, will you tell me the meaning of one that I had a few nights ago? I had been working hard all day and when my head touched the pillow it was throbbing with pain. I did not fall asleep for an hour or more, but I slept profoundly, and in my dream I was not a worn-out homely woman, but a beautiful young girl walking gaily through a field where flowers grew on every side. There were daisies, roses, lilies and many flowers the names of which I did not know. When I awakened the house was full of fragrance, or so it seemed to me. Do you think God sent me that dream?"

Dreams come to us, we are told, immediately before we waken. A portion of the brain is sufficiently wakeful to paint pictures for us and tell us stories while we are in fact asleep. Dreams are curiously made up of past experience and future hopes. You probabl love flowers, and would like to liv where you could gather them when yo chose and have gardens to walk i and woods to rest in and all lovel green things and blooming things nea your hand. I think that in old time the Lord often spoke to people i dreams. The Bible gives us many in stances of the soul's communing thu with God. Pharaoh and Nebuchac nezzar had dreams which they forgo yet which they were determined t have interpreted to them. Joseph re vealed the meaning of Pharaoh' dream to him, and Daniel in a late age acted as interpreter of a drear to Nebuchadnezzar. In this period o the world we have fuller light tha the ancients had, and our access t Jehovah, it would appear, may be s swift and sure in our waking hour that we do not need to cherish muc belief in dreams. Your dream was a very lovely one, and it must have mad a deep impression since you can recal it so vividly.

. . .

DURING the week following the coronation celebration in London, the King and Queen gave a garden party at Crystal Palace, to which thousands of London children of the poorer classes were invited. One of the features of the occasion was the presentation to each little guest of a souvenir mug bearing their Majesties' pictures. King George had ordered thirty thousand of these made specially for this purpose. The accompanying photograph shows Queen Mary entering the palace.

Useful Hints

Thanks are due to a contributor who fur nishes us with a number of useful practica hints. Suggestions of this kind are alway welcome.

To Remove Scorch from Cloth

Moisten the cloth with peroxide and pres with a moderately hot iron. If the first tria is not entirely successful repeat the process.

To Free Cake from the Pan

To make cake leave the pan, loosen the edge with a knife, turn upside down. Lay a cloth wet with cold water on the pan, and the cake will drop.

An Improved Dusting Cloth

A few drops of kerosene sprinkled on a duster will remove dust with magical effect, and the odor soon vanishes.

For Indigestion or Colic

Relieve colic by taking a half teaspoonful of baking soda dissolved in hot water. To this a half teaspoonful of essence of peppermint may be added. For a baby a little baking soda the size of a pea is recommended.

TWENTY-THIRD PSALM

THE Lord my shepherd is,
My wants He will supply;
For He is mine, and I am His,
My shepherd ever nigh.
In pastures green He leadeth me,
Beside those waters still;
In paths of peace He still will be
My guide through every ill.

The Lord my shepherd is,
My soul He will restore;
And in the paths of righteousness
I'll walk for ever more.
Yea, though I walk through valley drear,
No evil will I fear,
His rod and staff they comfort me,
My shepherd still is near.

The Lord my shepherd is,
A feast He will prepare
In midst of all my enemies
For me with tenderest care;
My cup o'erflows with happiness,
His goodness I can see;
His love and mercy will provide
All coming days for me.

The Lord my shepherd is,
Oh, sweet these words to me,
That thou, dear Lord, will be my guide,
E'en through eternity;
That in Thy courts I may abide,
With Thee, my Lord, I'll be,
Through endless ages I may dwell
With those I love, and Thee.

ELIZAANN ESTES KENDRIE.

FROM MOHAMMED TO CHRIST

T. F. Hallowell and a Group of Native Christians

Mr. Hallowell in Mohammedan Garb

The Church at Ronietta, Sierra Leone

THE highest barriers to Christianity have been overcome in many lands and the most reluctant hearts have come at last to hear the story of salvation, but perhaps nowhere has there been a greater barrier of pure inertia than in Sierra Leone, West Africa, which is now being flooded with the rays of dawning enlightenment. Probably no story from the foreign field is more interesting than that of a Mohammedan youth who turned from his false religion to the life of loyal Christian service. This is Thomas Franklin Hallowell, was born in Quoialand, in the interior of Sierra Leone, in 1860. His great-grandfather had fought for Masimera, a noted African warrior, and had secured power over a portion of the country. When he was twenty-one years of age, the town where he was residing came under the influence of missionary itineration, and two years later this he began to attend a night school maintained by the mission. It was that which impressed the claims of Christianity most strongly upon him during a magic lantern lecture given by Rev. Henry Weeks and Rev. D. F. Oberforce, representatives of the United Brethren Church. He was much struck with the Bible pictures shown and with the plan of redemption proclaimed by the missionaries.

It was while making a perilous boat trip that he turned entirely from Mohammed to Christ. His mother had sent him to the markets of Freetown with various farm products and the main part of the journey had to be made by water through a very large bay and around the rocky peninsula of Sierra Leone. At first everything went well, but when the most dangerous part of the sea was reached a heavy storm arose. The captain and boatmen became terrified and refused to try to control the boat. Mr. Hallowell was literally compelled to take the helm himself in order to save his life. As the boat was dashed about by the tempest, he began to pray for help. He first uttered the old Arabic prayers which he had learned from the Koran. These proving useless, he threw his Mohammedanism to the winds and waves and commenced imploring God in the name of Jesus. A few years afterward, while a tribal war was raging, Mr. Hallowell was hired as a boatman by the United Brethren Mission at Rotifunk. It was not long until he told the missionary in charge that he wanted to attend the mission school. He was then already twenty-four years old, but such was his determination to obtain a Christian education that he persevered for eight years, finally completing the sixth standard. He was then appointed a teacher and itinerant preacher of the mission among the Timne people of the Yonnie country.

Eight years ago he was placed in charge of the United Brethren mission work at Ronietta, an extensive and important town of the Timne tribe. At that time heathenism prevailed in Ronietta unchecked, while Mohammedanism was seeking to gain a stronger foothold. Mr. Hollowell as a member of the tribe and a converted Mohammedan was peculiarly fitted for the work entrusted to him, and he has labored with commendable success. A mission house and church have been erected largely from money given by the people. The church was dedicated in 1908, and there have been gathered a communicant membership of thirty-three and a seeker membership of sixty-one. A very good day school is maintained in connection with the religious work. Besides holding the regular services in Ronietta, Mr. Hallowell travels throughout a territory one hundred square miles in area, visiting eighteen preaching places at least once a quarter. As I went about with Mr. Hallowell and enjoyed the hospitality of his home, I learned much concerning the struggles of his life. He informed me that the right to the chieftaincy had recently come to him and that many of his friends had urged him to accept the position. However, he prefers to remain true to his high calling though it costs him worldly wealth and power. In January, 1910, he was ordained as a minister of the Gospel in the United Brethren Church, and he regards this spiritual commission as greater than any other which could be bestowed upon him. RAYMOND P. DOUGHERTY.

YOUNG PEOPLE'S SOCIETIES

Mountain Scenes*

IS most interesting to note how many of the great Scripture events take place among the mountains, even their very summits. The Holy Land is a mountainous region. Its inhabitants naturally spoke of the hills in their proverbs and their poems. Go through the book of Psalms and see how many figures there are drawn from them.

One of the most beautiful of these similitudes is that in which heaven is opened to the hills. "I will lift up mine eyes unto the hills from whence cometh my help." Truly, if we lift up our eyes, we ever find help.

It is said that two men, some years after the Civil War, met on an ocean steamer. They fell into conversation and each discovered that the other had been a soldier in the war, but that they had fought on opposite sides. As they talked on, they found that they had participated in the same battle. With deep interest, they shared their reminiscences of the great conflict, and a thrilling incident was uncovered as they went on.

It seems that one night the Northern soldier was on sentry duty on one side of a little river, when the Southern soldier was hidden as a sharpshooter on the other side, watching his chance to pick off such of the enemy as ventured within his range. The sentry was singing softly, "Jesus, lover of my soul," as he paced his beat. He came out into the moonlight, and the sharpshooter fixed his unerring aim upon him; but on the instant the words floated across the stream:

Cover my defenseless head
With the shadow of thy wing.

The Southerner dropped his rifle. He dared not shoot a man who was praying that prayer.

"I would as soon have shot my own mother," he said.

The sentinel had "lifted his eyes up to the hills," and God had sent help.

A story is told of a poor, crippled shoemaker, who could never go out anywhere. His little shop was in the heart of a great city, and from his small window no beautiful sight was visible. But one day he discovered that from a certain point in the shop he could catch a glimpse of the sky, and he moved his bench up to that point, so that he could refresh himself with that bit of beauty.

In the same way we may find some point in every hard experience of our lives from which heaven can be seen.

"We should never," says Dr. J. R. Miller, in his very helpful book, The Gate Beautiful, "allow anybody, any circumstance, or anything that happens, to spoil our lives. We ought to resolve to keep sweet, whatever the circumstances may be. That is what being a Christian means. That is what it is to lift up our eyes unto the hills. If we truly lift up our eyes unto God, we shall get something of God's beauty into our souls, and shall get grace enough to enable us to live the Christ-life."

Truly, as Dr. Miller reminds us in another place, the mountains are places of strength and of peace. In an old legend we are told that every morning at sunrise a handful of dew fell from Mount Hermon upon the church of St. Mary, where at once it was gathered by the Christian physicians and proved a sovereign remedy for many diseases.

This was only a symbol of the love of Christ which comes down to us from the heavenly hills to revive and heal us.

Christian Endeavor Topic for Sunday, Aug. 20. TEXTS: Deut. 34:1-6; Matt. 17:1-8.

Sympathetic Service*

AFTER a visitor had departed, her hostess remarked to a member of her family, "I wanted to tell her of the prize that Henry had taken, but I decided that I had better not, because she would probably be vexed because her son had not distinguished himself in some way."

The words implied a belief in the lack of generous sympathy on the part of the visitor, and also a serious lack in the speaker herself. We judge others largely by ourselves. An ancient proverb says, "If we meet no gods, it is because we harbor none," and the converse is equally true.

The writer of our interesting "Notes" seems to feel that sympathy is less than it used to be between man and man. Let us hope that he is taking a view which is too gloomy. The great socialistic and religious movements of the age seem to argue that way; and surely there was never a time when great hospitals and asylums, great libraries and charities of all kinds were so freely thrown open to the public as now. The world-wide movement in favor of peace and arbitration is another token that fraternity and neighbor-love are gradually asserting their sway over humanity. It is not that so many men go around shouting out their desire to help their kind, but that "plain clothes philanthropists" are so often found ready to help in time of need. Richard Burton, in the Independent, described this sort of man as "The Modern Saint," saying:

He looks not holy: simple his belief:
His creed for mystic visions do not scan;
His face shows lines cut there by others' grief,
And in his eyes is love of brother-man.
Nor self nor self-salvation is his care;
He yearns to make the world a sunnier clime
To live in; and his mission everywhere
Is strangely like the Christ's of olden time.

Among our noble ministers and acknowledged "settlement workers," these thousands of lay-helpers, unlabeled and unknown save to the All-Seeing, are doing the loving works of the Christian. As one of our philanthropists has said, "Friendship is with us the master-passion."

So highly did Thoreau rate the power of loving sympathy from friends that he wrote, "Think of the importance of friendship in the education of men. It will make a man honest; it will make him a hero; it will make him a saint."

What must have been the effect upon Timothy's character of the love and friendship of Paul! That powerful teaching must have had its effect, and the contemplation of that wonderful example, also; but it was the fatherly sympathy which, probably, most of all spurred up to his highest development the great Bishop of Ephesus.

Dr. Parsons Nichols refers, in his great sermon on "The Things that Remain," to the poem of Mrs. Hemans, in which a boy mourns for his brother, saying, "Oh, while my brother with me played, would I had loved him more!"

"The truest word to have spoken to that child," says Dr. Nichols, "would have been, 'Remember that you have other brothers, sisters, too, still left on earth for whom you will feel the same regret when they are gone. Try to love them more now.' And the truest word to speak to us men and women who are ready to sink in despair at the memory of our shortcomings toward those we can no longer help, is that there are others who may still be helped."

*Topic of the Epworth League for Sunday, August 20. TEXTS: Rom. 12:15; Heb. 13:1-3; I. Pet. 3:8.

OUR BOYS AND GIRLS

THE PRINCE'S COMING

BECAUSE it is a really truly fairy tale that for all its barbaric splendor and pomp, might have slipped out of a golden volume of the Arabian Night's Tales, and, for its good king and queen, its magic castle, its enchanted dragon, its fairy prince, you might at any time find in the familiar old worn volume of Grimm's Fairy Tales, or among the matchless stories of Hans Christian Andersen, we are going to give up the Cozy Corner this week to the story of the

Crowning of the Boy Prince of Wales

ONCE upon a time, and just a little while ago, on the 14th day of July, 1911, in the reign of good King George, there came to Carnarvon Castle, oldest and splendidest of ancient Welsh strongholds, a boy. Just a boy, like almost any other boy. He likes to play and romp and jump, to take a turn at marbles and hockey, and to fly a paper aeroplane, like you, and you, who shall be reading this story.

But on this day everything was different, for within the walls of the great palace 20,000 courtiers, lords and ladies and high masters of the realm, in the gayest regalia, were gathered in his honor, while, out beyond the turreted old castle walls, on the green plains that stretched to the river Avon, along which myriads of gaily decked boats danced for his pleasure, and as far as the eye could reach, over the encircling slopes of the gray Welsh hills, the loyal populace awaited his coming—for he was to be crowned that day their liege and prince.

The Multitude at Prayer

IT WAS toward evening; the long sloping shadows gleamed with the tawny golden light of the setting sun, when suddenly three prolonged blasts from the golden horns of the scarlet-clad trumpeters on the parapets, heralded the arrival of the royal family at the castle. In the hush that followed, the venerable Archbishop of Wales stepped out upon the platform which had been raised over Queen Eleanor's high gateway, which is the main entrance to the castle, and led the multitude in a simple prayer.

The Ceremony

EVEN as every head was bowed in prayer for him, he came, that gentle kingly boy, clad in purple and gold and ermine, and knelt between his father and his mother to receive the Archbishop's blessing. Then presently the king arose and with a few words of simple ceremony placed the coronet of Wales upon his son's head, handed to him the sword of his lofty office, and the boy repeated the old oath of fealty. Then the king raised him from his knees and kissed him just as any other proud father would have done, and the multitude catching the first glimpse of their new-made Prince as he stood there boyish and brave in his royal robes and crown, sent such a cheering into the air as no one who heard it had ever heard before. They lost their heads with delight in him. But who could have helped cheering? He was such a boy and his calling was so high.

"Just a Boy—Like Any Other Boy"

The Enchanted Dragon

NERVOUS and half afraid for a moment, he glanced first at his mother, as though most of all he wanted to go to her, then at the king, who stepped forward and took him by the hand to give him courage. After that a look of boyish earnestness crossed his face and he stepped resolutely forward, looking out over the faces of his loyal subjects. In his quick boyish way he raised his right hand to stop the cheering. As he put it down again it rested on the mane of the great red dragon that is the ornament of the ancient gateway, and in a clear voice he leaned forward and said:

I thank you with all my heart, my people, for your warm welcome. Your loyalty reminds me of my Tudor descent and of the great title that I bear. I assure you that I shall never forget this day. I am very young, but I have great examples before me and I have my dear father, the king, and my dear mother, the queen, and many good friends, to help me. And so, bearing in mind our ancient and beautiful saying, "Without God is without anything; God is enough," I hope to do my duty to my king, to Wales and to you my people.

It was a wonderful moment. As the echo of his boyish voice died away, and the Archbishop from the highest turret pronounced a benediction, cannons boomed, royal salutes were fired and bands played, while the royal pageant, led by the boy prince, threaded its way among the people.

In this splendid Republic of ours, where we look upon every boy as a possible prince and every girl as a queen, I love to fancy that after all the old dragon above the gate was an enchanted dragon, and had something to do with that great day in the English lad's life; for after all, was he not a prince? And dragons will stand by princes and queens, as everybody knows.

Little People's Corner and an August Prize Contest

This Letter Won the Prize

MY dear Aunt in the Cozy Corner: I love the Cozy Corner because there are so many surprises all the time. You will laugh when I tell you that it makes me think of the delicious smell of goodies from the pantry. THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is like a great fireplace too, and there is one special lovely nook just a little cozier than all the rest, and that is where the Aunt in the Cozy Corner sits with all her boys and girls around her. There is a surprise box there too, with lovely stories and poetry, puzzling questions and prize contests, and there we all sit in the long winter evenings very happy.

In the summer time, our Cozy Corner is like a great green lawn, where the children are running and playing games. The generous Aunt is at the head of them all directing and planning surprises. Such a good time as everybody has! There are many more reasons why I like the Cozy Corner, for the stories are best and the games are best, the pictures are best, and the prizes and contests are better than are found anywhere else.

With love to all the Cozy Corner boys and girls,

GLADYS ZEMLICKA, age 10.—

The Drummer Boy and the Shepherdess

Drummer boy, drummer boy, where is your drum?
And why do you weep, sir, and hold your thumb?
The soldiers are out and the fights we can hear,
But where is the drum of my brave Grenadier?

"My dear little drum, it was stolen away
Whilst I was asleep on a sunshiny day;
'Twas because of the drone of the big bumble bee
And some sheep and shepherdess under a tree."

Shepherdess, Shepherdess, where is your crook?
And why is your little lamb over the brook?
It bleats for its dam and dog Tray is not by,
So why do you stand with a tear in your eye?

"My dear little crook it was stolen away
Whilst I dreamed a dream on a bright sunny day;
'Twas because of the drone of a big bumble-bee,
And a drum and a drummer-boy under a tree."

The Cherry Pie

Divide this cherry pie into halves, each containing the same number of whole cherries, and you shall receive promptly the charming new Cozy Corner Souvenir if you will enclose a one cent stamp for postage. Be sure to enter this contest, for the August souvenir booklet is the loveliest surprise of all. Send all answers and letters to

The Aunt in the Cozy Corner
Bible House, New York.

'Sh! 'Sh!

The girls and the boys
They made such a noise
At play with their toys,
That Dolly she fled,
And went to bed,
The German bricks,
The candlesticks,
The elephant,
And the cormorant,
The ass and the horse,
And the rest, of course,
Were frightened, like all the rest of the toys,
And hid themselves from the dreadful noise:
So, if I were you, next time I played,
I would not be so loud in the noise that I made!

Good-Night Verse

Our feet shall stand in thy gates, O Jerusalem. Peace be within thy walls, and righteousness within thy palaces.

MURMUR NOT

They shall perish; but Thou remainest.
—Heb. 1: 1

YOU murmur that your lot is cast
Where doubt rough-handles holy things,
And plucks away the timid hand
That constant to God's altar clings.
Yet murmur not—'neath every change
God's truth and kindness still abide;
Rest thou on Him; no mortal force
Can thrust you forth from His dear side

You murmur that your lot is cast
'Mid rival creeds that scorn all doubt,
And think to settle—shallow, sure—
The truth by numbers' noisy shout;
Yet heed not their discordant notes;
Be Christ your life; be Christ your en
He who survives the smoking flax
Breathes music through the bruised reed.

You murmur that your lot is cast
Where wealth is counted more than wo
Fear not; these perish in the use
With all that hath not heavenly birth.
But every deed of simple love,
And every step of duty trod,
Are songs to cheer the pilgrim's feet,
That go through sorrow unto God.

H. P. LYMAN-WHEATON, D
Ridgefield, N. J.

The Soul and the Body

A DIALOGUE

"THE soul said to the body, 'must surely part, and now let reckon together.' 'Let us reckon, ter,' said the body. 'You,' said soul, 'have been active in labor toil, early and late, and gathered gold. Will you keep it with you shall I take it with me? Who is ing to take it? Take it down to yo grave, and some thief will dig it before the snow falls.'

"'Alas!' said the body, 'how can take it among the darkness and d and corruption of death? What it profit me there?' 'No,' said the so 'but how can I carry it where ear and earthly things are not suffered enter? And after all it is but yello earth.' 'And, shortly, it will be neith mine nor thine,'" said the body, so rowfully.

"'Our reckoning is not over,' sa the soul. 'How are we to meet agai if we must meet again? Will it be sorrow or in joy? You have nev allowed me to look heavenward, b robbed me of my freedom and used my powers to help you to get gold."

"'Alas!' said the body, 'you tempt me, and now you reproach me. 'Wha and if we should meet, as fellow-to mentors, bound together for etern misery?' said the soul. 'I am defil as you are, and you have never car for our cleansing. I am without right to heaven, as you are, and yo have never cared for entrance into So, then, this gold will be our mockin accuser in eternity, and I shall r proach you forever for having d stroyed me in getting it."

* In the wonderful book of hitherto unpublish sermons by the late Evangelist Dwight L. Mood shortly to be published by THE CHRISTIAN HE ALD, is the foregoing dramatic dialogue betwe soul and body at the hour of death. The serm in which this dialogue occurs, and which giv the title to the volume—"Thou Fool"—is a treme dous attack on the love of worldly power, rich and pleasures. See page 790 of this issue.

A Fearless Temperance Worker

—MRS. CARRIE NATION, long prominent as temperance worker and dreaded by saloo keepers on account of her use of the axe demolishing bars, passed away on June 9. S began her temperance work in 1900. Man times she was arrested and once her wrist w broken by a policeman's club. She was fea less in her methods and sincere and honest her convictions. She was sixty-four years age. Mrs. Nation did her first saloon smashin act on June 6, 1899, when she demolished dive in Kiowa, Kan. From that date fo twelve years, she traveled all over the Unite States, made several trips to Canada, one t Mexico, and one to England and Scotland. Sh was in jail thirty-three times.

A HEART OF STONE

By MABEL L. STUART

HARLEYVILLE lay bathed in a sea of crimson light, its three tall spires and weather-beaten ...e painted vividly upon a back-... of flaming sunset. Down on ...rd white highroad with its arch ...eful elms twilight was falling ... purple mist, while in the high ... of the hilltops the dusty green ... had taken on a tinge of faded ...d.

...t the man who lounged on the ...a at Mapleview saw none of ... things. The sunset and the ...d autumn landscape had no com-...rcial value, consequently they inter-...ested him not one whit. Indeed, it had ...n affirmed at the Sewing Circle ...very afternoon that if Hugh ... could lay hands on his own soul ...uld sell it for what it would ...

...t the object of this unchristian ...ught sprawled in his low-swung ...ock, blissfully unconscious, he ...drinking in the delectable odors ...t to him from the kitchen where ...housekeeper was preparing the ...w's Thanksgiving dinner. But ...r far than the scent of browning ... and delicious pastry was the ...ught of the great stroke of business ...e he was about to execute—the ...ation of his carefully planned ... of revenge.

...e pondered on this delightful ...t he experienced an unpleasant ...sion—unseen eyes were watching ... Quickly raising his head he ...around. For a moment he could ... no one; then his eye was caught ...ash of red through a gap in the ...

"...at youngest Morton again," he ...d. "I'll settle him once for all. ... you young villain! What do ...ean by trespassing on my prop-...y" he roared, making a dive for ...natch of fiery hair that sur-...ed the mischievous face of his ...come visitor.

"I' go my hair, and I'll tell you," ...ded the youngster imperturba-... Rogers did as requested.

"...ell, Mr. Reid said you was the ...an' I came to see if you really ...dorns. But I guess they ain't ...d yet."

...tinctively Rogers raised his hand ... forehead; it was smooth and ... As he stood in amazed silence ...ering this strange occurrence, his ...ful enemy made good his escape, ...ng at a safe distance to indulge ...ious contortions of countenance ... were, to say the least, disre-...ul to the owner of Mapleview.

...ers had not noticed the silent ...g. A new idea had entered his ...entred brain. This was what ...thought of him in Harleyville—...o in his earlier years had been ...ost popular man in the village, ...t after, wined and dined. And ...as what it had come to!

...e tried to turn his thoughts into ...n pleasing channels, but the past ...ed in obtruding itself. Anxiously ... called the scenes of other days ...ng to justify his present state of ... callousness.

...ely he had every excuse. Mor-...ad wronged him beyond all hope ... rgiveness. Had he not robbed ...f the woman he had loved, she ...in the folly of youth had mis-... brass for gold? She had bitterly ...ted, it was true, but that had ... healed the breach between ...rs and herself, nor turned his ... hate to pity.

...ove all, had not Morton, glib ...drel that he was, swindled him ...f a cool five thousand in that ...dless mine? What if the villain ...een dead these five years? There ...emained his wife and family, and ...ins of the father"—he would see that they were visited and that right thoroughly!

Ever since the bitter disappointment of his early youth, he had been planning to get Morton into his power. The flashy, suave-tongued adventurer had unconsciously stepped into the net. His grand establishment had dwindled away; little by little his money disappeared. Then quick consumption had developed and after his death the care-worn wife and four young children had been compelled to live on a tiny farm on which Rogers held a substantial mortgage.

Through five years of their desperate struggle against overwhelming poverty he had extracted the last cent of interest, carefully compounding it when the widow was unable to pay. Now the worst had come to the worst. On the morrow he was going to send them notice that he could wait no longer. They were to be turned out. Where would they go? Who would keep them from starvation—what was that to him?

Evening closed in; the crimson west, the glowing church spires faded into gray, and still he sat conning over his anticipated triumph. Somehow the glamour had dulled a trifle. The keen edge of his enjoyment was gone. He could not account for the feeling and put it from him abruptly.

Voices of passersby came to him through the hedge, thin musical notes ringing clearly through the scented dusk. It was "those women," as he was wont to call them, returning from the Sewing Circle.

"And yet," Miss Thorne was saying in an acid tone, "Mr. Thorpe says there is good in that man if only one could touch the right chord."

Derisive laughter greeted this remark. "Poor Mr. Thorpe," cried one, "he is too angelic for this sinful world. Why, he sees good in everybody! If your sins were mountains high he would dig and delve until he had unearthed one small virtue; then he would parade it as proudly as if he had unearthed a gold mine."

"He might dig in vain till Doomsday," affirmed a third as the voices trailed away into the night. "Hugh Rogers' virtues are buried beyond hope of resurrection."

"Cats!" muttered Rogers, "they have the impudence to refer to me!"

So annoying was this thought that he rose from the hammock and strode away through the strip of evergreens, not knowing whither he went. The moon was shedding its ghostly light over the great gabled house standing so grim and aloof, a type of its uncompromising master. Rogers avoided the kitchen garden and struck off through the pasture-land and across the little rustic bridge.

Not until a strip of light from an open door fell across his pathway did he realize how far he had come. He was standing before the home of his arch enemies—the miserable cottage where Ralph Morton's widow had fought her losing battle with poverty.

Through the wide-flung door he could see the mother and her four sturdy boys seated around the dining-room table. How pale and delicate she had grown, this woman he had loved in days gone by! Life had surely gone hard with her, for she was but a young woman still.

Rogers stood as though fascinated, unable to withdraw his gaze. The sound of her clear familiar voice came to him across the little grass plot; she was having family worship. "Thou fool, this night thy soul shall be required of thee——" the clear-cut tones rose sweetly in the evening stillness.

Rogers started. Everyone seemed against him to-day. Even the finger

Continued on page 799

Parowax

(pure refined paraffine)

Seals jelly glasses and preserve jars air tight,—ferment proof,—mold proof.

Costs but little.

Just melt the Parowax and pour on top of the jelly in the glass. Or if you use jars, dip your jar into it after you screw on the top.

Parowax is odorless, tasteless—pure enough to eat.

Get a package from your grocer and try it.

Send to 56 New Street, New York, for free book of receipts No. 25—and printed labels for a hundred jars of preserves.

Standard Oil Company

(Incorporated)

TYPEWRITERS FACTORY REBUILT

Save $25 to $50 on any make of Typewriter. Our "Factory Rebuilt" Typewriters are perfect in quality, condition and looks. Durable and reliable in construction and serviceable in every way. Buy from the largest factory in the world with branch stores in leading cities. We guarantee for one year against defect in workmanship and material. Write for catalogue and address of nearest branch office.

American Writing Machine Co.
345 Broadway, New York

UNLESS IT'S Rupley RICHMOND, VA. D E IT'S AN IMITATION

Specify "Duplex-Richmond"

We have made as many permanent customers for the

Duplex Envelope System of Church Collections

by the excellence of our service as by the excellence of our system.

DUPLEX — Richmond, Va.

STAMMERING HABIT

permanently corrected. Natural speech taught. Reed Method being introduced into public schools. Department for training teachers. Endorsed by highest authorities. Special summer classes for children. Trial Week Free.

REED SCHOOL 367 Hubbard Ave., Detroit, Mich.

FOR INDIGESTION

MURRAY'S CHARCOAL TABLETS

Once Only, for trial
A 25c box for 10c

A. J. Ditman, 2 Astor House, N. Y.

WHITE LEAD on THE FARM

Run Down Places

Don't let your buildings run down—any more than your land—both of them are your capital. Nothing makes a farm appear more neglected and down-at-the-heel than unpainted buildings. Paint mixed on the job and made of

"Dutch Boy Painter"
Pure White Lead

and pure linseed oil will not only make your buildings look prosperous but will protect them from the weather as no other paint can. It is the most economical paint in the world because it lasts so long. Paint now and keep out the winter's storms and frosts.

Our Free Painting Helps

We will send you free, on request, color schemes and miscellaneous painting instructions that you will find of real practical value. Ask for Helps 2456

NATIONAL LEAD CO.

New York Cleveland Chicago St. Louis
Boston Buffalo Cincinnati San Francisco
(John T. Lewis & Bros. Co., Philadelphia)
(National Lead & Oil Co., Pittsburgh)

LIFEBUOY SOAP

THERE is no purer soap than Lifebuoy—no soap that gives an equal sense of absolute cleanness—no soap that is nearly so refreshing and invigorating for Toilet, Bath and Shampoo. Being made chiefly of oils and mildly carbolated Lifebuoy is a most soothing and effective treatment for all cuts, bruises and abrasions of the skin.

Its own wholesome, clean odor attests its true antiseptic qualities—disease germs cannot live where Lifebuoy is regularly used.

5c. at all Druggists and Grocers

If not at your dealer's, send 5c. (stamps or coin) for full size cake to

LEVER BROS. CO.
Dept. S Cambridge, Mass.

A LIFE ON CHRIST'S LEVEL*

Sunday School Lesson by Dr. and Mrs. Wilbur F. Crafts

THE prophet Jeremiah was persecuted. The people who heard him repeat in the temple the messages which God gave him reported him to the princes, the rulers, with the demand that he should be put to death, because his words presaged doom for Jerusalem. Jeremiah was persecuted by Irijah, the captain of the watch, who seized him as he was passing through the gate of the city; and, on the false charge of being a traitor—"Thou art falling away to the Chaldeans"—he was brought before the rulers for condemnation.

Jeremiah was persecuted by the princes, for, on the charge brought by Irijah, they sent him to a vile prison, which was a deep cistern, corresponding to a cesspool. And Jeremiah was there "many days." He himself tells us what he did there: "I called upon thy name, O Lord, out of the low dungeon" (Lam. 3: 55). It was only the body of Jeremiah that could be held by the pit. God might have sent an earthquake to open the dungeon, but he did not. God might have sent an angel to lift Jeremiah out of the noisome place, but he did not. Still Jeremiah's prayer went up to heaven, and God heard him, and determined to deliver him.

How God Answered the Prayer

Jeremiah's liberator was Ebed-melech, one of the chief officials in the king's household. He had a black skin, for he was an Ethiopian, a man who has been compared with the treasurer of Candace, the queen of Ethiopia. God caused some unknown person to go and tell Ebed-melech that Jeremiah was starving to death in the horrible pit of miry clay, and being suffocated by the noxious gases there. God knew just how to touch the right man. Ebed-melech had often seen Jeremiah in the king's palace and heard his wonderful words, and he knew that he was "God's man," and he moved quickly to deliver him, just as God knew he would. Ebed-melech did not himself have authority to command that Jeremiah should be lifted out of the prison-pit, but his position in the king's household did allow him to bring the matter before the king, who at that time was Zedekiah. Ebed-melech found the king sitting at the gate of the city, where he had gone that the people might come to tell him their troubles and ask his help. That was just the right time and place for Ebed-melech to bring Jeremiah's troubles to the king, and let us not forget that it was in answer to Jeremiah's prayer that Ebed-melech was doing it. King Zedekiah listened with attention and interest, just as God meant he should, and then he gave orders that Ebed-melech should get thirty guards, soldiers, and take up Jeremiah out of the pit, and bring him to the prison in the king's own house, where he could have plenty of food, and be quite free to talk with the soldiers and others in the king's palace.

How lovingly, how tenderly Ebed-melech carried out his commission! The whole world should honor him for it. There was a place in the palace for cast-off clothes, probably those which had been worn by the servants. Ebed-melech secured some of these to let down into the pit that Jeremiah might use them as cushions under his arms to keep his flesh from being torn as they were drawing him up by the strong ropes. What a sight to look upon must have been the old prophet, weak from want of food, and covered with the filthy slime of the pit! What a contrast he was to the richly dressed Ethiopian, fat and well fed! We do not need to be told that Ebed-melech provided a bath and comfortable clothing and food out of the king's storehouse, for we know that in the kindness of his heart he must have done everything possible for the comfort of Jeremiah.

Jeremiah Not Cowed by Persecution

Shortly after his restoration, Jeremiah was sent for by King Zedekiah to meet him in the temple, God's house, that he might tell him if he had any message from God. Then and there Jeremiah told it to the king—terrible as it was for the king to hear. And so frightened was the king that he asked Jeremiah to keep it secret lest his people should rise up against him.

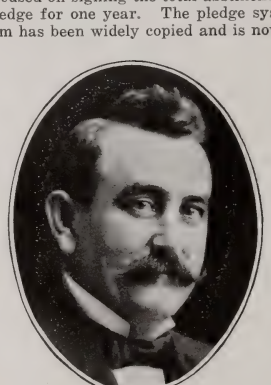
Persecution a Blessing

Not many persons in making a list of their blessings would put in "persecutions." Yet we can not do otherwise if we consider the heavenly reward promised by Jesus himself. Then, too, we are promised in God's Word that "If we suffer, we shall also reign with him." (II. Tim. 2: 12). Christ's life on earth was a ministry of suffering, largely because of persecution; if he performed miracles of healing it was said he did it by the power of Beelzebub; if he tried to lift up sinners by eating with them, the finger of scorn was pointed at him; if he tried to do good on the Sabbath day by healing, he was called a lawbreaker; if he said, "Thy sins be forgiven thee," he was called a blasphemer. Nothing half so hard has ever been said about us as was said about our Christ. Yet when his persecution ended in crucifixion, he could pray, "Father, forgive them, for they know not what they do."

Poise of Character

Some people go all to pieces before the slightest criticism, to say nothing of persecution, while others grow divinely beautiful under it. A story is told of a soldier in the East Indies, a stout, lion-hearted man, who had been a noted prizefighter, and a terror to those who knew him. He sauntered into a mission chapel, heard the Gospel, and was converted. The change in his character was most marked and decided. The lion was changed into a lamb. Two months afterward in the mess-room, some of those who had been afraid of him before began to ridicule him. One of them said, "I'll put it to the test whether he is a Christian or not," and taking a basin of hot soup, he threw it into his bosom. The whole company gazed in breathless silence, expecting that the lion would start up and murder him on the spot. But after he had torn open his waistcoat and wiped his scalded breast, he calmly turned round and said: "This is what I must expect if I become a Christian. I must suffer persecution." His comrades were filled with astonishment.

One may visit the Grotto of Jeremiah, located a few yards north of the Damascus Gate. It is in the midst of a barren, rocky wilderness, and it is identified with the true Calvary. There Jeremiah probably dwelt for some months after the fall of Jerusalem. He was at that time among the prisoners taken by the Chaldeans, but was permitted by them to choose whether he would return to his homeland or go with the other captives to Babylon. He chose his own land, and the "Grotto" became his dwelling place—simply a cave in the wilderness. There he wrote that marvelous series of poems called "Lamentations." They should be read in connection with this lesson, and it can be done in less than half an hour.



But the persecutions of Jeremiah were not ended. The governor appointed over Jerusalem by King Nebuchadnezzar was murdered, and those who did the deed fled to Egypt, and they compelled Jeremiah to go with them, in reality made him their prisoner and carried him off. Why did they do it? Let them tell us: "That the Lord thy God may show us the way wherein we may walk, and the thing that we may do." But we must believe that they were not honest in this, for they rejected Jeremiah's counsel as a message from the Lord that they should not go down to Egypt. It is likely that they looked upon Jeremiah as a sort of mascot. So it was that persecution of another form entered into the life of Jeremiah. We may read about it in Jeremiah, chapters 40 to 46, which contain the story of his life in Egypt. He continued his faithful warnings until his death. There is a tradition that he was stoned to death by the unbelieving people. We may not know the manner of his taking off, but this we surely know: "He sank in God's darkness grandly, from out the infinite littleness of men."

He lived and died on Christ's level.

*The International Sunday School Lesson for August 20, 1911 Jeremiah Cast into Prison. Jer. 37. GOLDEN TEXT: "Blessed are ye, when men shall revile you, and persecute you, and say all manner of evil against you falsely, for my sake." Matt. 5: 11.

A Solomonic Judge

JUDGE WILLIAM JEFFERSON POLLARD, who has just been appointed by President Taft as one of the United States delegates to the Thirteenth International Congress against Alcoholism at The Hague, Holland (which meets in September), is a temperance reformer of an original type. It was Judge Pollard who originated the Pollard "pledge plan" for reforming drunkards—releasing the accused on signing the total abstinence pledge for one year. The pledge system has been widely copied and is now a law in Victoria, Australia, and in Great Britain, where Judge Pollard explained the plan during his visit in 1906.

Judge William Jefferson Pollard

Judge Pollard, not long ago, had a driver brought before him, charged with cruelty to a galled mule. The defense was supported by a veterinarian witness who declared that the sore on the animal's back did not cause it any pain. Learning that the mule was on the street in front of the police court, the judge ordered court to adjourn for five minutes, took his cane and went out to investigate personally. With the end of his stick he gently touched the sore spot, at which the mule kicked every time.

"With all due respect to the expert testimony, I will fine you $50," said Judge Pollard to the accused. "I asked the mule if the sore hurt him, and he said it did." J. A. S.

USE A PORTABLE
BOSS OVE
With Patented GLASS DOOR
on your stove or range, either gasoline, acetylene, alcohol or No more spoiled bakings or worry—more wasted heat—No more jarring chilling of oven. Housewives can their baking without opening door. E omy and convenience both guarantee the BOSS—a polished blued steel lined with tin and asbestos.
GLASS in DOOR is guaranteed not to break from heat because it is secured by our patented ing pressure retaining strips, which permit sion and contraction. Glass door fits snugly in piece beaded front, and is held tightly in place two turnbuckles, preventing escape of heat.
Baking qualities and ventilation superior to other oven or range. All heat goes right into open bottom, and is perfectly distributed to all of the oven by means of our patented Heat D
tor. Flame always visible through small windows. With the BOSS a baking costs than a cent. It will many times over pay for in saved bakings to say nothing of saved fuel.
Ask YOUR Dealer to show you the BO
Glass Door Oven. INSIST upon seeing that "BOSS" stamped in the front of Oven.
you know that it is genuine and guaranteed.
FREE. Our valuable Recipe Book, containing many cookery helps and full description of BOSS Ovens sent FREE on receipt of postal, plainly written, giving your own and your dealer's names and addresses.
THE HUENEFELD CO. 2780 Spring Grove Ave. Cincinn

$10.00 NO
10 CE
A DA
BUYS THE Pittsburgh Visible Typewr
The original Visible Writing Typewrit not excelled by any machine at any pri
ONE FREE One Pittsburgh Visible Typ
Free in every City, town and ne hood. One Free to every man or woman, boy who will do us a small service. No selling or necessary, only a small service which anyone can
The Pittsburgh Visible does anything th other machine
Has perfect touch, absolute alignment, quick action spacer, tabulator, two-color ribbon, universal keyboa
It is easy to operate, is strong, durable and fully guar
The writing is visible at all times.
The Pittsburgh Visible is a perfect machine for and large corporations or for the small office and the One ought to be in every home.
$65 NOW—LATER THE PRICE WILL BE $10
TO GET ON FREE and to our easy and full particulars regarding this unprecedented offer us in a letter: "Mail your Free Offer."
Pittsburgh Visible Typewriter
ESTABLISHED 20 YEARS
Dept. 30. Union Bank Building, Pittsburg

A Secure
INSTEAD of risking and tying up your idle money in an attempt to earn 6% interest, if you deposit it with this Company, you make a non-speculative investment, your money can be withdrawn at any time upon short notice, and we paying 5% on deposits, compounded semi-annua or remitted by check as desired.
Established eighteen years.
5%
With His
Assets $2,300,000.00
INDUSTRIAL SAVINGS & LOAN CO. NEW YORK CITY
Conservative management and j cious investment of funds accor to the stringent requirements of New York State Banking Laws c acterize this Company. This is most secure and most profitable to invest idle money.
Write for booklet.
Industrial Savings & Loan
2 Times Bldg., B'way & 42d St., New

NON-RUSTABLE

ADJUSTO CORSETS

With Patented "Reducing Bands"

THAT the ADJUSTO Corset is best advertised by its loving friends is attested in the following, taken from recent unsolicited letters:—

"I consider that no corset is equal to the ADJUSTO. It makes one appear very trim and shapely and at the same time it is supremely comfortable. And it certainly does have quality and wear sewed in every seam."

"So enthusiastic am I about the ADJUSTO that I recommend it to all my friends. It has performed wonders in transforming my figure from the unshapely to one of grace and symmetry."

THUS do ADJUSTO wearers express their appreciation. Thousands are daily learning the merits of this matchless reducing corset and taking up with the "ADJUSTO idea." Are you one of them? Coutil or batiste. All sizes. Ideally adapted for the full or the average figure.

Sold EVERYWHERE by DEALERS $3 and $5

If You Cannot Procure Them, Write Us And We Will Direct You To Nearest Dealer Or Send Postpaid On Receipt Of Size And Price.

Send For Our Handsome New Corset Catalogue, the ROYAL BLUE BOOK
Mailed Free to Any Address.

ROYAL WORCESTER CORSET CO.
Worcester, Mass. New York. Chicago. San Francisco.
MAKERS ALSO OF
BON TON Corsets . . . . . $3 to $20
ROYAL WORCESTER Corsets . . $1 to $5

Many New Peace Circles Forming

PROMINENT among those who have taken up the task of forming Local Circles of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Peace League during the last two weeks are:

Mrs. T. A. Allen, Oklahoma; Mrs. Martha Mertz, Indiana; Mr. William Russell, Kansas; Miss Orpha Skinner, Ohio; Mrs. Ella Sawyer, Missouri; Mrs. P. A. M. Speer, New Jersey; Mr. George P. Hall, California; W. H. Carrington, Virginia; Miss Hattie L. Myers, Maryland; Miss Anna R. Davis, Missouri; Mr. M. A. Taplin, Minnesota; Mr. Henry C. Evarts, Florida; Mr. W. L. Knight, Illinois; Miss E. Moffett, Minnesota; Mr. James N. Wilson, Pennsylvania; Mrs. Eugene S. Adams, New York; Mrs. G. L. Conant, Kansas; Mr. Roy Butler, Washington.

The following are the organizers of Peace Circles which have been formed since our last publication:

Rev. Henry S. Thompson, Maryland; Miss Catharine Case, Washington; Mrs. J. M. Knowles, Iowa; Rev. J. E. Edwards, Kansas; W. F. Wall, Texas; W. W. Gordon, Kansas; Rev. W. F. Porter, North Carolina; Mrs. Sue V. Gillis, Florida; Rev. and Mrs. Dwight L. Chapman, Ohio; Rev. and Mrs. Kaye, Ohio; Mr. George Care, Ohio; Rev. James F. Goodman, Michigan; Mr. John Wallace, California; Mrs. Mary H. Johnson, Washington; Mrs. Dorcas S. Cushman, New York; Mrs. Elizabeth Cole, Tennessee; E. Calvert, Washington; Mrs. M. J. Moss, Washington; Mr. C. A. Godding, Kansas; Professor Shull, Kansas; Mrs. (Dr.) McIntosh, Kansas; Mrs. O. Scotts, Kansas; Mrs. Emma J. Gilfillan, Kansas; Mrs. Luella Cushman, New York.

The Arbitration Agreement

The problem of substituting reason and justice for war, and the victories of Peace and Righteousness for those of force and manslaughter, continue day by day to occupy prominently the mind of humanity. In one way or other, nation after nation is declaring allegiance to the Peace propaganda that is steadily gathering into a world-wide force, and the arbitration agreement between the United States and Great Britain, shortly to be signed, is one of the momentous documents of the history of the world.

It is a matter of deep significance that the first comprehensive agreement for arbitrating practically all disputes that can arise between two sovereign nations — including even the much mooted one of the national honor — should be drawn up between the United States and Great Britain. The draft of the treaty, which is merely intended as a working basis for negotiations, provides in general for arbitration by the Hague Court of all questions, without reservation, that are regarded by the contracting parties as proper for arbitration. From an authoritative statement issued by Secretary Knox to explain the scope of this treaty, we learn that its general features are as follows:

(1) It expands the scope of our existing general arbitration agreements by eliminating the exceptions contained in existing ones of questions of vital interest and national honor; (2) It is proposed that all differences that are internationally justifiable shall be submitted to The Hague tribunal unless by special agreement some other tribunal is created or selected; (3) It provides that differences that either country thinks are not internationally justifiable shall be referred to a commission of inquiry, with power to make recommendations for their settlement; (4) This commission is to be made up of representatives of the two Governments who are members of The Hague Court; (5) Should the commission decide that the differences should be arbitrated this decision is to be binding; (6) Arbitrations are to be conducted under terms of submission subject to the advice and consent of the Senate; (7) Before arbitration is resorted to, even in cases where both countries agree that the difference is one susceptible of arbitration decision, the Commission of Inquiry shall investigate the necessity of arbitration. The action of this commission is not to have the effect of an arbitral award; (8) The commission at the request of either Government shall delay its findings one year to give opportunity for diplomatic settlement; (9) The other features of the draft deal mainly with the machinery of the commission and other essential details.

This draft is already regarded by our State Department, Congress, the President, and thousands of our foremost citizens, as a basis-formula upon which the United States Government is now willing to enter into negotiations with any country that so desires.

The conditions set forth in this treaty make an excellent topic for discussion in CHRISTIAN HERALD Peace Circles for the fortnight ending August 23, 1911.

Suggested Programme for Third Meeting of Local Circles After Organization

After Roll Call, Initiation Pledge, which is:

I, as a member of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Peace League, pledge myself to urge the cause of Universal International Peace and Arbitration; to attend the meeting of this Circle so far as it is possible; to extend its influence and to increase its membership; and to do my individual share toward making the meetings of this Circle a success.

Officers' Reports, Reading of the Minutes, Unfinished Business, Reading of matter from Headquarters, a brief current exposition of the Main Topic, which for this week is the Arbitration Treaty.

Three and five minute speeches on these suggested subjects:

"The Peace Propaganda."

"The Treaty of the United States versus the Magna Charta."

"The Important Arbitration Treaties of the past fifteen years."

Note: The data of 125 important arbitration treaties which have been put into operation during the past 15 years, have been gathered together (each subject fully annotated). A pamphlet containing a list of these treaties will be forwarded to Secretaries of CHRISTIAN HERALD Peace Circles on application.

Refreshments.

Rally and song.

Announce the next place of meeting and disband.

Organization

Again we extend cordial invitation to all who desire to co-operate with us in this inspiring work. Peace has come to stay, but there is a vast and important work to be done—the work of individuals. If you are really interested in the greatest question concerning the welfare of the world to-day, organize a Peace Circle in your town, your village, or your church, and by your co-operation and leadership do your share, no matter how humble it may seem. As a member of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Peace Circle, you will be helping to formulate public opinion into the definite laws that shall relegate warfare into the limbo of savagery and idols. The Peace spirit is the still small voice of conscience and progress righting the wrongs of a world armed against itself.

"Where two or three are gathered together in His name, there also is the Prince of Peace in the midst of them." Let us unite in creating and maintaining in every community, wherever THE CHRISTIAN HERALD goes, bands of noble men and women who shall take their place with us among the nation's Peacemakers, and so help and encourage THE CHRISTIAN HERALD to fulfil its exalted mission.

Two Powerful Peace Pamphlets

The Mission of the United States in the Cause of Peace, an address by Justice David J. Brewer, setting forth convincing reasons why the United States should lead in the Peace Movement, with arguments for limitation of armament; an able discussion of the three great interests opposed to war; also Sir Edward Grey on Union for World Peace, in which are set forth inspiring and practical ideas concerning the Peace Movement. This pamphlet also contains the interesting report of Baron d'Estournelles de Constant on The Limitation of Armaments, also the Hon. Elihu Root's speech at the recent New York Peace Conference, and the famous speech of President Taft in New York City, March 22, 1910. Either or both of these pamphlets will be forwarded on application free of charge to those of our readers who are planning to organize local Peace Circles, together with our Organization Leaflet, in which are definitely set forth appropriate and full instructions for organization. These instructions contain all necessary information regarding the organization of local Peace Circles, adoption of Constitution and By-laws, the duties of the various officers, the order of business for the conduct of semi-monthly meetings, special suggestions for musical programmes, appropriate historic tableaux, entertainments, monologues, etc.

Bunyan and the Leaflet

IT MAY not be generally known, but a little leaflet first touched the heart of John Bunyan, and to-day how much the world owes to that matchless book, The Pilgrim's Progress! Tracts and booklets have often been the pioneers in religious revivals. Mr. D. L. Moody had half a million tracts distributed at the World's Fair at Chicago. A tract falling from the hand of Samuel Cornelius led to the formation of one of the largest societies in the world for reaching millions with the Gospel. The Rev. Prebendary Webb Peploe was led to Christ through a tract and became a blessing to multitudes. Those who will distribute tracts will have many joyful surprises.

ARTHUR MEACHEN.

Advertising is Universal

MORE than 90 per cent. of all you eat, drink, wear, see and do, is made possible by advertising.

About the only thing you drink that has not been brought to your attention through advertising is your local drinking water, and in many cases that is too bad to justify publicity; hence pure spring water is now being largely advertised.

Not a particle of your wearing apparel but is advertised in some form or other.

All the wonders of the world are made possible to your vision mainly through advertising. Advertising did not develop Niagara Falls, but it did develop three splendid railroads, so that thousands are able to visit them quickly, cheaply, and comfortably; and, by reason of the crowds these railroads carry, men have been able to develop the comforts and attractions at the Falls.

You will find most of the things that interest you mentioned in the advertising columns of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD.

You ought to enjoy patronizing these friends of yours. Do so whenever you can. There is much fine instructive reading to be found in advertisements, and many a suggestion there will add to your comfort, while saving a dollar.

Whenever any of our subscribers is defrauded by an advertiser in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD we will make good the claim, provided that the subscriber, who must be of record, has mentioned THE CHRISTIAN HERALD in writing to the advertiser, and provided the claim is made to us within two months of the date of the appearance of the advertisement. This guarantee does not apply to investment advertisements.

STRONGER THAN MEA

A Judge's Opinion of Grape-Nuts.

A gentleman who has acquired judicial turn of mind from experience the bench out in the Sunflower S writes a carefully considered opinion to the value of Grape-Nuts as food. says:

"For the past 5 years Grape-Nuts been a prominent feature in our bill fare.

"The crisp food with the delici nutty flavour has become an indispensa necessity in my family's everyday life.

"It has proved to be most healthful beneficial, and has enabled us to pra cally abolish pastry and pies from table, for the children prefer Grape-N and do not crave rich and unwholeso food.

"Grape-Nuts keep us all in perf physical condition—as a preventive disease it is beyond value. I have b particularly impressed by the benefi effects of Grape-Nuts when used by lad who are troubled with face blemishes, s eruptions, etc. It clears up the compl ion wonderfully.

"As to its nutritive qualities, my perience is that one small dish of Gra Nuts is superior to a pound of meat breakfast, which is an important cons eration for anyone. It satisfies the ap tite and strengthens the power of resist fatigue, while its use involves none of disagreeable consequences that so times follow a meat breakfast." Na given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mi

Read the little book, "The Road Wellville," in pkgs. "There's a reaso

Ever read the above letter? A n one appears from time to time. Th are genuine, true, and full of hum interest.

Direct from Factory, Freight Prepaid and Guaranteed by the Manufacturer

You can buy a Gold Coin Stove from us $5 to $20 less than dealer's prices. We pay freight; safe delivery insured, polished and all ready to set up.

"Satisfaction or your money back any time within 1 year" is our written guaranty.

Free Catalog—Illustrates all our Stoves. Gives Price List and tells our Plan and Offer. Send for it.

Gold Coin Stove Co. 11 Oak St. Troy, N. Y.

CHRISTIAN HERALD

Pilgrimage to the Holy Land including points in Palestine, Syria, Egypt, Dead Sea, The Jordan, Jerusalem, Jericho, Jaffa and other places connected with the life and death of our Lord.

White Star Liner Cretic leaves New York September 20, stopping en route in Italy, Greece, Turkey, Asia Minor, etc., returns Nov. 21.

For further information regarding this opportunity to visit scenes of events described in the Bible, address at once,

Christian Herald Pilgrimage Bureau
Bible House, New York City

I Was Deaf 25 Year

NOW I HEAR PLAINL

with this artificial EAR DRUM in my ears. I never feel them—they are perfectly comfortable, and no one sees them. I will tell you the true story, how I got deaf, and how I made myself hear.

Medicated Ear Dru Pat July 15, 1908

ARTIFICIAL EAR DRUM COMPANY
2 ADELAIDE STREET DETROIT, MIC

AGENTS! BIG PROFIT

Makes every Man an expert

No experience necessary

Guaranteed for life

New patented Automatic Razor Stropper. Automatically puts a perfect edge on any razor, old style safety. Big seller. Every man wants it. Write quick for terms, prices and territory.

C. Brandt Cutlery Co., 84 W. Broadway, New

WANTED by young man of culture and refinement position as private teacher, teacher traveling companion. BAXTER GENOBLE, Batesburg, S. C

A HEART OF STONE

Continued from page 795

Holy Writ was pointed menacingly his direction.

"That might mean Hugh Rogers, eh, other?" The listener recognized the oice of his red-haired tormentor, hat youngest Morton."

"Don't try to fit Scripture to your eighbors, John," warned his mother. It is a risky business."

"But look how he has used us, other," put in the eldest boy. "You on't mean us to forgive him, I hope. eaping on coals of fire wouldn't melt ugh Rogers. There's nothing hot ough on this earth to soften that eart."

Rogers waited breathlessly for her eply.

"We are told to forgive until sev- nty times seven," was the gentle an- wer.

"Then, Mother, you are easier than thought," exclaimed the irrepressible ohn.

At that instant Rogers was startled y the sound of footsteps stealthily pproaching on the beaten path. astily leaving his conspicuous posi- ion, he sprang behind a wide-branch- ng shrub and awaited the intruder. is muscles stiffened and his hands lenched involuntarily. He might need o protect the inmates of the cottage rom some dangerous intruder.

Silently from between the trees ame the stooping figure of an old nan. His white hair shone silvery in he moonlight, and on his deeply-lined ace was an expression of unearthly weetness.

"Mr. Thorpe!" muttered Rogers, nd, unseen, he raised his hat and ent his head as though to a prince of he royal blood. "His very presence s a benediction," he murmured as the owed figure of the old minister passed by.

Pausing beside the open door, the ld man waited his opportunity; then, s the family knelt for worship he laid r large white envelope on the step, nd raised his hands in prayer.

"The dear Lord will provide for his ervant in his declining years," Rogers heard him mutter as he turned and glided noiselessly down the path.

When he had passed into the dis- tance Rogers still stood staring dumbly at the white envelope. The full sig- nificance of the act had dawned upon him. This was a costly sacrifice that he had witnessed. The aged minister had given to the widow in her hour of need the money that was to have kept him in comfort through his closing years, while Rogers, with his riches, was about to seize the last of her poor possessions.

Acting on a compelling impulse, he stepped quietly to the door and picked up the white square, thrusting it into his pocket. Then turning into the maple grove he paced back and forth with nervous haste.

The bitterness of years dies hard, and Hugh Rogers was not a shallow- feeling man. The minister's act had made a deep impression on him; his own conduct stood revealed in an ugly light by contrast. Slowly, desperately, he battled with himself. The iron will and heart of stone were hard to break, and when at length his slumbering better nature conquered, his brow was damp and his face drawn with the fierceness of the struggle.

No sooner was his decision reached than carried out. He hastened through the maple grove toward home and re- turned stealthily, bearing a legal look- ing document. From the commotion within the cottage as he approached, he concluded that the Morton boys were indulging in a pillow fight or some such exciting entertainment, and as no one was visible, he slipped his package inside the door, and turned toward the village.

When he halted at the manse gate his courage well nigh failed him. He was already meditating flight, when a gentle voice accosted him and a hand fell upon his shoulder.

"Well, Hugh, my boy, you are a rare visitor! Come away in—that's right."

And before he realized it he was seated before the study fire, pouring into Mr. Thorpe's sympathetic ears the story of his cruelty, his remorse, the amends he was going to make. "I can't hope for her forgiveness now," he concluded, "but I intend to leave no stone unturned to gain it."

It was late when he rose to go. The old minister's counsel and encourage- ment had brought a new light to his eyes and buoyancy to his step. He seemed a different man.

"Ah, Mr. Thorpe," he said as he took his leave, "here is the envelope you left on Mrs. Morton's step. It will not be necessary now in view of what I have done." Then to Mr. Thorpe's astonishment he beat a hur- ried retreat.

Carefully the minister opened the envelope and drew out its contents. There was surely more in it than he had put there. A piece of pink paper fell to the desk, and the old man gazed at it in blank amazement. "Five thou- sand dollars! It can't be true!" he murmured feebly, picking up the note that lay beside it.

"In token of gratitude from one to whom you have shown the light," he read.

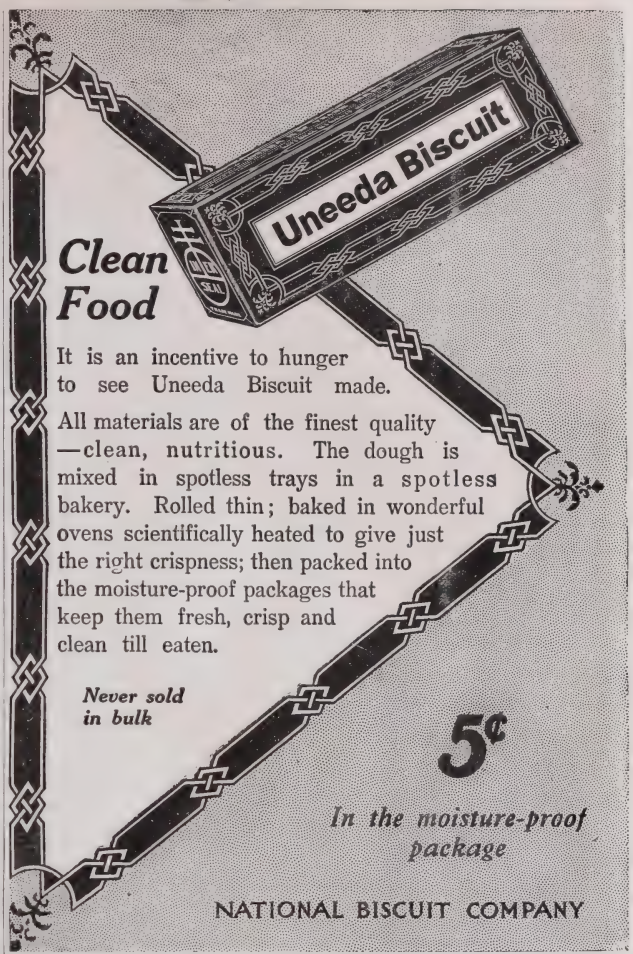
"Well, well, practical gratitude that, and not the post mortem species either. His thanksgiving is whole-hearted. And yet they say there is no good in that man!"

. . .

In the cottage by the maple grove a white-gowned group was gathered around Mrs. Morton as she opened the mysterious packet that she had just picked up from the doorway. Large torn pieces of parchment fell to the table before the astonished gazers.

"Why, Mother," exclaimed the eld- est boy, fitting the pieces together, "It's the mortgage! He has cancelled it—torn it up; that's what he's done. Here is something written in lead pen- cil."

"A happy Thanksgiving to you all."



"I say," cried John with a whoop of joy, "what is hotter than coals of fire? Something has melted Hugh Rogers!"

Among the Workers

—EVANGELIST WILLIAM SUNDAY recently con- cluded a series of revival services at Erie, Pa., which stirred the entire community. A taber- nacle calculated to hold 8,000 people was built, and it was filled to overflowing every evening during the mission. The results of the services were most gratifying, as many hundreds pro- fessed conversion.

—MISS IDA L. REED, the well known hymn writer and composer, is living in a humble little cottage in Philippi, W. Va., in great poverty. During the last four years she has been an in- valid. Her songs, "I Belong to the King," "Somebody's Praying For You," and many others are sung all over the world. Anyone desiring to help her can write to her pastor, Rev. Eugene Weaver, or the Mayor or Post- master of Philippi.

—WHEN DR. L. L. HENSON became pastor of the Hanson Place Baptist Church of Brooklyn, N. Y., on January 1 last, he found a debt on it of about $36,000, incurred in 1910 for a new organ, heating plant, and the remodeling and refurnishing of the building. The church's apportionment for the missionary budgets of the Northern Baptist Convention also was un- paid. A committee was appointed to plan for the work. On the morning of April 23, after preaching on "Repairing the Temple," the pastor called for pledges. The result was that within thirty minutes $37,000 was pledged, more than the amount of the debt. Since Dr. Henson became pastor thirty-seven new mem- bers have been received. On Easter Sunday Dr. Henson baptized his own son.

YOU CAN AFFORD to have a new Song Book in your Church or Sunday School, and one for every person when you can get "FAMILIAR SONGS OF THE GOSPEL" for $3 for 100. Words and music. $3 very best songs. Sample copy 5 Cents. E. A. K. Hackett, 100 North Wayne St., Fort Wayne, Ind.

A GOOD OIL CAN filled with that famous 3-in-One oil for only 10c. This special offer covers a limited num- ber of cans and is solely to introduce 3-in-One to new people. The can or the oil alone is worth 10c. If you have never tried 3-in-One for lubricating any mechanism, cleaning and polishing furniture, preventing rust on any metal surface, do it now. Wrap a dime in a piece of paper and mail to 3-IN-ONE OIL COMPANY, 42 B.O. Broadway, New York City. Only one can to a person.

Full of 3-in-One

"DON'T SHOUT"

"I hear you. I can hear now as well as anybody. 'How?' Oh, something new— The MORLEY PHONE. I've a pair in my ears now, but they are invisible. I would not know I had them in, myself, only that I hear all right."

The MORLEY PHONE for the DEAF

makes low sounds and whispers plainly heard. Invisible, comfortable, weightless and harmless. Anyone can adjust it. Over One Hundred Thousand Sold. Write for booklet and testimonials. THE MORLEY CO., Dept. 754, Perry Building, Philadelphia

MARVEL SOLDER

INSTANTLY MENDS ALL LEAKS in all kinds of household utensils—enameled, tin, iron, copper, brass, etc. Soldering Without Heat. Just squeeze from tube and spread over hole or crack with fingers. Hardening, it makes solid, smooth surface. Patches all machinery. Fine for motorists.

Send 10c for trial tube.

MARVEL SOLDER CO. 1937 Broadway Dept. 8 New York

AGENTS WANTED QUICK SALES BIG PROFITS

WE SHIP ON APPROVAL without a cent deposit, prepay the freight and allow 10 DAYS FREE TRIAL. IT ONLY COSTS one cent to learn our unheard of prices and marvelous offers on highest grade 1912 model bicycles.

FACTORY PRICES Do not buy a bicycle or a pair of tires from anyone at any price until you write for our large Art Catalog and learn our wonderful proposition on first sample bicycle going to your town.

RIDER AGENTS everywhere are making big money exhibiting and selling our bicycles. We Sell cheaper than any other factory. TIRES, Coaster-Brake rear wheels, lamps, repairs and all sundries at half usual prices. Do Not Wait; write today for our special offer. MEAD CYCLE CO., Dept. L-71, CHICAGO

BE AN ILLUSTRATOR—Learn to draw. We will teach you by mail how to draw for magazines and newspapers. Send For Catalog. School of Illustration, 44 Lace Bldg., Chicago, Ill.

For Developing and Printing You will save money by writing me for prices. Developing 10 cts. per roll. Prints, 3 cts. up. Send two films for FREE velox prints. H. A. CLARK, 3 Plaza, Brooklyn, N.Y.

EVERYWOMAN SHOULD EARN $25 PER WEEK

Introducing our very complete line of wool suitings wash fabrics, fancy waistings, silks, linens, petticoats, hosiery, etc. Dealing direct with the mills, our prices are low. Others make $30.00 to $50.00 weekly—you can also. Samples, instructions, etc., in neat case, charges prepaid. No money required. Exclusive territory. Be first to apply for Agency. Standard Dress Goods Co., Desk 3, Standard Building Binghamton, N.Y.

Rexall

"93" HAIR TONIC

Two Sizes, 50c. and $1.00

Keeps scalp and hair clean - promotes hair health

Your Money Back if it Doesn't

Sold and guaranteed by only one Druggist in a place. Look for The Rexall Stores

They are the Druggists in nearly 4000 towns and cities in the United States and Canada

UNITED DRUG CO., BOSTON, MASS. CHICAGO, ILL. TORONTO, CANADA

COPYRIGHT, 1910, UNITED DRUG COMPANY

Christian Herald

UBSCRIPTION, $1.50 PER ANNUM
UBLISHED 52 TIMES A YEAR

COPYRIGHT, 1911, BY THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

New York, August 16, 1911

VOL. 34—NO. 33. PRICE 5 CENTS
OFFICES: BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK

Signing the Arbitration Treaties with England and France at the White House, August 3.

ONE of the greatest events in the world's history, and the first decisive step toward Universal Peace, was the conclusion of the Arbitration Treaties between the United States and the governments of France and Great Britain. They were signed in the President's study. Seated at the table are Ambassador Bryce of Great Britain and the Hon. P. C. Knox, our Secretary of State. Standing around the table, from left to right, are Hon. Esmond Ovey, Secretary British Embassy; President Taft; Viscount St. Phalle, representing France, and Hon. Chandler Anderson, Counselor of the State Department, Washington. The picture will be historic, as showing the splendid triumph of America as the leader for World Peace.

Questions and Answers

L. O. S., Hamilton, Mont. How can you reconcile the sixteenth verse of the ninth chapter of Romans and the thirteenth verse of the following chapter?

The first passage means that while the "willing" and the "running" are indispensable to our salvation, yet that salvation is not owing to these things, but is the free mercy of God alone —the act of his sovereign generosity, as when a monarch exercises his prerogative of granting pardon to a repentant rebel as an act of grace alone. The passage in Rom. 10: 13 does not conflict with this. He assures us of his readiness to pardon and save, if we come to him, but it still remains his own free gift, granted to those who comply with the requirements, not because of their individual merit but as his own good pleasure to be gracious. We must do our share. He is always ready to fulfil his promise. A ruler grants amnesty to rebels if they return and give him their allegiance, but it is granted as his prerogative and not as their right.

O. S. R., Brooklyn, N. Y. Who wrote the Story of the Willow Ware?

It is an old Chinese legend, dating back hundreds of years, and the name of the author, so far as we know, has never been given.

Mrs. W. K., Milton, N. S. Referring to the elder brother and the prodigal son, was the elder brother in the Kingdom or not?

The elder son misapprehended the father's purpose in celebrating the return of the prodigal. It was not an entertainment for the prodigal's gratification, but an expression of the joy in the father's heart. This joy over returning sinners is not the portion of those who have spent their whole lives in the Father's service. Their lifelong fidelity assures them of an abiding place in his trust and confidence. The elder brother is a type of the man in whom the true spirit of brotherly love and affection has not been fully developed. Correct in conduct and having the form of righteousness, he may still be selfish and jealous, although he could not but know that he himself was loved and trusted by his Father. He is a Christian, but a stranger to warm impulses. So to-day, even in the church, we may find elder brothers who resent the love that is poured out upon the repentant sinner and who would appropriate to themselves all the benefit that comes from formal obedience, granting but little to those to whom "much had been forgiven."

J. R. R., Seattle, Wash. 1. In what does Texas' relation to the Union differ from that of the other States? 2. What kind of a government had Mexico before Juarez was made President? 3. Was the District of Columbia made a territory some years ago? 4. Is the word "fad" a proper term?

1. The relation of Texas to the Federal Government differs from that of the created States in that all the land in it belongs to the State and not to the United States. The United States Homestead Law does not apply to Texas. 2. Too complex a subject to treat in THE MAIL-BAG. See an encyclopedia. 3. In 1871, the District of Columbia was placed upon a territorial basis. Prior to that time its affairs were administered by Congress. 4. The word "fad" is a legitimate word. Its definition in the Standard Dictionary is "a passing fancy or fashion; hobby."

B. M. C., New York City. 1. If your husband has been continuously absent from the State and the country seven years or more, and not heard from, he is presumed, legally, to be dead. You would be entitled in that event, to your dower right or a life-interest in one-third of all lands owned by him during the marriage, and may, if you wish, bring a proceeding to have the land sold and your dower apportioned. 2. In New Jersey an inheritance tax of five per cent. is payable on estates having a value of $500 or more, but only where the persons inheriting are not lineal descendants.

Constant Reader, Santa Monica, Calif. Will not the sudden supplanting of the Korean native currency by that of Japan, in such large amounts, tend greatly to impoverish and distress the people of Korea?

At this distance, it is difficult to judge of the effect of the financial reforms which Japan has instituted in Korea. It would seem, however, that while the substitution of Japanese for the antique Korean currency may be a present hardship, it will ultimately prove a public benefit. We have no reason to conclude that it is Japan's purpose to impoverish the subjugated territory. The currency called in has no doubt been redeemed with a Japanese equivalent. We have written to missionaries on the subject, and hope to learn actual conditions later.

A. L. B. Please explain Isa. 65: 21, 22; also Zech. 8: 5. Do both of these passages describe heaven? Are they to be taken literally?

These passages in Isaiah refer primarily to Jerusalem, secondarily, to all the redeemed in heaven (see Isa. 45: 17). It is a prophecy which, while it will be partially fulfilled on earth in the millennial period, will receive its completest fulfilment in the regenerated world hereafter. It is clear that the first interpretation applies to verses 21, 22. The passage in Zech. 8: 5 refers more especially to the restoration of Jerusalem. It pictures a period of tranquillity and prosperity, with the promise of long life and temporal blessings.

A Personal Letter

Dear Friend:

Did you carefully read every word of the colored insert which appeared in The Christian Herald of last week? If you have not already done so, you should do so now, otherwise you will be neglecting one of the greatest opportunities to help extend the blessed influence of religion that may ever come your way.

The Christian Herald has labored mightily to extend that influence, but what it has already done is not nearly enough. The membership of The Christian Herald Family can be doubled, trebled, if that Family as a whole desire it and work shoulder to shoulder for the common cause. Secular publications have achieved the million mark, and so can we.

Think what it would mean! Think of being one of this great Army for the glory of God! Of course you want to be, and of course you will help by getting your friends to sign the coupons for a four months' trial subscription. If you get your friends to take The Christian Herald for four months, we know they will want to become permanent members of The Christian Herald Family. Be sure to read the insert and use the coupons.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD.

Mrs. B. C., Baltimore, Md. See answer to Mrs. M. B. L., Canada, about Job in this page. There are other Bible books which contain poetry, imagery, metaphor and allegory. The Old Testament has books of history, of poetic praise, of prophecy, of revelation, and of parable, besides sections of chronology and biography. The New Testament has the Gospels, the Epistles and the Apocalypse. The fact that the language of symbol and metaphor is employed does not affect the dignity or authority of the book in the slightest degree.

M. P. W., Castleton, N. Y. 1. When and how did the race separate into Jews, Hebrews and Israelites? 2. What makes the difference between Mohammedans and Moslems? 3. Why are the two versions used—"Forgive us our trespasses" and "Forgive us our debts"?

1. Hebrew was simply a designation of the people of Israel, used first of Abraham (see Gen. 14: 13). The name is never applied in Scripture to the Israelites except when the speaker is a foreigner (see Gen. 39: 14, 17 and 41: 12, etc.). The word is a derivative from Eber, the ancestor of Abraham (Gen. 10: 21). Israelites are the men of Israel, the "chosen nation," descendants of Jacob. All the tribes being descendants of Jacob were so called until the name "Israelite" began to be applied to the northern tribes in David's time, and "Judah" to the southern tribes. At one time they formed two separate kingdoms. After the exile, they became once more blended and gradually the appellation "Jews" became general. 2. Mussulman is the proper name for a Mohammedan. Moslem or Muslim (the equivalent of Mussulman) is the name used by these religionists themselves. Mohammedan simply means a follower of the prophet Mohammed, and is rarely used, except by foreigners. 3. The two are variants or different interpretative translations of the same passage. Either may be used.

A. B., Andes, New York. A husband having a wife and child could will his property to other relatives and cut off the wife and child, except so far as his interest in real estate was concerned. He could not defeat the wife's dower interest. If he attempted by will to give everything he had to charity, to the exclusion of his wife and child, the devise or bequest to charity would only be valid to the extent of one-half of the estate and no more.

Mrs. S. Z., Edmonds, Wash., writes: "In your issue of May 17 I notice a letter by S. M., Victoria, Texas, regarding the identity of Mary of Bethany and Mary Magdalene. I think your correspondent is mistaken when he asserts that "There is no mention ever afterwards of the outcast whom Jesus pardoned at a dinner early in his ministry." Matthew tells us in verse 6 of chapter 26 that this dinner was at the home of Simon the leper, who is generally supposed to have been the husband of Martha, Mary of Bethany's sister, and that Simon died shortly afterwards. From this time, Mary and Lazarus seem to have taken up their abode with Martha. At the same time I believe the Gospels bear out the fact that Mary of Bethany was the woman who wiped the Lord's feet with her hair and broke the alabaster vase and anointed his feet with their contents and was forgiven by him of her many sins. John 11: states in reference to the home at Bethany, "I was that Mary who anointed the Lord with ointment, and wiped his feet with her hair whose brother Lazarus was sick.' In connection with the pardoning of the woman Dean Farrar says: 'In the popular consciousness she will till the end of time be identified with the Magdalene whose very name has passed into all civilized languages as a synonym for accepted penitence and pardoned sin.' This view would emphasize the fact that Mary of Bethany and Mary Magdalene were one and the same person."

L. M., Stafford, Kan. God's mercy is boundless. It extends to all who come to him in sincere repentance, and seeking pardon through Jesus Christ, our appointed mediator. He is more willing to grant mercy than we are to ask it, for it is not his desire that any should perish. Thus, while no unrepentant sinner can inherit eternal life, we have the divine assurance that "whosoever will may come" and be forgiven and accepted. See Isa. 55: 7; Isa. 1: 18; I. John 1: 9; Psa. 103: 3; John 6: 37 and other passages.

Miscellaneous

If "Constant Reader," Woodville, Miss., will send her address, her question will be answered by mail.

Mrs. A. M. F., Lake City, Col. We know nothing about the movement in question and therefore cannot express an opinion.

Miss M. J., Bristol, Conn. 1. Don't know. 2. The woman suffragists might undoubtedly nominate a candidate for the presidency; but to nominate is one thing, to elect another.

Referring to a question in THE MAIL-BAG of July 19, J. P. S., Columbia, Tenn., writes: "No doubt James and Peter rejoiced as much in their affliction as did Paul, but Paul is the only one who specially asserts it. In the Scripture references given James and Peter are only exhorting their people to rejoice in trial."

Mrs. G. W. S., Greentown, Ind. Paul's prohibition against women speaking and teaching in the churches is believed to have been called out by social conditions in Corinth at that time. If this supposition be correct, it had only a local application, suited to the period and the place. It is not to be regarded as of universal application.

Several readers have written asking if the Children's Home has been endowed. To these and to all others interested we would state that the effort looking to endowment has only been begun and it may require several years to reach that point where it could become effective. Meanwhile, the current expenses of the Home and the support of 3,000 poor children yearly have to be met from general contributions. Such sums as are specifically sent for endowment, are placed to the credit of the endowment fund.

Mrs. H. C. McC., Thamesford, Ont. The first Mosque of Omar was built by the order of the Khalif Omar, subsequent to A.D. 637. It was of wood. It was rebuilt by Abd-el Melek 691 A.D., and restored by Khalif el-Mamun in 813-833 A.D. It was injured by earthquakes in the ninth and tenth centuries and was repaired by several khalifs. Sultan Suleiman added the tiling and mosaic work about 1520-1529. We find nothing of an inscription concerning Abn-el-Hasan in any books on the subject.

Mrs. M. B. L., Montague, P. E. I., Can. According to the best commentators, Job was a personage of distinction, wealth and influence who lived in the north of Arabia Deserta, near the Euphrates, some 1800 B.C. His life was patriarchal, his language the Hebrew of that early day, when it was interspersed with Syriac and Arabic. He lived before Moses. His book is probably the oldest book in the world. It is now interpreted as a public debate in poetic form, dealing with the Divine government. It abounds in figurative language. The "day" mentioned in Job 2: 1 was one appointed for the angels to give an account of their ministry to God. Evil is personified in Satan, who also comes to make report. The question to Satan and his response are simply a dramatic or poetic form of opening the great controversy which follows.

NEW YORK, AUGUST 16, 1911

THE · CHRISTIAN · HERALD

A WEEKLY ILLUSTRATED NEWSPAPER FOR THE HOME

In the Agricultural Districts throughout the Mikado's Empire the Old and Primitive Way of Harvesting by Hand Still Prevails

RURAL LIFE IN OLD JAPAN

By MATTHIAS KLEIN, Sumoto

DESPITE the fact that the enormous increase of factories in Japan draws many sons of the soil to the cities, about 60 per cent. of the population is still engaged in agriculture. Japanese farm life affords an unusual amount of interest to the newcomer. Though yet so primitive in their ways when compared with American or European methods, these peasants' primeval trend to industry at once differentiates them from Eastern races of a more sluggish type. The farmer here as well as in any other country finds his the most independent life, though from statistics obtainable, most of this class are among the poor who are forced annually to struggle for a meagre livelihood. For instance, the total income of a village community of some eight hundred persons amounts annually to about $6,500, or about $8 per head. But the most astonishing point here is that out of this total income these villagers pay no less than 1,500, or about 23 per cent., direct taxes. Then when we add the indirect taxation, the total easily reaches 35 per cent. If history can be relied on this crushing burden has not been his merely the last few years, but even in the days of feudalism it was said of him that what the farmer dreaded was not so much war, as famine, plague, and above all the tax-gatherer, who exacted something like 50 per cent. of the produce of his fields.

Going to the Field

The Farmer's Burden

These industrious hard-working farmers can as a family of, say five, live on an average of $9 per month. Their fare is thus extremely simplified—the luxury of salted fish, which otherwise is considered a low-priced article in Japan, is indulged in about once a week. Many eat as their staple food a poor kind of rice, and many more barley and rice mixed. Beans and sweet potatoes are by-products and add a flavor to their diet. They are very fond of greens, young sprouts or the tops of Japanese radish. These are cooked and eaten with a kind of briny bean sauce. But the last resort of the most destitute is generally the enormous white radish, which, though scantily nutritious, affords them a meal. This is not so much from choice as of somewhat painful necessity. Japan affords the beholder no fertile, American-like farms, nor the broad, rolling fields of grain of England or the Continent, for here the soil is naturally quite unfertile, and fields very small, irregular and running from the so-called paddy fields in well-kept terraces to almost half way up the mountain side. Then also it must ever be borne in mind that an immense tract of this mountainous country is totally unfit for agriculture; hence that which is available for tillage and cultivation is utilized to the last square yard.

But it is this which adds unique picturesqueness to Japan's rural scenery. The serpentine, trail-like paths and narrow roads, often barely allowing a little cart to move along, and forcing the occasional cyclist, coming from an opposite direction, to dismount and with wheel on his shoulder crawl down the embankment; the thatched or heavily tiled farm houses, ordinarily pasted, as it were, in little village groups on the steep hillsides, since more suitable soil must be reserved for tillage; here and there artificial ponds constructed for the purpose of irrigating; the little evergreen groves, which with a shady dome overhang the many wayside shrines, or else in some little nook of the road a few clusters of slender, polished bamboos; the old graveyards, thickly set with moss-covered, rustic tombstones, appearing from a distance like a battalion of sturdy little Japanese soldiers guarding the silent dead; the banks of every little streamlet meandering through the paddy fields, lined with pines and other small growth which commonly form the central support of slender and unique-shaped stacks, composed of neatly fixed-up bunches of rice or barley straw, reaching as high as thirty feet to the limbs—this often in the place of a barnyard, the whole country being made up of striking, miniature valleys and mountains, with the variety of climate found between Canada and Florida, where through the entire year the carefully fertilized fields, with almost magical rapidity, give birth to a harvest of barley and again are turned

Preparing the Flooded Rice-Fields

Continued on page 806

The American Pulpit

A SERMON BY

Rev. Russell H. Conwell, D.D.*

The Shunammite's Faith

TEXT: II. Kings 4:8—"And it fell on a day."

THERE was a wedding in Palestine, the wedding of a rich man's daughter to a workingman. A wedding at Shunem at the foot of Little Hermon, the richest farming country in all the East. No flowers so bright or so large, no lilies so wonderfully transparent as those that grow in the valley at Shunem. Here was a daughter. Great translators claim she was an only daughter, but of that we can only surmise. At all events, she inherited a great estate under the laws of that country, and presumably had no brothers. She was wealthy. The Bible does not always tell us the stories of the poor. It does not always bring us down to those that are actually in want, although none ever knows the goodness or providence of God until he has been in actual want. But here was a young woman married with all the pomp and ceremony of wealth. Many musicians went with her husband to her home to take her to his house, and she left the mansion of the wealthy with its luxuries and went down to the laboring man's home. In that country, although she had everything and he had nothing, if she became the workingman's wife she went to his home by an unchangeable custom of the country. She did this, although she brought him back again to her own residence, and although he was to inherit her property. Perhaps some men would marry such a girl for her money, but in this case he did not. This was one of the true marriages made in heaven of the highest form in which the poor man, although he had integrity, industry and intelligence, married the daughter of the rich. Musicians played their best and everything was disbursed for the good of the guests and the great wedding feast set out for all those who were invited. There was a wedding that day with all that goes with it that is inspiring and lovely in life. In that wedding there was a real union of hearts and souls —one of those unions that are made where God sees and where God directs. "And it fell on a day" that there was a wedding, and after the wedding the bride took her husband home to her own house and he took charge of the estate which she inherited. He seems not to have felt himself humiliated at all by it. She had been brought up in wealth, to direct servants, was used to be waited upon at the right hand and left all her life, indulged, and yet a woman of excellent judgment, a woman of plain, straightforward character, using everyday common sense in what she did.

The Prophet's Chamber

It is a fascinating story. "It fell on a day, that Elisha passed to Shunem, where was a great [wealthy] woman." Elisha was a prophet, a teacher and preacher, and a good man. He went about telling people what they should do in order to live right, in order to be holy and to obey God. "And it fell on a day, that Elisha passed to Shunem, where was a great woman; and she constrained him to eat bread." He is passing at the noon hour, and the woman of God, hospitable, kind and motherly, invites him to come in and eat. Now she said to her husband, "Behold, now I perceive that this is an holy man of God which passeth by us continually." She had that feminine intuitive sense to read character or foretell events and she felt satisfied that Elisha was really a holy man of God, that he was not asking any gratification of his own desires. She had probably seen a great many unreal and pretended men of God. Oh, the rich people! you must sympathize with them. The frauds that come to their door, the continual stream of begging letters from people who want to get a living without earning it! It is enough to disgust them with humanity. Probably this woman's husband had said, "These teachers and preachers are all alike." But she, with her superior power as chief person in the home, said, "I perceive that this one is a sincere man. Now, let us make a little chamber, I pray thee, on the wall, and let us set for him there a bed and a table." She said "Let us." "Let us talk this matter over. Let us make a little chamber, I pray thee, on the wall"—that expression means "the very best place"—where the man could get pure air and an excellent view. "Let us put up a temporary shelter on the top of the flat roof and build a little chamber there. He is a good man, and we ought to serve God by doing that for his servant, and let us set for him there a bed and a table and a stool and a candlestick; and it shall be, when he cometh to us, that he shall turn in thither." She felt that the good man deserved it. "It fell on a day." In heaven the day was marked. In heaven it had been decreed that on that day certain important things should happen. They were humble things, but they were very important, or we would not be reading of them here to-day. So it fell on a day that Elisha the prophet came thither and he turned into the chamber and rested there. Oh, yes, if the curse of that sinful nation were on his heart, if the wickedness of the king troubled him, if the poor were growing poorer, and the rich were growing richer, if on every hand injustice seemed to be rearing itself in triumph, and his words had but little effect, then it was indeed a place of rest.

Elisha's Gratitude

Oh, the delightsome rest of going into that little place where none would trouble him! Then he said to his servant Gehazi, "Call this Shunammite." Gehazi seems to have been about the equal of his master, but he took the place of a servant, evidently a believer accompanying the prophet to learn his ways, and perhaps with the intention of preaching the Gospel after the prophet had gone. So Elisha said to his servant, "Call that Shunammite. Call her up here." And when the servant had called the Shunammite, she stood before him. She did not enter the room, she stood at the door. Then he said unto his servant—and he must have said this aside—"Behold, this woman has been very careful and kind to us with all this anxiety. Ask her what we can do for her, ask what we are to pay—what return are we to make for this hospitality and these accommodations that we are accepting. Ask her if she would have us speak about her to the king. Tell her, Gehazi, that I have political influence with the king, and if I were to mention her family and her wealth and her disposition to the king, the king would give her some high position in the royal family. Ask her if she would like to go into society and appear before the king. If she declines that, ask her if she would like to have me speak to the captain of the hosts, that he appoint her husband to some profitable position in the army. Does she for herself desire society and display, or does her husband desire to be a leader in the nation? I have it in my power, because the king will do what I ask him to do." Gehazi goes to the door and asks her if she would like to enter society and be taken up by the king's family. She shakes her head. "Would you like to have a high social position as well as your position of wealth?" She shakes her head and bows her head and she answers, "No, I am satisfied with my present life. My husband and I are completely happy; there is no more happiness for us than we have now. We never can be happier than we are, and all we can hope to do is to maintain our happiness. I will stay among my own people. I have no desire to go into society. My home is enough for me and my husband, and we are perfectly harmonious. He has no disposition or ambition to go away from me or his home. I will stay here with my own people." Then said Elisha the prophet to his servant Gehazi, "What then is to be done for her? If we cannot do anything like that, how can we repay her for this hospitality?"

A Mother's Joy and Sorrow

Gehazi answered, "She has no child, and her husband is aged." So Gehazi called her and again she stood at the door. Elisha said to her, "About this season next year you shall embrace a son." And she said, "No, my lord, thou man of God, do not lie unto thine handmaiden. I do not want children; I am satisfied with my present position in life. I do not seek the cares of a family."

But it came to pass as the prophet had said. A child had come—not a welcome one, but an unwelcome one—not because they are evil or selfish, but because in their rank and position in life they felt they had not the time to take care of children. But how mistaken is that woman or husband who estimates that anything else on God's earth can compare with the wealth of a child's love! And when that child did come you could not have bought it with all the wealth of the kingdom. She had not realized how selfish and narrow had been the training that had taught her to believe that a woman could be anything greater than a mother. And when the child was grown to five years of age he went out to his father to the reapers on the farm, and he said unto his father, "Oh, my head! my head!"

So the little fellow ran in the hot sun in that hot country, after the reapers as they were going out to the fields. The heat of the sun was great upon him and he threw off his turban and came to his father and said, "My head, my head!" The father said to a lad who was working in the field, "Take the boy and carry him to his mother. He has a headache." Nothing like a mother's bosom or the touch of a mother's hand, and nothing like the sound of a mother's voice. "His mother will kiss it well. It is only a little headache." So they carried the boy to his mother, and he sat on her knee until noon, and then died. The gift of God taken away! "It is better to have loved and lost than never to have loved at all." It is better to have been married and be a widow than never to have been married at all. It is better to have God's gifts for a little while if we cannot have them for all the time. But human nature finds it difficult so to reason.

That mother's feelings then were your feelings, and the lesson behind it is that God gave and God took away. She went up with the body of her child and laid him on the bed of the man of God, and went out and shut the door behind her. That chamber was sacred and so in building for the prophet she had been building for herself and her husband, unconsciously. That is always the case when you undertake to do good for others, it always results in doing good for yourself. Think of this woman's self-possession; think of the purpose and the will-power of this woman as she goes out on the rock there and calls to her husband down in the fields and says, "Send to me, I pray thee, one of the young men and one of the asses, that I may run to the man of God and get back again before night." The husband said, "Wherefore wilt thou go to the prophet to-day? It is neither new moon nor Sabbath. This is no day for worship." But she said, "It is all right." That is enough for the wife to say or for the husband to say when they understand each other. He loved her so much and had seen so much of her good sense that he trusted her fully. She saddled the ass, and she said to her servant, "Drive; do not slack in thy driving for me," and she rode speedily the fifteen miles and came unto the man of God at Mount Carmel.

The Shunammite's Faith in God

And when the man of God saw her afar off he said to Gehazi his servant, "Behold, look; yonder is that Shunammite; run and ask her if it is well with her husband, and is it well with the child." Gehazi, running down the mountainside into the valley, meets the hastening woman, stops her, and says, "The prophet saw you coming and the prophet wants to know if your husband is well, and if you are well, and if the child is well." She answered, "It is well." Not my will, but thine be done! It is the only answer she gave, and the servant could not understand. When she came to the man of God she caught him by the feet and she said, "Did I ask a son of the Lord? I did not; I wanted no children. I did not ask for a son. I did not appreciate his awful value then. Yet did I say to you, 'Do not deceive me.' Do you remember?"

Then the prophet said to Gehazi, "Gird up thy loins, take my staff in thine hand and go thy way to that home, and lay my staff upon the face of the child." But the mother said, "As the Lord liveth, and as thy soul liveth, I will not leave thee unless thou go with him." Then the prophet must follow. And Gehazi passed on before them and laid the staff upon the face of the child, but there was neither voice nor hearing, and when Elisha was come into the house, behold, the child was dead, and lay upon the bed.

A funeral; dead; gone! Elisha went in thither and shut the door upon himself and the boy and prayed unto the Lord! He put his mouth upon the child's mouth and his eyes upon the child's eyes and

Continued on page 816

* Pastor, Baptist Temple, Philadelphia.

CHAIRS

By AMOS R. WELLS

GH-BACKED and straight-backed, with tidy gay—
ers love it in just that way;
low down, not to interfere sewing and knitting that Mothers hold dear;
ers that swing to a gentle tune, fully sweet as a brook in June—
A Chair, and Somebody in it!

fully curved, with a dainty air, d of its burden young and fair, for a maiden dear as she t in and smile as she pours the tea—for one and too small for two, the gallants are envying you—
A Chair, and Somebody in it!

ted on rollers, and heavy and strong, absurdly but usefully long,
back and a high-rimmed tray,
a bib that is soiled in a shocking way, clatter with bowl and spoon, baby chatter and baby croon—
A Chair, and Somebody in it!

Mother has gone to the Home Above, left us alone with a sacred love;
the Maiden—ah, happily busy is she,
no more time for afternoon tea;
the Baby's in college! Ah, memories fair, t sadder sight than a memory chair—
A Chair, and Nobody in it!

Moody and the Ark

WAS preaching in Manchester, England, some years ago. One Sabbath afternoon I was short of workers, for there were a good many inquiring the way of Life. I took some into the art gallery, and after I had spoken for ten minutes, a gentleman came to a business man, and stood on the outskirts of the company. I thought he was sceptical. I noticed that I had misjudged and that he was interested. I said:

"My friend, are you not a Christian?"

"No. I wish I was," he replied.

"Then," I said, "I'll speak to you and try to make the way plain to you, and if you can see it, perhaps the others may see it."

I addressed my remarks to him. After I had used one or two illustrations, I said, "Now, do you see it?"

"No. It is not clear. It doesn't help my case."

I gave a number of other passages. "Does that make it plain?"

"No. That doesn't help my case." I was like most people who think their case a peculiar one.

I gave another and another illustration. Then he said, "The fact is that I can't feel that I'm saved."

I said, "Was it Noah's feelings that saved him, or the ark?"

"Good evening, Mr. Moody. It's all settled." And away he went.

I believe in quick work, but that was too quick for me. I wondered if the man did really see it. The next day I was looking for my "ark man." He wasn't around. One afternoon I was going down the back stairs of the Free Trade Hall of Manchester, and there was not much light. A man tapped me on the shoulder, and asked:

"Do you remember me?"

"I remember that voice, but I can't locate it," I said.

"Do you remember the man in the dark?"

I answered, "I've been looking for you."

He said, "That settled it all at once. I've been trying to save myself by my feelings, and trying to make an ark of my feelings, but the moment you spoke to the ark, that settled it." He continued: "Moody, always tell of the ark."

From that wonderful book, "Thou Fool" and Seven Other Sermons, by the late evangelist Dwight L. Moody, now being published by THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. Any friend desiring to procure a copy of this book without spending one cent, may do so by sending us four of the coupons which appeared in last week's paper, properly signed by a new subscriber and accompanied by twenty-five cents each.

The Mystery of Fragrance

By EUGENE THWING

NOTHING in the physical world is more mysterious than fragrance. It has baffled all attempt to define its causes, its substance, or its action. Science has tried in vain to discover whether fragrance is a vapor, or a gas, or some other substance present in the atmosphere in a state of fine subdivision. Any such explanation fails before the fact that air conveying an odor can be filtered through a tube packed with cotton wool, and still the smell is discernible. Fishes, even those whose organs of smell are entirely separate from the organs of taste, can detect odoriferous matter through the water without touch, vision, or hearing.

Electricity is the favorite mystery of the age. No one knows what it is. Yet electricity can be measured exactly, and divided into units. Fragrance is more mysterious even than electricity. Of what does it consist? How is it propelled instantly through the atmosphere, even in a closed room where the air seems perfectly still? Science is unable to tell.

* * *

DR. RAMSAY, of University College, Bristol, England, has suggested that smell may be "excited by vibrations of a lower period than those which give rise to the sense of light or heat." Sound is the result of "a lower period" of vibrations—that is, less rapid vibrations—than those of heat and light, therefore Dr. Ramsay's theory supports to some extent the suggestion of another scientist, whose name I cannot recall, that fragrance is the result of harmonious vibrations, like music, while wrongly related vibrations of odor produce a discord—in other words, an unpleasant smell.

One writer, baffled in his attempt to give a physical explanation of fragrance, declared that it belonged largely in the mental realm. There is something strangely psychological, so to say, in the wonderful acuteness and discernment which accompanies the sense of smell, especially when it is persistently exercised, as in the case of a person who lacks other senses.

One time, a boy, James Mitchell, was born blind, deaf, and dumb. All the ordinary avenues of communication with the world were closed to the poor little human fragment. He developed his one sense of smell to a remarkable degree, and based his acquaintanceship with family and friends on this one mysterious faculty. He readily observed the presence of a stranger in the room, and formed opinions of all persons from their characteristic smells. Some brought harmony and fragrance into his poor restricted life. They were his friends. Others conveyed the atmosphere of discord, and as he sensed their personality by his strange power of psychological smell, he rejected them as hurtful to his happiness.

* * *

WHEN you think of it, you will find that every person has a distinctive individual atmosphere. Some lives constantly give forth a delicious fragrance. Others, alas! offend our spiritual olfactories with an odor like that of the skunk cabbage. I have a friend whose mere presence in a room brightens and beautifies it more than a great jar full of American Beauty roses, fresh and covered with cool moisture, could do. His cheery voice and smile call forth smiles on faces that were downcast and weary. His ever ready sympathy in trouble and sorrow brings comfort; his hearty words of encouragement and confidence in the good that is sure to come make the anxious heart grow strong, and rouse fresh hopes; his enthusiasm and unfeigned joy at his friend's success bring new songs from the heart and fresh radiance into the life he has gladdened. Probably he isn't aware of it, but the fragrance of his life is recognized and sought wherever he goes. It's good to have such a friend. Just think of being a friend like that!

Fragrance in a flower or in a life is more precious than the beauty which ravishes the eye. Imagine a rose without its odor, or with the smell of the burdock or skunk cabbage exhaling from its delicate petals!

A beautiful young girl sat gracefully posed in the window seat reading a book. The sunlight played on her wavy hair, making it glisten like spun gold. The rosy curves of cheek and mouth and neck were sweet to look upon, and suggested, indeed, a perfect rose. Mother opened the door and called, "Come, dear, it's time to set the table for dinner."

Down went the book with a slam. Scowls twisted the pretty face into a very different look. "Oh dear! Why can't Edith set the table? I want to finish this story."

* * *

FRAGRANCE is worth more than money sometimes. The best perfumes are very costly, so much so that nearly all the natural perfumes are imitated by artificial compounds in order to supply the market at low prices. The delicate fragrance of a human life, however, is above price, and no counterfeit substitute can take its place. A life that gives out fragrance could no more understand an attempt to put a money value upon it than the rose could understand the market price of an ounce of attar-of-rose produced by the death of three thousand or more roses.

An Italian writer, Dora Melegari, tells of a physician in Rome who with a friend one day visited the poorest quarter of the city. Suddenly, in a lane leading to this crowded district, a poorly clad woman emerged from behind a tree where she had been hiding, pressed into the doctor's hand a little bunch of fresh violets and then fled away. The doctor accepted the flowers and without a word fastened them into his buttonhole, offering the woman nothing in return. His friend, astonished at the doctor's lack of generosity, wanted to follow the poor woman and recompense her with money, but the doctor forbade it.

"You would only offend her," he said, and then, explaining, he told how, during an epidemic of diphtheria, he had the happiness of saving the life of the poor woman's child. Great was the rejoicing in her miserable family, but there was no money to pay the physician, so, wishing to show her gratitude, the grateful mother rose every day at dawn to gather the first violets. Then she waited until the doctor came that she might slip the bouquet into the hands that had saved the life of her child. At first the doctor wished to pay for the flowers, but at her look of reproach he replaced the money in his pocket, and never again offered it.

"I would not dare," he murmured with emotion, tenderly rearranging the violets in his buttonhole.

"They give you real pleasure?" asked his friend.

"Indeed, yes; they fill my busy, weary day with a wonderful fragrance; they are like little rays of sunshine that warm me; they mean more to me than any of the fees my wealthy patients pay me; they bring me into sympathy and fellowship with a beautiful soul."

THE ROAD TO TOPERSVILLE

To read this may not help you, but can not do you harm, If you are one of those who pay the taxes on a farm.

By ALPHONSO A. HOPKINS

I

FROM Tippleton to Topersville the road is never long,
And they who take it often start with careless laugh and song;
For youth is love, and love is life, and life with all is free
To choose their path and walk in it, though far they may not see;
And on the luring way they go, wherever it may lead,
Uncertain of the end, at first, but eager to proceed,
Till, tempted forward, all too far they find their feet have passed
With but a grave in Topersville to greet them at the last.

II

Along the Road from Tippleton are farms that never pay,
Where live the farmers lax and poor who journey on that way.
Their fields are never fertile, and their crops are never fine,
And of the Road to Topersville they stand a shameful sign.
Their barns are never painted, and their roofs forever leak,
And of their cruel shiftlessness their stock forever speak;
The chiefest things they know that grow for lack of sober hands
Are mortgages that are not met, which overspread the lands.

III

Along the Road to Topersville the poorhouse opens wide
Its doors for men whose meager wants must somehow be supplied;
For men who found the village bars too frequent by the way,
Who left their farms too often and too long were led to stay;
For men who should be patrons of the farmer at his best,
And live in homes of luxury and comforts well possessed;
For men who lost their manhood on the wretched road they trod,
And could not see the finger-signs that pointed off to God.

IV

And always at the county seats are jails along the Road,
And these abound with men who take their ease in such abode:
The farmers pay the piper, when the prison-walls they build,
And pay for cost of keeping when the prison-cells are filled;
For taxes are a mortgage that you can not hide or waive—
Its yearly payments must be made, no matter how you slave;
The poorest crop a farm can grow, however poor the soil,
Is men to fill the prisons which are taxing sober toil.

V

There is no place for Topersville or Tippleton to-day,
On any map of any State where men the laws obey;
There is no reason why the farm should heavy burdens bear,
Because of lust and greed that breed their costly levies there;
And farmers have the right of way along the roads they take;
They have the right to close the bars along the roads they make;
And at the State's own capital they have the power to kill
The Curse that keeps the toll-gates on the Road to Topersville.

New York, June 24, 1911.

Anvil Sparks

..TEMPTATION loves to be debated.

..A FINE Sabbath day is the kind many folks like to break.

..PENURIOUS Christians would reduce the church to penury.

..THE ashes of extinct spiritual fires fertilize the roots of sin.

..THE sacrifice is no longer felt when you realize the gain it brings.

..THE faults of others are not rungs in the ladder you are trying to climb.

..EN ROUTE on the Christian pilgrimage, fill your grip with the Scriptures.

..THE man who asks, "What is there in it for me?" is not the one who is getting the most out of life.

..THE melody of a righteous life is as sweet music in the ears of angels, as the songs of angels would be to the ears of men.

When the "Hospital Angel" Plays

"WHEN you have the blues and are all tired out and depressed, what do you do with yourself?" queried a friend of Madame Kitty Berger recently.

"I never allow myself that luxury," replied Madame Berger promptly. "I just say to myself, when I feel the first symptoms, 'Kitty, you know your remedy.' There is just one cure for the blues."

"And that?" interrogated the friend eagerly, as Madame Berger paused and swept the keys of her beloved harp-zither.

"Ignore them, and proceed to do something for some one else. If you indulge them, ten chances to one you will be downright ill. Try it! The true secret of happiness is not in possession, but in self-forgetfulness. According to the great law of compensation, when we do most for others, we do most for ourselves. When we stop seeking, we find happiness."

Such is the philosophy of Madame Kitty Berger, who is known on both sides of the Atlantic as the most famous harp-zitherist in the world, and who to-day is known in New York as "The Hospital Angel."

Many years ago, when Fraulein Berger made her debut in London, she captivated the hearts of all who heard her play, among others that of Sir John Everett Millais. Straightway the celebrated painter christened her "The Divine Kitty," afterwards referring to her thus in his Memoirs, for, said he, "It was she who, through her music, inspired my best work." Madame Berger was at that time the zither instructor of the daughters of Millais, and on more than one occasion was she called from a lesson to play for the great painter as he worked on the portrait of some distinguished personage.

Madame Kitty Berger the woman has quite as charming and interesting a personality as in her role of hospital angel. Her life has been brimful of romantic incidents and remarkable associations which a volume alone could detail, all of which makes her beautiful work for the suffering even more interesting. It was shortly after a great bereavement that Madame Berger commenced to visit the hospitals in Manhattan. She had found so much solace in her zither that she was sure others, too, must feel the power of its sympathetic vibrations. Nor was she mistaken, as the patients always begged for more music. Meantime, they heard of her work at the other hospitals, and she was invited to visit their wards. To-day she plays in ten hospitals, with regular visiting days, the year round, rarely permitting any professional engagement to interfere with her hospital schedule.

"I'm too selfish," says she naively, "for it is my greatest pleasure and recreation."

On certain days, therefore, she visits St. Luke's Hospital and plays in the general and surgical wards. On another day each week she goes to the Presbyterian Hospital, where the ward patients count the moments until her arrival. Wheel-chair patients and convalescents crowd about the doorway to listen as the magic fingers sweep the strings of the marvelous little instrument. Those on crutches hobble into the circle, and judging by the expressions on their faces, they forget that their pedal members are temporarily useless, or possibly maimed for life. Many sufferers whose tired eyes have long refused to close in sleep, fall into a gentle slumber, and awaken refreshed. Frequently some wan invalid lifts her head, like a drooping flower in a refreshing shower, and rising slowly to a sitting posture, eagerly drinks in every breath of melody.

"Many have illnesses of heart and brain that medicine and surgery cannot reach," says Madame Berger. "The doctors are aware of this, too, but they never discuss such symptoms. They can splint and bandage broken bones, use the knife skilfully when needed; they can diagnose every disease under the shining canopy except one—the sorrow of human heart."

"And isn't that dis-ease?" she continued gently. "That is why I play to the sick. My zither speaks to their souls. It lifts them up mentally and spiritually."

"Quite true!" exclaimed one great surgeon recently. "We could easier dispense with the physicians than with our Hospital Angel."

Over in the insane and prison wards at Bellevue Madame Berger's playing was considered an experiment at first. From the beginning, however, it was a success. Patients who were led by nurses to the outer corridor when Madame Berger was seated—even those who had been violent prior to her coming—were perfectly docile, and appeared as normal as any one under the spell of the music. Now the doctors and nurses count on Madame Berger's visits, as her music has such a wonderful effect upon their patients, who forget their woes and trouble temporarily, at least. They also look eagerly forward to her visits in the prison wards. The hardened faces of both men and women soften and become more expressive as their masks are laid aside. Only those who are apparently hardened beyond redemption resent her visits, and happily they are few indeed.

Madame Berger always plays soft memory-haunting airs for them—the sort that will stay with them for many days and nights.

"My zither is a conscience-awakener," says she convincingly. "But then it's half human, half divine, and no one can resist its power." So it seems, for tears often course down hardened, furrowed faces, dull eyes light with new hope, and a spirit of peace seems to brood over the ward long after the music ceases. Truly, "music hath charms."

"Silver and gold have I none," said she of the magic fingers, "but such as I have give I unto thee."

LOUISE E. DEW.

Madame Berger Playing to the Convalescents in a New York Hospital

RURAL LIFE IN OLD JAPAN

Continued from page 803

into a paddy field, where shoots of transplanted rice go to make the other main harvest of the second half year; all this combines to create in the beholder a longing to put the scene on canvas.

But there are also numerous by-products, such as a great variety of beans, sweet potatoes, and especially radishes. Farmers haul these radishes in an almost interminable procession of cart-loads to the sea-coast towns, where they are either sold to residents there or shipped on to the cities.

There is such a very great demand for them that the fields are cleared of thousands of tons within a week or two. Rich and poor pickle them with salt in casks, after which, though not of the most pleasant odor, they serve as a table delicacy.

Thrashing is still done with the flail, or else the grain is drawn through a long, sharp-pronged instrument. In many sections the land is all cultivated by hand, or otherwise there is nothing used but the old-fashioned, one-handled plow, which the farmer may be seen lugging on his back along the narrow path to his little farm—a treasured heritage through many generations—driving before him a big-horned ox or a wiry, mischievous and unreliable little horse, which carries loads on his back, plods along in the mud of the paddy fields, and can thrive on food and treatment which no other horse in the world could. For after 50,000,000 people are fed from 35,000 square miles of tillable land none remains for meadows, and this little pony simply has to submit to a diet of coarse beans, barley and rice straw.

Imagine a lot of men and women up to their knees in the cold mud of the rice fields, or out sowing barley on an area of twenty acres of land, with here and there a toiling ox adding more vivacity to the beehive. The whole would look like so many employees of one little plantation, rather than twenty or thirty different masters with their wives, sons and daughters, following agriculture in the twentieth century!

But Western customs have begun to penetrate even into the rural districts. Here ox-carts and bicycles are equally in use, also now and then can be found a little gasoline engine, which may in time crowd out these enchanting water-wheels, plied by rippling streamlets and miniature waterfalls, and displace the many old-fashioned foot mortars used to hull rice and barley, as well as the typical Oriental "upper and nether millstone," which may yet be found in nearly every dwelling.

Again, in their apparel the new and the old are strikingly exhibited. When coming to town in his best, the farmer may be adorned with a second-hand felt hat, Japanese kimono with the lower ends turned up and fastened under his sash, probably intended to make more conspicuous a suit of Western underwear and a pair of Congress shoes. But still more curious the scene when these agriculturists take advantage of a rainy day, and in whole companies, while engaged in animated conversation, come marching tandem into town to do their trading. All smoke tiny pipes—looking like ordinary pencils at a distance. Their headgear is usually but a piece of thin toweling twisted like a turban around their heads. They either have a blanket over their shoulders, Indian fashion, or else a large sheet of yellow oilpaper.

Some of them may come in various out-of-style overcoats, but all of them carry the picturesque umbrella—made of bamboo and paper, rendered waterproof by saturating it with a preparation of unripe persimmon juice.

But these peasants, whose natural surroundings, not much unlike those of the Alpine dweller or the orange-grower of sunny Sicily, tend to produce a more serene and kindly character than the daring and restless coast settlers, are very hospitable. Enter their dwelling, though ever so humble, and they will invariably place near you a square cushion to sit upon and offer a tiny cup of hot tea as a token of friendship. Let a stranger meet a little crowd of youngsters en route to school, or at play with their little brothers or sisters on their backs—unlike the children of the town, they will make pleasing, respectable bows and otherwise offer the traveler their assistance.

On the whole, these country folk though rather slow and reticent, are on account of time-worn customs clinging more tenaciously to them, are not so ready to embrace Christianity, but when they really do they make the more stanch supporters of the same.

Among the Workers

—THE NEWARK, N. J., Evangelistic Band has played at religious gatherings in most of the churches in and around Newark, West Hudson and the Oranges for several years past, at the men's meetings in Militia Park, Newark, every summer and at Sunday School parades, etc. The band confines its work exclusively to church work.

—THE REV. GEORGE H. DOWKONTT has been appointed superintendent at the old historic Fulton Street Noon Prayer Meeting, which has continued every week-day without an omission since 1857. Dr. Dowkontt is pastor of the Sixteenth Baptist Church of New York, and the understanding with the committee is that he shall retain his pastorate in connection with his new work. Dr. Dowkontt for over two years was a medical missionary in Angola, West Central Africa. On his return he was associated with Rev. Dr. Charles H. Parkhurst in the work of the Madison Square Church House as manager for nearly two years.

Bowery Mission's Labor Settlement

In a Corner of the Wood-Yard — The Mission Settlement Garden

By J. M. CONWAY

GOD has blessed the Bowery Mission in a wonderful manner in its many-sided efforts to help men, and the establishment of a Labor Settlement as another branch is but another evidence of Divine favor. On the 15th of May, 1911, a suitable house and grounds were acquired at 1183 Bronx Boulevard, New York City, near Mount Vernon, and arrangements immediately made for the reception of men who were desirous of being helped to help themselves. The house was thoroughly renovated and fitted up plainly and comfortably, and the ground was broken for the making of a truck garden. Two horses and wagons were secured, and circulars were freely distributed advertising the sale of kindling wood, and asking for contributions of clothing, furniture, papers, magazines, etc. The response during the ten weeks has been very generous.

At the Mission and in the Free Labor Bureau, as men were found who were out of work, needing shelter, food and clothing, and who evidenced a desire for better things and a chance to "make good," they were told of an opportunity to get out into the country, where they would be fed, clothed, surrounded by the very best Christian influences, and enjoy the benefits of a real home, work being provided them in the cutting and chopping of kindling wood, baling paper, gardening, and soliciting orders. The work has been a success. God's hand has been in it from the beginning, and the men have been earnest in their endeavor to show their appreciation of the chance to build up their health and fit themselves for positions which are being found for them by the Free Labor Bureau. Every one of the men has taken hold of the "better hope," and with perfect childlike confidence and implicit faith in Christ as their helper, they are enjoying a happiness they never knew before. One of the men in the Settlement is a college graduate, who on account of strong drink had sacrificed home, loved ones and position. He has been completely restored, and writes as follows regarding the Settlement:

"The spirit which pervades the government of the Settlement is noticeably a spirit of liberality and liberty—true liberty which grants to every one entire freedom, limited only by the obligation to regard the interests of the community and the rights of each fellow-member. Here we find no restrictions on our beliefs save that we believe in Christ in whose name the work is done; no suspicion of surveillance, and none of the obnoxious fussing about immaterial things usually to be found in institutions.

"Menial labor, manual labor, and mental labor, are all of value to the Settlement, and there is just so much distinction and no more between the various laborers as the parable makes between him with the five talents and him with the two. Here is a spirit of fraternity and something much more than mere fraternity of spirit, for it is the spirit of Christian charity, of Christ himself. It is in constant evidence, whether it is concerning itself with the sick, the worried, the erring, or the needy. The exercise of Christian charity is displayed in surprisingly frequent and unlooked-for instances among a crowd of men who, in the immediate past at least, have been "roughing it" and looking out perforce for "number one." It is evidence that some great change has been wrought in them!

The Bowery Mission's New Labor Settlement in the Bronx, New York

No one who saw these men as they first came to the Mission, broken in body, in purse, in spirit—perhaps in all three—and sees them now, after a few days or even a few hours at the Settlement, can fail to realize the strengthening effect of a home, of companionship, of the interest displayed in them, and of the spirit of brotherhood in Christ, which inspires and governs the Settlement. No one who may have seen some of these men, sitting out the day or night on park benches, and sees them now at their work, can refuse to believe that these men really want work and not idleness—that they like labor and not loafing. Their eagerness for clean bodies, clean inside and outside clothes, proves that they are self-respecting and wish to show it. Remembering their rough associations in past months one can listen now to their language, and note a change which evidences an inward transformation. This work is one well worth while to the State and the community.

The men are not here very long before they identify themselves with the Settlement. In scarce two months they have transformed an ill-favored tenement house and a woe-begone yard into a clean, well-kept, attractive home. If work is to be done, there is no question as to whether signal has been given to begin or to cease. You find them in the garden before breakfast, or in the woodyard still in the evening. They work as conscientiously as ever they did for wages. The quality of wood brought in, the quantity sent out, the progress of the garden, the appearance of the house and yard, the news of a sale, the receipt of stuff which may produce a profit, interest them keenly. Anything in conduct, in the appearance of the place, hurtful to the good name of the Settlement, any damage to its property, is a concern of theirs and theirs to find a remedy.

The work of the Settlement is being carried on in a broad Christian spirit under one who understands men, who can sympathize with them and who can see things from the point of view of the men themselves. It needs one who can put heart into those who need to be heartened, and who can govern without either petty restrictions or too rigid discipline. The work is being encouraged by the goodwill and interest of the neighborhood and by its readiness to help. Without any abasement of character or self-respect, a man comes to the Labor Settlement, stays content and happy until ready to go, and leaves to take a place in the world again as a man, relying on himself and on the One who showed him the way out of his slough of despond. He is once more a self-respecting citizen, and no longer the despondent, hopeless occupant of a park bench—a sober, decent, honest man, earning his living and eating his bread by the labor of his own hands; no longer the miserable wastrel that he was, incapable of self-help and happiness. The inmate of the Bowery Mission Labor Settlement is transformed from a wreck, a derelict, pilotless, off the course, and leaves the Settlement to steer straight and steadily towards a better manhood, with the Saviour as his guide through life and heaven as his destination.

TOPICS OF INTEREST THROUGHOUT THE WORLD

—THE PLANS FOR THE steamship Aquitania, which the Cunard Company is building at Clydebank, England, have been modified in order to make the vessel the largest in the world. Her length will be 900 feet, or ten feet greater than the length of the 50,000-ton liner Imperator, which the Hamburg-American Line will put into service in the spring of 1913.

—OUR GOVERNMENT CLOSED the fiscal year on June 30 with a credit balance of $33,000,000. Its receipts during the twelve-month from all sources were $689,000,000 and its expenditures $656,000,000. The receipts were $13,000,000 in excess of those of the preceding year. Uncle Sam now holds in the treasury vaults $1,800,000,000 in cash, the largest sum they ever contained.

—MRS. MARY STARK, the well-known missionary of Callao, Peru, writes asking that CHRISTIAN HERALD readers having old chromographs no longer needed, or good-sized colored New Testament sercils for Sunday School use, might send them to her for the use of the mission's colporteurs in Bible distribution. Mrs. Stark's address is: Colon 107, Casilla 58, Callao, Peru.

—POPE PIUS X. is endeavoring to reduce the number of church holidays, which in certain countries are so popularly observed as to seriously interfere with business. Many of the "saints' days," the Pope holds, should be celebrated on the following Sunday, instead of, as now, on week days. In the Greek Church, the multitude of holy days observed in Russia amazes a Western traveler. The same is true among the Catholics in Spain, Italy and the South American republics. These days frequently come two or three times in a week, involving a complete cessation of business.

OUR EDITORIAL FORUM

OTTO KOENIG, President — GEO. H. SANDISON, Managing Editor — THEODORE WATERS, Secretary

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is published weekly by "The Christian Herald," at the Bible House, Fourth Avenue, 8th and 9th Sts., New York City. The officers are: Otto Koenig, President and Treasurer, Bible House, N.Y.City; Geo. H. Sandison, Vice-President, Bible House, N.Y.City; Theodore Waters, Secretary, Bible House, N.Y.City.

Subscription Price, $1.50 a year, in advance.
Remittances should always be made in the safest manner available to the remitter. Register cash remittances.
Foreign Postage.—For each copy to be mailed outside the United States, Canada, and Mexico, add one dollar a year.

Change of Date.—It takes at least two weeks to change the date, after your subscription is renewed.
Expiration of Subscription.—The date on the wrapper indicates when your subscription ends.
Change of Address.—It requires three weeks' time to make the change. Give both old and new address.

Subscriptions may commence with any issue.
Letters should be addressed, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, New York.

Entered at Post Office, New York, as Second-class Matter
Entered as Second-class Matter at the Post Office Department, Ottawa

A Great Day for World Peace!

AMONG the famous days in our nation's history, Thursday, August 3, 1911, must hereafter be ranked as one of the greatest of them all. On that day, we took as a nation the most important step that has ever been taken in the direction of world peace since time began.

On that day, a trinity of great nations—France, Great Britain and the United States—signed through their representatives in the President's study in the White House, Washington, Arbitration treaties providing for the peaceful settlement of all disputes that may hereafter arise among the three signatory Powers. Our Secretary of State, Hon. Philander C. Knox, signed the treaty with Great Britain in the afternoon and the Hon. James Bryce, the British Ambassador, signed in behalf of his government. As the two signers rose and before even laying down their pens, each grasped the other's right hand and exchanged congratulations. President Taft shared in the felicitations of the moment. Back of the President, on the study wall, hung a painting of the signing of the protocol of peace between Spain and the United States.

Secretary Knox next signed the Arbitration treaty with France and Viscount St. Phalle, of the French embassy, witnessed the signature for his government. President Taft and several members of his Cabinet witnessed these ceremonies, which were marked by a dignified simplicity. Every one present realized the tremendous import of the act that was taking place, which marked the first great forward step looking toward universal peace. At 2 o'clock in Paris on the afternoon of the same historic day, M. Jean Jules Jusserand, Ambassador of France to this country, signed the convention between France and ourselves. Allowing for the difference in time, M. Jusserand's signature was affixed at 9 A.M., Washington time.

It is only a little over two months since negotiations were opened by our State Department looking to these arbitration treaties. President Taft first put forth the suggestion in his public speeches, and, England and France being both favorably disposed, the seed sown quickly bore fruit. Three other nations (Germany, Italy and Holland) are now considering similar treaties with the United States. Should they come into the Arbitration Circle, Russia, Austria and the Scandinavian countries may reasonably be expected to follow soon.

All Europe is a-thrill with the news of the completion of this great arbitration compact by the three Powers who have taken the lead in the epochal movement for world peace—a movement which in a single day has advanced the human race more than a full century nearer to universal peace. The arbitration treaties just completed do not abolish war, nor do they create any "entangling alliances." They do, however, make war an improbability by opening the way for its avoidance through the submission of all questions to a judicial tribunal or to arbitration. All disputes, even though they concern the most vital interests of the signatory Powers—not excepting "national honor"—may be peacefully adjusted under the provisions of the treaties. Their general features may be thus summarized:

All differences internationally justiciable shall be submitted to The Hague, unless by special agreement some other tribunal is created or selected.

Differences that either country thinks are not justiciable shall be referred to a Commission of Inquiry, composed of nationals of the two governments, empowered to make recommendations for their settlement. Should the Commission decide that the dispute should be arbitrated, such decision will be binding.

Before arbitration is resorted to, even in cases where both countries agree that the difference is susceptible of arbitration, the Commission of Inquiry shall investigate the dispute with a view of recommending a settlement without arbitration.

The Commission, at request of either government, will delay its findings one year to give an opportunity for diplomatic settlement.

The Senate will ratify the terms of submission of each dispute to arbitration.

No great reform is ever realized except through long, arduous struggle. Moving at first slowly, at the last it progresses by leaps and bounds. It has always been so. Looking backward over the progress of the Peace Movement, we can now clearly see the divine guiding Hand in the long work of preparation which the last few years have brought to such marvelous development. It is beyond all doubt that the nations are moving toward world-peace. To-day it is the overshadowing theme among statesmen and thinkers. The conviction has taken deep root that war is an evil in any form and that to provoke war is a crime; that the resort to physical violence settles no principle but leaves untouched the great questions at stake; that religion, civilization and common sense demand the adjustment of international quarrels by the same judicial methods that apply to States and communities.

No achievement of American statesmanship has reached higher than this which, through our government's wise and courageous initiative, has given to the Peace Movement a vitality and substance it never yet possessed. It is no longer a dream; the "desire of the nations" is transformed into reality. By these new treaties of Washington, the whole movement is taken out of the realm of distant and intangible things. It is stepping across the border line that divides the methods of barbarism from those of calm, judicial reason. We have established a precedent for the whole civilized world to follow, and under Divine guidance, we believe it will be followed.

God's people everywhere will rejoice in this great triumph of arbitration. THE CHRISTIAN HERALD and its readers—peace-lovers, all of them—have especial cause for gratitude. Let us lift up our hearts and voices in praise and "thank God and take courage," looking forward confidently to that day when all nations will be as brothers and when war shall be forever a thing of the past.

A Timely Protest

IT WAS a courageous and timely step which the Federation of Catholic Societies in convention in Colorado took a few days ago, when it issued a protest against the production of plays "which mock sacred things and moral principles which Christians hold in the highest respect." It instanced nine plays now running in American theatres, and denounced them as calculated to debauch the hearts and minds of theatre-goers, and especially the young, by setting up a perverted standard of morals, gilding licentiousness and familiarizing the public with the grossest indecencies. We should have liked to see such a course adopted by our Protestant bodies. Only here and there has there been a protest from some vigorous Protestant pulpit, and this neglect must be laid at the door either of indifference to actual conditions or an indisposition to begin a controversy which gave promise of becoming a sharp and personal one. It will now be interesting to note how the offending managers take the new protest from the Catholics. There are enough managers of influence and public spirit to reform the theatre and drive out the indecent drama, if they choose to unite forces for that purpose. A censorship of the theatres may be an un-American suggestion; but if sensibly administered it would at least conduce to decency and in that sense would be a substantial public benefit. As matters stand, many of the theatres can no longer lay claim to being houses of amusement, pure and simple, for they have overshot the mark and wandered far into the lurid domain of untrammeled license.

The Nation's Guest

TO US now comes as a distinguished visitor, with the avowal of friendship and admiration on his lips, that silent little sailor-man, Admiral Count Heihachiro Togo, hero of the Battle of the Sea of Japan, whose great exploit, almost single-handed, lifted the Mikado's empire up to a high place among the world-powers. What our own Grant was by land Togo was and is by sea—grave, preoccupied, always thoughtful and purposeful; a man slow to think, quick to act; with a face that is a strange blending of kindness and determination and a heart at once brave and gentle. As the nation's guest, he will go through the prescribed round of official formalities and sightseeing. From a dinner at the White House with President Taft to a banquet, with innumerable "banzais," at the Nippon Club, his days will be filled with engagements and functions. He will have an opportunity too, let us hope, of coming in contact with not a few representative Americans outside of politics, who will give him a truer impression of our country and its people, and of their long and hearty friendship for h own land, than he can derive from laudatory afte dinner speeches. Greatest of living sailors, t modest little Admiral is almost worshiped at hon and would have been lionized in Europe and her had he not discouraged all such demonstration His distaste for vulgar public display wins hi greater respect than if he came with a brillia entourage. May he enjoy his visit and carry wi him when he goes the kindliest recollections of t nation which he himself has called the preceptor the national development of his own land and i people.

The Art of Walking

WHAT with our constantly increasing transpo tation facilities and proneness to physical i action, there is real danger that the "fine art walking" for exercise or pleasure may ultimatel die out. Yet there is no form of motion that is strengthening and developing to the body and e hilarating to the mind. President Taft is a devot of golf, but he loves to walk, and so also with The dore Roosevelt, who is fond of every form of physic activity, riding or afoot. Mayor Gaynor, Ne York's aged but rugged executive, does his thinkin while he walks the three-mile stretch to and fro his office, and he tells us that he looks with pity upo the "poor anæmic creatures" who ride past him the crowded trolley, while he is taking his mornin stroll across the bridge. Walking is conducive philosophic reflection; it energizes and purifies t blood, brings the sparkle to the eye and color to t cheek. A good daily walk does more to make o "fit" for the struggle of business than any tonic. stimulates our powers of observation and reflectio and, in good weather and amid congenial scenes, brings into play the best qualities of the mind. Ou forefathers fought off many of the infirmities of o age by walking and in those earlier days the "o fellows" were brisk and active, with blood we oxygenated. It is a pity that our later civilizatio should permit the good old art of walking to neglected.

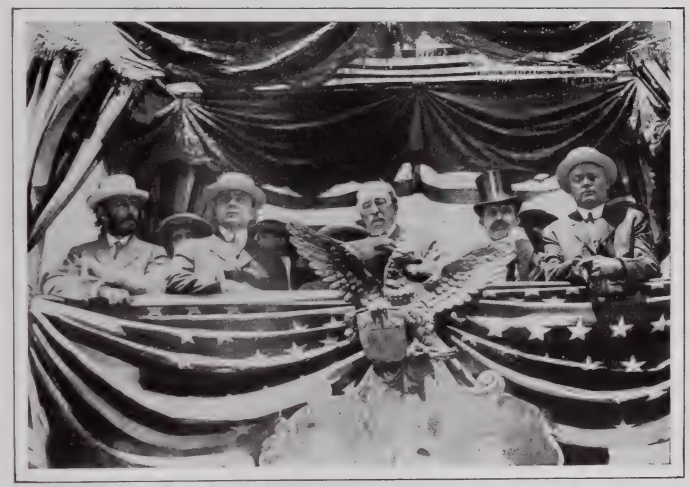
A Word About Coupons

All friends who are desirous of enlarging THE CHRISTIA HERALD Family should immediately cut out the six coupo which appeared in last week's issue and send them to us pro erly signed, so as to be numbered among the thousand wh will receive a copy of that beautiful hand water-colored pictu "Dreamland." As we stated last week, we have but a limit number of these pictures, and first come will be first serve And do not forget, there are other rewards which you m receive in addition to "Dreamland." Read the offers carefull cut out the coupons, get your friends and neighbors to t THE CHRISTIAN HERALD for four months, send the coupons us properly signed and accompanied with 25 cents each, a the rewards will be sent you at once. Remember, you have b a limited time in which to work, so begin at once.

Contents of this Number

Wednesday, August 16, 1911

	PAGE
Our Mail-Bag	802
Rural Life in Old Japan (Illustrated) — By Matthias Klein	803, 806
The Shunammite's Faith. Sermon — By Rev. Russell H. Conwell, D.D.	804, 816
The Mystery of Fragrance — By Eugene Thwing	805
When the "Hospital Angel" Plays (Illustrated) — By Louise E. Dew	806
The Bowery Mission's Labor Settlement (Illustrated) — By J. M. Conway	807
OUR EDITORIAL FORUM	808
THE BIBLE AND NEWSPAPER (Illustrated)	809
The New Reformation in Russia (Portraits) — By Warren G. Partridge, D.D.	810
The Centenary of Charles Dickens (Illustrated) — By Kate Upson Clark	810, 811
New Honors to William Penn (Illustrated)	812
Sang Their Sweetest Songs for Her (Illustrated)	812
In My Veranda Easy Chair (Illustrated) — By Margaret E. Sangster	813
Number Forty-Three. By Ladd Plumley	814
Our Boys and Girls (Illustrated) — By Miss Janet Porter	815
An Aged Missionary Dead (Portrait)	816
The Meaning of Sin	817
Sunday School Lesson, by Dr. and Mrs. W. F. Crafts
Co-operative Capital	818
Young People's Societies	819



THE BIBLE AND NEWSPAPER

Conducted by FERDINAND C. IGLEHART, D.D.

New Subway Started

NEW YORK began the mammoth extension of its subway system by breaking ground for the Lexington Avenue Line on the last day of July. Ceremonies took place at Sixty-seventh street and Lexington Avenue, the centre of one of the four sections of the new subway which the Bradley Contracting Company is going to build. A grandstand had been constructed against the wall of the Seventh Regiment Armory, and a thousand persons, including members of the Public Service Commission and the Board of Estimate, were crowded on it. Laborers had cut from the road a two-foot square of asphalt. Alfred Craven, the acting chief engineer of the Public Service Commission, stepped up to Mr. Bradley, the contractor, and informed him that he had been authorized to issue the necessary permits for the work of subway construction in Lexington Avenue. Mr. Bradley took the silver spade from Mr. Craven and handed it to Mr. William R. Wilcox, Chairman of the Public Service Commission, who promptly forced it into the ground and brought it out again full of earth, intending to put it in a large glass jar to be preserved as a souvenir; but the great crowd, anxious to get a memorial of the occasion, rushed upon Mr. Wilcox with such force that he had to empty his spadeful into a man's soft hat, where it was protected and afterwards placed in the jar for safe keeping. A similar incident occurred at the breaking of dirt for the present subway system, when Mayor Van Wyck emptied the first spadeful of earth into his own silk hat. Mr. Wilcox then made an address, which was followed by addresses by George McAneny, Borough President, and Comptroller Prendergast. Mr. Wilcox in his speech spoke of the vast numbers of people requiring transportation in New York City and the necessity for the new subway routes that have been laid out and ordered to be constructed. The contract for the old subway in New York City north of the City Hall was awarded January 5, 1900, and completed October 27, 1904. The subway now in use is 25 miles long, with 81 miles of track. The new Triborough Subway System will add more than 40 miles, and will cost some $300,000,000 or more, a portion of which is to be furnished by the city and the rest by the Brooklyn Rapid Transit, which has secured the contract for the new extensions. There is a great distance between the subway express dashing along at twenty-five or thirty miles an hour and the ox-cart of olden times. The transportation of the ancients is referred to by Joseph in this instruction to his brethren:

Take you wagons out of the land of Egypt for your little ones, and for your wives, and bring your father, and come. (Gen. 45:19.)

Copyright by American Press Association

The "Speakers' Stand" at the Breaking of Ground for New York's New Subways, July 31

Gun for Destroying Airships

Since it has been practically demonstrated that airships can be used in war, dropping explosives upon armies and cities, most of the governments of the world have secured them, and educated officers to navigate them. To discover a gun that would destroy these airships has been the eager search of the war departments of almost all the great nations in the world. The Bureau of Ordnance of the War Department of the United States has just invented a gun which the world has been seeking. It has an instantaneously acting sight, it will scatter projectiles that in turn will explode and scatter more projectiles—fanwise—at a speeding aeroplane and destroy it. The shot will be like the well-known shower of stars in pyrotechnic displays. The space covered, however, will be very much larger. The whole outfit is based on a series of secrets, one of the most important being the projectile itself, which secret, if undiscovered, will make imitation by other nations impossible. The strange paradox appears of the whole world moving toward peace, and yet the whole world organizing itself into a standing army, and building the most gigantic engines of destruction on water and land that the ages have ever seen or dreamed of. The human brain is racked for devices to invent ships, guns and explosives large enough, swift enough, and strong enough to destroy the destroyer. The most improved battleship will hurl a shell fifteen miles, and a few such volleys, it is said, would destroy such a city as New York. It is very possible that this insane waste in the construction of these colossal instruments for the wholesale destruction of human life may tend to the abolition of war, and thus God would make the wrath of man to praise him. All these instruments, however, are at right angles to the highest economic and moral standards, to the progressive spirit of our time, and to the Nazarene, the real ruler of the world, whose kingdom is being so rapidly ushered in, and who was thus described by the prophet:

And the government shall be upon his shoulder: and his name shall be called Wonderful, Counselor, the mighty God, the everlasting Father, the Prince of Peace. (Isa. 9: 6.)

Drilled Down; Saved Miner

Joseph Clary and two other miners were working in the White Oak lead and zinc mine at Joplin, Mo., when the walls of the shaft began to slide. The two companions made their escape before the cave-in, but Clary was imprisoned. There being no other way to get at him, his friends commenced boring toward him with a drill, first with a smaller one to give him air if alive, and locate him certainly; and then a larger shaft was sunk, through which he was rescued. When the rescuers announced that the drill hole five inches in diameter had penetrated the drift, a shout went up from the thousands about the mouth of the mine. Then there was the stillness of death, as a man shouted down the narrow tube, "Hello there! Hello!" Several seconds elapsed, and there came back the feeble answer, "Hello!" The crowd was wild with joy that Clary was still alive. Milk and a bottle of whisky were sent down to him in a can. It is reported that he drank the milk and sent back the bottle unopened with the answer, "This is no place for whisky." After the lapse of a few minutes Clary cried out of the tube, "Water about three feet deep in some places in the drift. I am on a high place and it may not reach me if you hurry." The water was then up to his armpits. He continued, "The air is getting bad. I feel much better now. I heard the hitting of the drill on the hard ground and I felt glad you were hunting for me." A thin rope was lowered and attached to his waist, so that he could be pulled out of the water and saved from drowning. An electric light was sent to him wrapped in copies of newspapers, containing accounts of his imprisonment. Clary carried on a pathetic conversation with his mother over the phone. When the rescuers reached him, he fell into their arms and wept like a child, while the cheers of the spectators echoed from the mouth of the shaft. This tragical incident suggests the mine of sin with caving walls and rising waters and the air laden with death-damp, and the heroic efforts of Clary's friends to rescue him are a type of the celerity and vigor with which the Christian should undertake the salvation of those thus imprisoned; and the man's rescue is a symbol of Christ, who commands his followers to the work of soul-saving, and who is himself the arm with which the rescue is made.

For the Son of man is come to save that which was lost. (Matt. 18 : 11.)

Children Killed by Alligator

The fish and game officers of Arkansas were in search of fish that live on game fish in Lake Chico. Just at sundown they hauled in from the middle of the lake an immense net which was full and very heavy. As they dragged the net on the shore, they pulled out a huge alligator, which swished his tail and threatened destruction. Two negro children of Amos Smith, a fisherman, were watching the hauling of the net, and before any one could realize what was happening, the alligator killed both of them and went back into the water. This terrible tragedy shocks multitudes, and yet many thousands of children are left unprotected from the evil influences that beset and destroy, and the world, and even many members of the church, seem unconcerned. Satan, which word means "adversary," is ceaseless in his plans to ruin the young and the old. Christ, in his terrific arraignment of the children of the devil, makes this reference to their father, who will violate any tie and commit any crime:

He was a murderer from the beginning. (John 8 : 44.)

Death of a Great Painter

Edwin A. Abbey, the celebrated American painter, died in London, August 1. Mr. Abbey had for many years been a resident of England, but he was a Philadelphia boy and a genuine American, of whom his nation and the world were proud. He was a student at the Pennsylvania Academy of Fine Arts in Philadelphia, and at the age of twenty entered the Art Department of Harper Brothers, New York. He became perhaps the most celebrated modern painter of mediæval characters. Mr. Abbey was so successful with his official picture of the coronation of King Edward and Queen Alexandra that he was invited by King George to paint his coronation picture, but the artist declined. Mr. Abbey's decorative work for the Boston Public Library illustrating the theme of the Quest of the Holy Grail is one of the most important works of the time, and is well known throughout the United States by photographic reproduction. Few men have had more recognition than had Abbey. He had decorations from the leading art societies of France, Germany, Great Britain and America. Yale University made him a Master of Arts and the University of Pennsylvania gave him the degree of L.L.D. He was a man of fine personal qualities, of splendid integrity and of Christian devotion. The brush has dropped from the numb fingers of the painter, but his works of art will remain to gratify and ennoble multitudes in the years that are to come, and the wholesome truths he expressed in form and color will be like

Apples of gold in pictures of silver. (Prov. 25 : 11.)

Napoleon's Sword on View

A sword of steel and brass encased in a leather scabbard, which it is claimed the Emperor Napoleon carried in all his campaigns, is now the property of George C. Boldt of the Waldorf Astoria, New York City, and is on exhibition in the Turkish Room at that hotel. Thousands have inspected the keen-bladed weapon and pulled it from its scabbard. Large sums of money have been offered for it, but have been declined. No more beautiful description of Christ's influence and fame has been left to us than that given by Napoleon in a comparison between himself and Jesus Christ. Napoleon's sword was one of force and destruction, and is idle. Christ's sword of love is cutting down the influences of moral evil, and conquering the world. This instrument of warfare the apostle instructs the soldiers of the Cross to use.

And take the sword of the Spirit, which is the Word of God. (Eph. 6: 17.)

The New Reformation in Russia

AT THE recent meeting of the Baptist World Alliance in Philadelphia a momentous step was taken for the future of that great denomination in Europe. When the Russian delegation, numbering about forty, filed into the convention, there was tremendous enthusiasm. When the story was told of their persecutions and sufferings for Christ's cause, it did not require much time to secure money and pledges of $75,000 towards the building of a Baptist University in St. Petersburg or Moscow. Two commissioners will start at once for Russia to secure, if possible, the permission of the Czar to found a theological seminary in his empire for the training of Baptist students for the ministry. These commissioners will be Dr. Russell H. Conwell, of the Grace Temple of Philadelphia, and Dr. F. B. Meyer, of Regent's Park Baptist Church of London. The English Baptists have already raised the money to buy the site for the buildings, and the denomination in the United States and Canada will contribute about $125,000 to erect the new buildings.

There is a pressing demand for such an institution of learning; for there is in progress at this moment in Russia and Southeastern Europe one of the most wonderful religious movements of modern times. Many believe that this new reformation will change the map of Europe. This religious awakening is spreading rapidly among the Cossacks and Slavs of Russia, the Czechs of Moravia and the immense Carpathian Range, the Slovaks, Magyars, and Ruthenians of Hungary, the Letts and Esthonians of the Baltic Provinces, and the different races of the Balkan States. During the last fifty years Baptist churches have been established in all these countries. The German Baptist Union has shown wonderful enthusiasm in planting churches in these countries and in circulating the Scriptures. The movement has had phenomenal success. These new churches have a remarkable spirit of prayer, a wonderful loyalty to the Bible, a supreme dependence upon the guidance of the Holy Spirit, and a quenchless passion to preach the Gospel to all men. The church members themselves have the evangelistic spirit. Each church has this motto, "Every member a missionary." Many of these new congregations put to shame the American churches in respect to growth and increase of membership. There are churches which were founded only five years ago, and which to-day have from 700 to 800 members. One, established only five years ago, now has 1,200 members. In the Nagy Szalonta District there have been as many as 250 persons baptized in a month. One pastor, Norbert Capek, in Moravia, has established 21 stations, with 1,200 members in the short space of seven years. Rev. Mr. Fetler in St. Petersburg has built up a church of 300 members in three years, and has in addition established in the same time twelve mission stations.

M. Levine Theodor Balichin John Kolesnikoff

This phenomenal revival has attracted the attention of St. Petersburg to the wonderful work of the new reformation and it is hoped to secure still further concessions from the Czar. These new churches and missions, springing up like magic in Russia and Southeastern Europe, need most of all a trained and well equipped ministry. So the World's Baptist Alliance has decided to establish at once a great Central European Baptist Theological Seminary. The proposed college will have facilities to teach and train 250 young men preparing for the ministry. The institution will be vested in American and British trustees and controlled by an American and British committee.

The photograph with this article contains the pictures of three of the Russians who attended the recent World's Baptist Alliance in Philadelphia. The central figure is Rev. Theodor Balichin, who is fifty-eight years of age. He was formerly a member of the Greek Catholic Church of Russia, but thirty-five years ago was converted to Protestantism, and has been a Baptist minister for thirty-four years. Once he owned a rich farm, but he has given to the poor and persecuted until he has little left. He is pastor of a church in the Crimea, and his house of worship will seat 800. Before 1908, when there was no religious liberty in Russia, he was arrested four times for preaching the Gospel. He was once confined in jail for preaching, and a few years ago he had to baptize all his converts in the middle of the night in the forests in order to escape prison for himself and his converts. The police watched him and his followers so closely that the baptism of new members had to be postponed many times.

The man in the right of the picture is Rev. John Kolesnikoff, who was sent to jail for six weeks for preaching the Gospel a few years ago. After his release he escaped to America, and now has a mission for Russians in Toronto, Canada. In the left of the picture is Rev. M. Levine.

Mr. Levine has been arrested four times in Russia and was once imprisoned for preaching the Gospel. He too escaped to America and is now conducting a mission for Russians in Pittsburg.

I saw the Russians in Philadelphia, and talked with some of them of their persecutions for Christ's sake. Here is a typical case. It is that of Rev. Mr. Ivanoff, a native of the Caucasus, sixty-three years old. He has been twice an exile in Siberia, because he has preached the Gospel as a Baptist. During these experiences he was chained in the criminal gang. He has been thirty-one times imprisoned, and once worked on the treadmill as a result of his fearless preaching. But this hero could not be silenced as a minister of Christ by exile in Siberia, or by prisons and persecutions. He keeps on preaching since securing his liberty. He has led 1,500 persons to Christ and received them as members of the church.

In meeting these Russians one seemed to see the martyrs of ancient times, men who bore in their bodies the marks of the Lord Jesus. In spite of exile, flogging, jails, and persecution the work of the Baptists has grown until there are over 100,000 Baptists in Russia.

WARREN G. PARTRIDGE, D.D.

The Centenary of Charles Dickens

See illustrations on next page

WHEN the centenary occurs of the birth of a great man, he is re-estimated with something like finality. Several famous characters have been so gauged since the twentieth century came in; and though we are often told by the cynical that authorship and literature are little regarded in these days, the ardent interest shown in the centenaries of great writers has been no less than in those of heroes in other fields. Thus extraordinary notice has been taken of the hundredth anniversary of the birth of Thackeray on July 18; and even more, since Dickens was pre-eminently the novelist of the people, is already manifested in his centenary, to be celebrated on February 7, 1912.

In Andrew Lang's charming Letters to Dead Authors, his letter to Dickens is one of the most just and discriminating; and one of the most touching parts of it is the paragraph in which he speaks of the comfort afforded by David Copperfield to one lying hopelessly ill. "It brought," he says, "oblivion of winter, of sorrow, of sickness." To many and many an invalid has the same relief come. Surely such "splendid high spirits and unhesitating mirth" exist nowhere else as in his pages.

It is entirely true that, as John Forster says in his Life, Dickens gives us "characters that nobody ever saw but that everybody recognizes." They are grotesque cartoons and caricatures, for the most part, but like every other good cartoon and caricature they bear the unmistakable stamp of the original. "Children of dreams though they are," says Andrew Lang, "they seem more essential than great statesmen, artists, soldiers, who have actually worn flesh and blood." And the sudden change in nearly every one of Dickens' books, from tragedy and melodrama to broad comedy, has also its counterpart of reality in many a life, and especially in his own. No pathos that he ever infused into the sad little childlives which he often portrayed, exceeded that of his own gloomy childhood; no change of fortune in Little Dorrit or in Copperfield more than matched that which he experienced; and no sport was merrier than that which he enjoyed with his chosen companions.

Outside of the small circle of his intimate friends, these companions, as everybody knows, were drawn largely from social circles somewhat lower than his own. One is reminded of the shyness of Keats, who could not, in spite of all the efforts of Shelley and others who loved and admired him, ever feel quite at ease with those whose social position, as the sensitive poet felt, was higher than that to which he himself was born. Patronage and condescension were constantly suspected where none existed. Even genius sometimes cannot, it seems, shake off the consciousness of these trivial inequalities of station, gradually, as we all hope, disappearing under the leveling power of Christian democracy.

Like the great critic Taine, there are still many serious souls, usually lacking in the sense of humor, to whom the reverence rendered to Dickens remains a mystery. They dwell upon the often overstrained plots of the long series, and find them impossible; upon their sometimes brutal and unnecessarily harrowing accounts of ruffians and knaves, which make them shudder to little or no purpose; to the pathos which sometimes sinks to bathos; to the unnecessary prominence given to eating and drinking; and to the redundancy of style and the multiplication of characters, which confuse and perplex the reader; and these critics say that they find nothing else. It is incredible to those of us who love Charles Dickens that even the dullest reader should not discern and feel shining behind and through all these faults (which must be admitted) the high and endearing qualities which have given him his commanding place in English literature, and which Dean Stanley in his funeral eulogy in Westminster Abbey thus described: "He was the friend of mankind; the enemy of every form of meanness and oppression. We can hardly exaggerate the debt of gratitude due to a writer who has led us to sympathize with these good, true, sincere, honest English characters of ordinary life, and to laugh at egotism and hypocrisy. To another great humorist the words have been applied that his death 'eclipsed the gaiety of nations. Of Charles Dickens I would rather say that no one was ever so much beloved or so much mourned."

In addition, the opinion of many of our greatest critics may be added that among all the famous portrayers of the comic, from Aristophanes and Plautus down to our own time, not one excels Charles Dickens.

His power of awakening our sympathy for the weak and erring, shown so notably in the Old Curiosity Shop, in the case of poor Dick Swiveller, with his flowery language and his tender heart; his appreciation of loyalty and goodness, perhaps most keenly portrayed in the career of Tom Pinch; his high conception of womanly virtue, as embodied in Lizzie Hexam, honest Peggotty, and not least of all in good Betsey Trotwood, whom Forster calls "the soul of magnanimity and rectitude"; and his desire to reform abuses—such as poor schools, in Nicholas Nickleby; foul and mismanaged prisons, as in Little Dorrit; labor troubles, as in Hard Times, and so on all these were as marked as were his spontaneous humor and his fertile invention of character.

It has been said that Dickens was not a religious man. No doubt he expressed his spiritual life, as he expressed everything else, in a way peculiar to himself; but his heart was essentially religious. Twelve months before his death he wrote: "I commit my soul to the mercy of God, and I exhort my dear children humbly to guide themselves by the teaching of the New Testament."

KATE UPSON CLARK.

Scenes Immortalized by Dickens

Riverside Inn on the Lower Thames, Near Where Lizzie Hexam and Her Father Lived and Where Rogue Riderhood Plotted

The Shabby Street Where Dick Swiveller Lodged and Made Acquaintance With the Marchioness

Charles Dickens

Old Shop in Portsmouth St., Where "Little Nell" Lived With Her Grandfather

Photos by Underwood & Underwood, N.Y.

The Temple, Where Tom Pinch Found a Mysterious Employer and Where Mr. Pecksniff Met His Deserts

House in Devonshire Terrace, Marylebone, Where Dickens Lived During Many Prosperous Years Old Dick Whittington Inn, Clothfair, Which Figures in "Great Expectations"

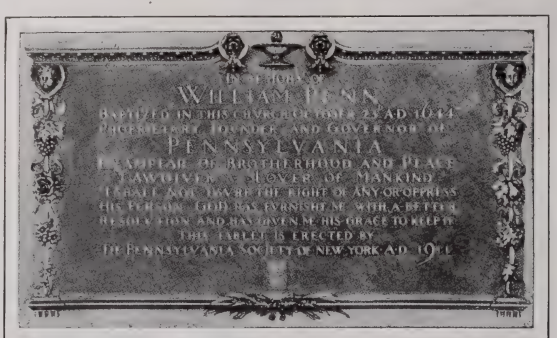
NEW HONORS TO WILLIAM PENN

By Rev. WILLIAM DURBAN

AN INTERESTING episode has just occurred in London which will be remembered with pleasure by religious minds. It was the demonstration under Anglo-American auspices in honor of the chief of historic Quaker leaders. On July 12 the president of the Pennsylvania Society, Colonel Robert M. Thompson, delivered an eloquent address at the unveiling of a tablet. The inscription on this memorial to William Penn explains its purpose, and justifies the participation of Englishmen and Americans in the graceful ceremony. It was composed by Archdeacon Nelson of New York, and is placed in the ancient and beautiful church close to the Tower of London, called All Hallows, Barking-by-the-Tower.



In the venerable church, Americans and Englishmen formed the congregation assembled for the occasion. To right and left of the bronze tablet hung the Union Jack and the Stars and Stripes, while the banner of Pennsylvania covered the tablet till the unveiling. The Lord Mayor of London and Lady Mayoress attended in state, together with Sir Henry Buckingham, Sheriff of London, and Sir J. C. Dimsdale, Chamberlain of London, who is a direct descendant of Penn. Other distinguished Americans present included the ex-president of the society, Hon. James Beck; a former vice-president, Mr. R. T. Davies; the Hon. Barr Ferree, secretary; Mr. W. Guggenheim, treasurer, and others.

Many of Penn's descendants were present, including Lord Ranfurly, Lady Eileen Knox, and Lady Constance Milnes Gaskell; while amongst other notable persons who gathered to honor Penn's memory were Lord Charles Beresford, Professor Silvanus Thompson, and Mr. Clement Shorter.

Some of the assembly trace their pedigree back to the family to which belonged the charitable and lovely Gulielma, the first wife of Penn. The Church of All Hallows is notable as being a mediæval fane, which survived the appalling great fire of London by which, in 1666, fifty-five churches were burned. This sanctuary escaped with the loss of its porch and sundial.

Colonel Thompson, in his address, reminded his hearers that in 1644 William Penn was baptized in that sanctuary. At a moment when the preordained revolution of the centuries had brought them near to a covenant of peace and amity, binding together England and the kindred nation of which Penn was one of the founders and heroes, it was fitting that the sons of the State he founded should assemble to celebrate the erection of a memorial to him in the church in which he was christened.

After the unveiling, the service concluded with the singing of "God Save the King" and "My Country, 'Tis of Thee." Then most of the congregation proceeded to the exhibition of Penn relics at Devonshire House.

The Memorial Tablet to William Penn

Penn was not brought up as a Quaker, and the first member of the new sect that he met was an unlettered man in Oxford, named Thomas Lo Penn was then studying at Christchurch College, Oxford University, and he was so taken with th new doctrine that he closed his colleg career and flung himself into Noncon formity. His father, Sir William Pen was furious, and the youth was packe off to Paris, brought back to Londo and finally sent to Ireland. In si months he found himself in prison i Cork. Then he was taken to Londo and committed to the Tower.

Nothing daunted Penn nor th Friends with whom he associated. Whe he was not in prison he was constantl speaking in their little assemblie which were sternly forbidden by th Conventicle Act. On Sunday, Augus 14, 1670, soldiers surrounded the mee ing house in Gracechurch Street, Lon don, and so prevented the worshipe from entering. But the congregatio gathered in the street, and Penn, takin off his hat and beginning to preach, wa at once arrested. With Captain Wi liam Mead, an old Cromwellian soldie he was committed for trial at the Ol Bailey. They were taken down to loathsome dungeon at the bottom of th building, called the Hole. On Septem ber 1 began the trial, which is memora ble in English history as ending in the most signa triumph of the cause of liberty of conscience o record.

The judge, to his amazement, found himself fac to face with a jury who refused to return a verdic of guilty against the two preachers. The baffle court as a last resort challenged each of the juror separately, but each man responded "Not guilty. So ended a trial which was one of the turning point in English history.

SANG THEIR SWEETEST SONGS FOR HER

OUR little tenement lads and lasses—some three hundred of them—had a gala day on Saturday, July 29. Mrs. Margaret E. Sangster, known and beloved to readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD all over the land, was an honored visitor at "the Children's Paradise." News of her coming had preceded her, and when she drove up to the entrance lodge, the little waifs, ranged on both sides of the roadway, gave her a rousing welcome. She witnessed their sports on the spacious grassy lawn in front of the Homestead; saw them running races up and down "Sunshine Alley"; reviewed them in the march past to "Fort Plenty"; and heard them sing their "grace"—which she herself had penned for them a dozen or more years ago. Then she met them all in the beautiful Children's Temple and addressed them amid the wildest juvenile enthusiasm. She entered into the happy spirit of the occasion and soon was on such excellent terms with her audience that the little people were answering her questions from all parts of the house. Her talk was a practical one, suited to the needs of her young hearers, who listened eagerly to every word that fell from the lips of the gentle, sweet-faced, motherly lady who told them of the qualities which, cultivated in childhood, would make them grow up to be noble, lovable men and women.

Then they sang for her their sweetest songs, every little singer eager to give pleasure to the guest, who complimented them warmly on their excellent performance. They cheered her speech to the echo.

Mrs. Kate Upson Clark also made a short and very interesting talk to the children, which was greatly appreciated. A number of visitors were present at the Temple gathering and enjoyed the fine singing and the speeches.

A novel feature of the children's service in the Temple on Sunday, July 30, was an address by Rev Frank Lane, of the New York Evangelistic Committee. The speaker took for his subject the force of habit. He showed, by a practical living object lesson, how evil habit binds us as with strong cords which are instantly loosed when the heart is given to Christ. It was a talk which the children will long remember, and made a deep impression upon them.

During the present heated term, the appeals that come from the poor mothers of the city tenements to have their little ones sent to Mont-Law are greatly increased. Three dollars provides a ten days outing for a little tenement waif. Contributions for this purpose from readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD and their friends will be cordially welcomed. It is hoped that sufficient funds will be contributed to make the present summer the record season for our Children's Paradise. If you have not already done so, send in your mite. Every gift, however small, will be acknowledged, and every patron of the work will make his own summer holiday the better in the knowledge that he has given ten long golden days of pure health-building enjoyment to a little waif far away from the hot and sickly tenements. Address all contributions to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House New York.

Singing in Front of the Children's Temple

HAITI'S REVOLT SUCCESSFUL

THE revolution in Haiti has triumphed. On August 2, President Antoine Simon fled from the capital, Port-au-Prince, and took refuge on the American coal schooner Bradford C. French, being refused admission on the Haitian cruiser, Decembre XVII, which was in the harbor.

General Firmin, the revolutionary leader, was in command of all the approaches to the capital. A Committee of Safety had been appointed and no disorder was reported. Foreign interests were not believed to be in danger and none of the foreign warships had landed bluejackets up to that date. President Simon's departure was arranged quietly. He left his palace at 4 o'clock in the afternoon, his last request for three days' delay having been refused by the revolutionary leaders. He carried his rifle over his shoulder as he marched down to the wharf, with head erect, and by his side walked his daughter, Clementina. The other members of his family had already gone on board the vessel. At the wharf there was a rush and some shots were fired. A deputy named Prin fell mortally wounded, and Mlle. Clementina was slightly injured. Five others persons were killed and six wounded. The trouble soon quieted down, and the aged President embarked without further opposition.

IN MY VERANDA EASY CHAIR

A Typical American Family

By MARGARET E. SANGSTER

THE letter which follows was sent as a contribution to our department of Women in Council. It tells the plain story of one happy American ome, where the founders were not afraid of the ay of small things. It tells, too, between the lines, omething about the love that never wears out and hat is strong enough and deep enough to carry its ossessors safely over the road of life, be it rough r smooth. In the conclusion of the letter there is timely word of suggestion to young people who re in love, but are hesitating to marry because their means are small.

"We have been married more than eight years, nd have lived a part of the time on a farm and part of the time in a town of about two thousand nhabitants. My husband never has had robust ealth, and so has not been able always to do the work he would like best but has had o follow different occupations, as his strength would permit. For sev- eral years prior to our marriage we had each been self-supporting, even during our school days, so we had earned the value of money.

"We began our married life with a total capital of four-hundred dollars, of which we each had earned an equal amount. We had discussed the advisability of waiting a few years until our capital might be greater, but mutually agreed that we would rather join forces, and also that we could better afford to do so, as we could thus reduce many of our expenses. At first we rented a place in town, and then a farm, but soon decided it would be much more profitable to pay interest than rent, especially in town, so as we were anxious to own our own home we bought a nice little place of five acres and a four-room cottage on the outskirts of the town, paying two hundred dollars in cash and giving a mortgage on the place for the balance. This property needed some improvements and repairs, but on this account we were able to purchase it at what we considered a bargain. We lived there for three years, during which time we added many improvements, then sold, at a net profit over the total cost, besides having saved the price of rent for three years. We reinvested in a similar manner and again sold, after four years, at a good profit. We are now living on a farm, for we both love the country, and there are so many advantages in a country home, especially when there are children in the family. Four years ago a brother of eleven years, being left an orphan, came to live with us, and three dear babies have come to bless our home. They are a real blessing, too, and I count it a great privilege to teach and train them. So now our family circle numbers six, and though our income has increased very slowly, we have never known want, nor felt that we had reason to regret our decision not to wait for Fortune's smile. Of course we have had to deny ourselves many things we should have enjoyed, but the denial has not hurt us, and most of the things can still be enjoyed if we continue to prosper. And we have had to practise economy, and expect to always, but there is real pleasure in that—not the kind of economy that causes one to do without any needed thing, or to use articles of inferior grade, but rather the art of making the best possible use of everything. We have always had an abundance of plain wholesome food. Our house is simply, but comfortably, furnished. In dress, it is needless to say, we do not pretend to follow all of Fashion's foibles, but we do like to appear well, and to this end we buy good material, and try to adapt the prevailing style to our own needs. Books, papers, some good magazines, music, and the entertainment of our friends have all been essential parts of our home life, and lectures and concerts are occasionally enjoyed. Of course the church and charitable needs are also included. We have never kept a systematic record of our accounts, though there is certainly much to be said in favor of such a plan. I think it would be especially helped where one has a fixed salary to work with. Our income has never been that of nature. My husband has no bad habits to waste his money, and we try always to spend our money wisely and to keep free from debt, that is, for our living expenses. I suppose the cost of living varies in different localities and under different circumstances, as, for instance, in city or country, and what would appear as an abundant income in one place might be considered very meager in another. Yet, from my observation, I believe, on an average throughout our State—Nebraska—far more young people lay the foundation of their home, and save money, too, on a yearly income of three hundred than on one of five hundred dollars. I wonder if the young men whose pride restrains them from marrying on a small income, do not misunderstand and misjudge our young women? F. L. D."

Queen Victoria of Spain

THE beautiful Queen of Spain is a granddaughter of Queen Victoria of England and a cousin of King George V. She is said to be unpopular in Spain because of her English birth, and in the event of Alfonso's death her life in that country would probably be unhappy. The king is in extremely delicate health, but notwithstanding this may be spared for many years. The picture represents the queen engaged in knitting something dainty and filmy for Madrid charity in which she and the ladies of her court were interested. Her sweet face is appealing in its gentle and womanly expression. She is no coward, having shown herself possessed of great courage on more than one occasion.

A Good Memory

WHEN people complain of an unretentive memory the trouble more than half the time is that they have failed to be attentive. Memory depends largely on concentration, attention, and association. There are various degrees and kinds of memory. Some of us have good memories for dates, others for names, others still for faces. To have a good memory for both faces and names is to be popular with friends and acquaintances.

The late King Edward the Seventh was remarkably endowed in this particular. It is indeed a royal gift. General Grant was also extraordinary in his ability to recollect the faces and personalities of people whom he encountered either casually or frequently. Those who have occasion to use the telephone in their talks with friends or orders to tradesmen find a memory for the telephone numbers a great convenience. A woman not otherwise distinguished for intimacy with figures recollects without difficulty a great many telephone numbers, and has said that the streets and numbers and the post office boxes of different friends seem to be photographed on her brain.

In old age the hardening of the arteries and the cessation on the part of the brain to receive and retain new impressions weaken memory. This is the reason why old people apparently live so much in the past, and it may in a measure account for the habit of telling the same story over and over to the same listeners, to their manifest weariness. Memory is a good servant, but must not be allowed to indulge in laziness.

Recipes Wanted

GOOD recipes are welcome in this conclave of women. Can one of the daughters tell us how to make nut cookies or nice maple fudge? Both these dainties are asked for by a novice in housekeeping. Will somebody speak in meeting and explain why it is that while doughnuts served on one table are delicious, on another they are either tough or soaked with grease? Has any one her mother's or grandmother's recipe for black fruit cake? Address all correspondence on this subject to the editor of this page in person.

NUMBER FORTY-THREE

By LADD PLUMLEY

"WE'LL rebuild at once; we'll rent for the time being. Days are dividends with us—big dividends. As to the building, it's covered, and the machinery; all but the new silk in the warehouse."

Hartley attempted to listen to his chief, but his thoughts were on other things. Were all the operatives out? that seemed to him more important than insurance, rebuilding, and dividends.

The eastern end of the great building at the side of the culm hill roared as if fire had turned it into an angry monster. It was nine of a winter's evening—they had been running overtime—and the glow reddened the massed faces gazing at the flames as if the faces themselves were on fire. It lighted up the factory yards, bringing out details, from the thin, clinging dresses of the factory girls standing in groups to the coal-blackened features of the miners attracted here by the excitement.

The shouts of the firemen and the hubbub of the watchers mingled with the chugging of the fire engines and the snapping of flames.

The mill stood on the side of the mountain far above the mining city and the water was low in the reservoirs. The firemen played a slender stream on the western end, but it was evident to Hartley that they did it as a matter of form; he believed that the entire structure was doomed.

A fireman pushed to where the manager and his assistant stood, the crowd opening a narrow lane for him.

"There's only one way to save the storehouse," he said. "We want permission to use blasting powder on the western end of the mill."

The manager gave the order, but before the fireman turned to repeat it to his men, a little girl elbowed her way through the crowd and gained a place at Hartley's side.

"Please, sir, Number Forty-three; she's in there," and she pointed toward the burning building.

You're new here, Hartley," broke in the manager. "These girls aren't to be trusted." He turned to the girl, who shrank from him as if he had threatened to strike her. "Here, you," he asked, "who's in there?"

"Number Forty-three; she's a little thing. She ties Canton next to me in upper five. It's easy to get lost if the lights go out. I've asked lots of the girls and they haven't seen her."

"How do you know she didn't get out?"

"'Cause, 'cause," replied the timid voice, "I seen her at her machine when I run, and the man what she works for says she ain't come home. He's drunk and waiting for her—says he'll beat her if she don't come soon. He's done it lots of times; she told me so."

Hartley gave an exclamation of anger; he had been employed here but a few months and already his heart had been wrenched time and time again with the wretchedness of the girls employed in this and the other mills of the valley.

The manager had turned away from the girl. "What are you waiting for?" he asked of the foreman, and added with a quick snap to the words, "Get busy on that wall before the fire breaks through toward the west."

"You mustn't do it!" exclaimed the assistant.

"May I ask who's giving orders here?" queried his chief. "I'm responsible for the silk, and I cannot let an idle tale stand in the way of saving good dollars." He turned again toward the fireman. "Get your men on the job; tell them to get a move on."

"And I say you dare not!" exclaimed Hartley.

The fireman hesitated, looking first at the manager, then at the assistant.

"Who owns that silk?" asked the now incensed manager. "Foreman, I'll give you just two minutes to order your men to blow out that wall. If, sir, you don't give the order, I will."

"If you destroy the building without making a search for operatives I will report the matter to the grand jury of the county," said Hartley, quite beside himself with disgust.

"Grand jury!" exclaimed the manager. "You don't know this town yet; as I said before, you are new here." He leaned toward his assistant and said in a low voice in his ear, "We mill owners fixed all that long ago."

"Then you can make up your mind to just one thing," replied Hartley in a voice yet lower than his chief's but distinct as if the words were shouted, "if you use powder on that wall, you'll kill me with Forty-three, for I'm going in."

There was not a second to lose and he knew it. He ran toward the mill shouting as he ran that a girl was in danger. He knew where room five was—on the third floor above the packing department.

Two firemen joined him at the edge of the crowd and urged him to let them attempt the rescue. But Hartley's blood was boiling.

The western end of the mill had a side door which Hartley and the firemen found open. Within the blackness was like ink, for the lights had gone out with the destruction of the dynamo at the other end of the building.

"I'll search the third floor," shouted Hartley. "You go through the first."

He thought he knew the mill pretty thoroughly, but he had not realized the difficulty of finding his way without a light.

The smoke choked him, and fumes from the burning silk filled his eyes so that the water trickled over his face. "God help the girl!" he exclaimed.

He felt his way through the maze of boxes. It seemed to him that they were never ending, and twice he missed his way and brought up against a darkened window, from which came a gleam through a crevice of the metal shutters.

At length he stumbled against the rail of the next stairway and hurried up until he pushed open the door at the top. The windows of the great work room had their shutters open and the dancing reflections glinted on the polished machinery. At the door he shouted again at the top of his voice, and an answering little cry came from the farther end of the room.

In a corner behind a maze of looms and framework, he found a child on the floor, terrified and helpless. He stooped over her, and between her sobs she managed to explain that her foot was fast, and he found that it was caught between the rods supporting the loom.

It proved difficult to release, and he had to remove the shoe by slitting the upper with his knife. In broken English the little girl explained that she had lost her way and her foot had slipped between the rods, which held it as if in a trap.

He lifted her and her arms fell around his neck, she nestling against him, her head resting on his shoulder.

"You poor little kid!" he said, and she murmured something into his ear that he did not understand and patted him with her hands.

He put her down at the doorway, and wrapped his handkerchief around her face; for he knew what they must pass through on the next floor. He could never afterwards recall all t terrible journey through the blind p sages among the boxes. It was inferno of choking, gripping, smoth ing smoke; of blind stumbling in th obscurity; of struggling with darkn and vapors as if they were enem leagued against him.

At the lower stairway he ran agai the firemen in the darkness who w trying to find him. They suppor him to the open air, but blinded a choked as he was he could not let th take the girl.

He staggered into the crowd, a wrapped the child in a shawl some offered for her protection against cold. As he removed the handk chief from her face he was not s prised to find that she was pretty, w dark eyes and a tangled mass of bro hair.

The crowd pressed around them, a a few moments later Hartley's w pushed through and took his arm hers.

"Oh, John, it's been terrible! I here just after you went in—it seemed like an eternity."

It was just as they started for th home that a drunken man stagge forward and attempted to take girl.

"Do not let him have her!" claimed Hartley's wife. "They've t me all about him; he has no shadow a right to her, and both her parents dead. Let us take her; we will l her for poor Gertrude's sake."

. . .

It was late that night that Hart sat in his living room; his heart fil with thankfulness that he had sav the child and that his own life had b spared. As he listened to the voices his wife and the girl in the room abo he thought of the little daughter w had died two years before.

"I've put her to bed," said his w coming into the room. "Dear Jo providence must have sent her; she' dear little thing. I've been crying eyes out over her and my relief t you were not burned in that awful f And think of a child like that work ten hours a day and way into the nig when the mill is working overtim

"I see my work is cut out for m replied her husband. "This is the f opportunity. We will keep the g and that will be a joy; it will help bear the loss of dear Gertrude. rest is going to be hard work with t cold brute of a manager against but God helping, I will make thing little better in the mill for those p girls."

AN AMERICAN HEROINE IN INDIA

THE leper booth of the recent World-in-Boston exhibition was a booth that had many visitors, and most of them went from this booth to see the daily exhibitions of scenes in leperland given by means of moving pictures. Of the instances of personal devotion to this most sorely afflicted class of people, none is more touching than that of Mary Reed, the American woman who is now a leper herself, and whose spirit of devotion to her fellow unfortunates is as great as was that of Father Damien.

Mary Reed is a native of Ohio. With her conversion came the immediate determination to devote herself to Christian work. As a teacher in the public schools she was noted for her efforts to create Christian character among her pupils. Then she became a missionary, and was sent to India in the year 1884. She was assigned to Cawnpore for special work in the zenanas. Her health failed and she returned to America. While here she became aware of the fact that she was the victim of leprosy, but she kept the fact a secret from all of the members of her family excepting one sister. Having been assured by eminent physicians both here and in England that she had become a leper, Miss Reed determined to devote the rest of her life to the lepers. This she has done with a degree of steadfastness of purpose and high courage that have won for her the admiration of all who know about her and her work. When apprising her family of the fact that she was a leper and of her purpose in regard to her future Miss Reed wrote:

Mary Reed

"I shall have the joy of ministering to a class of people who, but for the preparation which has been mine for this special work, would have no helper at all; and while I am called apart among these needy creatures, who hunger and thirst for salvation, and for comfort and cheer, He who has called and prepared me promises that he will be to me as a little sanctuary where I am to abide, and abiding in him, I shall have supply of all my need."

For nearly twenty years, Miss Reed has lived in a little bungalow among the lepers in the Himalayan Mountains. She has succeeded in having a little chapel built and a hospital, and there is no kind of personal service that she has not rendered to the lepers around her. In her own case the disease has not been of the malignant type, and she has succeeded in keeping it in check. Miss Reed cannot be moved from her conviction that God has stayed the progress of the disea that she might be his servant amo the stricken ones of the leper colo Her letters overflow with cheerfulne and she declares that she is grateful God for even the affliction that h come to her, because of the way which it has led her to the life of he fulness she is able to live among t lepers.

J. L. H

Great Floods in China

The following cablegram was received by The CHRISTIAN HERALD from Z. Charles Beals, American missionary at Wuhu, China:

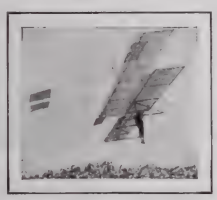
Shanghai, July 31, 191

The Christian Herald, New York:

All Yangtse Valley flooded. Awful destruction and death. Terrible famine inevitable autumn.

BEAL

This news, coming at a time when that part lar section of China and the surrounding coun has just emerged from the grasp of the re famine, will excite sympathy and regret am the friends of Chinese missions. Wuhu, wh Missionary Beals is stationed, is at a bend of Yangtse, some 300 miles west of Shanghai. the great valley of the Yellow River in period floods becomes an inland sea. Several times in cent years the valley has been swept by inun tions that have carried off crops, houses and stock, and have also been terribly destructive human life.



Our Boys and Girls
The Cozy Corner

eroplane Gliding—Latest Sport for Boys

O up-to-date American boys aeroplane gliding is the ng. It is all the good d fun it cracks up be, as the boys say, one meets almost where now-a-days h boys who have rned the art of glid- successfully in trig le, frail little gliders ich they have model- and built themselves. Almost any level- ded boy (or girl for matter of that), if has a mechanical n of mind and an eye a good time, will ly his chums and be- een them they will, hook or by crook, ild an aeroplane der with which to ve fun, gliding off the arest slope of a hill, as I have seen boys d girls on a good ndy day, rising eight ten feet from the el, and, with all ease, de 150 or 200 yards ross a grassy com- n. This was a pretty ht, I can tell you.

A Very Elaborate and Extraordinarily Well Made Glider

Glider Made by Roy Smith, Age 14, President of the Boys' Aero Club, San Francisco

Glides and towed flights are always made against the wind and balance is acquired by swinging the legs. The higher the starting point, the longer the flight is apt to be. A well balanced, well put together glider rises easily, and your weight will keep it from turning over or flying too high.

Gliding has grown so popular among American boys that the Y. M. C. A. all over the country have organized Aeroplane Glider Clubs among the younger boys, and in every district of the city of San Francisco there are cliques and clubs of boys and girls where each member brings his own model glider, and gliding contests happen every day.

The real trick of gliding is to rig up a glider on a very simple model, so you will not be so disappointed if it breaks all to bits in a moment, and start from the top of a grassy knoll with the wind dead against you. There seems to be really no danger of accident and almost any boy can work out a satisfactory glider for short flights. The boys who are making series of successful low, even flights, in home-made gliders, that are scarcely more than toys, are beyond a doubt the daring aviators of to-morrow.

A Good Box-Kite

HE aeroplane glider is little more or less than a good box-kite which ts its lifting power from being towed pidly. One or more boys catch hold a long light rope tied to the glider d run rapidly along the ground with as the glider rises.

The Prince Who Was a Spendthrift

By Bristow Adams, U. S. Dept. of Agriculture

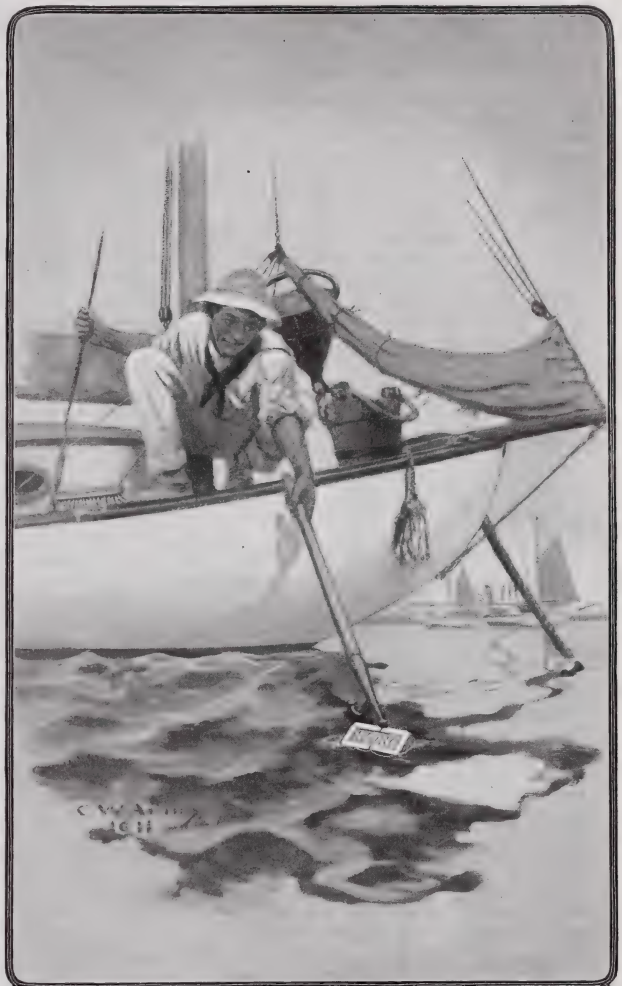
Y friends, let me tell you a true ory of a Prince who as a spendthrift and asted his heritage. he King, his father, anished the youth rom the royal palace, ast him out utterly, nd forbade him the se of the crops of the eld, the wealth of he mines, and the roducts of the sea nd of the streams hat flowed down to it. et the King did not hink to bar the use f the forest, and was surprised one ay when he rode beyond the palace rounds and found a stately mansion, eamed with the massive oak and aneled in fragrant cedar. That night feast was spread there for the King. ables were piled high with tree fruits, nd lighted by the oil of tropic nuts. usicians played soft-sounding wooden nstruments—the clarinet, and oboe, nd bassoon. And for his skill in making this answer to the angry ing's decree, the Prince was received ack into his father's house. Whereat e mended his ways, took upon himself he grateful task of caring for the forests, and lived to advocate the mighty use of trees, which the King had forgotten to interdict.

But since then there was a time when the lesson that the Prince learned was forgotten. The people were profligate and wasted Nature's bounty of the forests.

In the Hollow of the Old Buckeye

When the Judean hills were forest-clad, when the cedars of Lebanon grew to be builded into Solomon's Temple, Palestine was in the height of its glory. To-day it is a desert place, bearing the stamp of poverty and despair. For the forests of a country, and the care which that country bestows upon them, measure that country's progressiveness. The land that was ancient Palestine is under the dominion of Turkey; and Turkey, like China, has no care for its trees.

The forests must be saved if we are to have wood for home-building; they must be saved if our rivers are to be a source of help and not of harm. Without the forest soil to store up the rain, the rivers range from turbid floods to dry channels. When they flow as torrents they wash good soil from fertile fields, and with it choke up commercial waterways. If the nation is to prosper the great resources of the forests must not be wasted, but must be used wisely and made to renew themselves year after year, to promote the comfort and wealth of the people. The generations that destroy the forest will be false to a sacred trust, and will have robbed of their heritage the generations to come.



Then let us all unite in a campaign to save the trees—to plant trees, and to care for them. Here is a crusade, worthy of our highest efforts, in which all may join in a common cause—the protection of our forests, that they may maintain their usefulness and beautify our land forever.

The City Mouse and Garden Mouse

The city mouse lives in a house;
The garden mouse lives in a bower;
He's friendly with the frogs and toads,
And sees the pretty plants in flower.

The city mouse eats bread and cheese;
The garden mouse eats what he can;
We will not grudge him seeds and stocks,
Poor little timid furry man.

CHRISTINA G. ROSSETTI.

"Thank Goodness—it floats!"

More August Prizes—Topsy-Turvy Verse

FOR best animal stories in less than 300 words—subject, The picture on this page entitled, "In the Hollow of the Old Buckeye"—we will give a first prize of a best Brownie Kodak, a second prize of a box of best Japanese water-color paints, and a third prize of a standard, Naval, Blue-Hill Box-Kite, an airship in itself and a wonderful flyer.

Topsy-Turvy Verse

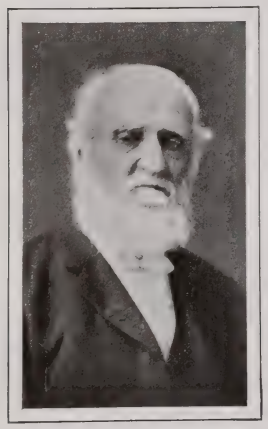
These topsy-turvy verses are always such fun to puzzle out. Every boy and girl who straightens this one out correctly shall receive the charming Cozy Corner Booklet No. 3.

Be sure to enter this prize contest. We are preparing a delightful surprise for every girl and boy in the homes where THE CHRISTIAN HERALD goes, and this is why I especially want to hear from you all, for no one must be overlooked. If you have not already written, or entered these Cozy Corner Prize Contests, do write today.

Topsy-Turvy Verse

And turnip tops the morning
For tea in carrots with,
I'm sure be happy bunny,
If a can be to he ought.

Good-Night Verse



O praise the Lord, for it is a good thing to sing praises unto our God; yea, a joyful and pleasant thing it is to be thankful.

Lovingly and faithfully yours,

The Aunt to the Cozy Corner

A VETERAN WORKER DEAD

A VETERAN American missionary, Dr. Caleb Cook Baldwin, passed away July 19. He was born in 1820, graduated from Princeton in 1846, and in 1848 went to Foochow, China, as a missionary under the A. B. C. F. M. Only one Protestant missionary, Mr. Stephen Johnson, preceded Dr. and Mrs. Baldwin in this foreign field. Besides his regular missionary labors, Dr. Baldwin made a number of valuable contributions to the literature of the mission field. He is the author of The Catechism of Christian Doctrine (1855), a Chinese-English dictionary (on which he labored jointly with Dr. Maclay) and a complete translation of the Bible into Chinese. A significant tribute to the worth of Dr. Baldwin's literary efforts was the erection of the Baldwin Bible and Tract Depot, from which many thousands of Scriptures, leaflets and tracts have been issued.

Dr. Caleb C. Baldwin

Dr. Baldwin's wife was Miss Harriet Fairchild of Bloomfield, N. J. She was his faithful helpmeet in all his work. He was a forceful preacher and was credited with having started the first campaign against the use of opium in China. Dr. Baldwin is survived by one son and three daughters: Albert B. Baldwin of 32 Chelsea Place, East Orange, N. J.; Mrs. Whitman Robbins of Durban, Africa; Mrs. William S. Fairchild of Glen Ridge, N. J., and Mrs. H. Gertrude Gerry of 84 Sussex Avenue, East Orange, N. J.

Working for a Better City

LOS ANGELES has advanced to a city of the first class with a rapidity unknown among large municipalities. Yet in this city of 319,000 people there is no slum! Much as nature favors the city, equal credit must be awarded its public-spirited leaders. Notable among the workers in social service is Dana Bartlett. About fifteen years ago he became pastor of the Bethlehem Church. Into its neighborhood came foreign elements which have now entirely eliminated the American born.

With earnest devotion Mr. and Mrs. Bartlett, studying the situation, learned to master it; learned a way of increasing service to the new neighbors. Their devotion has attracted other picked social workers—a choice group with varied talents, teachers, nurses, visitors, preachers, administrators to the social settlement work at 510 Vigues Street, Los Angeles. An institutional work of vast interest and far-reaching influence has grown up. The polyglot peoples complicate the situation—Italians, Jews, Greeks, Spaniards, Russians—but all respond to the means of help for body, mind, spirit, offered there. In this space it is hardly possible even to name the multiform lines of activity. Visitors, with pentecostal tongues, enter the homes as accepted friends. There are free dispensaries and community nurses. Night schools disseminate knowledge in various languages. There are hotels for stranded men, their past life not interrogated, with the cheer of music, reading, sociability of a large family life, encouraged to start upward again. Children are taken from cheerless streets out to the flower-laden country in summer.

Here was established the first public bath and swimming pool, its privileges obtainable for a nickel, patronized by 30,000 annually; a splendid enforcement to morals and health. Coffee clubs with cheap but wholesome meals, music, lectures, reading, are eagerly utilized by hundreds of men from nearby factories. Encouraged by first success, like the banyan tree, the institution has been given root in three other localities. In a few years, their importance will equal that of Bethlehem.

A Word About Coupons

All friends who are desirous of enlarging THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Family should immediately cut out the six coupons which appeared in last week's issue and send them to us properly signed, so as to be numbered among the thousand who will receive a copy of that beautiful hand-colored picture, "Dreamland." As we stated last week, we have a limited number of these pictures, and first come will be first served. And do not forget, there are other rewards which you may receive in addition to "Dreamland." Read the offers carefully, cut out the coupons, get your friends and neighbors to try THE CHRISTIAN HERALD for four months, send the coupons to us properly signed and accompanied with 25 cents each, and the rewards will be sent you at once. Remember, you have but a limited time in which to work, so begin at once.

The Shunammite's Faith

Continued from page 804

his hands upon the child's hands, and he warmed the child's body with his own. Then he went out and walked up and down in the house and prayed to God. The wife must have seen him walking to and fro, and wondered. Then he went up again and stretched himself once more upon the child, and the child sneezed seven times. And the child opened his eyes and looked into the face of the prophet. And Elisha called Gehazi and said, "Go and call the mother." Gehazi, perhaps, led her tenderly up to the door of that little chamber; and when she had come in, Elisha said, "Take up thy boy; he is risen from the dead; he has come back to live with you again; he is not dead. He is risen again." She fell at the feet of the prophet, and bowed herself to the ground, and took up her boy, and went out to her husband, into the fields at the evening time.

What an experience as a woman and a mother she had gone through between the time her husband called to her and the time she took the boy out to him and told him the story! Not one of our loved ones but was given of God, and one was taken away, but was taken away for some good purpose by his will. It was true in Elisha's time, true in Christ's time, and is true in our time, that he that believeth shall have his prayers answered. None who believe are lost, but all shall rise again.

A Trophy for Corn Growers

A SILVER prize cup has been donated by the International Harvester Company to the American Land and Irrigation Exposition, and is to be given to the farmer growing the best thirty ears of corn exhibited at the Exposition. The cup, which is beautifully designed, is 24 inches in height, is pure silver, and weighs 200 ounces. The Exposition is to be held in New York next November.

AT THE PARSONAGE

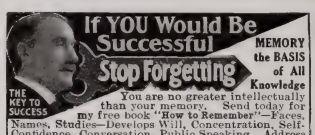
Coffee Runs Riot No Longer

"Wife and I had a serious time of it while we were coffee drinkers.

"She had gastritis, headaches, belching, and would have periods of sickness, while I secured a daily headache that became chronic.

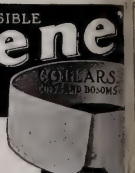
"We naturally sought relief by drugs without avail, for it is now plain enough that no drug will cure the diseases another drug (coffee) sets up, particularly so long as the drug which causes the trouble is continued.

"Finally we thought we would try leaving off coffee and using Postum. I noticed that my headaches disappeared like magic and my old 'trembly' nervousness left. One day wife said, 'Do you know my gastritis has gone?'



"One can hardly realize what Postum has done for us.

"Then we began to talk to others. Wife's father and mother were both coffee drinkers and sufferers. Their headaches left entirely a short time after they changed from coffee to Postum.

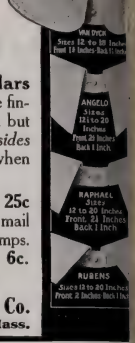


"I began to enquire among my parishioners and found to my astonishment that numbers of them use Postum in place of coffee. Many of the ministers who have visited our parsonage have become enthusiastic champions of Postum." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

Read the little book, "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs. "There's a reason."

Ever read the above letter? A new one appears from time to time. They are genuine, true, and full of human interest.

REVERSIBLE "Linene" COLLARS



When You Travel

Take Linene Collars with you. They are finished just like linen, but may be worn both sides and thrown away when soiled.

Price at the stores, 25c for box of 10, or by mail 30c in U. S. stamps. Sample by mail for 6c. State size and style.

Reversible Collar Co.
Dept. T, Boston, Mass.

THIS NEW HAIR BRUSH COMBS AND BRUSHES THE HAIR AND MASSAGES THE SCALP.

The greatest modern invention for keeping the hair beautiful and fluffy and the scalp clean, healthful and free from dandruff or dirt. Keep the scalp clean and properly massaged and nature will grow the hair. Write for free circular.

AGENTS WANTED.

DR. GEORGE LYMAN, 217 Hill St., Peoria, Ill.

CORNS

cured to stay cured. A-Corn Salve takes them out by the roots. Easy, quick, sure. No pain, no cutting, no danger. 15c at druggists' or by mail.
Giant Chemical Co., Philadelphia

PATENTS SECURED OR FEE RETURNED.

Free report as to Patentability. Illustrated Guide Book, and List of Inventions Wanted, sent free.
VICTOR J. EVANS & CO., Washington, D. C.

Free A COMPLETE COURSE OF Shorthand at Home Free

A SPLENDID OPPORTUNITY FOR A LIFETIME EQUIPMENT FOR BUSINESS

THE following extraordinary offer is made by The Christian Herald in order that all of its readers who desire to take up a delightful and profitable summer study may do so. It is a study which, with an hour's application every other day, will soon produce surprising results. No such offer has ever been made by any other publication, and we hope to see many thousands of our readers and their friends and acquaintances take advantage of it.

It should be the ambition of every boy and girl, every young man and young woman, to acquire such a training as will enable them to take an active part in the battle of life and to be self-supporting and independent. In every branch of business all over the world there is a constantly increasing demand for Stenographers. The man or woman who, having a fair public school education, adds to such training the ability to write a good, legible Shorthand, is in a position to command employment in any community wherever business is done.

Some time ago, The Christian Herald put to test the Standard System of Shorthand, which is the Pitman-Graham System, now universally used in the business world. Nearly 2,000 readers of this journal took a course in this System with the utmost satisfaction. Many of these students are now themselves teaching Shorthand, while hundreds of others are filling well-paid positions.

Now, in order to put a thorough training in Shorthand within the reach of every one of its readers who desires it, The Christian Herald has prepared, in compact book form, a "Complete Course of Standard Shorthand at Home." This Course consists of 24 graded lessons, all of which are stated so clearly as to be easily understood by any average boy or girl, man or woman.

There is no mystery about Shorthand. When the first outline forms are acquired, the study becomes at once fascinating and delightful. All the lessons are simple and self-explanatory. Every student can be assured that, with due diligence, he or she can finish the "Course at Home" successfully.

The Christian Herald takes pleasure in assuring its readers that all the claims it makes for this Course have been thoroughly tested by the Editor and may be relied upon. As a gift to some young friend it is one of the most valuable that could possibly be made. But young folks and grown folks of either sex could not spend their summer leisure to better purpose, or with equal certainty of advantage, than by getting this practical book and acquiring a business equipment. Ordinarily, the price of a course in Shorthand is from $25.00 to $50.00. The Christian Herald "Course at Home" is a Free Course. As set forth in this book, it carries the student up to the point where he or she can take a good Shorthand dictation, after which practice is all that is necessary to become an expert.

The "Complete Course of Shorthand at Home" is contained in a handy volume of 107 pages, 4½ inches by 6 inches, with flexible cloth cover—just the right size for the pocket. It contains, in addition to the Lessons and Keys, exercise pages for every lesson in the Series, so that when the Course is finished, the student has in this volume a complete record of the progress made from the first exercise to the last.

The complete Course will not be sold, but will be mailed FREE to any friend who will send us four of the coupons which appeared in last week's issue of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, each properly signed by a New subscriber and accompanied by 25 cents each. Simply get four of your friends or neighbors to agree to subscribe to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD for four months and we will send you the Shorthand Course FREE.

Address, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, 92 BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK

THE MEANING OF SIN*

Sunday School Lesson by Dr. and Mrs. Wilbur F. Crafts

THE siege of Jerusalem began in the year B.C. 588, when Nebuchadnezzar, the great king of Babylon, brought his army and surrounded the city, determined to capture it. Huge battering rams to dash the walls, and firebrands thrown over the walls to set fire to the city, were the principal implements of warfare used by Nebuchadnezzar's army, while the men of Jerusalem defended their city by mounting catapults for throwing heavy stones down upon the besiegers, and made valiant use of bows and arrows. Nebuchadnezzar also employed such "sharpshooters." The men of Jerusalem pulled down many of their homes that they might have material to reinforce the walls in places where the rams were battering. The gates of the city were closed, so there was no possibility of getting food from the country round about. The siege continued eighteen months, and when there was no bread left in the city and starvation came as Nebuchadnezzar's ally. The brave defenders became weak, and the Chaldeans broke into the city on the north.

Then King Nebuchadnezzar and his officers held a council of war, and King Zedekiah took that time to get out of Jerusalem with his princes and his army. They sneaked out by night through a secret gate, but they had not gone far when they were overtaken by King Nebuchadnezzar's army, and made prisoners. Cruel was the fate of King Zedekiah; while he was looking on, they put out his son's eyes, and then they put out Zedekiah's eyes, and bound him with heavy chains, and took him to their far-away city of Babylon. They also brought away all of the people of Jerusalem—the good prophet Jeremiah with the rest; only the very old people and the lame and sick were left behind. King Nebuchadnezzar, when the journey was partly made, at Riblah, gave Jeremiah his choice whether he would be released, and return free to Jerusalem, or go on to Babylon. Jeremiah chose to go back to Jerusalem. This offer was made to Jeremiah, because he had many times told King Zedekiah and his people that they should not try to defend their city, but that they should yield to Nebuchadnezzar to save their lives, for God was no longer their helper because of their sins.

What a sad-looking place was Jerusalem when Jeremiah returned to it! The walls were broken down; God's beautiful temple was burned and stripped of all its golden treasures by the soldiers of Nebuchadnezzar. The beautiful palaces of the princes were burned down, and the whole city was in ruins.

Why God Disciplined Judah

For more than four hundred years God had been pleading through his prophets with the people of Judah to give up their idolatry, Sabbath breaking and drunkenness. He had placed a new covenant before them. He had even allowed some punishment to come upon them as a warning when, ten years before, King Nebuchadnezzar had fought against Jerusalem, and carried away a large number of prisoners (possibly ten thousand). But alas! they were too steeped in wrongdoing to be rescued from its folly and the dire consequences.

Sin a Boomerang

A boomerang is a weapon peculiar to the aboriginal people of Australia. It is a flat curved piece of wood, not over two feet in length, which when thrown by a practiced hand flies in a curve, and returns to the thrower. Sin is to be compared with a boomerang, because the sinner is bound to feel the evil consequences of his sinning, as did the people of Judah, when they grasped the idea of worshiping idols instead of the true God; in the end it cut them off from all they possessed. In Australia we saw "Boomerang Whisky" advertised on large posters. Possibly it was a native drink, but certainly never was whisky more appropriately named, because those who indulge in strong drink are sure to be injured by it, morally, physically, socially and eternally. All forms of sin have the boomerang quality. The liar is sure to find himself involved in uncomfortable conditions. The dishonest person loses his standing among his fellows, even if he does not come to prison, which he is likely to do. Sin and suffering go together always!

The Deceitfulness of Sin

It is illustrated by the "tsetse fly," which produces the sleeping sickness, or lethargy, of Central Africa. Scientists have carefully studied the process, and they tell us that a species of flies called Glossina palpalis is the instrument of infection. These flies feed on diseased animals in the jungles, and afterward they fly away and light upon human beings and bite them; but very little is usually thought of a flybite. The bite of the tsetse fly, however, introduces a poison into the system which leads to the obstruction of the blood vessels of the brain, so that the brain is no longer nourished, and the fatal sleeping sickness ensues, which caused the death of more than one hundred thousand persons alone in Uganda from 1901 to 1904.

The indifference of sinners to their lost condition is to be compared with the sleeping sickness. Those who are not aroused go down to eternal death. The church and the Sunday School are the agencies appointed to awaken those asleep in sin, who are either dreaming that they are all right, or that there is no punishment for sin. How full of meaning to all such is the story of the downfall of Judah!

No remedy has been found for the fatal bite of the tsetse fly, but it is different with those infected by sin, for "God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life" (John 3: 16).

Whereunto Sin May Grow

A boy walked into a painter's shop one day and saw a keg containing fifty pounds of white lead. Just beside it was a smaller keg filled with red paint. In each was a wooden paddle for stirring up the paint. The boy picked up the paddle in the smaller keg, and watched the thin red stream flowing from it. He heard a noise, and turned to see what it was, and a single drop of the red paint fell into the white lead. There it lay, one little red spot in the white mass. The boy was frightened and did not know what to do. If he had taken a stick, or the point of his pocket knife, he might have taken out the drop of red paint, but instead he tried to stir it in. At first a little red streak followed the paddle, and soon it disappeared, but some of the lead was stained a light pink. The boy kept on stirring until he could see no pink. It seemed to him as clean and pure as ever. But presently the painter came in, and the first thing he said was, "That keg of lead isn't very white. I wonder what is the matter with it." Then the boy tremblingly confessed what he had done. It is altogether a mistake to talk about "a small sin." We can never stir a lie or any wrong thing into our characters and be as pure as we were before. The only way to do is to get it out by confessing it to our Lord, and asking his forgiveness. It is not enough to tell some loved friend that we are sorry; that is only stirring it in. There was a first time when the people of Judah turned from the worship of the true God to the worship of idols. If they had only turned from it then, how different would have been all their history after that! We should not to-day be studying about the downfall of Jerusalem, and the sorrowful song of the captives in Babylon.

How crooked have been the paths of Judah as we have been studying about them for the last few weeks! Only once in a while, when they had a good king like Hezekiah and Josiah, did they make straight paths. And at last how crooked was the path that brought them to Babylon! There at last God had them where they were convinced that they must keep to the straight path, for they never again were guilty of worshiping idols. The Good Shepherd had broken their nation only to heal it again through his loving kindness.

* The International Sunday School Lesson for August 27, 1911. Judah Carried Captive to Babylon. Jer. 39. GOLDEN TEXT: "Be sure your sin will find you out." Num. 32: 23.

Called Higher

Seth Brown, long a reader of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, was called very suddenly to the Master's vineyard on March 7, 1911, at Largo, Fla.

Mrs. Mary C. Strickland, Strickland Hill, Pa., aged 89 years, was called home March 3, 1911. She was a reader of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD for many years.

Margaret Perie Anderson, aged 78 years, of Enterprise, Ontario, Can., passed peacefully away January 3, 1911. For many years a subscriber of this paper.

Mrs. Margaret Miller Hyson (83), many years a reader of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, passed away at her home near Stewartstown, Pa., November 25, 1910.

Mrs. S. J. Carpenter, of Erie, Pa., who has been a regular subscriber to this paper for many years, died last November at the age of nearly eighty-four years.

Mr. Thomas Keoun, of Springhill, La., was called to his reward January 16, 1911, aged 79. He had been a member of the Methodist Church for fifty years and a constant reader of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD for over thirty years.

Mrs. Harriet H. Parks, of Round Lake, N. Y., for many years a reader and subscriber to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, passed to her home above November 10, 1910, in her seventy-fifth year. She was a faithful Christian all her life.

DON'T PAY TWO PRICES
Save $18.00 to $22.00 on
HOOSIER RANGES AND HEATERS
Why not buy the best when you can buy them at such low, unheard-of Factory Prices? THIRTY DAYS FREE TRIAL BEFORE YOU BUY. Our new improvements absolutely surpass anything ever produced. SEND POSTAL TODAY FOR OUR FREE CATALOG AND PRICES.
Hoosier Steel
HOOSIER STOVE FACTORY 164 State St. Marion, Ind.

EVERYWOMAN SHOULD EARN $25 PER WEEK
introducing our very complete line of wool suitings wash fabrics, wool waistings, silks, lisles, petticoats, hosiery, etc. Dealing direct with the mills, our prices are low. Others make $10.00 to $20.00 per week—you can also. Samples, instructions, etc., sent free, charges prepaid. No money required. Experience unnecessary. Be first to apply for Agency. Standard Dress Goods Co., Desk 3, Standard Building Binghamton, N. Y.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD BOND BOOK
WE have received so many requests for copies of the financial articles which have been appearing in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, that we thought it wise to preserve them in pamphlet form. Any reader may secure a copy of this useful booklet without charge by forwarding 4 cents in stamps to cover postage. Address The Christian Herald, Dept. 96, Bible House, New York

BLYMYER CHURCH BELLS
UNLIKE OTHER BELLS SWEETER, MORE DURABLE, LOWER PRICE. OUR FREE CATALOGUE TELLS WHY.
Write to Cincinnati Bell Foundry Co., Cincinnati, O.

YOUR PHYSICIAN will tell you that Sani-Tissue
¶ It is the Best Toilet Paper because it is Soothing and Healing.
¶ It is composed of long vegetable fibre which gives it a cloth-like texture and its treatment with Canada balsam and other emollients makes it the only strictly sanitary, hygienic and soft paper.
¶ Each roll is carefully wrapped in parchment excluding germs and gritty dust.
3 Rolls in a Carton for 25c.
at your Dealer's, or if he does not have it, send us his name, and we will send you a sample pocket packet FREE.
SCOTT PAPER COMPANY
662 Glenwood Ave., Philadelphia
Makers of "Scot-Tissue" Towels, Sc Waldorf Toilet Paper, and other Hygienic Paper products.

DAISY FLY KILLER placed anywhere, attracts and kills all flies. Neat, clean, ornamental, convenient, cheap. Lasts all season. Made of metal, cannot spill or tip over, will not soil or injure anything. Guaranteed effective. Of all dealers or sent prepaid for 20 cents.
HAROLD SOMERS 160 DeKalb Ave. Brooklyn, N. Y.

ALL FOR 20¢
Three beautiful 12-inch LINEN Centerpieces, Holly, Eyelet and Daisy designs, 4 Doilies and our catalog showing over 600 designs of art embroidery goods and 70 different EMBROID'RY STITCHES. All delivered for 20 cts.
P. W. KELLER CO., Waterloo, Iowa

PATENTS That Protect and Pay
Advice and Books FREE.
Rates Reasonable. Highest References. Best Services.
WATSON E. COLEMAN, Patent Lawyer, WASHINGTON, D.C.

For Developing and Printing
You will save money by writing me for prices. Developing 10 cts. per roll. Prints, 3 cts. up. Send two films for FREE velox prints. H. A. CLARK, 3 Plaza, Brooklyn, N.Y.

YOU CAN WRITE A SHORT STORY
Beginners learn thoroughly under our perfect method many sell their stories before completing the course. We help those who want to sell their stories. Write for particulars. School of Short-Story Writing, Dept. 44. Page Bldg. Chicago

Agents Wanted For Security Products
High grade made-to-order Dress Skirts, Petticoats, Specialties. Liberal commission. Exclusive rights. Write to-day for catalogue. SECURITY CO., Dept. 5. Weedsport, N. Y.

An Opportunity for YOU
IF YOU want to make some extra money during your spare time, our Special Offer to the readers of The Christian Herald will be of great interest to you.
We are now establishing representatives to take care of all new and renewal subscriptions. The possibilities for money-making are really unlimited, and you can easily build up a clientele which you can renew every year at practically the original profit. It is pleasant, agreeable work, as you will come in contact with only the best people. No expense is necessary. Only spare time required. Let us send you our interesting offer. It is sure to appeal to you. Now is the time to act. If you can use more money, here's your chance to increase your income. Ask for our Subscription Money Plan. Write to-day.
The Christian Herald Agency Dept.
Bible House, New York

A Secure Investment Netting 4.80%

We own and offer at a price to net 4.80% a first mortgage underlying 4½% bond of a prosperous public utility company operating in one of the largest Cities in the United States. These bonds mature August 1st, 1921, more than twenty years before the company's franchises expire; and the proportionate earnings of the property covered by this issue are about five times the interest requirements. We will be glad to furnish upon request detailed information concerning this investment.

Ask for our Circular S 242

Guaranty Trust Company
of New York
28 Nassau Street

Capital and Surplus - - $23,000,000
Deposits - - - - 163,000,000

Do You Want Your Money to Earn 5%

To be amply secured at all times from possibility of loss—

And to be where you can get it on demand any time you may need it?

You can open an account with this Company with any amount from $25 to $5000. You can add to it at your convenience or withdraw as you wish.

It will earn 5 per cent. for every day that it is in our hands.

It will be amply protected by first mortgages on improved real estate and will be in the hands of an institution that in sixteen years has never been a day late in the payment of either principal or interest.

Ask for the booklet telling all about it.

The Calvert Mortgage & Deposit Co.
1046 Calvert Building, Baltimore, Md.

TYPEWRITERS ALL MAKES VISIBLE WRITERS
or otherwise
L. C. SMITHS, OLIVERS, UNDERWOODS, Etc.
½ to ⅓ M'F'RS PRICES
Shipped ANYWHERE for Free Trial, or RENTED allowing Rent to APPLY
PRICES $15.00 UP
First Class Machines Fresh from the Mfrs.—Write for Illustrated Catalog 71
Typewriter Emporium, (EST. 1892) 92-94 LAKE ST., CHICAGO

THE "BEST" LIGHT

Makes and burns its own gas. Costs 2c. per week. Gives 200 candle power light and casts no shadow. No dirt, grease, nor odor. Unequaled for Homes, Stores, Hotels, Churches, Public Halls, etc. Over 200 styles. Every lamp warranted. Agents wanted. Write for catalog.

THE BEST LIGHT CO.
3-70 E. 5th St., - Canton, O

Wells & Dickey Co., Mtg. No. 1792. This farm furnished a woman investor with a 6 per cent. investment for seven years.

Thousands of similar places have been the means of safe investment for our customers during the past 33 years.

We have on hand a half million dollars of mortgages ready for your investment. Our own money has been placed in these mortgages after a most careful investigation on our part. These mortgages vary in amount from $300 to $8,000, and many of them yield 6 per cent. net to the investor. All care of the loan is assumed by ourselves during the period it runs.

Send for Booklet A, which explains fully our methods of handling this business.

WELLS & DICKEY COMPANY
Established 1878. Capital and Surplus, $700,000.
SECURITY BANK BUILDING, MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.

Co-operative Capital

THERE may have been men who started out to accumulate money in order that they might be the better able to help their fellows in a philanthropic way; but as a rule the man who is out to win money for its own sake is never an altruist, and is apt to become indifferent to the injury he may inflict on others, so long as he succeeds, within his own limitations and without placing himself within the grip of the law. But even the selfish man, though he may be indifferent to ethics, or to the effect of his methods on others, cannot win in a safe way without doing good, though the latter may be the thing furthest from his thoughts.

The Benefit of Co-operation

If a man lived all alone, like Robinson Crusoe, his acts, good or bad, would react only on himself. When man Friday came into Robinson Crusoe's life, even though Friday was the slave and so took on himself most of the hard work, there were two to think of, and so two to benefit or to suffer by the acts of both or either. If we multiply the toiler and the employer indefinitely, adding to them the responsibilities of the wives and children that keep the community in perpetuity, we get a fair idea of society, as it exists at this time and as it must always exist, unless human nature changes beyond all our conceptions; and this, reasoning, as Patrick Henry has it, "from the past," we have no reason to expect.

Co-operation has long been the dream of the idealist, and of not a few hard-headed, practical men, who, in a limited way, have demonstrated its feasibility; but these good people have gone on striving without, as it appears, realizing that all governments, all great business enterprises, all education, all religious effort, indeed, are gradually crystallizing into a practical form of co-operation. What the philanthropists dream of and work for is gradually being brought about through the inevitable operation of natural laws.

Not only are the citizens of every State being brought into closer relationship by this premeditated or unpremeditated co-operation, but, with the spread of intelligence and the broadening of human interests, we find it bringing into closer business sympathy nations that formerly kept jealously aloof, and so increasing the feeling of brotherhood that is destined to eliminate war from the future of civilized nations.

It is not a missionary or a philanthropic purpose that urges communities and nations more and more to realize their interdependence on each other, for the motive is stronger than a generous impulse; it is a law of trade as irresistible and as inevitable as the rise and fall of the tide. This interdependence, that compels organization and trade co-operation, is the first great factor in modern business enterprise. The second factor, which is akin to the first, is Credit; that is, faith in the other fellow's promise to pay.

Your Part in the Work

The average man, engaged, and, it may be, absorbed, in his own particular life work, who takes time to look about him, and to consider the mighty enterprises being undertaken near by and afar off, will be apt to ask: "Where does all the money to do this work come from?" Realizing his own small deposit in savings or other kind of bank, and feeling that he is quite as well off as most of his hard-working neighbors, he may recall the great city banks, and the enormously rich men of whom he has read, and reason that the money for railroad, telegraph, foundry, factory, mine, steamship, and every other great work, comes from the capitalist. To a certain extent the average man is right. The capitalists, whether they be banks or individuals, as a rule supply the money for every important undertaking, but—and this is the nubbin, as they say out West, of the whole question—they do not go down into their own pockets for the essential cash; they use other people's money; your money, perhaps, if it is in a bank.

No; this is not taking advantage of a man who is not skilled in finance, who has not qualified in the high school of Thrift. It is helping him; it is bringing him into that great co-operative brotherhood—not meant to be philanthropic, mark you—that, as has just been said, is bringing communities and nations closer together.

Let us suppose that you are living in a community in which there is a savings bank and that you have, by dint of hard work and self-denial, saved $3,000, which may be the limit that your bank will take from one depositor, and on which you are getting as interest 4 per cent. per annum, or $120, a sum worth the consideration of a much richer man. There are people who think that in some mysterious way money grows in the vaults of a bank as chickens grow in an incubator; but even these good people could not be satisfied with such a conclusion if they stopped to think. The savings bank pays 4 per cent., but that is not the limit of its obligations. It must have a building, usually an expensive, fireproof one, with vaults and other appliances for the safety of money and securities. It must have a staff of salaried officials, all responsible, experienced, and, as a rule, worth much more than they get. To all this might be added insurance, stationery, and all other incidentals of a great business, a business conducted in accordance with law and under the careful supervision of skilful law officers; and the only income to meet all this expense is money that it stands ready to return on a proper demand, and on which, meanwhile, it is paying 4 per cent. per annum.

Another Phase of the Problem

Money is as much the blood necessity of trade, as the red current is of our own bodies. Stagnation means disease or death. The very word "currency," as applied to money, means something that runs or flows, like a courier or a river. Under law, the investments of the savings banks are limited to securities that are at once safe and convertible.

A good mortgage is always convertible; that is, you can always raise money on it, at a bank of loan and discount. A good railroad bond is equally safe and convertible, and so with other forms of desirable securities. We can see then that if the savings banks, and this will apply to other legitimate depositories, would have the cash to pay the interest pledged to depositors, and to meet the other obligations, they must take the money, other people's money, from their vaults and loan it out, under the conditions sanctioned by law, to other people with work to be paid for, and who are willing to pay for the secured loan a percentage that will meet all the savings bank's obligations and leave a small margin of profit, certainly no margin of loss.

This is a very interesting question, and at first it may seem a bit confused and complicated; but it will become clearer as we go on. Meanwhile, if you have some money in a savings or other bank, and you stand wondering at the great undertakings going on near at hand and far away, it may flash on you: "My money, and the money of men like me, is carrying on these great undertakings."

White Lead on the Farm Outbuildings

Every building on your farm that is built of good lumber deserves good paint. Thorough painting means lower repair bills, longer life for the building, and an attractive, prosperous appearance for your whole place.

"Dutch Boy Painter"
Pure White Lead

and pure linseed oil makes an ideal paint for farm buildings. It protects the surface perfectly and keeps out the rain and frost. Now is the time to protect your buildings against the fall rains and the winter weather.

Our Free Painting Helps

We will send you free on request color schemes and miscellaneous painting instructions that you will find of real, practical value. Ask for Helps 2566

NATIONAL LEAD CO.
New York Cleveland Chicago St. Louis
Boston Buffalo Cincinnati San Francisco
(John T. Lewis & Bros. Co., Philadelphia)
(National Lead and Oil Co., Pittsburgh)

GUARANTEED MORTGAGES
for
Large and Small Investors

You can now invest small sums in first-class mortgage bonds. You can have the same advantages which for hundreds of years capitalists alone have enjoyed. Whether you have $10 or $10,000 to invest, you can have the same security and the same returns. Send for our booklet on yielding 5% to 5½%, with the guarantee of this Company and the highest class New York and Suburban Real Estate back of them. The safest, surest, most profitable investment for earnings consistent with absolute security.

FIRST MORTGAGE TRUST BONDS

Under Supervision of New York Banking Department
Write for Booklet.

NEW YORK MORTGAGE CO.
Dept. D, 1475 Broadway, New York City

COMFORT and EASE FOR TENDER FEET

For every woman who will wear WHITCOMB'S "FLEXSOLE" SHOES. The most comfortable shoe for women ever made. Soft, flexible, perfect-fitting and handsome. Very durable. No tacks. No Lining to wrinkle and hold moisture. No seams.

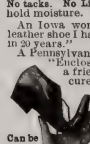
An Iowa woman writes: "First leather shoe I have been able to wear in 20 years."



A Pennsylvania woman writes: "Enclosed find order for a friend. My feet are cured entirely."

Perfect fit guaranteed or money refunded.

Prices: LACE, $3.00 } BUTTON, $3.25 } OXFORDS, $2.50 } Prepaid.
We refer to any bank anywhere.

Send outline of foot and give size usually worn.

Can be worn double

Eastern Shoe Co., 55 Broadway, Beverly, Mass.
Agents Wanted Everywhere.
Special Inducements.

SAVE HALF Your Paint Bills

By using INGERSOLL PAINT—proved best by 66 years' use. It will please you. Only paint endorsed by the "Grange." Made in all colors—for all purposes.

DELIVERED FREE,
From the Mill Direct to You at Factory Prices.
INGERSOLL PAINT BOOK—FREE

Tells all about Paint and Painting for Durability. How to avoid trouble and expense caused by paints fading, chalking and peeling. Valuable information free to you, with Sample Color Cards. Write me. DO IT NOW. I can save you money.

O. W. Ingersoll, 253 Plymouth St., Brooklyn, N. Y.

$1.00 TO INTRODUCE THE Celebrated "LENOX" Brands of Silk and Lisle Hosiery
For MEN and WOMEN
One Box Containing 6 Pairs

Guaranteed Fine Lisle Hose sent prepaid and insured on receipt of One Dollar (Regular Price, $2). Men's, choice black, tan, navy, gray; ladies, black, tan. State size.

Guarantee:—If holes in toe or heel within 6 months—New Ones Free. Obtainable only through our accredited agents or direct. We refer to Dun's, Bradstreet's or any Bank in New York City

LENOX SILK WORKS, Desk D, 5 West 31st St., New York City
Manufacturer to Wearer Products.

Field Representatives Wanted in Every County. Splendid income assured.

Young People's Societies

The Debt of the Strong*

THE two greatest temptations which menace the Christian youth of today, are, perhaps, the temptation to drink and the temptation to smoke. If everybody could be sure that he would never exceed the bounds of moderation, there would, perhaps, be little need of counseling resistance to these temptations. As matters stand, we find that moderation is exceptional and that the results of excess, especially in drinking, usually involve the most heart-sickening and revolting degradation and suffering.

This is so clearly shown in the case of intemperance that scarcely a word of demonstration is required. Willpower, self-respect, intellect, soul—all these fall before King Alcohol. He can turn a manly man into a cowering brute, and a loving husband and father into a wife-beater and murderer. In fact, the associations connected with beer, wine and whisky are so painful and so horrifying that one wonders how any sane man or woman can ever derive any pleasure whatever from tasting them.

But the vice of smoking is not so patent. Everybody admits that the habit is filthy, and that it is so expensive that few young men can afford to smoke; but a comparatively small number realize the insidious way in which nicotine poisons blood and tissue, making a man far less able than he otherwise would be, to resist disease; so that many a death attributed to typhoid fever or appendicitis is really due to tobacco. Still fewer realize that the children of smokers are much more liable to disease and likely to be defective than those of others.

Therefore, the upright and moral course for the strong Christian who wishes to "set a pace," which, and only which, can be safely followed by the weaker brother, is to refrain entirely from the use of alcoholic drinks and of tobacco.

As Mary Lyon used to say, "It is just as wrong to murder by degrees as to murder all at once." Anything which harms the health, especially anything which tends to hand down a strain of permanent deterioration for our race, is "murder by degrees," and it is just as wicked as any other kind of murder.

It must be, the Scriptures tell us, that we shall be tempted. It is only by resisting temptation that strength of character is gained, but one of earth's lofty spirits has encouraged us in our battle, in these words: "The Lord in the world, by means of combats and temptations, glorified our humanity—that is, made it divine; in like manner now, with a man individually, while he is in temptations, the Lord fights for him and conquers the evil spirits that are infesting him."

A few hours after the awful Iroquois Theatre fire in Chicago some years ago, a young girl was observed in a street car to be greatly agitated. A lady ventured to ask the cause of her unusual excitement. The girl said that she had escaped unhurt from the disaster, "but, oh," she cried, "I didn't save anybody else. I didn't even try to." She recognized to the full the opportunity which, in her panic and fear, she had lost.

The poet has reminded us of the great reward and influence of the man who does not meekly follow when brilliant leaders beckon downward, but who ventures to hold to the right at whatever cost. It is in the noble line,

He serves all that dares be true.

* Topic of the Epworth League for Sunday, August 27. TEXTS: Rom. 15:1; I. Cor. 8:13; 10:31-33.

Persia and Turkey*

THE enormous strength of the Mohammedan Church makes any effective missionary work among its adherents especially difficult. They are earnest and faithful in their religion, and are fully persuaded that it is the best in the world. Only by seeing the fruits of Christian living, its education, its order and cleanliness, and the beauty of the model Christian home, can their confidence in Islam be shaken.

The revolution in Turkey, largely due to the advantages which the Young Turks have enjoyed in Christian schools, has certainly helped along there the progress of Protestantism.

President Merrill of Aintab, Turkey, says that one very encouraging fact for our missionaries is the division going on among the Mohammedans. In one city, 500 Mohammedan men are said to be carefully studying the Scriptures. The education which has been disseminated throughout the land has stirred their minds and hearts. They want to know. They do not come out boldly for the new faith, but that they are inquiring into it is an encouraging sign.

It was especially a great question among the Turks, when our missionaries went over there eighty years ago, whether girls had the ability to learn so difficult an art as reading. Few men there knew how to read. They did not believe girls could ever do it; but in 1836 a school for girls was actually opened in Smyrna. Now there are 400 schools for girls and boys scattered over Asia Minor alone, and the thirst for knowledge there is pathetic. New schools are constantly being started, and the leaven they spread shows in the politics and the whole civilization of the country.

Dr. Talcott Williams, in an address at Brooklyn in 1908, said: "Many causes have combined to turn the hearts of the men of Turkey; but if we ask ourselves what is the governing factor which has brought about the first of the world's bloodless revolutions, we do ill if we forget that for eighty years the American missionaries have been laying the foundations and preaching the doctrines which make free government possible."

"Every student leaving these American schools," says W. E. Curtis, "has carried the germ of progress to his sleeping town."

But the greatest improvement visible from the missionaries' work in both Turkey and Persia is in the uplift of woman. Mrs. Labaree says that at a recent exhibition at the close of the school year at Fiske Seminary at Oroomiah, many mothers were present to hear their daughters recite and sing. These mothers were overheard saying to each other: "We are like animals, but just think what our daughters are going to be!"

The position of girls in Persia is still almost as low as in China and India, in spite of these few exceptions. Mothers weep when girls are born to them. Knowing how cruelly wives are treated, these mothers begin early to accustom their daughters to hard work and beating. "For trifling mistakes and misdemeanors which would never be noticed in a boy, a girl is scolded and whipped," says Annie Van Sommer. "At meal-times she takes the last place, and eats what is left after the rest are through. When on holidays the boys get presents, the girls go away empty-handed. Even for a boy's dress more is spent than for a girl's."

The crowning insult to women in all Mohammedan countries is the ease with which their husbands may divorce them, and their utter helplessness under such brutality.

Surely Christ's Gospel is sorely needed among the Moslem nations.

* Christian Endeavor Topic for Sunday, August 27. TEXT: Acts 4:13-31.

Protect

Your Medicine, Bath, and Toilet Accessories—and beautify your bathroom with this snow white enameled All Steel Cabinet at about

One-Half Usual Cost

Enameled inside and out, dust, germ and vermin-proof. Never warps, shrinks nor swells. Bevel plate mirror door, adjustable shelves. Nickeled bronze hinges and handle. Send postal for circular of

HESS MEDICINE STEEL SANITARY CABINET LOCKER

Cheaper than wood, easily cleaned; can be hung or sunk into wall of bathroom or any room in the house. Made in four styles and four sizes. Sent on approval anywhere in United States. Write for prices and illustrated description folder.

HESS, 959 Tacoma Building, Chicago
Makers, also of Steel Clothing Lockers

Let Your Idle Money Safely Earn 5%

ASSETS of $2,300,000, conservative management, judicious investment of our funds, following the stringent regulations of the New York State Banking Laws, assure more than ordinary protection to our patrons, upon whose deposits we are paying 5% per annum. This is compounded semi-annually or remitted by check, quarterly or semi-annually, as preferred. Deposits are received personally or by mail, and funds may be withdrawn whenever desired, upon short notice. We have been established eighteen years and have patrons in every quarter of the world.

INDUSTRIAL SAVINGS & LOAN CO. NEW YORK CITY

Write for particulars. Probably we can refer you to some one in your locality.

Industrial Savings & Loan Co.
2 Times Bldg., B'way & 42d St., New York

ZOBO THE MUSICAL WONDER. YOU CAN PLAY IT Without Learning. Sing into the mouthpiece, Zobo does the rest. For Home, Church and Sunday School Entertainments. Full information FREE on request.
STRAUSS MFG. CO., 355 Broadway, Dept. 19, New York

CHRISTIAN HERALD
Pilgrimage to the Holy Land including points in Palestine, Syria, Egypt, Dead Sea, The Jordan, Jerusalem, Jericho, Jaffa and other places connected with the life and death of our Lord.

White Star Liner Cretic leaves New York September 20, stopping en route in Italy, Greece, Turkey, Asia Minor, etc., returns Nov. 21.

For further information regarding this opportunity to visit scenes of events described in the Bible, address at once,

Christian Herald Pilgrimage Bureau
Bible House, New York City

10 DAYS FREE TRIAL

We ship on approval without a cent deposit, freight prepaid. DON'T PAY A CENT if you are not satisfied after using the bicycle 10 days.

DO NOT BUY a bicycle or a pair of tires from anyone at any price until you receive our latest art catalogs illustrating every kind of bicycle, and have learned our unheard of prices and marvelous new offers.

ONE CENT is all it will cost you to write a postal and everything will be sent you free postpaid by return mail. You will get much valuable information. Do not wait, write it now

TIRES, Coaster-Brake rear wheels, lamps, sundries at half usual prices.

Mead Cycle Co. Dept. L 71 Chicago

I TRUST YOU TEN DAYS. SEND NO MONEY.

$2 Hair Switch Sent on Approval. Choice of Natural wavy or straight hair. Send a lock of your hair, and we will mail a 22 inch short stem fine human hair switch to match. If you find it a big bargain remit $2 in ten days, or sell 3 and GET YOUR SWITCH FREE. Extra shades a little more. Inclose 6c postage.

Free beauty book showing latest style of hair dressing—also high grade switches, pompadours, wigs, puffs, etc. Women wanted to sell our hair goods. ANNA AYERS,
Dep. A158 22 Quincy Street, Chicago

10 CENTS A DAY buys the Pittsburgh Visible Typewriter. Made in our own factory at Kittanning, Pa. $65 now—later the price will be $100. The best typewriter in the world, far excels any $100 machine made. Entire line visible. Back spacer, tabulator, two color ribbon, universal keyboard, etc. Agents wanted everywhere. One Pittsburgh Visible Machine FREE for a very small service. No selling necessary.

To Get One FREE and to learn of our easy terms and full particulars regarding this unprecedented offer, say to us in a letter, "Mail your FREE OFFER."

THE PITTSBURGH VISIBLE TYPEWRITER COMPANY
Dept. 30, Union Bank Building. Established 20 Years. PITTSBURGH, PA.

"THOU FOOL!"

And Eleven Other Remarkable Sermons Never Before Published

By the late Evangelist DWIGHT L. MOODY

THESE Twelve Great Sermons are replete with the spiritual fire and vigor of Moody in the prime of his evangelistic ministry. To pastors, evangelists, Sunday School teachers, Christian workers, Bible students, and lovers of the Word everywhere, they will be found invaluable.

These sermons were discovered recently by Mr. Moody's old stenographer, the Rev. W. D. Bridge, in long-forgotten note-books, and their genuineness is vouched for by Mr. Moody's family.

Rev. F. B. Meyer called Moody the "Uncrowned King of Preachers; rugged, terse, full of mother-wit, direct and sharp as a two-edged sword." The secret of Moody's power is revealed in these twelve wonderful sermons, which, taken together, form a great Spiritual Drama, each sermon being an Act disclosing, step by step, the tremendous power of the evangelist in dealing with sinners, the climax of the whole being a mighty Revival, which sweeps thousands into the Kingdom.

These hitherto unknown Sermons are now published by the CHRISTIAN HERALD and offered on terms easily within the reach of all. They make a compact volume of 240 pages, printed on good paper in a clear, legible type, easily read. The Book is bound in semi-flexible covers, with gold stamp on front.

How to Obtain These Sermons—FREE!

You may obtain this volume FREE, and have in your house a means of constant inspiration, merely by pointing out the good qualities of the CHRISTIAN HERALD to your friends, and having four of them sign one each of the coupons which appeared in last week's issue of the CHRISTIAN HERALD. Send us four of these coupons, each good for a four-months new subscription, when accompanied by twenty-five cents each, and we will send you this remarkable volume without charging you one cent. Address,

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK

"How many times a day do you chew SPEARMINT?"

"Once! I start mornings and stop evenings!"
"I could do it all night if I wanted to, 'cause the flavor lasts longer'n I can chew!"

This helpful tid-bit purifies breath immediately.
Whitens teeth, too.

It's well for you to chew SPEARMINT

Look for the spear The flavor lasts

Christian Herald

COPYRIGHT, 1911, BY THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

$1.50 A YEAR — 5c. A COPY
PUBLISHED 52 TIMES A YEAR

NEW YORK, AUGUST 23, 1911

VOLUME 34 — NUMBER 34
OFFICES: BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK

Questions and Answers

W. J. T., Farris, Wash. Paul speaks of the "third heaven," thus implying a first and second. What in your opinion are we to understand by this?

The term "third" here marked a stage or degree in the apostle's spiritual raptures and in his revelations. "Caught up" in the original implies a trance or ecstasy. He is, of course, relating his own experience. According to the commentators, the first heaven or stage of spiritual exaltation is that of the clouds, the air; the second, that of the stars, the sky; the third is above both, where God's glory continually shines (see Eph. 4: 10).

J. A. D., Beaver Falls, Pa. In answering the question asked by Mrs. E. G. D., Yarmouth, Me., about the necessity of the rod for any one in nearing the shadow of death (Ps. 23: 4) you accept the common interpretation, viz.: That "walking" means the death of the one who is walking. Walking in the valley and shadow of death rather means living in it. I myself have been walking in this valley for almost eighty years, and I find all that is said in the subsequent verses to the end is literally true, as far as I have gone. Thy rod (shebet, a sceptre) and thy staff (misheneth, a support) they comfort me, as I travel on in the valley. Verse 5: God covers a table with food for me among the enemies I meet in this life. He makes me a king, anointing my head with oil, and my cup of blessings runs over. Verse 6, he says, "Goodness and mercy shall follow me all the days of my life." He was not dead yet, and did not meet death until he came to the end of the walk, and then "I will dwell in the house of Jehovah forever." And this is true of every real Christian.

M. G. D., Brooklyn (referring to a recent paragraph in THE MAIL-BAG on Job 19: 26), writes: "I think that, in this one passage at least, the King James translation is better. Job says (in verse 25), 'My Redeemer liveth, and he shall stand at the latter day upon the earth.' I think that the meaning is very clear, viz.: that, under divine inspiration, he referred to resurrection, when he should meet Christ. The words 'my Redeemer,' 'latter day,' and 'upon the earth,' I think make this clear enough. Ps. 17: 15 conveys the same idea: 'I will behold thy face in righteousness; I shall be satisfied when I awake with thy likeness.' See also Isa. 26: 19: 'Thy dead shall live,' 'my dead bodies shall rise.' I. Cor. 15: 52: 'The dead shall be raised,' etc. I submit this with no spirit of controversy, but only with a desire for truth, regardless of theology, theory and tradition.

As we regard the matter, it is not a question of preference, but of accurate translation. The revisers in correcting the passage in question, have the support of the best modern theological scholarship. Besides, it harmonizes with I. Cor. 15: 44, 50, etc.

F. C., Greenup, Ill. 1. Where does Emerson use the quotation: "If a man can write a better book, preach a better sermon, or make a better mouse-trap than his neighbor, though he build his house in the wilderness, the world will make a beaten path to his door"? 2. I am a young man extremely hard of hearing. I have tried specialists and the very latest electrical devices. I have prayed fervently and asked for a restoration of my hearing.

1. The quotation is not to be found in Emerson. 2. There are appliances which are recommended as being very serviceable for improving defective hearing. Why not try these and pray that the trial may succeed?

J. F., Taft, Fla. As regards Turkey's treatment of Christians, is it not founded upon our faith in what God said to Abraham and Hagar: "He shall dwell in the presence of his brethren"? Can we prevent that, after trying so often and always having failed?

We do not regard the quotation as applicable in the least. Turkey's persistent persecution of her Christian subjects has been rendered possible solely by the indifference of the so-called Christian Powers, each of which, for its own political purposes, has chosen to protect Turkey rather than control it or visit its infamies with proper punishment. Turkey has at different times enjoyed such protection from almost every important Power in Europe and it has always been the Turkish policy to "play off" one Christian Power against another, and thus secure immunity for itself. The real union of Christian Europe would mean the political disruption of the Mohammedan power on that continent.

B. S., Dayton, O. Have missionary contributions to the various denominational societies fallen off during the past year, or have they reached the usual standard?

There is every year an attempt made to create the impression of a falling off; but the statistics do not bear this out. In the Presbyterian, Methodist, Congregational, United Brethren, Baptist, Reformed Church, Dutch Reformed and Protestant Episcopal churches increases are reported varying from 20 to 25 and even 30 per cent. over the preceding year. The Methodist increase in foreign missionary offerings was $48,800; Congregational, $57,000; Dutch Reformed, $20,000; P. E., $30,000. The greatest increase of all was reported by the Layman's Missionary Movement, being $219,000.

Mrs. E. McC., Hooperstown, Ill. Please reconcile the account of Herod's death in Matt. 3, and of Herod's beheading John in Mark 9.

Herod was the name of several royal persons mentioned in Scripture. It was a family name. The one mentioned in Matt. 2: 1-22 was known as Herod the Great and was the son of Antipater. Herod Antipas, his son, succeeded him as tetrarch of Galilee. It was this Herod by whose order John was beheaded.

Four Months at Half Price!

DEAR FRIEND:

We have received thousands of coupons on account of our Four Months at Half Price subscription offer, which appeared in The Christian Herald two weeks ago. A great many of our friends have sent in six coupons, all properly signed and accompanied by 25 cents each. Doubtless they are striving to be among those who will earn, in addition to the most liberal rewards, the charming hand water-colored picture "Dreamland," of which we have but a limited number.

Were you among these, who are striving nobly to help us extend the influence of The Christian Herald, so that it may become the most potent factor in the progress of religion on earth? As we have said, the membership of The Christian Herald Family can be doubled, trebled, if that Family as a whole desire it and work shoulder to shoulder for the common cause. Secular publications have achieved the million mark, and so can we.

Think what it would mean! Think of being one of this great Army for the glory of God! Of course you want to be, and of course you will help by getting your friends to sign the coupons for a four months' trial subscription. If you get your friends to take The Christian Herald for four months, we know they will want to become permanent members of The Christian Herald Family. Be sure to read the insert and use the coupons.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD.

B. B. H. How did the throwing of old shoes, etc., at weddings originate?

In Scripture, the receiving of a shoe was symbolic of dominion or authority over the receiver, and giving it back was an indication that such authority was denied or rejected (see Ruth 4: 7, 8). Throwing old shoes after wedded couples is an ancient superstitious custom, which was believed to propitiate success. It is used nowadays simply to indicate good wishes. Rice is the emblem of fertility.

E. S., Rock Glen, Pa. 1. What is the meaning of Rev. 20: 8? 2. Also Rev. 20: 10.

1. Although there have been various interpretations of Gog and Magog, the words are generally understood to be symbolical expressions for the heathen nations of Asia and probably for the Scythians particularly. Some ancient writers tell how some of the Caucasus people call their mountains Gog and their highest peaks Magog. Another interpretation is that Gog meant the heathen Goths who invaded Rome in the fifth century A.D.; but the Gog of Revelation is probably most widely accepted as symbolizing Antichrist or some future barbarian power that is to arise against Christianity. 2. It would require more space than we have at command to review even briefly the opinions of the commentators concerning the probable identity of "the beast and the false prophet." One of the ablest writes, "I think it not unlikely that the false prophet will be the successor of the spiritual pretensions of the Papacy and the beast in its last form will be fully revealed Antichrist."

Veritas, New York City. The writer was much interested in the article on "Thrift" in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD of July 19, and fully indorses the advice given as to life insurance. In one of the daily papers of the past week the statement was made that "A father's sacrifice makes children selfish." Having known of one with such experience, the advice is earnestly given to all who contemplate insuring their lives by the endowment plan, to have the amount of the insurance made payable to their estates, or to themselves if living when the policy matures. A loving husband and father, when the elder of his two living children was an infant, insured his life by an endowment policy for three thousand dollars, payable to his wife in fifteen years. For seven and a half years, more than fifty-three dollars was paid as premium each three months; but being then unable to continue the payments, a paid-up policy was taken for half the amount. At the expiration of the fifteen years a check for more than $1,700 was given to the wife; but instead of being used for the benefit of the family as contemplated, it was all used for her own benefit in less than a year. When each child was one year old, a twenty-year endowment policy for $1,000 was taken for the benefit of each; and when they reached the age of twenty-one a little less than $1,100 was given to one, and a little more to the other. To make such payments, the father was obliged to deprive himself of many needed comforts, and to use economy in household expenses. The money that each had when becoming of age, is believed to have been an injury to them, enabling them to acquire extravagant habits, and preventing them from being thrifty and saving. A wise man will keep the control of his property in his own power.

Our correspondent recites a case which turned out unsatisfactorily, as even the most careful plans sometimes do. We publish his letter as it may furnish a useful hint to other parents who are providing for the future welfare of their families. It is generally admitted that money received without any adequate effort on the part of the recipient, is not valued as would have been the case if it had been duly earned. This is equally true of both young and old.

A reader sends this beautiful verse to THE MAIL-BAG, which some may love to memorize:

"Uncomplaining, though with care grown hoary,
I desire to wear no crown of glory,
Where my Saviour wore a crown of thorn.
Not in paths of roses would I dally,
Where my Saviour trod the gloomy valley,
When He suffered bitter pain and scorn."

Amelia F., Syracuse, N. Y. If theatrical reform be desirable, as I believe it is, why does not the press (daily and weekly) unite in compelling such a reform?

We believe the press, if so minded, could accomplish this. Those who have any doubt concerning the need of a moral purification among the theatres would do well to read the illuminating report on the subject issued by the Russell Sage Foundation, which shows that the 497 theatres in greater New York alone have an average weekly attendance of 1,700,000 persons of whom 1,000,000 go to theatres of the cheapest class. Of the burlesque and vaudeville places, it is declared in the report that only five per cent. are meritorious, the rest being classed as stupid, crude, vulgar, objectionable. Yet it is not so much against these as against the pretentious, high-priced theatres that the heaviest indictment of immorality lies.

Miscellaneous

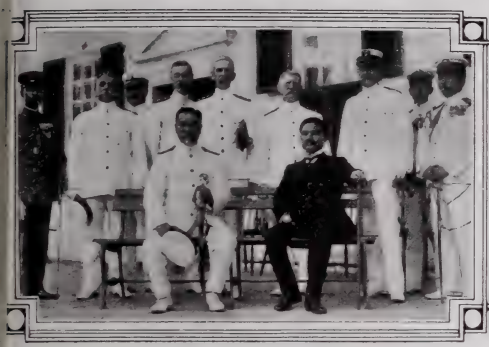
Reader, Madelia, Minn. It is a punishable offense to remove another person's letters from the post office, or to open a letter belonging to another.

G. P. M. Martinsburg, W. Va. Your figures are clearly wrong. The total estimated population of the globe is only 1,431,782,199. According to the best estimates, there are at the present time 477,080,108 Christians.

Old Subscriber, Seattle, Wash. The Mormons are pledged to obey the law which forbids polygamy. There is no prohibition possible of Mormon doctrine under our Constitution, which guarantees religious liberty and freedom of worship.

Mrs. M. A. C., Austin, Tex. If we nurse sin in our hearts, knowingly, we grieve the Holy Spirit, which cannot dwell in the same temple (or body) that is given over to the world. "If any one have not the Spirit of Christ, he is none of his."

L. P. L., Elizabeth, N. J. There is no law which compels you to formally adopt the name of your stepfather. The fact that you have never been known by any other name than the one you have used for so long a time, is sufficient to entitle you to continue to use it as your own.



R. W. 1. The passage in Job 38: 6 has no reference to the shape of the earth. The whole chapter is replete with imagery and metaphor, to interpret which literally would be misleading. See also Job 22: 14; Isa. 40: 22, etc. These also are not intended to be taken as literal descriptions, but as the language of poetry and metaphor. 2. The other passage to which you refer is not in the Bible.

NEW YORK, AUGUST 23, 1911

THE · CHRISTIAN · HERALD

A WEEKLY ILLUSTRATED NEWSPAPER FOR THE HOME

The Admiral and His Escort at Mount Vernon

Togo on the Mayflower

Inspecting the Naval Cadets at Annapolis

Copyright by G.V.Buck, Washington, D.C.

Copyright by G.V.Buck, Washington, D.C.

ADMIRAL TOGO'S AMERICAN HOLIDAY

ADMIRAL COUNT TOGO has more admirers in America than any other Japanese who ever lived. A few years ago nearly every pet dog born was immediately named either Teddy or Togo. Perhaps that isn't the highest possible honor which could be conferred, but it is a sure sign of popularity. Now the mighty little man from the land of cherry blossoms and warriors is enjoying a holiday. He is making a trip round the world. Last month he was in England, where he saw the splendors of the coronation. During the past two weeks he has been here as the invited guest of the United States Government. Late Thursday night, August 3, the Lusitania arrived at quarantine with Uncle Sam's distinguished guest. The reception committee, on a government boat, met the Lusitania and took Admiral Count Togo at once to a special suite of rooms reserved for him by the government at the Knickerbocker Hotel. Then the tables were turned on the favorite war god of Japan. When the American battleship fleet visited Tokio on its cruise around the world, Admiral Togo acted as host, and he entertained right royally. As soon as he reached New York on his own cruise around the world, he found himself in the hands of a hearty and generous host, ready to return his hospitality in good measure, pressed down and running over. When Admiral Togo received a visit of welcome from the Mayor of New York at his hotel and then visited him at the City Hall, thousands of enthusiastic citizens crowded the streets and cheered him. His eyes gleamed with pleasure as he lifted his white naval cap repeatedly and bowed his thanks. There was, perhaps, in his mind a remembrance of the tumultuous ovations of his own countrymen when he returned to Japan in triumph after his great naval battle with the ill-fated Russian fleet. It was then, during an outpouring of popular enthusiasm such as the island empire had never before witnessed, that Togo was made a Count and head of the naval staff by imperial decree. The greeting he has now received from Americans bore quite a different significance for the famous warrior and his country. It is asserted that his reception has been one of the most brilliant ever given to a foreign visitor and that it is an indication of the friendship of the United States for Japan. So strongly has the Japanese Government been impressed with the cordiality of Togo's reception that the Emperor Mutsuhito, himself, sent a cablegram of thanks and appreciation to President Taft after Admiral Togo had been here only a week.

Admiral Count Togo Visits Washington's Tomb at Mount Vernon

The details of all the banquets, receptions, entertainments, sight-seeing trips, flowers and other attentions given Admiral Togo do not make up the most interesting features of this interesting visit of a very interesting visitor. He dined with the President in the White House, and with the Japanese Ambassador at the New Willard Hotel in Washington. He was the lion of the hour at numerous stag affairs. He visited the navy yards, the military academy at West Point, the Metropolitan Museum of Art, Niagara Falls, and many other places of note in Washington, New York, Baltimore, Philadelphia, Boston and Buffalo.

Perhaps the feature of his round of sight-seeing most to be dwelt upon was his visit to the home and the tomb of Washington at Mount Vernon. Many illustrious foreigners have thus paid tribute to the memory of the Father of Our Country. Never before had one of the greatest fighters of Japan entered this sacred place to meet, in spirit, the great Washington. Reverently and with a brief invocation in Japanese, Admiral Count Togo placed a wreath of roses on the tomb of Washington. In the mansion where the nation's first President lived and died, Admiral Togo wrote his autograph in the guest book, bowed and saluted the bed where the great man died, paused with sudden interest before his sword and carefully read the inscription, then went silently out.

No doubt the Japanese Admiral saw with his mind as well as with his eyes all the wonders of the great metropolis and the great nation which came within his view. No doubt he studied the things and the people of America with eager interest. Let us look at him personally for a moment and see what kind of a man he is. Hundreds of American cameras have been aimed at him. He has met their broadside good naturedly. The photographs all show a picture of a dapper little man, not much more than five feet tall, kindly and modest looking, dressed in plain black suit, derby hat, and patent leather shoes. He is politeness itself, but very retiring and reticent. Above all else, in the old code after which his boyhood schooling was conducted, he was taught absolute self

Continued on page 826

The American Pulpit

A SERMON BY

Rev. Henry N. Coudon, D.D.*

A PEOPLE WITHOUT VISION

TEXT: Prov. 29:18—"Where there is no vision the people perish."

WE ARE living in the midst of the most profound mysteries. The universe which surrounds us is a mystery. Life is a mystery. Death is shrouded in mystery, and back of all these is the most profound mystery—the Being whom we call God. But let us not be dismayed, for in the very nature of the case these things must needs be. Our eyes are holden; it needs the divine touch of heaven to open them to the glory round about us. We owe an everlasting debt of gratitude to the great men, the pure men, the noble men who have climbed the heights, dreamed dreams, seen visions and given them to the world. The visions of the past illumine the present for our benefit, and the visions of the now will throw their light far out into the future to guide coming generations.

Our Debt to Science

We owe a debt therefore of gratitude to the patient men, the toiling men of science for what they have thrown upon the great world of matter about us. Through the laws of chemistry they have dissolved, as it were, the earth; separated it into its component parts; discovered the properties of which it is made. Through the study of geology they have gone down into the very bowels of the earth, counted them as the forester goes out in the forest and counts the rings on yonder mighty oak and tells us how long it has been in knitting those fibres of oak which stand the storms of the winter. So they have told us how little by little this great old earth of ours has been unfolded, and approximately they have told us its age. And so the men who keep the midnight vigil, sweeping the heavens with the telescope; gazing out upon star after star they have told us what it is; the invisible forces that hold this star or that star on its course. And the point I wish to call your attention to here is this, That the star you behold that sweeps on its course unfailingly is not the substance, it is only the form of those stupendous laws which are ever going out from God that keep them to their courses.

But what of man? Man! Oh, what a wonderful being! All the stars of yonder heaven are not comparable to one man. But what is life? We say the tree is known by its fruits. That is true; but those silent, invisible, mysterious forces working in and through the tree to produce the result are infinitely greater than the fruit itself. So we are taught to judge man by his achievements; but that silent, invisible, mysterious something working in and through man is infinitely greater than anything that any man ever thinks or does. Says Emerson: "The philosophy of 6,000 years has not searched the chambers and magazines of the soul in its experiments. There has always been in the last analysis a residuum it could not dissolve." So there is something infinitely greater in man than anything he says or does; something final; something akin to the eternal Father. Says Emerson again: "A man is the façade of a temple wherein all wisdom and all good abide." What we commonly call man—the eating, drinking, planning, counting man—does not, as we know him, represent himself, but misrepresents himself; him we do not respect, but the soul whose organ he is, would he let it appear in his acts, would make our knees bend. When it breathes through his intellect it is genius; when it breathes through his will it is virtue; when it flows through his affections it is love.

Seeing God in His Works

Can we know God? Just as we know the human soul so we may know God. What I have said of the soul is equally applicable to God. But, first—this soul that we have been speaking of—can it die? Nature is full of tricks; nature is wonderfully deceptive. When the body grows cold, the limbs become rigid; when the eyes which looked out love upon you are closed; when the lips which spoke music to your soul are hushed; when the hand that grasped yours with warm sympathy, tenderness, love, is cold, you say, "That is death; that is death." Here we stand, my friends, upon the summit of a lofty mountain. All around us is darkness. We look out toward the east and by and by we see a faint motion, a faint glimmering, as it were, of light. By and by a shaft of light shoots up, and then another, until the whole horizon is painted with beauty and grandeur; and by and by, as we stand there, the sun appears in all its regal splendor, filling the earth with glory, and we say, "Oh what a magnificent sunrise!" That is a mistake; the sun did not rise. That is a delusion of nature; we have all the time been going round and round on this dear old earth until we have been brought within the influence of the sun. Again, we stand here and we say, "Oh what a magnificent red rose! Look at it. How beautiful is the red rose!"

The fact is, my friends, the rose is anything else but red. By a trick of nature all the colors are absorbed in that rose but the red, and that is thrown back upon the retina of the eye and paints red upon the brain. That is a delusion. So when you look down upon your prostrate friend and the eyes open no more, the lips speak no more—the will, the light, the love, the sympathy—you say, "All gone; he is dead." Not a bit of it. Man was born for a higher destiny than that of earth. There is a realm where the rainbow will never fade; where the stars will be spread out before us like the islands that slumber on the ocean, and where bright forms of human beauty, which here passed before us like visions, shall live, shall stay in our presence forever. So, as I said a moment ago, as we know the soul so we know God, for he is a perpetual revelation. Not that we can comprehend God—that were impossible, for God is infinite, we are finite; God is absolute, we relative; God is all-inclusive, we integral parts of a stupendous whole. But we know God as we know man, through his works. You go out on a starry night and look up into the glorious heavens; how much beauty, how much grandeur, how much glory is displayed there. "The heavens declare the glory of God, and the firmament showeth his handiwork. Day unto day uttereth speech, and night unto night showeth knowledge. There is no speech nor language: their line is gone out through all the earth, and their words to the end of the world."

How God Speaks to His Children

It is a great thing to have the vision of the truth. It was great gain to Paul when he saw the Christ, for whom he had suffered "the loss of all things." It is the man who in this world can point to the pierced hand and to the wounded side that is going to be the magnet for him. If you only let your hearts lean on him how he will comfort you! how he will strengthen you! It is one thing to be orthodox in the head; it is another thing to be orthodox in the heart. It is one thing to accept the truth through the intellect, but it is another thing to let it percolate through the heart.

A short time ago, I sat in the great Symphony Hall in Boston, and a magnificent orchestra was giving to the public those pastoral symphonies of Beethoven. As I sat there and looked out upon the audience, through others' eyes, I found that every nation on earth was represented there, and I found the Frenchman, the German, the Jew, the Italian, whatever he might be, was receiving into his heart those magnificent tones. That great, swelling harmony which touched the soul and spoke to every human being was the heavens declaring "the glory of God," not only to you and me, but to all his children all over the earth; for, since music is the universal language through which God speaks to his children, so is the beauty, so is the magnificence that we see around us but the universal language of God.

Then we know God in all his fulness and sweetness in the Lord Jesus Christ, who is the revelation of God's heart. What was the burden of his Gospel? What, after all, is he, that all things else that Christ spake cluster about? It is this—Fatherhood, Brotherhood. In this twentieth century, thank God, it is Brotherhood that is sweeping the world—Fatherhood; Brotherhood. And so Christ brought to the world a Father—a loving, tender Father. "Oh, yes," you say, "God is a King." Yes, but he is a Father-King. You say, God is a Judge; yes, but he is a Father-Judge, and he loves us with all the love that you can think of.

Now I want to recite you a poem which expresses all I have tried to tell you:

Sweet the exultance of song,
But the strain that precedes it is sweeter
And never was poem yet writ
But the meaning outmastered the meter.

Never a daisy that grows
But a mystery guideth the growing:
Never a river that flows
But a majesty scepters the flowing.

Great are the symbols of being,
But that which is symboled is greater;
Vast the Creation, and boundless,
But vaster the mighty Creator.

Back of the song broods the silence,
Back of the gift stands the giving:
Back of the hand that receives
Is the sensitive nerve of receiving.

Space is as nothing to spirit;
The deed is outdone by the doing;
Warm is the heart of the wooer,
But warmer the heart of the wooing.

God's Infinite Plan

This is the vision I leave with you: The whole human family is involved in a stupendous and infinite plan, and each member of the family is a potent factor in its consummation. We may hasten or we may retard its progress. We are free moral agents—a stupendous responsibility, but one which cannot be shirked; we must receive it; how can we help it? What Tennyson says will perhaps bring to your minds the thought which I desire to impress upon your hearts:

God, which ever lives and loves,
One God, one law, one element,
And one far-off divine event,
To which the whole creation moves.

How sweet to be thus en rapport with God; to be permitted to work together with him! No matter what our calling is in this life; no matter what our circumstances; we are all the children of his care and included in his great plan of salvation.

Oh, my friends, it is not what we get out of the world but what we put into the world that counts in this life. The man that digs a ditch by the grace of God is doing more toward helping the cause of humanity than the man who amasses millions irrespective of who goes down to defeat because of his plan. Let us then give our minds, our hearts, our souls to God. We have a magnificent republic, and I want to warn you here in my parting word that the truth of our text has been illustrated over and over again—"Where there is no vision the people perish." God grant that this magnificent country of ours may not be overwhelmed by luxury and greed, but may the minds and hearts of men be fixed upon the living God who thus far has guided through all its vicissitudes and made it strong and great.

But let me tell you right here: We are probably the wealthiest nation on all the face of the earth but that does not constitute our greatness; we perhaps are as educated a people as there is on the face of this earth, but that does not constitute our greatness. Lord Wellington once said: "Educate men without religion and you do but make them clever devils." Education is not our greatness. We have a splendid past, a splendid literature, but that does not constitute our greatness. What does constitute our greatness? An overwhelming faith in God our Father, and in Jesus Christ his only Son—that we may give our minds and hearts and souls to him, and be led on and on to glory.

* Chaplain, House of Representatives. This sermon was preached at the Ocean Grove Auditorium, Sunday, July 9, 1911.

THE DOVE OF PROMISE

The Chantey of the Air-Ship

I

OD hath sent the peaceful pruninghook and banished every sword; hath said and he will do it—he will keep his kingly word.
ar the songs of mighty armies in melodious accord,
As they go marching on.

II

e soldiers on the battlefield gaze upward with a shout,
en they see the white-winged vision that shall turn the world about.
ne the bloodshed and the fighting; gone the agony and rout,
As it goes flying on.

III

ow the ships upon the ocean fear no longer any foe,
r above them sails a helper, where the shore-less currents flow.
shall draw the nations closer in God's brotherhood below,
While Peace comes marching on.

IV ow shall he who plants a vineyard pluck the harvest with delight, nd the fig-tree wave its banners, and the almond blossom white.

ow no longer battle's horrors; now no longer war's affright,
For Love is marching on.

V

nd the snowy lilies glimmer where the blood-red waters whirled;
nd the singing reapers gather where war's thunderbolts were hurled;
nd God sends the doves of healing to his torn and bleeding world,
As He goes marching on.

SARAH E. E. EVANS.

Anecdotes from Northfield

—MR. JACOBY at Round Top was tell-ng of the changed life. Visiting an rmenian family in a poor district of hicago, he found two little children ho wished to sing for him. They bean and sang sweetly "At the Cross, t the Cross," and sang in their own ay, "and my burden and my heart olled away." Mr. Jacoby said it exressed his own experience, for his eavy burden and his stony old heart olled away and God gave him, at orty-five, a new heart of love when e found Jesus.

. . .

—AT THE farewell given to the late Dr. A. T. Pierson, he spoke of the anger of modern travel and told the ollowing story: "Michael advised Patrick most solemnly not to enter the ar at the rear of the train." Pat said,
'Why should I avoid the last car?"
'Because," said Mike, "the last car atches all the rear-end collisions; it s not safe. And besides the last car never gets to the station till after all the rest." Pat said, "Indeed! Then why don't they leave off the last car?"

. . .

—MRS. FRALPAT watched the regiment pass and said to a neighbor,
"Minding my boy?" "Why?" asked the neighbor. "Because," said Mrs.
Fraipat, "he is the only boy in the entire parade who keeps in step."
How hard it is to keep in step in the spiritual march!

. . .

—CHRISTIAN constancy was illustrated at Camp Council by the story of two frogs and a milk can. The farmer put the tall can full of creamery milk in a cool spring at the edge of the meadow. When it was dark, a foolish frog hopped into the milk, gave a few spasmodic jumps and jerks, turned on his back and sank to the bottom—dead. The other frog, coming to find him, jumped into the same can. He was an earnest and strenuous swimmer and tried all night to jump out. When the farmer came in the morning, he found a dead frog at the bottom of the can. He also found nearly a pound of good butter, and on top of it, blinking over the yellow butter, the persevering frog, alive and hearty!

Moral—Don't give up but keep on kicking.

Scared to Life

By EUGENE THWING

THE title of the first chapter of a very charming book is borrowed to make a heading for this article. A stock broker tells how one day he was coming out of the Stock Exchange "when that maelstrom was in full race and when I was in a sort of concentrated paroxysm of suspense." Without premonition or explanation, like a stroke of lightning, he "got a warning." In other words, he had a sudden attack of heart failure from which in a few minutes he recovered, but which so thoroughly frightened him that he hurried home, consulted his physician, and acting on his advice gave up business entirely for a year. He took his eight-year-old boy, whom he hardly knew, out of a boarding school and carried him off to the country. He stopped living for a year that he might live. He exiled himself to forget himself and found himself. The story that follows tells of a wonderful new birth for the man and the boy—a rich, beautiful experience for both, which never would have been possible if the man had not been forced by his illness out of the tempest and agony of a life which was death into the dead calm of another existence which proved to be the very fulness of life and joy.

. . .

SOMETIMES repeated warnings are needed to scare a man to life. The head of a mercantile house in New York felt that he could not spare the time to bother with the pains and aches which came upon him now and again.

"Take a vacation; see a doctor," urged his wife.

"No, I must look after these big contracts—I must attend these board meetings—I must manage the business, or my competitors will get my trade."

At length, upon a day, the pain assailed him so violently that its demands could not be denied. "Confound the pain! Give me an opiate. I've got to catch the midnight train to Boston."

A hurried consultation with the doctor resulted in a trip full speed to the hospital instead. "Don't curse the pain; thank God for it," said the doctor. "Without the pain you might have been a dead man to-morrow. The operation has been delayed to the very last minute. Now we must be very careful to prevent blood poisoning."

. . .

SO IT is that among the best blessings of life are the ones we try to avoid or take with a frown when they are bestowed. Pain, so often regarded as the curse of our earthly existence, is in reality a necessity, and its abolishment would be a calamity while other things remain as they are. Pain is the warning signal, the alarm bell, the safety device as disease invades the body. We need it to startle us and rouse us to combat the enemy that would destroy us if we remained ignorant of its approach. Disease without pain is like a man asleep on the track as the train rushes toward him.

The devil, also, would have his way unchallenged in the world if it were not for the pain which follows him. The devil brought sin among men. God immediately placed upon it the saving blessing of pain and sorrow. Man by sin brings sickness, and God puts on it the blessing of pain to compel man to find the way to cure the sickness.

Pain is the bond which unites the human race. It is, said Dr. George Matheson, "the longest line of human sympathy—the line by which the heart can travel farther than by any other route. The sympathy with pain is the widest sympathy in the world." Bitter foes have fought like tigers in battle, and then, lying wounded and in mortal agony on the field, have reached out with trembling hands to share the last drops of water in the canteen with each other before they died. Man and wife, grown cold and hostile, have embraced in complete reconciliation at the coffin of a little child where their mutual pain has made them one again.

. . .

PAIN is the greatest opportunity to lives that are eager for service. The heart that is full of love must find something upon which to lavish its passion, and if the love is a Christ love it seeks out the need and the pain of other hearts and lavishes itself on them, because in no other way can the Christ love be satisfied.

A minister of a city church had in his parish a family of twelve who were living in wretchedness and strife. The father and mother quarreled; the sons fought and cursed; even the girls swore, and it passes all description when the girls in a home swear. Time and again these girls were heard to blaspheme at their mother.

The minister wanted to win the family to the Saviour, and he tried hard to find something in that home to love, but he could not. He received nothing but insult. Then he tried to love them for what they ought to be, since he could not love them for what they were. It was hard work.

One day the mother was taken sick. No one seemed to know what to do. For the first time the minister discovered that those boys and girls, in a sort of brutish way, loved their mother; and eagerly he began to love them for that. The disease was typhoid fever; it lingered long. The suffering of the mother and the helplessness of the family gave the minister his opportunity. He went every day, and he went to act, not to talk.

One Sunday night, after preaching, he went to the house. The sick woman asked him to raise her head on the pillow. As he did so she fell back dead. Again it was the time to act. In the morning he went with the boys to buy a coffin. It was a poor, cheap thing, but the best they could afford. He was asked to conduct the funeral. The boys and girls had become very courteous to him. They hadn't many friends, and only a few were at the funeral. No one outside the family seemed to care.

On the way to the house the minister stopped at the florist's and bought a bunch of roses. There were no other flowers at the house. When he entered the room, the boys and girls were standing around, dazed and lonesome, taking that last sad look at the mother. The minister stepped quietly to the coffin and laid the roses on the mother's folded hands. Then something happened. A husband and ten boys and girls looked at the mother, and at the roses, and at the minister. Eleven hearts broke, and through pain, and death, and love that minister had the joy of leading every one of the family, from the father to the youngest child, to Jesus and a new and blessed life.

THE ROAD TO YESTERDAY

FRIEND, I would find the road to Yesterday;
For I have lost my way in wandering far;
And now along that path my feet would stray,
If it be marked by any chart or star.

It matters not by what drear mountain height
The path may lead, or by what desert sands;
Or that I, blind and groping in the night,
Be bruised in my feet, and pierced of hands.

Lead me along the road to Yesterday—
I who of men have sinned and sorrowed most—
That I may find by some pure Childhood Way,
That Faith my soul once knew and loved and lost!

ELIZABETH MAY MONTAGUE.

The Battle in Maine

By Hon. Richmond P. Hobson, M.C.

THERE are three comprehensive, major reasons why constitutional prohibition should win in Maine on September 11.

First. The manufacture and sale of beverages containing alcohol is at the foundation of the widespread use of such beverages and their use has been pronounced by science as "destructive and degenerating" to the human organism, undermining the health and character of the individual, blighting progeny, disrupting the family, striking at the vitality and the institutions of the State, threatening the life of the nation and future of the race.

Second. Constitutional prohibition is the true form of prohibition under which ultimately the manufacture and sale of alcoholic beverages can best be uprooted, for the disease is an organic one that has been running for thousands of years, gripping the political, social, and business life of the nation, and therefore the treatment must be organic; that is, it must reach down to the people themselves, who constitute the organs and tissues of the body social, and in the realm of law must be placed in the organic law, the people's law, the constitution of the several States and of the United States.

Third. Maine is looked upon the world over as the citadel of prohibition. The liquor forces of the United States, of Canada, of Europe, and of the whole world are assembled and concentrated in the assault upon this citadel. The outcome will have a nation-wide and world-wide influence upon the cause of prohibition, affecting the welfare of the State of Maine, of the people of the United States and of the world at large. The prohibition and temperance forces, the moral and reform forces of the nation and of the world should gather around the forces of Maine and make this one of the great decisive battles of history.

Paid Too High a Price

A MAN once said to Sam Jones, "Jones, the church is putting my assessment too high." Jones asked, "How much did you pay?"

"Five dollars a year," was the reply.

"Well," said Jones, "how long have you been converted?"

"About four years," was the answer.

"Well, what did you do before you were converted?"

"I was a drunkard."

"How much did you spend for drink?"

"About two hundred and fifty dollars a year."

"How much were you worth?"

"I rented land and plowed a steer."

"What have you got now?"

"I have a good plantation and a pair of horses."

"Well," said Sam Jones, "you paid the devil two hundred and fifty dollars a year for the privilege of plowing a steer on rented land, and now you don't want to give the Lord who saved you five dollars a year for the privilege of plowing horses on your own plantation! You are a rascal from the crown of your head to the sole of your feet!"

MAINE AFLAME FOR PROHIBITION

MRS LILLIAN M. N. STEVENS
National President W. C. T. U.

MISS ANNA A. GORDON
Director "Young Campaigners"

MRS. MARY HARRIS ARMOR
Proadcat Georgia W. C. T. U.

CHRISTIAN temperance forces in Maine are rallying in a united effort this season to prevent the threatened repeal of the prohibitory law. The campaign is of national importance. For sixty years Maine has been a beacon light to other States in its plan of abolition of the liquor traffic.

Church workers, educators, public men and thoughtful people generally are standing together for the retention of the prohibitory amendment secured by General Neal Dow, the famous "Father of Prohibition," and which has stood four-square to the numerous attacks made against it. Women and even children, as well as men, are taking a foremost part in the campaign, the W. C. T. U. being well in the van. Mrs. L. M. N. Stevens, of Portland, National and State President, is spending the summer in the home field; and she is supported by a corps of able speakers, including Mrs. Mary Harris Armor, of Georgia; Miss Flora Strout, of Maryland; Mrs. Cora Seberry, of New York; Miss Edna Rowan, of Kansas; Mrs. W. A. Loyne, of New Hampshire; Mrs. Ella H. Thatcher, of New Jersey; and others.

In addition, National W. C. T. U. Vice-President-at-large Miss Anna A. Gordon, of Portland, is serving as general director of the "Young Campaigners for Prohibition," whose motto is "Maine Must Keep Prohibition." As a result some 30,000 children have been enlisted. This has been done through the "Muster Roll" which has been circulated and signed in Sunday Schools of all denominations. Sunday, September 10, the day before election day, is to be observed in most of the Maine Sunday Schools by special exercises to aid the campaign. In schools throughout the State campaign recitations and songs, interspersed with rousing rally cries, and concert exercises, with flags and pennants, out-of-door rallies, picnics and lawn parties, etc., are reaching many of the older people and the voters with the appeal of the Young Campaigners to uphold Maine's prohibitory law. Prize essay contests on the theme, "Why should saloons stay out of Maine?" are being held, and emulated by the license forces, who offer prizes for the best articles on the other side.

Many superintendents of schools have taken the leadership of the Young Campaigners, drilling the boys and girls with drum corps and band, for effective parades. The local Granges are endorsing prohibition, together with labor leagues, religious and patriotic bodies and civic orders of all kinds.

Flag posters with figures of children and the words, "Protect Us—Vote No," are seen in the store and home windows everywhere. Children's parades with music and mottoes and "Vote No" pennants are scheduled for election day, September 11. Prayer meetings will be held in the churches and the church bells will ring every hour to awaken conscience and moral responsibility. That they have nothing to fear if the temperance men get to the polls, is the opinion of the active workers who are urging the "Vote No" men to "let nothing keep them from their sacred duty." J. A. S.

MRS. W. A. LOYNE
Superintendent Work Among Lumbermen

MRS. ELLA HOOVER THATCHER
World's and National W. C. T. U.

MRS. W. A. TOMLINSON
National Superintendent W. C. T. U.

A Filipino Convert's Faith

PEDRO BAGNIO, a young Filipino convert, has died. His brother, Evaristo, who helped so much in the translation of the New Testament, was very broken-hearted, but it was a most triumphant death. Pedro was unconscious the morning of his death, and Evaristo knew that it was only a matter of hours. I was able to comfort him a good deal, but while talking with Evaristo I saw Pedro stirring, and going to his bedside I said, "Do you know me, Pedro?" He said, "Yes, I know you, Mr. Jansen." So I called Evaristo, and when Pedro saw his brother crying he said, "Why do you cry? We ought to be glad and happy." I said, "Do you know, Pedro, that you will soon go to meet Jesus?" He replied, "I did not know, but I am glad." Then I got a Cebuan Testament and asked Evaristo to read the first part of John 14 to his brother. Coming to the sixth verse he broke down with sobs and could read no further, and Pedro then finished the verse from memory: "I am the way, the truth, and the life; no man cometh unto the Father but by me." "Do you understand all that means, Pedro?" I asked, and he answered, "Indeed I do, and it is good to know." Turning to his brother, he spoke tenderly his last words: "We ought to be happy."

In the school with its five hundred boys, who had come from all parts of the islands, and mostly from homes where the Lord Jesus was not known, this lad had served his Saviour faithfully. Rarely with enough pocket money to meet his scant needs, he had, with his fellow Christian students, been looking forward to telling his people the message of the Saviour. Every one of his five hundred schoolfellows followed the body of their companion to the cemetery, besides teachers and friends.

Cebu, P. I. F. JANSEN.

Admiral Togo's American Holiday

Continued from page 823

effacement, the control of all passions, and the ability to maintain silence. If only he could stay here long enough to introduce such a course into our American schools!

This visit to America has been one of the long-cherished desires of his life, says Admiral Togo, and its realization has made him happy. The first news he heard on his arrival was of the signing of the arbitration treaties between the United States and Great Britain, and the United States and France. When his opinion was asked, he said, "That is good. I am a lover of peace, and I think the treaties will be good for the people of all the world. That is about all that I can say about them at this time." Some one suggested that it might be just as good a thing if such a treaty were negotiated between Japan and the United States. "Yes, it would be a good thing," he answered. Then he begged to be excused from discussing political questions. He was on a holiday.

Shall we welcome the greatest warrior of Japan as an ally in the cause of world peace? It would be pleasant to take his words at their face value and write Admiral Count Togo on the list of illustrious champions of peace. But we musn't go too fast; we mustn't take the courteous words of acquiesence of a guest in the hands of his entertainers as meaning all we would like to have them mean.

Togo said, "I am a lover of peace," but he didn't say it with any great emphasis or enthusiasm, and he quickly changed the subject. When he visited the navy yard he displayed the keenest interest in the big 14-inch guns. When he told of his visit to the United States battleship Delaware, the largest dreadnought at the British coronation, he expressed great admiration of the big engine of war. He said he admired particularly her fighting tops of the wire screen type and her powerful armament.

Admiral Togo is not a man who can be made over easily into a lover of peace. He was born of a long line of warriors. He was trained from infancy as a warrior. His whole life has been devoted to war, and his greatest triumph in maturity came to him as a warrior. Of all Japan's great men Admiral Togo is said by those who know him intimately to be the most thoroughly Japanese at heart. His father was a Samurai, a retainer of the Lord of Satsuma, a province in the southernmost island of the Japan group, the island which, from the age of fable, has been known as the land of fighters. His mother was a daughter of a Samurai. A few days after her boy was born she took him to the shrine of the guardian god of the clan and laid him on the altar and, after the old custom, dedicated the infant to "the defense of the Land of the Gods and to the service of the prince." As a boy he received all the training of youths in the fighting clan of Kagoshima, including archery, the use of gun and sword and rigorous training of the body. At sixteen he was a sailor on the single warship owned by the Lord of Satsuma. At twenty-one he was a petty officer on the cruiser Kasuga of the imperial navy just forming. When he was twenty-four he was sent by the government to England to learn the craft of modern warfare, and spent seven years at a military school near Portsmouth. He returned home on a new Japanese warship. Later, during a Satsuma rebellion, Togo fought against the government with his old clans. Afterward he returned to his allegiance to the Emperor. In the war between Japan and China he sprang into world notice as commander of the Japanese cruiser Naniwa, which sank a Chinese transport in the Yellow Sea, with 1,100 Chinese soldiers and commanded by British officers. The Chinese overpowered the British and would not permit them to yield up the transport to the Japanese commander.

Admiral Togo's brilliant service to his country in the war between Japan and Russia needs no retelling. One incident is characteristic: On the eve of the departure of the Japanese fleet under his command for Port Arthur and the beginning of the great struggle with Russia, this Admiral of a modern fleet of steel called his officers to the Mikasa, and there under the shadow of an eight-inch gun breech in his cabin he addressed them. On the table before him lay the "three and a half inches of honor"—the short dagger of hara-kiri, which in the code of the Samurai is the last recourse of a warrior in defeat. Togo made no allusion to the unsheathed dagger. "To-night we sail to attack the enemy," he said. "From that voyaging there is no return."

Now this same Admiral, who is honored and loved passionately in his own country as the embodiment of their fighting power and their assurance of victory, has been visiting America. He says, "I am a lover of peace. . . . The signing of an arbitration treaty between the United States and Japan would be a good thing."

Hail to the valiant Admiral Count Togo! We admire him ourselves. We appreciate his courtesy. We wish him and his beautiful land of cherry blossoms and brave people the most complete happiness. We hope to count him among the apostles of peace when "the lion and the lamb shall lie down together." In the meantime we join heartily with Rear-Admiral Wainwright, who laughingly remarked to Togo as he saw him confronting a battery of cameras: "That's the only way we'll ever shoot at you, I guess." EUGENE THWING.

Among the Workers

—CHAPLAIN JOHN T. AXTON writes from Maneuver Division Camp, Fort Sam Houston, Texas: "Our Enlisted Men's Club is conducted in an unfinished chapel on the edge of the big reservation, where 12,000 soldiers have been camped for the past four months. This club is directed by the army chaplain. Every night for one hundred nights crowds have attended the services and entertainments arranged especially for soldiers."

—THE PATERSON, N. J., HEBREW Christian Mission has completed its first year of work. Its rooms are on Temple Street in the heart of the Jewish quarter. Rev. Morris Frank, a converted Jew, is the head worker. The Mission is supported by several of the city churches and has been marked by steady growth. Rev. J. M. Martin, of the Broadway Reformed Church, Paterson, the secretary of the Mission, reports that it now has eighty members, and although at first it encountered much opposition from the Jewish leaders in the city, it has made wonderful spiritual progress.

Saved from Starving by America's Gifts

A REMARKABLE PHOTOGRAPH OF THE BENEFICIARIES OF A SINGLE DAY IN OUR RELIEF WORK AT PO-CHOW, CHINA

THIS remarkable photograph, taken especially for THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, has been received from Rev. W. D. Bostick, an American missionary at Po-chow, in the heart of the territory affected by the recent famine. Mr. Bostick writes: "This picture shows all the people who got grain from our station on one day! They are, however, only about one-tenth of the whole number we have helped at Po-chow. Many of those in the photograph are holding up their relief tickets which have been their life. In the rear are the officials and others engaged in the distribution." This photograph was taken about May 24, when the famine relief work was nearing a close. There were only two days more of kaoliang distribution and then the applicants would receive beans. Concerning the work at Po-chow, Mr. Bostick reported to the Shanghai Committee: "It has been done almost to complete satisfaction." With the food and fund still on hand it would be possible, he reckoned, to go on feeding at least 3,000 for another twenty days, and this would be done only in the case of the homeless and starving. A very pathetic feature of the situation is mentioned by the missionary. Two hundred homeless and parentless boys had sought shelter at the Po-chow Orphanage. They had been fed and kept, but now they could only be provided for fifteen days longer, when they would have to go their way. "I have been feeling," adds the missionary, "that it would be a pity to turn away such as have no one to go or to look to—out to beg again and to die." There are several other orphanages now facing similar distressing conditions.

Po-chow is but one of many stations at which CHRISTIAN HERALD famine relief was distributed. It is beyond dispute that the number of lives saved in China during the famine, through the gifts of readers of this journal, will reach an astonishing figure, when the final reports of the two Relief Committees are received.

New York's Historic Memorial Statue to Henry Hudson

HENRY HUDSON will stand soon upon a great fluted column, one hundred feet in height, just erected on top of Spuyten Duyvil Hill, New York City, and view the great stream which bears his name and the scene of his encounter with the first inhabitants of Manhattan. Karl Bitter, the sculptor, has completed the model of the colossal figure of the English navigator who under Dutch auspices came exploring to the New World.

The Model for the Statue of Henry Hudson

Mr. Bitter has been two years in preparing this model and in making the necessary researches. He familiarized himself with Hakluyt's Voyages, that entertaining work in which a companion of the voyage of Hudson related some of the experiences in these waters. He also studied the types of weapons and armor and costumes in the Koenigliches Zeughaus in Berlin, the museum at Hamburg and in other cities of Europe, so as to get the best idea possible of the equipment which mariners setting out to explore strange lands at that period would be likely to have obtained.

The sculptor has represented Hudson in morion and leather jerkin, worn for protection against Indians; full, baggy knee breeches of the period, and high boots, such as he might have used for protection in landing and tramping in swamps or among brambles. The mariner wears a sword with ornately wrought hilt that a captain of that age might have fancied. The figure bears a short Spanish cloak, for at that time Spain was dominating the fashions of the world as has France in later periods. On account of its altitude, for including the hill the figure will stand 315 feet above the level of the river, the outlines have been made clear and strong. The bearded face of the mariner is entirely ideal, as there is, so far as is known, no contemporary portrait of Hudson. The expression of the face is strong and conveys an air of anxiety and thoughtfulness.

TWO NOTABLE AMERICANS

—IN THE DEATH of Hon. William Pierce Frye, of Maine, the United States Senate loses one of its foremost personalities. He was the senior member in point of service in both houses of Congress. He was born in Lewiston, Me., in 1831, graduated from Bowdoin College, studied law in the office of William Pitt Fessenden, was elected to Congress as Representative in 1871, and served in the House ten years, afterward being chosen to the Senate, where he served on important committees and took an active part in much important legislation, notably in connection with the Canadian fisheries dispute. He was a member of the Peace Commission which brought the Spanish War to a close in 1898.

—JOHN WARNE GATES, for many years one of the leading figures in the financial world, died in Paris on August 9, after a long and painful illness. He was largely interested in iron and steel, and was known as one of the most daring and successful speculators in this country. He was born on a farm in Illinois in 1855, and began his career in a little hardware store. Soon he became interested in barbed wire, first as a salesman and later as the biggest barbed wire magnate the world has ever known, owning great factories and practically controlling the business. In recent years he was interested in various railroads, iron and steel companies, salt companies, steamship lines, banks and other big corporations.

OUR EDITORIAL FORUM

OTTO KOENIG, President GEO. H. SANDISON, Managing Editor THEODORE WATERS, Secretary

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is published weekly by "The Christian Herald," at the Bible House, Fourth Avenue, 8th and 9th Sts., New York City. The officers are: Otto Koenig, President and Treasurer, Bible House, N.Y.City; Geo. H. Sandison, Vice-President, Bible House, N. Y. City; Theodore Waters, Secretary, Bible House, N. Y. City.

Subscription Price, $1.50 a year, in advance.
Remittances should always be made in the safest manner available to the remitter. Register cash remittances.
Foreign Postage.—For each copy to be mailed outside the United States, Canada, and Mexico, add one dollar a year.

Change of Date.—It takes at least two weeks to change the date, after your subscription is renewed.
Expiration of Subscription.—The date on the wrapper indicates when your subscription ends.
Change of Address.—It requires three weeks' time to make the change. Give both old and new address.

Subscriptions may commence with any issue.
Letters should be addressed, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, New York.

Entered at Post Office, New York, as Second-class Matter
Entered as Second-class Matter at the Post Office Department, Ottawa

How You Can Help World Peace

ON THAT memorable third of August when the Peace and Arbitration Treaties between this government and France and England were signed in the White House library, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, in the name of its readers, who are all advocates and supporters of world-peace, sent a message of congratulation to the President. To this message the following replay was received:

The White House, Washington, August 5, 1911.

The President has asked me to acknowledge the receipt of the telegram tendering the congratulations of The Christian Herald on the signing of the Arbitration Treaties with Great Britain and France. He greatly appreciates your kind expressions and thanks you warmly.

The successful negotiation of these Treaties is a great satisfaction to him and he is very earnest in the hope that prompt ratification will be had in the Senate.

(Signed) CHARLES D. HILLES,
Secretary to the President.

Let us hope that the President's anticipation of prompt ratification will be realized. If there should be delay and if, when this issue reaches our subscribers, senatorial action has not been taken, write to the Senators from your State urging speedy and unanimous ratification. The eyes of Europe and the world are turned toward us at this important crisis, and the first great step toward universal arbitration should not be jeopardized by delay. It may be that the treaties will be ratified ere you read this, and in that event every Senator who has voted for ratification will deserve your congratulations and ought to receive them without fail. Thus, either way, you can personally help along the world's peace by a brief and hearty expression of your sentiments at this time when no sincere peace-lover can afford to be silent. Remember, Germany and other European governments are actively interested and Japan has informally conveyed the intimation that if we took the initiative, she would be glad to negotiate. These are history-making days. Your individual influence, multiplied many times, would be a powerful incentive to our national legislators and might even become a factor in bringing about world-peace in the present generation.

Is There a Revolutionary Zone?

NOW that the Haitian revolution is ended and President Simon gone, we may reasonably look forward to a period of comparative peace in the little republic. But it will not be an enduring peace. There, as in the turbulent Central American republics, rebellions are not founded on high motives of patriotism or to reform great abuses. They are mainly armed dashes for graft by rival factions—the "outs" against the "ins." It is just beginning to be understood by the more intelligent classes in Central America that revolutions do not conduce to national progress. This aspect of the question is very clearly set forth in a recent article by ex-United States Consul McClintock, who was stationed for several years in Honduras. He shows that the little republics of Costa Rica, Guatemala, San Salvador, Honduras, Nicaragua and Colombia have all suffered materially from periodical disturbances originating in the rivalry of opposing political factions. In most cases, these endless strifes for power and place are aided by natural conditions in countries where the soil is so lavish of its products that the struggle for food and shelter presses very lightly on the people. Then another cause must be sought for in the hot blood and high temper of the Latin races. Add to this the farcical elections, the universal weakness for graft in all its forms and the strong personal ambitions of the leaders of the clashing factions, and you have a highly inflammable combination. The physical standards of the people are greatly lowered; the armies in some cases are made up of ragged, shoeless, half-grown boys; yet such material in the hands of a bold military adventurer makes or mars a country's history. What is the lesson of all this? Mr. McClintock thinks it points largely to intervention as the open gate of humanity and civilization; but this is probably too radical. Uncle Sam, it is true, is filling the role of peace-maker pretty well; but recent events have shown that what is really needed in Central America is a union of the best forces in these republics in their own behalf and for the preservation of peace and the clearing of obstacles from the path of national progress. A Central American Federation, with sensible leaders, would do more towards bringing in an era of peace and prosperity and would give greater popular satisfaction than if a strong power were to take these peoples under its wing and make them peaceful and orderly by force.

The Backdown of the English Lords

AFTER a long and resolute struggle to maintain their traditional prerogatives, the British House of Lords has gracefully accepted the inevitable. Rather than have the government carry out its avowed purpose of creating enough new peerages to pass the "Veto" bill—which strips the Lords of the power they have exercised in Parliament—they decided to allow the measure to pass and this was done on August 10 by a vote of 131 to 114. Narrow as is the margin, it is enough to satisfy the Liberals, and to emphasize the popular will. It marks the most notable constitutional change in Britain in half a century. Toward the close of the long, two years' struggle, the peers saw the handwriting on the wall. Even their ablest leaders had become convinced that the bill must pass and that the time had come when the Lords could no longer hope to retain their ancient veto power, or imperil budgets and indefinitely obstruct the business of the government whenever they happened to have a dispute with the Commons. They "died hard," as the final vote shows, and some of the stoutest fighters among them, of the old conservative type, either left the Chamber or abstained from voting; but the government had been quietly developing strength, and a group of some seventy members, who till now had stood aloof, controlled the balance of power in the last rally.

Without doubt, the threat to create 500 new peers to assure a government triumph in the House, had much to do in bringing about the backdown. The proud, stately nobles could not bear to be made a laughing-stock before the country, as the Archbishop of Canterbury hinted. That peers were held so cheaply that they could be created in bunches for sudden emergencies was an intolerable suggestion to those men who can read their progenitors' names and titles in the Domesday Book. Rather than have the old House crowded with a new "mushroom nobility," they emulated Colonel Crockett's coon and came down from their tree with as much dignity as was possible under the circumstances.

A Stormy Marriage Discussion

SELDOM has such a social tempest been let loose as that which was evoked recently when an Episcopal minister, the Rev. Dr. George Chalmers Richmond, of Philadelphia, startled the country by his severe strictures on the approaching Astor marriage. Claiming to represent the attitude of his church on the questions involved, this clergyman has not hesitated to denounce the proposed marriage in the strongest language, as an offense against public morals and ecclesiastical law. Ministers of various denominations have taken up the matter in earnest, and while a few have deprecated the sensational methods of the Philadelphia pastor, the majority approve his strictures in the main.

This particular case in question is important chiefly because it is symptomatic. There are, unfortunately, many others like it. It is an index of underlying conditions that exist among a certain class of "idle rich," some of whose members in recent years have gone to extraordinary excesses. In their marriages and their almost periodical divorces, they have shown a disregard not only of ecclesiastical law but of common decency. Of some at least it may be truthfully said that they seem to have no ambition beyond vanity and indulgence, no creed beyond the gratification of the love of pleasure, no care for the good opinion of their fellow-men, no respect for the sanctity of marriage or for moral law, and apparently no apprehension of the real purpose of this life or of that which is to follow. It was inevitable that, under such conditions, the attack should come, and while it is an unusual and extreme measure to denounce by name from the pulpit, such conduct as we have referred to invit the strong and swift rebuke. We cannot approve the method employed, yet we doubt whether a right-thinking man or woman will say that the s tack was undeserved.

One of the most painful aspects of the case is th Pastor Richmond's bold characterization of an u worthy and degenerate class is liable to be inte preted as applying indiscriminately to all who ha wealth and social position. This would be both u fortunate and unjust. There are many who ho their means and influence as a stewardship, and u both for the advancement of the noblest purpose They have nothing in common with the compar tively small group of social and moral offende complained of, nor do they sympathize with the in the least.

It is beyond dispute that there has been a growir tendency among the class to which Pastor Richmor referred, to degrade marriage to the level of marketable commodity and an easy convenience. T such an extent has this fact impressed itself upon t respectable portion of American society that it regarded as a national disgrace. We must leave t others, however, the detailed discussion of the pa ticular case in point, which formed the basis of t attack. Not alone the Episcopal Church but all t churches have the unquestioned right to decla absolutely invalid, from their point of view, an marriage performed in defiance of ecclesiastical law There is little doubt—and we regret to say it—tha some preacher with ideas more "liberal" than th church can sanction or decept society approve, wi be found to tie the knot for a good round fe Though forbidden by statute law in New York, suc a union would be legally permissible in other State And it is this easy evasion of law, resulting fro conflicting State statutes, that makes it possible fo any rich divorced degenerate, seeking to purchase wife, to successfully mock at law and common de cency, set an evil example for other moral weakling and make us ashamed of our civilization, which s criminally neglects the vital safeguards that pro tect the dignity of American womanhood, the sacred ness of the marriage tie and the integrity of th American home.

General Notes

—GENERAL CINCINNATUS LECONTE has been proclaimed Pro visional Executive of Haiti by the victorious rebel army. Simor the deposed President, has sought a refuge at Kingston, Ja maica.

—THE BIG MARBLE and granite structure, known as the "Old Mutual Life Building on the southeast corner of Broadway an Liberty Street, is being demolished by house wreckers to mak way for the new home of the Guaranty Trust Company of Nev York. The old building was erected during the Civil War i 1864, and is one of the few remaining land-marks on lowe Broadway. It is but a stone's throw from Trinity and diag onally across the corner from the lofty Singer Tower. At th time of its erection it was one of the handsomest and costlies buildings in New York. The Mutual Life Insurance Compan occupied it until 1884 when their present building on Nassa Street was erected. The property was purchased a few week ago by the Guaranty Trust Company of New York and th purchase price is said to have been nearly $2,000,000. This i at the rate of about $175 a square foot.

Contents of this Number

Wednesday, August 23, 1911

	PAGE
Our Mail-Bag	822
Admiral Togo's American Holiday (Illustrated)	823, 826
A People Without Vision. Sermon By Rev. Henry N. Coudon, D.D.	824
Scared to Life. By Eugene Thwing	825
Maine Aflame for Prohibition (Portraits)	826
Saved from Starving by America's Gifts (Illustrated)	827
Henry Hudson's Memorial Statue (Illustrated)	827
OUR EDITORIAL FORUM	828
THE BIBLE AND NEWSPAPER (Illustrated)	829
Little Hearts Gladdened at Mont-Lawn (Illustrated) By Kate Upson Clark	830
In My Veranda Easy Chair (Illustrated) By Margaret E. Sangster	831
The Little Mexicans. By Myrta Lockett Avary	832, 833
The Supreme Motive Power. Epworth League Topic	834
Our Boys and Girls (Illustrated) By Miss Janet Porter	835
Organizing Peace Circles	836
Lest We Forget	837, 838
Sunday School Lesson. by Dr. and Mrs. W. F. Crafts
Great Lives: Daniel. Christian Endeavor Topic	839

THE BIBLE AND NEWSPAPER

Conducted by FERDINAND C. IGLEHART, D.D.

Steamer Hits Iceberg

THE steamer Columbia of the Anchor Line reached her dock in New York August 6, badly damaged by a fearful collision with an iceberg in mid-ocean. The Wednesday before the ship under the command of Captain George Mitchell, an experienced Scotch mariner, was 100 miles north of Cape Race and 57 miles east of it, and encountered fog, the chilling sort that suggests icebergs. The captain, knowing that he was near ice, slowed down the vessel, sounding his fog signal constantly. Thomas Murray, the lookout on the forecastle head, and also the man in the crow's nest, reported that a steamship was almost likely dead ahead. The captain gave a long blast of the whistle and heard what he thought was the reply of a steamship off his starboard bow. He sounded again and she replied again. The veteran was deceived. It was only the echo of his own whistle from the iceberg ahead. The iceberg was drifting in the direction for which the Columbia was heading, and the collision was inevitable. The captain reversed his engines, but it was too late. He hit the great wall of ice a terrific blow, driving the bow of the ship twelve feet into its green sides. Everything on board that could move was plunged forward. Six persons were injured in the collision, two of them seriously. The Columbia's stem post was twisted and gored above the water line and the plates below were badly torn. The ice drove the steel plates inward about seven feet. The starboard anchor was jammed into the hawse tight and could not be moved. The port anchor was torn clean from the pipe and was left hanging on the edge of the ice mountain. The flood from the sea poured rapidly into the hole torn in the bow. The first collision bulkhead was punched in, but the second one kept back the water until temporary repairs could be made. Although the pumps were kept busy, the Columbia brought into port 90 tons of water in her forward hold. Captain Mitchell displayed the greatest ability, tact and courage in the catastrophe, or the ship would almost certainly have gone down. The crew behaved beautifully, and the passengers showed great presence of mind. In the midst of the greatest danger a passenger sang some witty songs, which provoked much laughter, and did much to quell any possible tumult. The singer had been on the City of Rome when she struck an iceberg in 1899. Nothing has been heard from the ship the men were certain they saw in front of them, and the gravest fears are entertained that it struck the mountain of ice and sank with all on board. In navigating the sea of life there are rocks and storms and mountains of ice and other perils, and it is a fortunate thing to escape them and anchor safely in the harbor. The nose of the Columbia ran into the ice; the ship on which the apostle Paul sailed was run into the ground. The Columbia extricated herself and was saved; Paul's ship stuck fast and was wrecked.

And falling into a place where two seas met, they ran the ship aground; and the fore part stuck fast, and remained unmovable, but the hinder part was broken with the violence of the waves. (Acts 27:41.)

The Steamship "Columbia," after its Collision with the Iceberg, Showing Crumpled Bow

Navy Must Observe Sunday

Secretary Meyer just before his departure for a tour of inspection of the English navy and shipyards issued Special Order 1105, limiting Sunday work done in the navy to a minimum. Acting Secretary of the Navy Winthrop has just sent specific instructions on the subject to the naval service. The order calls attention to the articles of the navy regulations and to an order of September 15, 1909, relating to the proper observance of the Sabbath day in the naval service. It is stated that they shall be construed as of general application throughout the naval service as far as practicable and not as being confined exclusively to shipboard. The Department notices a tendency in the service not to comply strictly with the provisions of these regulations, coaling ships and doing other work which could be done just as well on other days, and directs that a strict observance of the same shall hereafter obtain. Ship and crew inspections are to be discontinued on Sunday, and no work is to be done that does not appear to be necessary for the efficiency of the service. In this day of such widespread disregard of the sanctity of the Lord's day, we commend the good example the Federal Government has thus set in the recent order of the Navy Department. The prophet makes reference to the divine requirement of cessation from labor in these words:

Thus saith the Lord, Take heed to yourselves, and bear no burden on the Sabbath day, nor bring it in by the gates of Jerusalem, neither carry forth a burden out of your houses on the Sabbath day, neither do ye any work, but hallow ye the Sabbath day, as I commanded your fathers. (Jer. 17:21, 22.)

Theft, Arson and Manslaughter

Samuel Brown, cashier for the Long Dock Mailing Company, Jersey City, who had been a trusted employee of the company for eleven years, turned defaulter to the amount of $2,500, and sought to hide his wrongdoing by the destruction of the company's office and books. He hired Frank Walsh, a degenerate of Newark, N. J., known to the police of that city as "Lightning," to burn the office and the books. He was aided in his crime by Patrick J. Timmons, a public accountant in Newark who for years had been a friend of Brown and had abetted the cashier's crime by false reports of the books. It seems that Brown and Timmons spent considerable time in the lawless saloons of Jersey City concocting the deviltry which had been arranged for that night. The crime was arranged to represent burglary, followed by arson to conceal the tracks. Brown, Timmons and Walsh went to the office that night and Walsh used the gasoline and the match, but the gasoline exploded and burned poor Walsh so badly that he died in the hospital the next day. The police immediately suspected Brown, and he made a full confession. It was a mean thing for Brown to steal money from his employers. It was meaner still to cause the burning of the office with the danger to property and life which it might involve, but it was a still meaner thing to hire the poor vagabond Walsh to do the burning. It does not appear that Brown lost his money in speculation or gambling, but it does appear that he had been wasting his time and his money in the saloons, which were largely accountable for his financial and moral wreckage. It was a shocking and pitiful crime, with its swift penalties, sending poor Walsh to the cemetery and most likely Brown and Timmons to the penitentiary on the charge of theft, arson, and possibly manslaughter. If Brown has any spark of manhood left he will suffer the torments of a guilty conscience for having been so bad a man himself, and for hiring a degenerate to hide his crime, and having directly caused the disgraceful death of that man. As we think of the crime of these three men and of the penalty that has fallen and those that are likely to fall we are reminded of the words of the psalmist:

His mischief shall return upon his own head, and his violent dealings shall come down upon his own pate. (Ps. 7:16.)

New York's Postal Bank

The new postal savings bank was opened in the New York City post office building the other day. Postmaster Morgan was present, with Superintendent Joseph Elliott of the money order department, under whose care the banking system in this city has been placed. When Clerk Philip Knobloc opened the window he found a little ten-year-old girl. "Ah," said the clerk, "you captured the prize of being depositor No. 1." "Yes, sir," replied the little girl, who then gave her name as Sophie Frankel. "Where do you live?" asked the clerk. "In Brooklyn." "Oh, then you are not the first depositor, Sophie, because we do not take Brooklyn accounts." The smile faded from her little face and tears filled her eyes as she went away. Clarence A. Parkes was the first depositor, with $2 to his account. A long line of depositors then left their small savings. The majority of the depositors consisted of foreigners, mostly from the East Side of the city. Superintendent Elliott does not think that the postal savings banks will interfere with the business of the savings banks to any extent. The government pays 2 per cent. on the deposits, and the absolute security of the United States Government makes the timid, and especially the foreigners, prefer the postal savings banks to any other. The system has passed beyond the experimental stage, and gradually all the post offices of any importance in the United States will have postal savings departments. The practice of making money yield money by its interest is thus referred to by the Saviour:

Thou oughtest therefore to have put my money to the exchangers, and then at my coming I should have received mine own with usury. (Matt. 25:27.)

Nation-wide Highways

The United States Office of Public Roads has just prepared a chart which indicates that nearly 15,000 miles of transcontinental, interstate and local roads are contemplated in various sections of the country. Should the gigantic plan be carried out it would be possible to drive wagons and automobiles from the Atlantic to the Pacific, from Vancouver, B. C., to Tijuana, Mexico, and from Montreal to Miami, Fla. One road is to go from Yellowstone Park to Glacier National Park, through Fort Yellowstone, the Big Hole Battlefield, and other interesting points in the Rocky Mountains, a total distance of 450 miles. The highway from Vancouver to Tijuana will be 2,000 miles long. The road from Sherman, Texas, to Galveston will be 150 miles; the Memphis to Bristol highway, going through Knoxville, Nashville and Jackson, will be 450 miles long. The Lincoln Memorial Road will go from Washington to Gettysburg. Almost all the States of the Union are interested in this great scheme and it is likely to be carried into successful execution. The automobile era has made natural this demand for an improved and national highway system. There were better roads among some of the ancients than any we have in our time. There were periods in Jewish history when the greatest care and largest expense were employed in building and maintaining public roads. The prophet uses one of them, well graded and smooth, as the symbol of the roadway over which Christ and his followers might pass on their way to the beautiful city.

Go through, go through the gates, prepare ye the way of the people; cast up, cast up the highway; gather out the stones. (Isa. 62:10.)

Little Hearts Gladdened at Mont-Lawn

SATURDAY, August 5, was a red-letter day at Mont-Lawn, for then Mrs. Sangster went up there to visit and talk to the children. It was a beautiful day. The shady lawns and fine buildings of the "Children's Paradise" never looked more inviting. Surely there is no fairer spot than Mont-Lawn, and none better suited to the health and happiness of childhood.

The excellent head-cook "William," who has presided over the culinary destinies of Mont-Lawn from its beginning, had prepared a simple but savory luncheon for the distinguished visitor, and soon after it was over, the children were summoned to the cool and spacious "Children's Temple," where, after prayer and singing, they were to hear brief addresses from Dr. Sanford, the well known pastor of the North Baptist Church of New York City, Mrs. Sangster and others.

You ought to have heard that singing. It was worth going many miles to hear the "Glory Song," the "Flower Song," the "Peace Song" and many others, all of them rendered with a zest which shook the very walls and windows.

Then Dr. Sanford spoke a few words of wise and patriotic counsel, and showed the children a bottle of water and a piece of a rock which he had brought from the Holy Land, telling them several interesting stories of his experiences there.

Mrs. Sangster asked the children various questions to which they responded with great promptness, but at last she propounded one which puzzled them.

"When I was a little girl," she said, "my mother sent me on an errand. I had to go a long way, and I was glad to arrive at my destination; but imagine my dismay to find, just in front of the door there, something of which I was very much afraid. What do you suppose it was?"

Various guesses were made—"a dog," "a bear," "an Indian," "a snake," "a spider"—but it was not surprising that nobody guessed right, for the object of the poor little girl's fear was nothing less than the honest and dignified family cat, which was reposing on the front door-step! It seems that Mrs. Sangster is one of that small class that are constitutionally afraid of cats.

She ran quite home again in her terrible fright, and somebody else had to be sent to do her errand. She closed with an impressive little homily upon the foolishness of fear, and the need and duty of courage, which held the close attention of her three hundred little auditors.

Merry Waifs in the Swings

Then a few words were spoken by another visit and a rousing song or two were given; the childr were dismissed to play, and after watching the for a while at their happy games the guests d parted, their hearts full of thankfulness that su a delightful place had been devised for the help ar pleasure of the unfortunate waifs of the city.

Under the very able and thorough management Miss Goering, the order and cleanliness of the Hon are kept at the highest point. Gentle and refine caretakers guard the groups of children at the play, so that they are always under surveillanc from their six o'clock breakfast until their ear bed-time. Scores of them learn here their fir lessons in cleanly and orderly living, and try introduce it into their often untidy homes upon the return.

And how they love Mont-Lawn and weep whe they become too old to take their annual ten day there!

One little girl was crying in a hall in the Bib House, where the children are examined for e trance to Mont-Lawn, and upon being asked th cause of her tears, replied, "The doctor says m eyes are sick, and so I can't go."

Her older sister tried to comfort her by sayin "Oh, you've been there three summers already, an maybe you can go next year."

But the little one replied with a fresh burst c tears, "Oh, but I want to go every summer, long a I live!"

August 5 was a notable day at the Home als because then a series of most interesting movin pictures were taken there by Mr. Isador Bernstei the manager of the Yankee Film Company. Thes pictures will be shown during the coming season a several of our metropolitan churches.

This noble and beneficent charity must appea strongly to every one who will visit it. Its perfec organization impresses those especially who hav engaged in similar work. Its permanent establish ment, with a good endowment, is the memorial of al others which Dr. Klopsch would most prefer, for i was his pet philanthropy. Into it he poured hi very heart's blood, and upon its organization an equipment he expended the best powers of his extra ordinary mind.

KATE UPSON CLARK.

CONTRIBUTIONS IN AID OF OUR CHILDREN'S HOME

Clark, Harry H 5 00
Clayton, Mrs Anna M 1 00
Crebbin, William .. 3 00
Davis, Sadie N..... 3 00
Delano, Caroline M 21 00
Dobbs, Wm H 1 00
Easton, Helen M... 1 00
Emerick, Ruth W B 5 00
Evans, Mr & Mrs E L 5 00
Farley, Grace E 6 00
Davidson, A M.. 1 00
Davies, Mrs D D.. 3 00
Davies, Mrs Geo W 3 00
Davis, Mrs A T 2 00
Davis, Mrs H G. 1 00
Davis, Mrs M... 2 00
Davis, Mrs N D.. 3 00
Davis, Sadie 1 00
Dawson, Wm 1 00
Day, Mrs S A 3 00
Deane, O E 1 00
DeAtley, Mrs R. 3 00
DeBaun, M W & H 10 00
Decker, Mrs F D 1 00
DeForest, Z C... 6 00
DeFreest, Mrs M 5 00
DeGaris, Mrs G A 1 00
DeGroot, Mr & Mrs James E .. 3 00
DeLeeuw, Mrs C. 1 00
DeLemos, A K.. 3 00
Deline, John H.. 10 00
Delong, Mr & Mrs 2 00
Denise, L C 1 00
Dent, H C 5 00
Desch, W K 10 00
Devereaux, E M.. 3 00
DeWall, H H 1 00
Dewey, Mrs Ina. 3 00
DeWitt, M A 3 00
Dexter, E N 2 00
Dietrich, Mrs H.. 1 00
Dimorier, Mrs R H 3 00
Dings, Henry 6 00
Dodge, Mrs A 3 00
Dodge, Mrs W B 1 00
Dohrman, Louisa 3 00
Dorwart, MissAE 5 00
Doty, D H 5 00
Drake, John M.. 1 00
Duckworth, Miss R E 1 00
Dunn, Mrs R L .. 1 00
Durkin, E W 2 00
Durston, Mrs G G 2 00
Dye, Erwin J.. 3 00
Dye, Mrs J K 2 00
Eakin, Mrs Robt. 6 00
Earl, Mrs Lusina 1 00
Easton, H F 1 50
Ebeling, Chas.... 3 00
Eeroyd, James .. 3 00
Edmond, Mrs Lee 3 00
Edwards, Mrs M 6 00
Elbridge, Mrs I B 3 00
Ellis, Mary J 3 00
Elmer, Martha A 1 50
Elmore, Mrs J... 1 50
Elting, Mrs Sarah 10 00
Ely, Mary C 5 00
Emer, B 2 00
Emerson, Mrs Ida 1 50
Emerson, Mrs KE 1 00
Emerson, Mrs Wm 3 00
Emmel, Mrs M.. 2 00
Ensign, Carrie E 1 50
Erb, Mrs Wm N. 1 00
Erickson, Mrs F C 1 00
Evans, Mrs E B 3 00
Evans, Florence M 3 00
Eversfield, Master Gilfillan, Mrs P. 3 00
Gillespie, Mr & Mrs W Reese 3 00
Glover, Mrs Anne 3 50
Gogl, Emma L... 3 00
Goldsmith, Mrs C 6 00
Goodale, Mrs G Z 3 05
Goodnow, Mrs J A 5 00
Goodyear, Kenneth 3 00
Gordon, Mrs Jas 1 00
Gordon, Mrs M... 1 00
Gould, Jane 1 50
Graham, Mrs A.. 3 00
Graham, Mrs E J 1 00
Grant, Mrs W B 6 00
Graw, W S 2 00
Green, Henry .. 6 00
Greene, Mrs D A 3 00
Gregory, Willis.. 3 00
Griffin, Emma... 1 50
Griffith, Mrs E V 3 00
Griffith, Mrs Lula 3 00
Griggs, Mattie A. 1 00
Grissom, Mrs C W & Friends 2 00
Griswold, Mr & Mrs Frank 1 50
Groff, H F 2 00
Grubb, E M F... 3 00
Grover, B F 2 00
Gulick, Mrs Geo 3 00
Gunn, Miss R G 5 00
Gurnee, Mrs E... 3 00
Gustafson, Theo. 1 00
Gustin, C F 15 00
Guy, Mrs D 2 00
Guyer, Mrs J W. 4 00
Gwinup, MissAR 1 00
Hadock, Wm.... 6 00
Haines, Carrie W 3 00
Hainge, H I.... 3 00
Hale, Mrs 1 00
Hall, Emma C .. 3 00
Hall, Mrs K E... 1 00
Hallock, C T.... 3 00
Halsey, Mrs Wm 5 00
Hamilton, Cora.. 3 00
Hamilton, Mrs L 3 00
Hampton, Mr & Mrs O M 3 00
Hancock, Mrs L M, Nellie A & Louie 1 00
Handy, Geo W 2 00
Hanson, S W 2 00
Hapien, T M 3 00
Happley, Jno... 15 00
Harer, H F 1 50
Hargett, Mrs J F 6 00
Harper, Mrs W E 3 00
Harris, Joseph P 6 00
Harris, Letitia.. 1 00
Hart, S E 1 50
Hart, Sadie L... 5 00
Hartert, Mrs J B 3 00
Hatch, Mr & Mrs R B 3 02
Hawkins, Chas L 3 00
Hay, Mary 1 00
Hays, Mrs E J.. 5 00
Hayward, Mrs M 6 00
Hazen, Miss M J 3 00
Heaman, Mrs Geo 2 00
Hearn, Mrs R L.. 1 00
Heastings, MrsJW 1 00
Heath, Mrs E 2 00
Heath, Mrs G W 1 00
Heeve, H 1 00
Heinrich, C J.... 2 00
Heitschmidt, MrsC 3 00
Heitsenkamp, Mrs T 3 50
Henderson, Mrs F 1 00
Henderson, MissH 6 00
Henderson, Mellie 3 00
Hendricks, Laura 5 00
Hendry, W W 3 00
Henry, Mrs C 3 00
Henson, Victor.. 3 00
Hepburn, C W.... 2 00
Herrick, Mrs L L 1 00
Herrick, Mrs L A 3 00
Herrington, MrsJP 1 50
Hess, Mrs Geo A 3 00
Hicks, M J 3 00
Higgins, Mrs S J 1 00
Hildred, Mrs Wm 3 00
Hile, Lawrence .. 1 50
Himes, Mrs A F 3 00
Hinsel, Mrs Sarah 2 00
Hiscock, Mr & Mrs F 3 00
Hiskey, Leroy .. 3 00
Hitchcock, M E.. 3 00
Hodgen, Mrs I... 1 00
Hoffman, Louise. 3 00
Hogsett, Jennie.. 1 00
Holbrook, H S.. 1 00
Holdredge, M 1 00
Holdridge, F H.. 3 00
Hollcroft, Mrs LR 3 00
Hollenbeck, Mr.. 10 00
Holmes, E G.... 1 00
Holmlund, A E.. 2 00
Holmlund, Jno R 2 00
Holmlund, M K F 2 00
Hooker, Miss N L 2 00
Hoover, Mamie E 3 00
Hopkins, S C.... 3 00
Hord, Mrs C W.. 1 00
Horton, M V B.. 10 00
Hosking, Mrs W J 6 00
Hossler, Mrs E.. 2 00
Hottel, A S 1 00
Howard, Chas O 1 00
Howell, Mrs J L 1 00
Hoyt, F M 1 00
Hoyt, Mrs Fred M 5 00
Hubbard, Chas L 1 00
Hudson, Mrs WB 1 00
Huling, Susan .. 1 00
Hunt, Edna 3 00
Hunter, Elizabeth 2 00
Hunt, Rebecca .. 1 00
Huntzberger, J W 6 00
Huston, Mr & Mrs A C 3 00
Hutchinson, M... 3 00
Hutchinson, MrsJH 1 50
Hyde, Harriet O. 1 00
Ingold, Mrs E L. 1 00
Inness, Sarah W 6 00
Ireland, Mrs E B 1 00
Irwin, Mrs E W & Neighbors 4 00
Isbell, Mrs A 3 00
Ivarson, Miss Ella 1 00
Jack, Anna B... 3 00
Jacobs, B & E.... 3 00
Jacobson, Mrs J C 3 00
Jacoby, Belle 2 00
James, Flora E.. 2 00
Jamieson, Julia A. 3 00
Jane, R D 2 00
Jenkins, Nannie.. 1 00
Jenkins, Mrs W.. 1 00
Jennings, A E.... 1 00
Jensen, Mrs Anne 3 00
Jensen, Mrs F... 1 00
Jess, Mrs Emma. 3 00
Johns, Miss E L. 3 00
Johnson, Mrs A S 1 00
Johnson, A M... 2 00
Johnson, D 3 00
Johnson, Mr & Mrs Earle 5 00
Johnson, Gertrude 3 00
Johnson, Mrs J E 1 00
Johnson, Julia A. 3 00
Johnson, Lucy ... 3 00
Johnson, M L.... 1 00
Johnson, N 3 00
Johnson, S C W.. 1 75
Johnson, Sarah A 1 00
Johnson, W H ... 3 00
Johnson, W N ... 3 00
Jones, Mrs 1 00
Jones, C H 3 00
Jones, Mrs D D.. 1 00
Jones, Mrs H P.. 3 00
Jones, J D 5 00
Jones, Mr & Mrs J E 6 00
Jones, M A 1 00
Jones, M C 1 00
Joslyn, G E 5 00
Judson, Mrs W H 2 00
Kasson, Mrs E H 3 00
Kast, C M 3 00
Kastner, H 2 00
Kean, Henry B.. 1 00
Kean, Sherman C 3 00
Kearney, H A 1 00
Keck, Chas M 1 00
Keeler, E R 1 00
Kelk, Mrs H 6 00
Kennedy, Ezra K 3 00
Kenyon, Mrs 8 40
Kerrick, A A 2 00
Kessler, Mrs C F 1 00
Ketchum, M A.... 1 00
Keutgen, Mrs GH 21 00
Keyser, R 3 00
Kidwell, Mrs A. 21 60
Kilbourn, Russell 6 00
Kimble, Miss E T 2 00
King, Geo 1 00
King, Geo 1 00
Kinghorn, Mary.. 2 00
Kinne, Mrs Ida M 1 00
Kinney, Mrs C.. 1 00
Kirk, Mrs C F.. 3 00
Kirkland, Mrs AJ 3 00
Kirn, Wm 2 00
Kline, Mrs Geo.. 3 00
Klink, Louise F.. 1 00
Klock, Carrie E.. 1 00
Knapp, Geo S.. 5 00
Knapp, Miss V.. 1 00
Kneeshield, F E 2 00
Knowlton, N H.. 2 00
Koontz, Miss L E 1 00
Koppes, Sarah .. 2 00
Kramer, Mrs R S 1 00
Kritley, Mrs S N. 12 00
Kusserow, Rose.. 3 00
Kyler, Elvie M 2 00
Kyte, Miss E T 1 00
La Bar, Mrs 1 00
Lahl, John 1 00
Laing, Mrs J H 1 00
Lamb, Rev & Mrs 3 00
Lamb, Martha A 3 00
Lambden, M M... 2 00
La Munion, Mrs E 1 00
Lancaster, Mr & Mrs J D 3 00
Lancaster, Nora. 2 00
Landaker, MrsCM 6 00
Landes, G C 2 00
Lane, Mrs E M.. 3 00
Langdon, M A .. 1 00
Lanier, W F 3 00
Lanson, Mrs John 2 00
Lashly, Dr 1 00
Latocha, J P 5 00
Laufer, J H 1 00
Lawrence, MrsHL 3 00
Lays, Chas 1 00
Lea, Mrs Wm 2 00
Leask, Mrs 3 00
Leavitt, Samuel.. 5 00
Lee, Harriet G.. 5 00
Leeper, J M & wf 3 00
Lehmann, Chas F 1 00
Lemon, Miss M.. 6 00
Lenox, Alice 75
Lentz, Mrs Albert 3 00
Lenz, Rudolph.. 10 00
Leonard, Mattie A. 3 00
Lepper, Geo H.. 2 00
Levine, S P..... 1 00
Lewis, Mrs John. 4 00
Lewis, Mrs M R. 5 00
Lewis, Mary H. 6 00
Liddell, Lucy .. 10 00
Lilja, Mrs John. 3 00
Lind, Adam 6 00
Lind, Mrs C H.. 3 00
Linden, Sr, Mrs G 3 00
Linden, Mrs P J. 3 00
Link, Mrs Wm... 1 00
Lippincott, L A. 3 00
Littell, Mrs G E. 1 00
Little, Mrs F E. 3 00
Little, Lewis C. 10 00
Livingston, Mrs C 3 00
Locuson, A C B 3 00
Loosemore Family 4 00
Lord, Miss Cadie 1 00
Lumley, A 1 00
Lust, Israel 3 00
Lutgens, E..... 1 00
Lyon, Geo H.... 2 00
Lyons, Mary A.. 3 00
McAllister, J H & Minnie E 5 00
McBride, Mrs WR 1 00
McConnell, Miss Monroe, Mrs G C 1 00
McEwen, S M.. 3 00
McFadden, M J.. 3 00
McFarland, H M 1 10
McGuire, Mrs J & Daughter 2 00
McKay, L L 3 00
McKay, Mrs T.. 3 00
McKay, Mrs T.. 3 00
McKendree, J B. 5 00
McLoud, L 5 00
McNair, A L.... 5 00
McNair, Mrs L.. 2 00
McPhee, Mrs J.. 3 00
McPherson, A.. 3 00
McPherson, F.. 4 50
McRoberts, Eliza 3 00
McWethy, Miss K 3 00
Mackay, Mrs M.. 1 00
Madden, Walter T 3 00
Maerts, Miss L. 25 00
Mandsley, Mrs J 1 05
Mangle, Annie .. 1 00
Mann, Mr & Mrs D E 2 00
Mann, E S 3 00
Mansfield, MrsLK 6 00
Manyke, Gussie. 6 00
Marsh, Mrs E.. 1 00
Marshall, Miss C 1 00
Marshall, Mrs E. 2 00
Marshall, Margt. 1 00
Martin, Birdie.. 2 00
Martin, Caroline. 6 00
Matteson, Alfred 5 00
Maxwell, Ella M 3 00
Mayer, Mrs C B 5 00
Mayo, Mrs R J.. 6 00
Medd, Nellie 3 00
Menga, Nettie... 2 00
Menzel, J E 10 00
Meredith, H L.. 3 00
Merrick, Mrs F L 3 00
Merrihew, E M.. 1 50
Merritt, Mrs Frederic P 3 00
Merry A 1 00
Mertz, John H.. 3 00
Messenger, E ... 3 00
Meyer, Adam 2 00
Michael, Cath'e. 1 00
Mickel, Mr & Mrs Offutt, James ... 2 00
Miller, Almira .. 1 00
Miller, Mrs C C. 1 00
Miller, Ernest .. 3 00
Miller, Harry H. 1 00
Miller, Mr & Mrs Osborn, Mrs G W J 9 00
Miller, Mrs O W 1 00
Miller, R S & H 1 00
Miller, Mrs W.. 1 00
Milliman, A HM.. 1 00
Mills, Ellis 1 00
Mills, Miss M E.. 1 00
Mills, Ralph 2 50
Minnick, W E... 1 00
Mitchell, Mrs Geo 3 00
Mollonnis, Louis 5 00
Monroe, Mrs G C 1 00
Montague, A 2 00
Moore, Clara 1 00
Moore, Mary E.. 1 00
Moore, Mrs N 1 00
Moores, Zena 3 00
Mora, Miss Janet 3 00
Morris, Mrs A S 2 00
Morris, Mrs C A 1 00
Morrow, Mrs E.. 2 00
Morse, Mrs B E.. 2 00
Morton, F J 2 00
Mosca, Mrs A 1 00
Moseley, Miss EM 3 00
Moser, Mrs L M.. 1 00
Mount, Mrs E .. 5 00
Moyer, Miss C E 3 00
Moyer, Pauline Y 6 00
Muehler, A F W.. 1 00
Muir, J R 1 00
Murphy, Mrs Liz-zie 1 50
Murphy, Mrs Lucie 3 00
Murray, Gavin .. 1 00
Murray, Nana H 3 00
Muschany, MrsLH 5 00
Myers, F 1 00
Myers, Mrs F M. 2 00
Myers, Kath E 3 00
Nash, Mrs O C.. 1 00
Nason, Miss Ina. 3 00
Naylor, Mrs S R 2 00
Nearing, Anna G 5 00
Nesbitt, Mrs Jno 3 00
Martin, Mrs C H. 1 00
Neill, Mrs David 2 00
Nelson, Miss F L 5 00
Nelson, John 3 00
Nelson, Mrs Jno 3 00
Newcomer, Jacob 3 00
Newell, S A 2 00
Newhouse, J R.. 1 00
Nighman, MrsGH 6 00
Nolin, Mr & Mrs C B 5 00
Norcross, MrsCE 3 00
Norton, W W.... 10 00
Nourse, Mrs I L 3 00
Novak, A 1 00
Oakes, Mrs G C 3
Ober, H A 3
Off, Mrs F B.. 5
Offutt, James .. 2
Ohair, Lillian .. 3
Olcott, Sylvia .. 3
Ormiston, Geo .. 3
Orth, Mrs E A.. 3
Orton, Mrs L A.. 2
Osborn, Mrs G W J 9
Osborne, Mrs R.. 3
Osgood, Jennie B 3
Osgood, Mrs W R 2
Ostrom, H D 2
Outram, Mrs D R 1
Owens, Mrs J R 2
Owens, Raymond 3
Owens, Roy 3
Paden, Mrs, G 1
Page, Mrs W B 1
Paige, Mrs T S.. 1
Palmer, Mrs E E 1
Palmer, Miss HM 3
Palmer, Mrs S O 1
Palmer, Spencer.. 2
Palmer, Mrs W J 1
Park, Mrs W J.. 1
Parker, Anna S 1
Parker, Louia .. 1
Parker, Mrs W E 3
Parken, Geo B .. 3
Parks, Mrs Ella.. 1
Parsh, Mrs Geo 1
Parsons, B W .. 3
Parsons, Mrs W L 5
Passmore, D C.. 1
Passmore, Mrs C 5
Patterson, Mrs WC 5
Pauly, Mrs Henry 1
Pearsall, Wm W 1
Peck, Mrs H 3
Peno, Mrs Henry 1
Pergam, Mrs S.. 5
Perry, Miss 3
Perry, Miss H .. 3
Phelps, Mr & Mrs J 3
Pfaff, Mrs R 2
Pitzenmaier, Miss M 3
Plank, Mr & Mrs J 3
Plummer, Mrs R 1
Polley, Miss Ida B 1
Pollison, Mrs A C 3
Pontius, Mrs E R 1
Poorman, F & L 5
Pope, John A 2
Porter, M L 1
Post, Lewis S .. 5
Post, Mrs Maria 3
Potter, Clellie M 1

And several hu contributions to acknowl'g'd late

IN MY VERANDA EASY CHAIR

Paying Guests

By MARGARET E. SANGSTER

WHAT would become of the city cousins if at certain seasons of the year the country cousins did open their doors for the admission paying guests? A boarder is received into a family on a business basis, and yet a boarder is in a sense a guest of the home. The home atmosphere and the home influences surround those who enter the home portals. Friendly relations are established and friendly acquaintance is cemented when paying guests year after year return with pleasure to the household in which they have been entertained and the village that has given them of its best. The children remember the freedom of the fields, the rides the farmer gave them on the hay, the hours spent in boating and fishing and the evening games and songs in the ample living room. Wholesome fun and recreation were the portion of the guests who paid the stipulated sum in money for their rooms, their seats at the table and their liberty to feel at home. If they paid nothing more than money they could not do all that they ought to have done, and must remain deeply in the debt of the country home where they stayed for weeks or months.

. . .

THE paying guest who permits her children wantonly to destroy articles of use or adornment in the house of her hostess, who sits quietly by while her rollicking boys break the canoe, utters no protest when they lose the oars, and is heedless if they scatter the properties of the croquet grounds to the four winds, is neither quite honest nor quite honorable. Between honesty and honor there is the distance between the comparative and superlative in excellence. Honor is higher than honesty.

The paying guest who permits her children to waste the food on the table, who is herself tardy in coming to meals, and who adds to the work that presses on the time and strength of the household people, is not fair, just or thoughtful. She who is a paying guest should never forget her obligation to be a lady. The beautiful word is out of fashion, but the day is at hand when the pendulum will swing back again and the lady and the gentleman as of old shall take their places among us. It will be a welcome day.

. . .

ON THE part of those who receive paying guests there is often disappointment when they count gain and loss at the end of a season. They are not sure to have made enough actual profit to reimburse them for all that they have expended in currency, in labor and in health. There are exceptions, and the annual balance sheet is satisfactory when the management has been careful and every detail supervised with discretion. The farmer's wife who wishes to have guests come to her repeatedly may be sure that what city women prize most of all is substantial comfort. They ask for clean rooms and good beds. By the latter, they particularly mean beds supplied with a spring that is not worn out, and a mattress in which there are no bumps and hollows. A comfortable mattress, one that is almost luxurious, is not of necessity extremely costly. The country house in which there is sanitary plumbing and a bath-room supplied with running water, hot and cold, is more desirable than one in which these appliances are wanting.

. . .

AS FOR the table, it goes without saying that the pies and cake will be delicious. The poultry is often killed too short a time before being cooked, and in some otherwise delectable places guests are much annoyed by being made partners, so to speak, in the process of catching and killing frightened creatures that run madly here and there uttering shrieks of terror before the eyes and in the ears of those to whom they will ere long be served. Somehow one is almost compelled to be a vegetarian when the cold-blooded details of killing poultry, lambs and calves are thrust upon her. Ice and pure water are essentials, while cream, milk, fresh eggs and vegetables in perfection furnish forth a table agreeable to an epicure.

If we would understand one another thoroughly we must live a while under the same roof. The best tests of character are those afforded by companionship when people are off-guard. A summer spent in any home brings together in sympathy those who were previously strangers, and the paying guests of this year may become the firm friends of their entertainers in all the years to come.

. . .

Of Interest to Women

WOMEN are everywhere forging to the front in business and professional lines. That a woman should be in actual charge of the United States Mint and responsible at the head of affairs for the coinage of the country is an item rather startling when we consider that there are still benighted persons who hesitate to permit women to vote. The fact is in these days that women cannot be confined to the sphere which is preeminently their own. They will never desert the realm of home nor cease to administer home affairs, but the world's work cannot at present proceed without them in wider fields.

Miss Margaret Kelly, who has long been connected with the Mint Bureau, was on August 1 appointed examiner, becoming second in authority in the Bureau. The actual head of the Bureau being absent, Miss Kelly is temporarily in his place. Her salary is three thousand a year.

. . .

Some Curious Epitaphs

WHILE excavating recently in the Bronx in order to construct a sewer the necessary blasting disturbed an old graveyard. Old, that is, for this hurrying country of ours, for the sleepers here were laid to rest only fifty or sixty years ago in what must then have been a rural cemetery. No doubt all these rudely disturbed graves were supposed to have been opened and their tenants removed years ago when the city crept up to them. Whatever may be the explanation of the neglect, the result of the blasting was to strew the roadside with broken headstones on some of which curious epitaphs were legible.

Here are some of them:

This languishing head is at rest,
Its thinking and aching are o'er,
This aged immovable breast
Is heaved and afflicted no more.
This heart no longer will feel
Of trouble and torture and pain,
It ceases to flutter and beat,
It never shall flutter again.

Our daughter and sister we will meet
With joy around the great white throne,
Where Death's dark shadow ne'er intrudes
And Sorrow's voice is never known.

Read old and young this truth,
The thoughtless and the sage;
The worm is in the bed of youth
And at the root of age.

Two of the names on these stones, Jennings and Kelly, are the names of streets in the immediate vicinity. This indicates that at one time the families of the dead had homes and property in the neighborhood where they are now forgotten.

. . .

Saving Steps

WE WOMEN, busy about the house, seldom take thought on the important matter of saving steps. When we begin to grow conscious of being often weary and of the sensation known as "giving out" the doctor tells us not to go up and down stairs so many times a day. He says with an air of authority, "Go down as often as you choose, but think twice before you go up. It is the upward climb that gives you the most fatigue." Not long ago a woman counted the number of times she had gone upstairs in a single day, and found to her surprise that it was thirty times. She might easily by a little thought and planning have changed the thirty to five. The number of steps a woman takes between her kitchen table and her pantry, the exertions she needlessly makes in performing her household tasks, her refusal to let others help her and her foolish errands to and fro contribute to lessen her vitality and shorten her life. Why carry one cup and saucer at a time to the closet shelf when a single journey would enable you to carry a dozen cups and saucers safely? Why not make a business of saving steps?

Several times a day the woman who does her own work should conscientiously drop everything and for fifteen minutes take a level rest. She can do this best by lying down on a couch with a low pillow and hands folded.

The Sewing Lesson

THE LITTLE MEXICANS

By MYRTA LOCKETT AVARY

FRICO and Cuca were a desolate-looking pair when they reached New York. It was a day of rain and sleet, and they had just come from beautiful, sunny Mexico. Frico was seven, Cuca was five. Six months before, their mama had been brought to the States. When she had told them good-by she had cried—though she was trying to smile—and had said:

"I will come back to you soon—or you shall come to me, corazoncitos" (children of my heart).

She had come back no more. Their old Indian nurse had told them that their mama was dead. They had never seen death, and they did not know what it was. When the nurse explained that their mama had gone to New York for the doctors to make her well, and that they could not make her well, the children could not understand. From the time they heard they were going to New York, they did nothing but talk of seeing their papa and their mama there. All the way on the voyage, they had babbled away about this, and as they neared the city, they were full of joyous flutterings. The friend of their papa's, in whose charge they had come, tried to chill their hope, but he could not strike a blow brutal enough to kill it. New York did. There was snow, slush, and sleet for a week, and the little Mexicans, who had been free as butterflies among the flowers, were cooped up in the narrow confines of a flat.

They could speak no word of English. Only "Tia Anita" (Aunt Annie) could understand them, and talk to them; and Tia Anita, being a stenographer, was away at her work most of the time. Tia Maria did her best, but Tia Maria had never lived in "Met-se-co," as had Tia Anita.

The good tias thought that the little Mexicans would freeze to death, or that they would die of homesickness and longing for their warm sunny "Met-se-co" of freedom, blossom and fruit; and of the disappointment at not seeing their parents, a disappointment that even in the hopeful heart of childhood was deepening into despair.

Business had held their papa in Chicago, and he had not been able to meet them as he had planned.

As they stared out of the windows into the dismal court below, they made Maria think of birds beating themselves to death against a cage.

"No flowers here; no trees," said the niños (children) indignantly, when Tia Anita sought to convince them that they should at least try to be content. "Nowhere to play. No mama—no papa." And then tears!

Tia Maria, who kept house, tried so hard to understand them and to make them understand her, that success began to crown her efforts. She picked up a few words of Spanish, and they a few words of English.

Tia Maria had not many pennies, but one day she spent the whole of five cents to bring a flower from market. The children were radiantly happy over it, and began to think better things of the United States—though they straightway babbled to her of "Met-se-co," where great trees were covered with bloom, and where there were orange and lemon groves—and one could pick up all the oranges one wanted off the ground—and they told of fragrant coffee-fields with glossy green leaves and star-white flowers, and of wonderful vines, and of roses, and roses, and roses.

Tia Maria understood a little as she watched them hanging over their one rose, and her eyes grew misty—as they often did when watching the little Mexicans.

They showed their rose to the canary and told him about it in words as liquid and musical as his own notes. They had early come to an understanding with the bird, for a whistle is the same in Spanish as in English.

One day, Tia Anita brought home a doll—a nice doll that could open and shut its eyes—to be Cuca's own; and for Frico, she brought a toy engine. (She went without a new hat to buy them.) They had never had such fine toys before, and clung about her neck and kissed her, and poured a compensating flood of rippling Spanish into her ears.

"Poor little things!" thought Maria; she let her work slide and sat on the floor and listened patiently while they explained for the hundredth time, in the most beautiful but incomprehensible jumble of words imaginable, what these things meant in "Met-se-co."

It was bed-time, and as Maria was helping them put their things away, there was a ring at the bell, and then a step came up the stairway. The children listened—and ran out as if they were crazy; and then the aunts heard a man's voice say:

"Caramba! Will you eat me up?"

"Papa! donde esta Mama?" (Papa! where is Mama?")

. . .

After that, they were happier, even when he had gone away—"to come back and see them again." They went to kindergarten, played with other children and puzzled teachers and playmates with their Spanish. Everybody loved to hear their talk. Their Spanish was the sweetest thing in the world.

As they became domesticated Maria and Anita's cares increased in new directions. The real nature of the little Southerners began to assert itself. They were sweetness itself, but full of fickle changes, quick mischief and insatiable curiosity about the new world they were in—the great, strange town.

"They make me think of hummingbirds," Anita wrote Señor Hernandez, "they are such busy, bright, flitting things—here, there, everywhere, sticking their noses into everything; fluttering about and away from me, clinging to my hand or dress and getting under my feet one minute, and the next, out of my sight—whenever I attempt to take them airing. They are afraid of nothing on earth. Their English is improving."

"I thank you and Maria a thousand times," wrote Señor Hernandez, "for kindness to my motherless ones. I am glad they are learning to speak English, but—do not let them forget their mother's tongue! Write me of all their pretty ways and bright sayings."

"It would take a book, amigo mio [my friend]," she answered. "And I fear their performances may have a disquieting influence upon you. They have upon us. Last night after dinner, Maria and I took them for an airing in Union Square. We were turning east from Lincoln's statue, to come home, with the children at our heels as we thought. Suddenly, we heard Frico:

"'Por aqui, Tia Anita! Por aqui!' (this way); and we turned to see him and Cuca fly across the track at Dead Man's Curve just in front of a car. The motorman and policeman both shouted at them, but they didn't hear. They went up Fourteenth Street west, running with all their might to Sixth Avenue, and up Sixth Avenue to a window near Twenty-third Street, in which they had seen a monkey and some small dogs on exhibition the day before. Imagine Maria and myself tearing along Fourteenth Street and Sixth Avenue after them! They stopped in front of the window, stamped their feet several times in great impatience, and then came back to us, making the air thick with 'carambas!'—the dogs and monkey had been removed! They received our reproaches with the most inconsequent and insouciant grace imaginable, hardly permitting it to interrupt their complaints about the removal of the dogs and monkey.

"Have you mosquitos in Mexico? Cuca saw her first American mosquito on a ferry-boat. It was too funny the way she behaved. On the way back, she began to dance up and down before the flag-pole, to gesticulate violently, and almost dislocate her neck while shouting to the person nearest her—who happened to be a very elegant and stiff-looking old gentleman:

"'Animalito!'

"He looked bewildered, and Cuca struggled out in desperate English:

"'Lit-tel an-i-mul.'

"Whereupon the dignified gentleman discovered by close inspection of the flag-pole that a mosquito was clinging to it. Frico, too, was a perfect little monkey on the boat (he always is), running around, doing all sorts of tricks and making everybody fall in love with him. They are very bonny, amigo; so small and shapely and lithe and round; so brown-skinned, dark-haired, and bright-eyed; so very rapid and musical of speech; so affectionate and mischievous. We could not live without them now, amigo. You will not be marrying again and taking them from us? I have heard rumors."

"I shall not take them from you, amiga. But you—suppose a lover should take you from them? I have heard rumors. Pobrecitos! But you should not sacrifice yourself, cara mia [my dear]," was the answer.

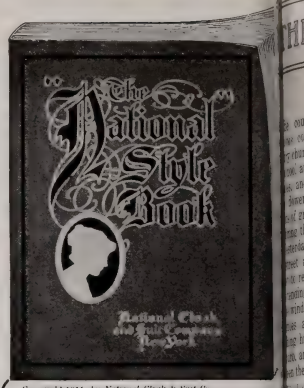
When next the sisters heard the tumult of childish voices in the hall, dominated by masculine "carambas!" the Spanish was interlarded with quite new English; and the third time dreadful English was interlarded with Spanish, and Señor Hernandez burst forth passionately in the presence of the sisters:

"Caramba! You are forgetting your mother's tongue!"

After that, Anita wrote:



"I talk Spanish with them altogether, and Maria is very faithful to use her small stock of Spanish for their benefit. But, amigo, they will pick up a lot of East-side English. I am sorry you disapprove, for it is awfully cute. My conscience has been fearfully smitten, of late, to discover how defective has been their religious instruction since their mother died. You know, Maria and I have little verbal piety. We say our prayers and do our best, but we have to work so hard! A good Sunday School lady who has taken them in charge is scandalized at their ignorance. So am I, since she has opened my eyes. I am sending them regularly to Sunday School and showing my interest in their lessons by questioning them afterwards.

"'Chico,' I have just asked, 'what did Miss Wright tell you about today?'

"'Oh,' said he, glibly, 'about that time they had a picnic and there wasn't 'nough to eat to go round.'

"Do not smile, amigo, at this seemingly irreverent way of telling of the miracle of the loaves and fishes. It was not irreverence; it was poor Frico's 'ill-fitting' English; 'picnic' means 'religious festival' to him. Miss Wright does not understand the sweet, reverent, loving spirit underlying this awful English, and I would not be surprised if she conceives it her duty to write you a note, warning you to remove the children from my influence. I would not be surprised if the Gerry Society came and got them! Oh, amigo! I wish we had a little home

Continued on next page

Copyright 1911, by National Cloak & Suit Co.

Your New "NATIONAL" Style Book is Now Ready

This column in your copy of The Christian Herald is given up to tell you of your New Style Book--to tell you to be sure to write for your free copy.

THE "NATIONAL" Fall Style Book is ready—finished. All the beautiful new fashions have been gathered--all are now ready for your interest and delight. The book is ready--is waiting for you, in fact---waiting for you to send us your name and address for your free copy.

What question would you ask about the greatly changed Fall Styles? Your "NATIONAL" Style Book answers it. "What new suit would become me best?" It is pictured there for you. "What are the newest and prettiest wraps?" What are really the most becoming skirts? How can I look chic, yet economize, get the best Fall clothes for the least money?" Your answer is there. Every fashion problem from proper dress to the greatest beauty and becomingness, finds its solution in the "NATIONAL" Style Book. It shows you:

"NATIONAL" Tailored Suits Made to Measure $15 to $4

Samples of Materials Sent FREE

Fashions Make a Change of Eighty Yea

Styles step backward Eighty years—backward in the tendency of detail—forward in beauty and gracefulness. We add and improve the ruffles and fichu effects of 1830; and also present fashions continue the lines and styles of Louis XVI. the Empire Period; but all is made new with improvement.

Suits and dresses in straight lines, smooth fitting, even clinging effects, are shown, giving both grace and youthfulness to the wearer; skirts are new and beautifully trimmed, and dresses and waists, and even petticoats are charmingly veiled with chiffon.

But we are using valuable space to tell you what we have already told you complete in your "NATIONAL" Style Book. Just send us your name and address and we and read in your copy of "NATIONAL" Style Book the full story of the new Fall styles.

The "NATIONAL" Policy

We prepay postage and express charges on all our goods to any part of the world. You may return, at our expense, any "NATIONAL" Garment not satisfactory to you, and we will refund your money.

NATIONAL CLOAK & SUIT CO.
218 West 24th Street, New York C

THE LITTLE MEXICANS

Continued from preceding page

e country—where los pobres tos could go to a clean little y church and a clean little coun- hool and be free from street in- es, and where they could have flowers—pobrecitos! they pick s of green things from the street ring them in.

sterday, I saw Chico run across reet and dive under a florist's to rescue a sprig of green that ending carefully in a tomato can windowsill. One of my first ex- ces after he came here was ing him one day put his cap on rb, and then make several trips en the curb and the gutter; when e upon him I discovered that the re he was so carefully depositing cap was a handful of faded vio- at had dropped from some pass- and or breast and which he was ring up one by one from the . He looked up smiling and said: ama en Mexico.' And I remem- how his mother loved violets!

ca did not puzzle us when she of eating 'hair-rings' because ispronounced syllable is much he correct form of herring, but she wondered 'why they had so hair in them,' we supposed that ad not been referring to the fish , until several days later when gs were served as a breakfast , and she pulled out some bones olding them up, said: 'No wonder all 'em hair-rings!' A Spanish has been christened on the block, Cuca attended with her chum uita, and Mariquita stood god- r. Cuca returned full of heart- n envy. 'O Tia Anita!' she d, 'Mariquita held the baby! t she to have held the candle too? didn't give me to hold even a piece of candle. Tia Anita, you get somebody to let me be a other?'

ey are becoming quite useful to . Cuca helps with the dishes Frico runs errands and is most erful as a market-man, keeping e open for bargains in such things likes.

ia Maria, I don't know why you me,' he remonstrated, 'down squares for sirloin tea, when it's me price right roun' the corner.' urse, you know, he meant Ceylon. can buy little cabbages [Brus- sprouts] cheaper 'an you can,' he ed us.

e astonished the butcher by or- g 'poorhouse steak,' but the right cut came all the same, for Frico showed the butcher just where to take it from, and our breakfast porterhouse was better than usual."

These letters, together with other circumstances, brought a result bet- ter than sisters and children had ever hoped for.

. . .

The summer came, and with it a memorable week in New York when hundreds died every day from the ef- fect of the heat, and people stumbled over dead horses at almost every corner. That week nearly killed Anita and the little Mexicans. The doctor ordered the trio out of town—an order that it was impossible for Anita to obey, but she wrote to the father, laying the children's case before him; and then drooped all the more because of the parting that must come. Mr. Hernan- dez, though blind as men usually are, could not fail when he came to see how matters stood; and took the trio back with him to Niagara, where he was attending to some electrical work. When the four returned to New York, Anita and the children's father were betrothed. That winter, they were quietly married just on the eve of a business journey to Mexico which Mr. Hernandez had to make, and on which he arranged to be accompanied by his bride, leaving the children with Maria. But the children ordered matters oth- erwise. They saw preparations for Anita's departure going forward; they saw her standing by their father, both dressed for traveling. They wept; they were to be left. Their father promised to bring her back soon. An- other picture, another parting under similar circumstances, recalled itself to their troubled little hearts. They looked up to Anita, to their father with swimming eyes.

"Ah, papa," they said, "you told us that when you took mama away."

"They go with us!" said Anita.

"They go!" said Maria.

Their "grip" was got ready in short order. In their beloved Mexico they spent three beautiful months. When the time came to return to the States, they did not want to go.

But they went back—and to a glad surprise—as did their new mama. Their papa had prospered, and an evidence of it was the pretty suburban home in Long Island to which he took them. Tia Maria had got it all ready and was standing on the porch in the midst of a wealth of flowers to welcome them.

he Christian Herald Bigger Than Ever

NE of our readers writes as follows: "I should not want to give up THE CHRISTIAN HERALD; it seems like an old friend and has been a constant visitor in our home for many years. But it seems to me that we are get- a paper smaller and with more advertising than under the management of Klopsch."

low, as a matter of fact, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD was never so large, all ns of the year considered, as it is at the present time. In our issue of 19, we called attention to the fact that "Whereas during the year ending June, 1909, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD contained 3,278 columns of reading er, yet during the year ending June 1, 1911, we printed 3,594 columns of ing matter, an increase in our reading matter of 316 columns, or 79 pages." is, we were enabled to give our readers during the twelve months ending 1, 1911, the equivalent of six extra CHRISTIAN HERALDS, as far as reading er is concerned, and this we were enabled to do because of the increased nt of advertising.

low, compare the figures for the present summer months, when the amount dvertising is always smaller—compare this season with the figures of the season last year. In the twelve issues from that of June 7 to that of ust 23, there were 785 columns of reading matter, whereas last year, during nilar period, there were 682, or 103 columns less than we are furnishing y.

t was formerly the custom of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD to publish sixteen- papers in the summer time, whereas our rule to-day is never to publish less twenty pages, no matter how small may be the amount of advertising.

Whenever any of our subscribers is defrauded by an advertiser in THE ISTIAN HERALD we will make good the claim, provided that the subscriber, must be of record, has mentioned THE CHRISTIAN HERALD in writing to the rtiser, and provided the claim is made to us within two months of the date he appearance of the advertisement. This guarantee does not apply to stment advertisements.

"Standard"
GUARANTEED PLUMBING FIXTURES

THE bathroom should be beautiful as well as sanitary. A lavatory which permits of decorative construction will add greatly to the appearance of the room.

Eliminate all doubt as to the sanitary excellence of your bathroom equipment by specifying, not verbally, but in writing, "Standard" guaranteed fixtures, and making certain that they, and no others, are installed.

Genuine "Standard" fixtures for the Home and for Schools, Office Buildings, Public Institutions, etc., are identified by the Green and Gold Label with the exception of baths bearing the Red and Black Label which, while of the first quality of manufacture, have a slightly thinner enameling, and thus meet the requirements of those who demand "Standard" quality at less expense. All "Standard" fixtures with care will last a lifetime. And no fixture is genuine unless it bears the guarantee label.

Send for a copy of our beautiful catalog, "Modern Bathrooms." It will prove of invaluable assistance in the planning of your bathroom, kitchen or laundry. Many model rooms are illustrated, costing from $78 to $600. This valuable book is sent for 6 cents postage.

Standard Sanitary Mfg. Co. Dept. 56 PITTSBURGH, PA.

New York ..... 35 West 31st St
Chicago ..... 415 Ashland Block
Philadelphia ..... 1128 Walnut St
Toronto, Can ..... 59 Richmond St., E
Pittsburgh ..... 106 Sixth St
St. Louis ..... 100 N. Fourth St
Nashville ..... 315 Tenth Ave., So.
New Orleans, Baronne and St. Joseph Sts.
Montreal, Can. ..... 215 Coristine Bldg.
Boston ..... John Hancock Bldg.
Louisville ..... 319-23 West Main St.
Cleveland ..... 648 Huron Road, S. E.
London ..... 53 Holborn Viaduct, E. C.
Houston, Tex. Preston and Smith Streets
San Francisco, Metropolis Bank Building
Washington, D. C. Southern Building
Toledo, O. ..... 311-321 Erie Street
Fort Worth, Tex. Cor. Front and Jones Sts.

White Lead on the Farm

Fences—Neat, well painted fences around your buildings will add dollars to the value of your farm.

"Dutch Boy Painter"
Pure White Lead

mixed "on the job" with pure linseed oil and applied to your fences will pay for itself many times over by preventing decay, saving repairs and early rebuilding.

Our Free Painting Helps

We will send you free on request color schemes and miscellaneous painting instructions that you will find of real, practical value. Ask for Helps 2656

NATIONAL LEAD COMPANY

New York, Cleveland, Chicago, St. Louis, Boston, Buffalo, Cincinnati, San Francisco (John T. Lewis & Bro. Co., Philadelphia) (National Lead and Oil Co., Pittsburgh)

BONDS
Secured by Selected
NEW YORK REAL ESTATE
Yield 6% Net Annually.
(Payable Semi-Annually)

An issue selected by careful investors, who for many years have recognized their unsurpassed combination of

SECURITY and INCOME

SEND FOR FREE BOOKLET 14.

15 YEARS' RESULTS:
Assets over $3,000,000
Surplus nearly . . . $1,000,000
Repaid Investors, over $1,000,000

New York Realty Owners
489 FIFTH AVENUE NEW YORK

The Supreme Motive Power*

WHERE our treasure is, there will our heart be also. Is your Saviour your treasure? Is his cause the dearest object of your life?

You remember that the lover in the old song said:

I could not love you, dear, so much,
Loved I not honor more.

So you cannot love your earthly friends so much, if you do not love Christ and his cause supremely. If we do not dwell on them in our thoughts and love to think of the glory and goodness of our God, by day and in the night-watches, there is indeed something sadly lacking in our lives.

For when we really and truly love, we shall not need to strain to interest ourselves in our church, our society, our work, our meetings. We shall await them eagerly, enter into them heartily, be sorry to have them close.

Have you never noticed how a single enthusiastic player in a game of croquet or tennis can stir the interest of his fellow-players, who may, perhaps, begin in a lukewarm and perfunctory spirit? Many a hostess who has planned an evening of games, some of which may be new to her guests, has blessed the enthusiastic ones, who enter into them with all their hearts, and make them successful. Thus a few truly loving and interested Christians can wake up a whole meeting, though it may have begun coldly enough.

And this overmastering love leads to the squaring of the whole life in accordance with it. If you truly love anybody, you long to please him and to meet all his wishes. Therefore the true Christian studies the Scriptures to find his Lord's will, and orders not only his words but his whole life accordingly.

In one of the great Welsh revivals, an infidel physician said to a friend, "I believe in this revival. It's a fine thing for me."

"How's that? Lots of lunatics to treat?" was the laughing rejoinder.

"No, not that. I've had £22 in outlawed debts paid me by people who have been touched by the revival. That's the kind of a revival I believe in."

And yet, in the face of a Gospel like this, the physician remained obstinately unmoved regarding his own soul. A religion which stirs deadened consciences to make restitution after long delay, has so plainly the right motive power behind it, that one feels that only the perverse and dull can possibly resist it.

Mr. Gilbert relates that Charles M. Alexander once found a church which was trying to create special interest in religion, but which remained cold until one evening he started the congregation to singing a hymn, one verse of which runs:

Make me love everybody
And it's good enough for me.

As they sang this over and over, the "fire began to burn," and Mr. Alexander relates it as an actual fact that before the song ended seventeen members of the church, who were not on speaking terms with one another, had confessed their sins and had renewed cordial relations, and the result was a great and beneficent revival.

"The whole nature," said Dr. Munger, "follows love. Where the heart is, there are all the treasures of mind and will. Let this love be planted in Christ, and, using this love as if it were some broad stream, the truth, the strength, the very righteousness of Christ float down into us and become our own."

*Topic of the Epworth League for Sunday, September 3. TEXTS: II. Cor. 5: 13, 14; John 13: 34; I. John 3: 16.

Anvil Sparks

..TWO going aheads are better than one.

..THERE are men who can stand and lie at the same time.

..GOOD service is payable in advance —also in advancement.

..BETTER to smile without meaning it than to be mean without a smile.

..WHEN the muckraker can't say something good about a man, he writes it.

..THE way of the transgressor is hard on those against whom he transgresses.

..AFTER a man has bought a lot of experience, the advice he offers to give gratis ought to be worth listening to.

Notable Speakers at Northfield

—AMONG THE speakers at the Northfield Conference this year are two celebrated English divines, Dr. W. H. Griffith-Thomas and Dr. J. Stuart Holden. Dr. Griffith-Thomas is Welsh both in name and appearance. He excels rather in solid careful teaching than in brilliant oratory. Dr. Holden, another Church of England lecturer, has been one of the most prominent speakers at the Conference for several years. His manner is gentle and retiring, but he excels in clearness of analysis and presentation.

SANITAS
THE WASHABLE WALL COVERING

The modern way of decorating every room of the house. Fade proof, stain proof, dust and dirt proof — never cracks or tears — instantly cleaned with a damp cloth.

Dull finished SANITAS—reproduction of fine wall-paper

For sleeping, living and dining rooms and the hallways, SANITAS offers the widest possible range of artistic decorative effects. The handsomest, most expensive papers and fabrics are faithfully reproduced, even improving on the originals.

SANITAS glazed tile reproduction

SANITAS for bathrooms, kitchens and pantries is glazed like tile. Every good tile design, plain or fancy, is made in SANITAS. SANITAS is printed in oil colors on strong muslin. It costs no more than good cartridge paper. It has not only set a new standard of wall covering service and cleanliness, but a superior order of decorative beauty at moderate cost.

Your dealer or decorator will show you SANITAS and demonstrate its wonderful service qualities. Or write us your needs fully describing the room or rooms you wish to decorate, and you will receive suitable SANITAS samples and interior sketches free.

STANDARD OIL CLOTH CO.
320 Broadway, Dept. 17, New York

STAMPED ON EVERY YARD
MERITAS Guaranteed OIL CLOTH
MERITAS
The Guaranteed Oilcloth
When buying table oilcloth ask for it by the name "Meritas." GUARANTEED by this trade-mark stamped on the back of every yard.

Fire Fighting and Telephonin

Both Need Team Work, Modern Tools and an Ever Ready Plant, Everywhere

Twenty men with twenty buckets can put out a small fire if each man works by himself.

If twenty men form a line and pass the buckets from hand to hand, they can put out a larger fire. But the same twenty men on the brakes of a "hand tub" can force a continuous stream of water through a pipe so fast that the bucket brigade seems futile by comparison.

The modern firefighter has gone away beyond the "hand tub." Mechanics build a steam fire engine, miners dig coal to feed it, workmen build reservoirs and lay pipes so that each nozzleman and engineer is worth a score of the old-fashioned firefighters.

The big tasks of today require not team work but also modern tools vast system of supply and distribu

The Bell telephone system is ar ample of co-operation between 000 stockholders, 120,000 empl and six million subscribers.

But to team work is added an u date plant. Years of time and hund of millions of money have been into the tools of the trade; into building of a nation-wide netwo lines; into the training of men an working out of methods. The res the Bell System of today—a uni men, money and machinery, to pr universal telephone service for n million people.

AMERICAN TELEPHONE AND TELEGRAPH COMPA
AND ASSOCIATED COMPANIES

One Policy One System Universal Ser

5% A Safe Investment Is Best for Idle Money

IT is possible to earn 6, 8, and 10% in unusual enterprises. But it is better to be sure of a liberal percentage, without risking your capital. This Company has paid 5% per annum, compounded semi-annually for eighteen years, and deposits can be withdrawn upon short notice at any time.

Assets of Over $2,300,000

Deposits received personally or by mail. Our mail-certificate system of deposit prevents the possibility of loss of bank-book. Our patrons, situated in all parts of the world, are careful investors.

Write for Booklet

Industrial Savings & Loan Co.
2 Times Bldg, B'way & 42d St., New York

INDUSTRIAL SAVINGS & LOAN CO. NEW YORK CITY

Protect

Your Medicine, Bath, and Toilet Accessories— and beautify your bathroom with this snow white enameled All Steel Cabinet at about

One-Half Usual Cost

Enameled inside and out, dust, germ and vermin-proof. Never warps, shrinks nor swells. Bevel plate mirror door, adjustable shelves. Nickeled bronze hinges and handle. Send postal for circular.

HESS MEDICINE CABINET STEEL SANITARY LOCKER

Cheaper than wood, easily cleaned; can be hung or sunk into wall of bathroom or any room in the ho Made in four styles and four sizes. Sent on appr anywhere in United States.

Write for prices and illustrated description to

HESS, 959 Tacoma Building, Chica
Makers, also of Steel Clothing Lockers

Amazing Profits
MADE IN MUSHROOMS

Anybody can make big money raising mushrooms entire year in cellars, sheds, barns, boxes, etc., in spare time. I tell you where to sell them. Write to-day for Free Illus. Instruction Booklet.

HIRAM BARTON
326 West 48th St., New York

MARVEL SOLDER

INSTANTLY MENDS ALL LEAKS

In all kinds of household utensils—enameled, tin, iron, copper, brass, etc. Solders Without Heat. Just squeeze from tube and spread over hole or crack with fingers. Hardening, it makes solid, smooth surface. Patches all machinery. Fine for motorists.

Send 10c for trial tube.

MARVEL SOLDER CO. AGENTS WANTED
1937 Broadway Dept. 8 New York QUICK SALES BIG PROFITS

TO INTRODUCE THE
$1.00 Celebrated "LENOX" Brand of Silk and Lisle Hosiery
For MEN and WOMEN
One Box Containing 6 Pairs

Guaranteed Fine Lisle Hose sent prepaid insured on receipt of One Dollar (Regular Pr $2). Men's, choice black, tan, navy, gray; lad black, tan. State size.

Guarantee:—If holes in toe or heel with months—New Ones Free. Obtainable only thro our accredited agents or direct. We refer to Du Bradstreet's or any Bank in New York City

LENOX SILK WORKS, Desk D, 5 West 31st St., New York
Manufacturers to Wearer Products.

Field Representatives Wanted in Every Com
Splendid Income assured.

For Developing and Printi

You will save money by writing me for prices. De ing 10 cts. per roll. Prints, 3 cts. up. Send two fil FREE velox prints. H. A. CLARK, 3 Plaza, Brooklyn

Our Boys and Girls

Bunny Rabbit's New Coat

By GEORGE H. SHOREY

BUNNY RABBIT'S mama had made for her little son a fine new coat. Oh, really, it was a very fine coat. Pockets? Yes, indeed; four of them; and each one large enough to hold a tiny turnip or a very little head of lettuce; and, dear oh me, if you could have seen the buttons! Great big fancy ones made of ss, and so bright and shiny that le Bunny Rabbit could look in each of them and see the reflection of own tiny whiskers!

Of course he was proud of his coat, adfully proud, and strutted about ore the Chipmunk and the Squirrel, Porcupine and the Weasel, and all other animals, as though he would er have done strutting by.

he Frog, I am sorry to say, grew natured about Bunny's stuckupitis, and took up a handful of mud, ich he surely would have thrown at nny had he not happened to see a in it, and by the time he had eaten fly, Bunny was out of reach. All little field folk grew so tired of see- Bunny strutting proudly around in fine new coat that the raccoon, om they all called Coony, declared would stand for it no longer, and n away with the coat that night ile Bunny was fast asleep.

oor Bun! How he searched the ods and the fields for his new little, n little coat! But no trace of it uld he find. The Frog, the Turtle, Chipmunk, the Mouse, the Squirr, the Porcupine, even the Fox and Mooley-Cow, he asked them all.

ey shook ir heads and id, "No." ey had not en it, which s quite true. "Hey, Bunny n!" called Crow one orning. ave you en Coony's w coat?"

"No, I have not seen it," said the y Rabbit sadly, shaking his head d winking his nose, and brushing ay a tear with the back of his foot. "It's a great beauty," said the Crow. "Is it any prettier than mine was?" bed Bunny, quite forlornly.

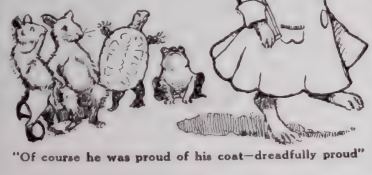
"Oh, much, much prettier, I think, friend. Come, we will go and see together."

So the two hopped across the field til they came to the gate in the old ke-and-rider fence, and there they ard a noise of some one snoring very dly. Peeking over curiously, there ey spied old Coony fast asleep, all ng and warm in his beautiful new ck coat. It was very short and pper on him, to be sure, but no one uld deny he looked a prince in it. nny shed a shower of tears and remembered his own great coat, so nice d woolly.

Then Bob Crow, whose waggish ys Bunny had never quite grasped, ispered something in his ear, and en the dullest would have known by eir nudges that a plot had that oment been concocted between them.

Pretty soon Bunny dashed across the field, and in a w moments back he came th tiny rabbit-armfuls of rrs wrapped up in velvety rdock leaves. One by one stealthily dropped the ickly ripe pods on Coony d on his own beautiful coat, but he did not know that. Then, quick as wink, he made off again across the field for more.

Meanwhile Coony slyly opened one eye, looked up at Bob Crow standing solemnly on the post nearby, and both fairly shouted with laughter. When Bunny got back with another armful of burrs, Coony pretended to snore again, and Bunny was tickled to death to see the Crow and all the animals grouped around and chuckling.



"Good joke on Coony!" laughed the Rabbit, throwing on the burrs thick and fast. Then the animals chuckled and winked and chuckled some more, but Bunny was oblivious.

Suddenly Coony yawned, stretched himself, stood up straight on his hind paws and "played surprise" to catch a sight of such a lot of burrs.

Bunny squeaked in funny bunny delight; his cotton tail bobbing up and down as he jumped about. Bob Crow lost his balance and fell from the post down among the animals that were leaning against each other to laugh it out.

"Good joke! Good joke!" squeaked Bunny some more, and all the animals winked and blinked together like the funny silly things that they were.

"Now, my friends, who is going to pick these burrs from off my nice new coat?" piped Coony, strutting by.

"Of course he was proud of his coat—dreadfully proud"

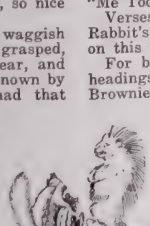
"You! you! you! who else?" said Bunny, holding his sides to laugh.

"It is you, you, you, my friend Bunny Rabbit. You shall take off the burrs," cried Coony-Boy, as angry as a Coony-Boy can be. Then turning the coat t'other side about, the joke soon turned on Bunny.

"That is what you get, Mr. Bun, Bun, Bun, for being so proud and haughty." And all the animals fled, leaving Bunny to pick off the burrs; but happy enough, after all, because he had found at last his beauteous new fur coat.

NEXT WEEK'S COZY CORNER

THE Cozy Corner will be given over next week to work done by boys and girls. It will also contain answers to the August puzzles, and the names of our young people whose work during July and August has shown special merit.



More Prize Offers

I SHOULD especially like to have you send me this week, nice headings for the Cozy Corner pages during the month of September. (Pen and ink, water colors, or wash.)

Photographs entitled: "Lessons," or "Me Too."

Verses: "Polly and I," or "Bunny Rabbit's New Coat" (from the story on this page).

For best work under any of these headings will be given an A No. 1 Brownie Kodak. Second and third prizes are Naval Blue Hill Box Kite for the boys, and a beautiful box of Japanese water-color paints for the girls; and all work beyond the average will receive a Cozy Corner prize.

The Aunt in the Cozy Corner

Bible House, New York

We Prepay All Delivery Charges

Our Big 600 Page Free Book

Offers You

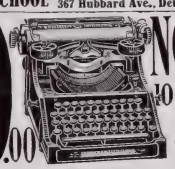
Dresses, Skirts
Shirt Waists
Tailored Suits
House Gowns
Fur Coats
Fur Sets
Tourist Coats
Automobile Accessories
Muslin Underwear
Knit Underwear
Gloves
Men's Suits
Men's Overcoats
Men's Underwear
Men's Furnishings
Men's Gloves
Girls' Dresses
Girls' Coats
Girls' Underwear
Boys' Suits
Boys' Overcoats
Boys' Underwear
Infants' Dresses
Infants' Caps
Watches, Jewelry
Umbrellas
Belts, Shoes
Ostrich Plumes
Feather Boas
Laces, Silks
Dress Goods
Hosiery, Pipes
Smoking Materials
Silverware, China
Cut Glass, Notions
Carpets and Rugs
Lace Curtains
Sewing Machines
Pianos, Books
Stationery
Cream Separators
Stoves and Ranges
Kitchen Utensils
Baby Carriages
Hardware, Drugs
Groceries

—in short, everything for the American home in the famous Macy quality, at surprisingly low prices. Ask for your free copy of the book today—right now.

to any railway station in the United States on a greater variety of merchandise than any other store in America.

Our Delivered Price on Ready-to-wear Apparel, (excepting shoes) for all the family is just the same to everyone, whether your home is in California or in New York. Distance makes no difference. You can buy just as easily, just as satisfactorily, from the Macy Catalogue, as if you were to visit the famous Macy store in person, and the Ready-to-wear Apparel (excepting shoes) you select will be delivered anywhere, with all charges prepaid by us. This broad, liberal policy in connection with our guarantee of satisfaction or your money back, will surely make many thousands of new friends for us this year, and we hope you will be among them.

New York Styles Are the Newest New York Prices Are the Lowest



Every woman knows that New York is the fashion center of America, and Macy's is the largest and best New York City store. Our big free Catalogue offers you the latest New York and European styles months in advance, the very finest things in Ready-to-wear Apparel of every description for every member of the family, at prices much lower than those asked by other dealers, at home or elsewhere, for equal quality. Macy's sell only merchandise of the best qualities, and Macy's New York Store is famous as the most economical shopping center in America. More than 250,000 critical New York shoppers pass through our aisles in a single day, and if these discriminating buyers find Macy's the best place to supply their wants, surely you will find it the most satisfactory place to supply your wants, too.

The Macy Catalogue, now ready, quotes you a delivered price on thousands of articles you will need this Fall, and it shows such wonderful varieties in every line of merchandise required in every American home that you ought not to buy anything for Fall or Winter until you write for this Free Catalogue, and look through its pages. You can live better, and at lower cost, with this book in your possession, because it establishes the standard of quality you should get and the price you should pay. Just write us a letter or a postal card and say, "Please send me a copy of your new Fall Catalogue," and we will send it to you by return mail, free and postpaid.

R. H. MACY & CO.
811 Macy Building, New York

YOU CAN AFFORD to have a new Song Book in your Church or Sunday School, and one for every person when you can get "FAMILIAR SONGS OF THE GOSPEL" for $3 for 100. Words and music, 83 very best songs. Sample copy 5 Cents. E. A. K. Hackett, 100 North Wayne St., Fort Wayne, Ind.

STAMMERING HABIT permanently corrected. Natural speech taught. Reed Method being introduced into public schools. Department for training teachers. Endorsed by highest authorities. Special summer classes for children. Trial Week Free. REED SCHOOL 367 Hubbard Ave., Detroit, Mich.

$10.00 NOW 10 CENTS A DAY

BUYS THE

Pittsburgh Visible Typewriter

The original Visible Writing Typewriter not excelled by any machine at any price

ONE FREE One Pittsburgh Visible Typewriter Free in every City, town and neighborhood. One Free to every man or woman, boy or girl who will do us a small service. No selling or soliciting necessary, only a small service which anyone can render.

The Pittsburgh Visible does anything that any other machine will do. Has perfect touch, absolute alignment, quick action, back spacer, tabulator, two-color ribbon, universal keyboard, etc. It is easy to operate, is strong, durable and fully guaranteed. The writing is visible at all times.

The Pittsburgh Visible is a perfect writing machine for railroads and large corporations or for the small office and the home. One ought to be in every home.

$65 NOW—LATER THE PRICE WILL BE $100

TO GET ON FREE and to learn of our easy terms and full particulars regarding this unprecedented offer say to us in a letter: "Mail your Free Offer."

Pittsburgh Visible Typewriter Co.
ESTABLISHED 20 YEARS
Dept. 30. Union Bank Building, Pittsburgh, Pa.

GUARANTEED Freight Paid

Our Gold Coin Stove Guaranty is to take back the stove at our expense, any time within a year and refund your money if you are not satisfied.

Freight is prepaid; safe delivery insured, ready to set up—even polished. Send for our Free Catalogue, Price List and Offer.

Our prices are $5 to $20 less than any dealer's prices. The stoves are only of the very best—and so guaranteed.

Gold Coin Stove Co. 11 Oak Street, Troy, N. Y.

"RANGER" BICYCLES

Have imported roller chains, sprockets and pedals; New Departure Coaster-Brakes and Hubs; Puncture Proof Tires; highest grade equipment and many advanced features possessed by no other wheels. Guaranteed 5 yrs.

FACTORY PRICES are less than others ask for cheap wheels. Other reliable models from $12 up. A few good second-hand machines $3 to $8.

10 DAYS' FREE TRIAL We ship on approval, freight prepaid, anywhere in U. S. without a cent in advance. DO NOT BUY a bicycle or a pair of tires from anyone at any price until you get our big new catalog and special prices and a marvelous new offer. Write it now.

A postal brings everything.

TIRES Coaster Brake Rear Wheels, lamps, parts, and sundries half usual prices.

Rider Agents everywhere are coining money selling our bicycles, tires and sundries. Write today.

MEAD CYCLE CO. Dept. L-71, CHICAGO

FOR INDIGESTION
MURRAY'S CHARCOAL TABLETS
Once Only, for trial
A 25c box for 10c
A. J. Ditman, 2 Astor House, N. Y.

Many Peace Circles Organizing

NO EVENT in the vast affairs of the world to-day is more manifestly important than the final signing of Arbitration Treaties between the United States and the Governments of Great Britain and France. On the third day of August, 1911, the Peace Movement that has been smouldering in the hearts of the people for years was lifted out of the dusky dreamland of the impracticable into the atmosphere of every-day affairs, and the welfare of nations advanced centuries at a single bound. The three most civilized nations of the earth have outgrown warfare. It is safe to prophesy that in the near future probably Japan, Russia, Germany, Austria, Italy, and the nations of the Scandinavian peninsula will have joined the ranks of Peace.

President Taft and his Cabinet deserve national approval for the part they have taken in this great work. Every member of every Peace Circle, every reader of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD in fact may become a personal factor in the Peace Movement now.

Please Answer

Send us your names, your own signatures written in ink that we may attach them to a letter of approval which we will forward to the President to let him know how the Peace Circles and the readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD regard the splendid achievements of our present administration in the Arbitration Treaties. Send your name at once.

In the Cause of Universal Peace

WE REGARD this opportunity in the light of great responsibility. Countless thousands of men and women may come forward and speak to other countless thousands in favor of Universal Peace on Earth, Good Will to Man. The opportunity seems almost a sacred one. May we not hear from every reader of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD? From every loyal citizen who shall read this plea?

New Peace Circles Organized

RECENT enlistments among CHRISTIAN HERALD Peace League workers are:

July 27, 1911.—Mrs. M. V. Beene, Tennessee; Mrs. C. W. Harter, Missouri; Rev. Pavel L. Mishkoff, Bulgaria.

August 2, 1911.—Mr. J. R. Townsend, California; Mrs. Eliza S. Frame, Oregon; Miss Ellen P. Doolittle, Minnesota; Mr. H. J. Willis, Ohio.

August 7, 1911.—Mr. Adam Kern, Missouri; Mr. Harry Mason, Ohio; Mrs. Mary C. Lorentz, Virginia; Mr. Elwin E. Gray, Iowa; Miss Juliet W. Hill, Missouri.

August 8, 1911.—Mrs. E. P. Rollman, Ohio.

The Immediate Task

THE major theme for debate in CHRISTIAN HERALD Peace League Circles for the fortnight ending September 6 is: "The Immediate Repsonsibility at the Hands of the People."

Suggested Topics for Three-Minute Speeches and Debates

New Social Theories and New Idealisms.

A Democracy Based on Justice, not on Gunpowder.

Brotherhood Based on Law and Love, not on Armies and Navies.

Recognition of Common Rights, Based on the Good Will of Men toward One Another.

Other Suggested Themes for Discussion

No. 1.—War Expenditure versus Peace Expenditure, or better ways of spending $12,000,000 (the cost of one battleship) and $1,072,000,000, or what eight years' increase in army and navy has cost the American people.

No. 2.—The Moroccan War Cloud. A war cloud has arisen upon the political horizon of Europe, as if at this precise psychological moment to make plain the dire consequences that its bursting would mean to civilization. It is unthinkable that statesmen can be found in this immediate day, who can seriously contemplate plunging their countries into a conflict so terrible that a century of recuperation would not efface the effects.

No expansion of territory, no commercial supremacy would justify such a war. This is an age of reason, not of bloodshed.

Local Peace Circles

APPROPRIATE plans for organizing and conducting local Peace Circles, in the city, the village, the church, the school, the home, together with programmes and delightful suggestions for social evenings, will be forwarded to any one writing and asking for them.

To the Secretaries of the Circles already formed, we will forward our Peace Pamphlet, No. 3—The Grange of Peace—a most interesting report of the Committee on International Peace.

Address all communications to CHRISTIAN HERALD PEACE LEAGUE,
Bible House, New York City.

Safeguard Your Investments

How to gain the largest income return from surplus funds without the sacrifice of safety is the problem that confronts every investor.

It is a problem that you cannot solve without safe, conservative guidance. The study of security and of equities is a highly specialized science. The bonds in which you put your savings should first of all be analyzed by experts who study your interest.

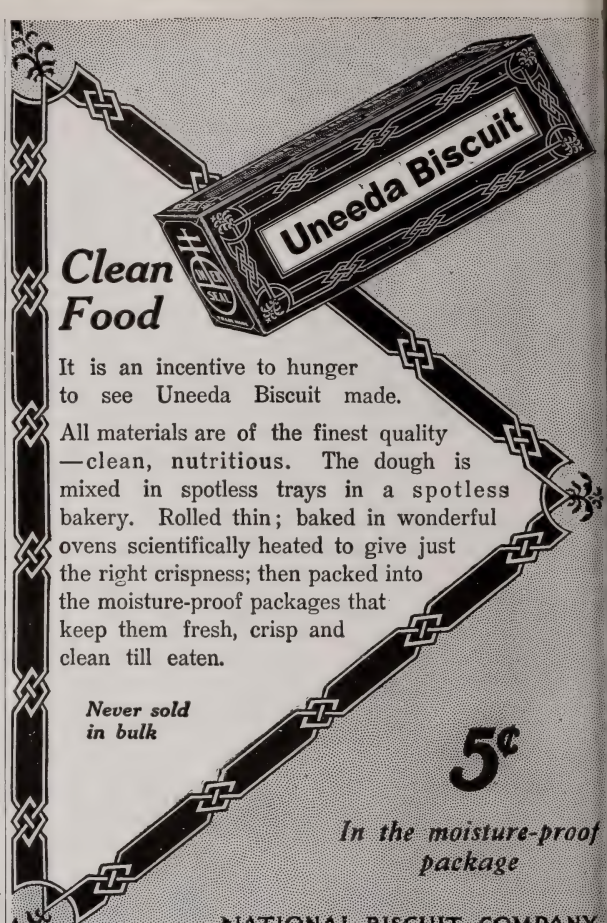
The house of J. S. & W. S. Kuhn, Inc., has come to be looked upon by thousands of investors as a safe counsellor. And this will seem to be natural when it is borne in mind that the securities sold by this house from its beginning have an unfailing record for the prompt payment of both principal and interest.

You can feel sure when you buy bonds offered by J. S. & W. S. Kuhn, Inc., that they have ample equities and earning powers to safeguard your funds. Every possible test is applied to the bonds we offer before we ask you to invest in them.

Let us tell you how to become an owner of bonds even if your capital is small. Write to Dept. V, for our latest circular giving brief description of water works, hydro-electric, traction and general public utility bonds we are now offering

To Yield from 5% to 6%

Our Municipal Department carries at all times many attractive County, City and School Bonds to yield from 3½% to 4½%. Send for latest list.



J. S. & W. S. KUHN, Inc.

Bank for Savings Building, Pittsburgh, Pa.

CHICAGO PHILADELPHIA NEW YORK
KUHN, FISHER & CO., Inc., BOSTON

NEWSPAPER OPPORTUNITIES!

Write now for full particulars regarding good locations for publishing weekly newspapers. Newspaper Outfits, new and secondhand, for sale on reasonable terms. Favorable openings available for securing a paying established business at a low cost. Western Newspaper Union, Fort Wayne, Indiana.

Clean Food

It is an incentive to hunger to see Uneeda Biscuit made.

All materials are of the finest quality—clean, nutritious. The dough is mixed in spotless trays in a spotless bakery. Rolled thin; baked in wonderful ovens scientifically heated to give just the right crispness; then packed into the moisture-proof packages that keep them fresh, crisp and clean till eaten.

Never sold in bulk

5¢

In the moisture-proof package

NATIONAL BISCUIT COMPANY

BE A NURSE

AND BE INDEPENDENT

One of the most profitable and best paid Professions open to women. Home Instruction.

Pays $10 to $25 a Week

To those sending on or before Oct. 20th, we make this Special Offer:

Plan 1, $30 Cash full Payment of Course
Plan 2, $25 and $5 monthly for 2 months
Plan 3, $15 and $5 monthly for 5 months
Regular price of Course, $50.00

Send postal for illustrated booklet and application blank.

Rochester Nurses Institute,
176 Institute Bldg.,
Rochester, - - N.Y.

"DON'T SHOUT"

"I hear you. I can hear now as well as anybody. 'How?' Oh, something new—The MORLEY PHONE. I've a pair in my cars now, but they are invisible. I would not know I had them in, myself, only that I hear all right."

The MORLEY PHONE for the DEAF

makes low sounds and whispers plainly heard. Invisible, comfortable, weightless and harmless. Anyone can adjust it. Over a Hundred Thousand Sold. Write for booklet and testimonials. THE MORLEY CO., Dept. 754, Perry Building, Philadelphia

If you know any one who would be helped by cheerful, uplifting books, send these two

MY FRIEND WILL

By CHARLES F. LUMMIS

A chapter of human experience which carries a message to all in affliction. The victim of a stroke of paralysis, all but helpless, shows how, by the sheer exercise of will-power he overcame his circumstances and developed unexpected powers and sources of enjoyment. It was this little story which the war correspondent Edward Marshall said pulled him through when he was shot through the spine in Cuba. Many requests have reached Mr. Lummis to issue it in book form.

Small 18mo. Illustrated. 75 cents net

The Soul in a Flower

By SARA A. HUBBARD

Author of "The Duty of Being Beautiful," etc.

This is another of Mrs. Hubbard's popular essays, uplifting and poetic in sentiment, and in this case arousing interest in the habits and lives of plants and flowers, each of which is endowed by the author with a soul and personality.

Novelty style. 50 cents net

For sale at Your Bookseller's

A. C. McCLURG & CO., PUBLISHERS

EVERYWOMAN SHOULD EARN $25 PER WEEK

Introducing our very complete line of wool suitings, wash fabrics, fancy waistings, silks, hdkfs., petticoats, hosiery, etc. Deal direct with the mills, our prices are low. Others make $10 to $30 00 weekly—you can also. Samples, instructions, etc., in full, charges prepaid. No money required. Exclusive territory. Be first to apply for Agency. Standard Dress Goods Co., Dept. Standard Building Binghamton.

Wanted: Men and Women Agents

Sell Linenwear Hosiery made for men, women and children. Some sheer as silk. Linen toes and heels. Double soles. Triple wear. Big profits. Sell $1 for 3 sample pairs or write for full information.

H. E. Robinson, Gen'l Agent
LINENWEAR HOSIERY CO.
164 West 129th Street, NEW YORK CITY

AGENTS! BIG PROFITS

Makes every Man an expert
No experience necessary
Guaranteed for life

New patented Automatic Razor Stropper. Automatically puts a perfect edge on any razor, old or safety. Big seller. Every man wants one. Write quick for terms, prices and territory.
C. Brandt Cutlery Co., 84 W. Broadway, N.Y.

"LEST WE FORGET"*

Sunday School Lesson by Dr. and Mrs. Wilbur F. Crafts

A Panoramic View

HOSE about whom we have been studying for the last three months will now pass by us one ie.

rst comes Isaiah, the prophet of ord. Read Isa. 6: 1-8 concern- his divine call and commission. work was along two lines: First, eprove God's chosen people for apostasy, and second, to proclaim coming Christ as the suffering our for the world. It is said of h: "In him we see prophetic au- hip reaching its culminating . In the sentiment he expresses, e topics of his discourses and in manner, Isaiah uniformly reveals elf as the king-prophet."—Ewald. prophesied during the reigns of e kings—Jotham, Ahaz and Heze- —a period of sixty-one years. ng all those years Isaiah was ing, not growing old, but renew- is strength in the Lord to do the 's work. Henry Ward Beecher said: "There are some men who like the horse-chestnut tree that es all its growth in about four s and stands the rest of the sum- without swelling a bud or develop- a leaf. That is not an evil in a because it is a tree; but it is an in a man, who is not a tree, and ought to grow from the very g to the very autumn, and never the month in which he is not ating, budding, blossoming, and ging forth fruit. Our type should be orange tree, that is never without n leaves, never without white blos- , never without fruit that is set- and never without ripening . A man may have had the high- nors of his time; he may have engaged in all the enterprises of day; but there is no reason for his ption from activity."

The Character of Hezekiah

cond, King Hezekiah, noble son of e and ungodly father, the apostate z. He overcame his bad heredity, is ranked with his ancestor, King id, as being among the greatest s of Judah. He was brave and , because he dared to destroy the en serpent which was made by es, and had been a miraculous r under God in saving the lives of sands of people. Hezekiah de- yed it because it had become an He was brave and bold in de- ying all idols. He was broad- led and generous in that he invited ten tribes who had fallen away God to the worship of the calves, me to the great Passover in Jeru- n and worship the true God. He untiring in his kingly duties, ding for longer life, when it was him he must die. God answered prayer, giving him fifteen years e of life. "A good old age is an age conscious of its privileges and es. Old age is a lofty height reached steps cut out of the rock of ever- ng time, which steps we call years, ight for discovery of truth, and for er visions of God. The rough ex- ences of life have not taken away telescope of truth if the soul ever ly loved the truth. The rare calm hat lofty summit is favorable to a which has learned to respect it- and has dared to be still that it ht listen to God."—Dr. Gunsaulus.

hird, Sennacherib. He was the test pagan of the ages. Two of most wonderful cities the world ever known were his capitals— Babylon, and then Nineveh. The tary victories of Sennacherib and raits of himself engraved upon e stones, together with the rem- ts of his palaces, form a large and interesting part of the archæological treasures of present-day museums. But great as was his military powers, King Hezekiah conquered his great army of one hundred and eighty-five thousand in one night through prayer, so that in the morning they were all dead corpses (II. Kings 19: 20, 35). Sennacherib raised another army, and time and again came to fight against Jerusalem; after Hezekiah had died, and other kings ruled in his place, he conquered, because the kings did not have God for their helper. Sennacherib was at last killed by his own sons when he was worshiping his idol gods. In death Sennacherib met a conqueror greater than himself.

King and Arch-Traitor

Third, Manasseh, king of Judah and arch-traitor to the Living God. It is said that during his reign the only kind of worship not allowed in Judah was that of Jehovah. This is true particularly of the first part of his reign. That condition seems all the more terrible, because for twenty-nine years previous Judah had been under the godly rule of King Hezekiah, Manasseh's father. We saw Manasseh first as a boy king, only twelve years of age, and it may be supposed that his evil rule was largely determined by those who were acting as regents during his minority. But he grew up as a leader in idolatry, for when he himself was a father he sacrificed some of his own children to the idol god Moloch. He set up idols in the very temple of God, and worshiped all the host of heaven, the sun, moon and chief stars, and the twelve signs of the zodiac. But God punished him by letting the king of Assyria come and take him as a prisoner to Babylon. Then Manasseh began to be sorry for all that he had done against God, and he prayed to be forgiven, and to be allowed to go back to his own land and break down the idols, and teach the people to worship the true God. God put it into the heart of the king of Assyria to send him back. It is said that "after Manasseh's restoration, he lived like a penitent and a patriot," but better still, it might he said, he followed the example of his godly father Hezekiah and restored the services of true religion. Manasseh reigned as king fifty-five years, three years longer than any other king in Judah. God was gracious to him in giving such an opportunity to undo the wickedness he had led the people into.

A King Who Sought God

"Which is the most delightful emotion?" asked a teacher of his deaf and dumb pupils after teaching them the names of various feelings. The pupils turned to their slates; one wrote "joy," another "hope," another "gratitude," another "love." One turned back with a countenance full of peace; and the teacher was surprised to find on her slate the word "repentance." He asked her why she thought it was the most delightful emotion. "Oh," she said in the expressive language of looks and gesture, "it is so delightful to be humble before God." Possibly we get a little touch of that feeling when we have been "at outs" with a friend and then make up!

Fourth, King Josiah now appears before us, first as a boy eight years of age, and we observe him until he dies at the age of thirty-nine years. He was one of Judah's most godly kings, and the secret of it was that while he was yet young, he began to seek God. Then as now the kind of a boy determines the kind of a man. Under King Josiah's rule, God's temple was cleared of idol trash and refitted for the worship of the true God. In the cleaning up a wonderful old book was found, even the Bible that had been used in he Quarterly Review, September 3, 1911. EN TEXT: "Depart from evil and do good; peace and pursue it." Ps. 34: 14.

Continued on next page

How a Mother Brought Her Daughter To Disgrace

She was a careful mother, too, or believed she was: of good family and social position, and the girl was what we call "a nice girl." Yet, the mother awoke one morning amazed to find "her girl" in jail and disgraced. The girl was as astonished as was the mother.

And the author says, who tells the story:

"Thousands of mothers are doing exactly for their girls what this mother did, only they don't know it." But they should know it, and it will surprise many a mother to read how she is doing it.

It is a graphic story, true to life, forcibly told, and with a ring in it that strikes no uncertain sound.

Read it in the September LADIES' HOME JOURNAL.

15 Cents Everywhere

How Can I Make a Cat Stretch Itself On the Stage Every Night?

That is what puzzled David Belasco. He wanted to give a domestic touch to a play: If he could only get a cat to come on the stage at a particular point in the play, stretch itself and lap a saucer of milk. But how to make a cat stretch every night at a given time? He puzzled over it for days. Then an ingenious idea struck him, and every night for 400 nights he made a cat stretch. It made the success of the play. Read how he did it. You never would have thought it possible.

"Little things like that have made my plays successful," says Mr. Belasco. Then he tells of the "little things," all in an article, "Why I Believe in the Little Things." It is a picture "behind the scenes"—but it is more.

It is in the September LADIES' HOME JOURNAL.

15 Cents Everywhere

EAT WITH YOUR BRAINS

Dietetic Intelligence Means Better Living at Lower Cost—The Best Foods are the Least Expensive

It is a common error to judge of the nutritive value of a food by its cost. As a matter of fact, food values do not run parallel with prices. This has been proven by dietetic authorities over and over again and has recently found confirmation in the results of an investigation carried on for years by the Department of Agriculture in the interest of economy and good living among the laboring classes. It has been demonstrated beyond a doubt that very many of the most expensive foods are almost entirely lacking in tissue-building and bone making material.

This fact is very tersely stated in the following paragraph which appeared in a recent bulletin of the Chicago School of Sanitary Instruction:

"The cost of an article of food is no true guide as to its real nutritive value. For example, a glass of pure milk, with bread and butter, an egg, and a dish of fruit, costing, all told, twenty-five cents, is a much better meal for the average person than a big sirloin steak which with 'trimmings' will cost five times as much. The trouble with many people is they are willing to pay high prices for food that, while it tickles or pleases their palates, is yet of no more value than that costing much less."

The so-called "palate-foods" which please the sense of taste are generally lacking in digestible, body-building material. Sirloin steak, eggs, sweetmeats and pastries, for instance, cost a good deal more money than shredded wheat biscuit and yet are not nearly so easily digested, and do not contain as much real nutrition for the human body. Recent dietetic investigations have shown that the public has been laboring under a delusion regarding the nutritive value of eggs. As a matter of fact, they are not nearly as nutritious as peas, beans or lentils, and these in turn are far below shredded wheat biscuit in nutritive value. It is probably a fact that there is no more perfectly balanced or more nutritious food on earth than a shredded wheat biscuit with milk or cream, while the addition of a little fresh fruit makes it a more wholesome ration for the average person, especially the person who leads a somewhat sedentary life.

Shredded wheat with milk or cream not only supplies all the tissue-building material needed by the perfect human body, but the outer coats of the wheat grain which it contains have the property of stimulating peristalsis (bowel exercise) which keeps the alimentary tract in a clean and healthy condition.

Sunday School Lesson

Continued from preceding page

the time of Moses. How eagerly the young king listened to the reading of it, and then how sorrowful he became when he found that God had a great punishment in store for his wicked people! Then he took the old Bible and read it aloud to the people, hoping to turn them from their wicked ways to be true followers of God.

An old Scotch drill-sergeant was training the young men of his village in sword exercises. He kept them thrusting until they thought they had enough of that particular exercise, and they said to their instructor: "Now teach us to parry." "Oh," said the old swordsman, "you must do the thrust, and let the enemy do the parry." The Bible is the sword of the Spirit, and we must learn how to thrust evil with it. We must learn how to parry with it, too, so that when Satan or any of his co-workers try to make us do wrong we shall have Scripture words to drive them away, just as Jesus did when Satan tempted him in the wilderness.

The Bible-Burner

Fifth, King Jehoiakim now passes before us. His face looks as though he has been sitting too near a fire! And that is true. There has been a Bible-burning carried on by Jehoiakim's own hand. The whole Bible was not then written, and the part which Jehoiakim burned was fresh from God, given by the hand of the prophet Jeremiah. It had too much in it about God's punishments to please King Jehoiakim—the punishments which God would give to him and to his people. But after the book was burned, God told Jeremiah to write the words over again, and he did so.

Many Bibles have been burned since then, whole piles of them at once, as at St. Paul's Cross in London; but there are more Bibles in the world today than there ever were before, and the printing of Bibles is being done on a grander scale, and it is useless for enemies of the Bible to try to burn it up. Among books, the Bible is acknowledged to be "the best seller" in all the world.

Sixth. Now the prophet Jeremiah with his sorrowful but resolute face comes before us, and with him is Baruch, his faithful scribe and fellow-prisoner; and Ebed-melech with his kind black face, the king's officer, who delivered Jeremiah from the cesspool prison. Jeremiah never feared to stand before kings, and deliver to them the whole message of God, even though it showed to them their downfall.

Jeremiah's Mission

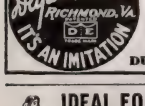
We see Jeremiah dwelling in a cave near the ruined city of Jerusalem. He was taken captive when Nebuchadnezzar's army entered Jerusalem, but was afterward given permission to return, which he did that he might speak the Lord's words to the aged and the feeble who had been left behind. We see Jeremiah again down in Egypt where he has been forced to go by those who thought they desired his counsel. He was still the brave and true prophet. God has need of Jeremiahs to-day to make this a better world here and now.

Seventh. A throng of people is passing before us as in a moving picture. If we should count them, they would number nearly twenty thousand. They are captives in chains; among them is their king Zedekiah, a weak and wicked man, who worshiped idols instead of the true God. The captives are leaving their home city of Jerusalem, and are being taken to Babylon, the city of their captors. They remembered Zion as they dwelt in Babylon, and their hearts turned toward their God, and they obeyed thereafter at least the first two commandments: "Thou shalt have no other gods before me." "Thou shalt not make unto thee any graven image."

I Was Deaf 25 Years
NOW I HEAR PLAINLY

with this artificial EAR DRUM in my ears. I never feel them. They are perfectly comfortable, and no one sees them. I will tell you the true story, how I got deaf, and how I made myself hear.

Medicated Ear Drum Pat. July 15, 1908



ARTIFICIAL EAR DRUM COMPANY
2 ADELAIDE STREET DETROIT, MICH.

We Carpet YOUR Floor-$2.50

Fashionable. Artistic. Sanitary. Designs from real Turkish Rugs.
Brusselex Art Rugs
Fast dyes Close woven, durable. Can be used both sides All colors and sizes 9 x 6ft — $2.50; 9 x 9ft. — $3.50; 9 x 12ft. — $4.50 Sent on receipt of price. Freight prepaid Your money back if not satisfied Catalog in colors, free Write to-day
Keystone Rug Co., 604 D. Bourse Bldg, Philadelphia, Pa.

UNLESS IT'S Duplex RICHMOND, Va. IT'S AN IMITATION
Specify "Duplex-Richmond"
We have made as many permanent customers for the Duplex Envelope System of Church Collections
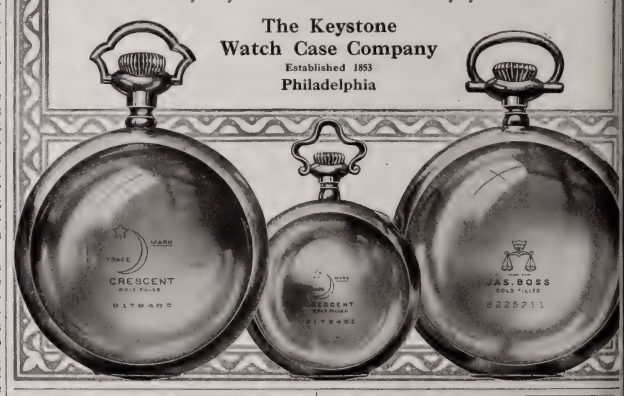
by the excellence of our service as by the excellence of our system.
DUPLEX — Richmond, Va.

IDEAL FOLDING BATH TUB
Pat. Pending
For tabless houses, campers, cold water flats, maid's room, use in any room. Light, lasts years. Write for Low introductory offer.
N. O. Y. BATH MFG. CO.
103 Chambers St., N. Y.

Look Inside the Watch Case for the Name "Crescent" or "Jas. Boss"

The cheapening process that has crept into the watch-case business has hurt the legitimate jewelry store.



Too often the jeweler himself has been blinded by the "guarantee" stamped inside a low-grade case.

You are partly to blame because you inquire about the movement of a watch and pay little attention to the case.

Thousands of filled cases are sold every day with the layers of gold so thin that the engraving or engine-turning can not be done with a diamond-pointed tool. It is merely burnished on. Such a case may be stamped "guaranteed for 20 years" when it will not wear twenty weeks.

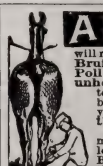
You can be sure of legitimate value if you will insist on a "Crescent" or "Jas. Boss" gold-filled case and look for our trademarks. They are standard with the fine jewelry trade, and have been for fifty years.

The Keystone Watch Case Company
Established 1853
Philadelphia

MANAGER wanted every city and county, handle good paying business, legitimate, new, exclusive control; no insurance or book canvassing. Address C. Halstead, 43 W. 34th St., New York.

EVERY MEAL CALLS FOR MAPLEINE
The "Flavor de Luxe"

Begin with Breakfast—Add a few drops of Mapleine to sugar syrup and you have an irresistibly delicious home-made syrup to pour over the hot cakes or corn muffins.



Then at Lunch—For flavoring icings and fillings for cakes, for flavoring ice-cream and milk puddings, in baked beans and other things, you will find that Mapleine adds a rich, mild mellowness of flavor.

And at Dinner—Every course, from soup to custard, may be varied at will and improved upon by adding a few drops of Mapleine as a flavoring or a sauce.

Mapleine is a delightful flavoring every housewife should have on hand. Grocers sell Mapleine—35c 2-oz. bottle (in Canada 50c). If not, send to Dept. F.

Crescent Mfg. Co.
Seattle, Washington
"Mapleine Dainties," our recipe book—sent free.

ABSORBINE
will reduce inflamed, swollen Joints, Bruises, Soft Bunches. Cure Boils. Poll Evil, Quitor, Fistula or any unhealthy sore quickly; pleasant to use; does not blister under bandage or remove the hair, and you can work the horse. $2 per bottle, delivered. Book 7 F free.
ABSORBINE, JR., liniment for mankind. Reduces Painful, Swollen Veins, Goitre, Wens, Strains, Bruises, stops Pain and Inflammation. Price $1.00 per bottle at dealers or delivered. Will tell you more if you write. Manufactured only by W. F. YOUNG, P.D.F., 5 Temple St., Springfield, Mass.

STOP DRUDGING

Don't work yourself to death cleaning and polishing furniture in the old-fashioned way, with soap and water or varnish.
3-in-One Oil removes spots, scratches and scars from piano cases, fine furniture and all varnished surfaces easier, quicker and better than any furniture polish. It brings back the original lustre, dries quickly and gives a bright, lasting finish.
FREE Write for generous sample bottle and "the-new-way" to polish furniture, both free.
3-in-One Oil Co., 42 B H Broadway NEW YORK

GET POWER

The Supply Comes From Food.

If we get power from food why not strive to get all the power we can. That is only possible by use of skilfully selected food that exactly fits the requirements of the body.

Poor fuel makes a poor fire and a poor fire is not a good steam producer.

"From not knowing how to select the right food to fit my needs, I suffered grievously for a long time from stomach troubles," writes a lady from a little town in Missouri.

"It seemed as if I would never be able to find out the sort of food that was best for me. Hardly anything that I could eat would stay on my stomach. Every attempt gave me heartburn and filled my stomach with gas. I got thinner and thinner until I literally became a living skeleton and in time was compelled to keep to my bed.

"A few months ago I was persuaded to try Grape-Nuts food, and it had such good effect from the very beginning that I have kept up its use ever since. I was surprised at the ease with which I digested it. It proved to be just what I needed.

"All my unpleasant symptoms, the heartburn, the inflated feeling which gave me so much pain disappeared. My weight gradually increased from 98 to 116 pounds, my figure rounded out, my strength came back, and I am now able to do my housework and enjoy it. Grape-Nuts food did it." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

A ten days' trial will show anyone some facts about food.

Read the little book, "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs. "There's a reason."

Ever read the above letter? A new one appears from time to time. They are genuine, true, and full of human interest.

The Christian Herald Bond Book

WE have received so many requests for copies of the financial articles which have been appearing in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, that we thought it wise to preserve them in pamphlet form. Any reader may secure a copy of this useful booklet without charge by forwarding 4 cents in stamps to cover postage. Address The Christian Herald, Dept. 96, Bible House, New York

USE A PORTABLE

BOSS OVEN

With Patented GLASS DOOR

on your stove or range, either oil, gasoline, acetylene, alcohol or gas.

No more spoiled bakings or worry—No more wasted heat—No more jarring or chilling of oven. Housewives can see their baking without opening door. Economy and convenience both guaranteed in the BOSS—a polished blued steel oven lined with tin and asbestos.

Look for Name BOSS on Every Oven is guaranteed not to break from heat because it is secured by our patented yielding pressure retaining strips, which permit expansion and contraction. Glass door fits snugly in one-piece beaded front, and is held tightly in place with two turnbuckles, preventing escape of heat.

GLASS in DOOR

Baking qualities and ventilation superior to any other oven or range. All heat goes right into the open bottom, and is perfectly distributed to all parts of the oven by means of our patented Heat Deflector. Flame always visible through small mica windows. With the BOSS a baking costs less than a cent. It will many times cover pay for itself in saved bakings to say nothing of saved fuel.

Ask YOUR Dealer to show you the BOSS Glass Door Oven. INSIST upon seeing the name "BOSS" stamped in the front of Oven. Then you know that it is genuine and guaranteed.

FREE. Our valuable Recipe Book, containing many cookery helps and full description of BOSS Ovens sent FREE on receipt of postal, plainly written, giving your own and your dealer's names and addresses.

THE HUENEFELD CO. 2781 Spring Grove Ave. Cincinnati, O

Great Lives: Daniel*

THE book of Daniel is divided into two distinct parts. The first treats of the history of Daniel and other prominent Hebrew captives at the court of Babylon. The second is composed of prophecies upon the meaning of which the wisdom and ingenuity of many great commentators have been expended for hundreds of years, but which are not yet fully understood, and probably never will be. Consequently, they do not greatly concern us; while the wonderful story of the prophet himself with its keen practical lessons, is replete with interest to every Christian.

It is particularly appropriate at this season, when intemperate indulgence of the appetite is more than usually dangerous, to note the plain diet preferred by the Hebrew captives to "the portion of the king's meat."

"Let them give us pulse to eat and water to drink," pleaded Daniel; "and at the end of ten days their countenances appeared fairer and fatter in flesh than all the children which did eat the portion of the king's meat."

It is not unfair to presume also, since God usually employs logical means to work out his ends, that the wisdom and knowledge with which these Hebrew youths were endowed came from their simple habits and sound health—the sane mind which generally accompanies the normal, healthy body.

It is supposed that Daniel was descended from one of the highest families of Judah—that he was even of royal blood. Some students have traced his descent from Zedekiah, but they have no sure data. He was probably attractive in face and manner, and it is impossible to imagine him without dignity. Throughout his narrative, he bears himself truly like a prince of the blood, though without claiming undue distinction. It is supposed that he wrote the story with his own hand, as the Hebrew and Chaldean languages are blended in it, as a captive, knowing both well, might be supposed to use them.

Perhaps the chief impression of Daniel's character which would be received by one who should read his story for the first time would be of courage. He shows it first in asking for the pulse and water; again in daring to interpret Nebuchadnezzar's second dream aright, although he knew that it might cost him his head—since Oriental monarchs dislike to hear unpleasant truths; again, in interpreting Belshazzar's dream; and still again in his persistence in praying to his God in the way his conscience bade him, though he knew that he might be killed for it.

"Dare to be a Daniel," has become a proverb.

The second impression that such a reader would get, might well be that of loyalty. See how true he was to his God through everything. He was equally true to his friends and his people. As soon as he himself was received into the royal favor, he insisted that his friends should be equally honored (see chapter 3, verse 30). Note how painfully he felt the affliction which he was forced to predict for his friend, the king, in every instance.

He had at last the joy of seeing his most cherished longing fulfilled—that his people should return to their own land. He was too old to go with them, but he ever kept their welfare upon his heart and prayed and worked for them.

Many of the prophecies of Daniel were wonderfully fulfilled, and we can trace their course in history. Others the world may never know, but his splendid character spreads its noble lessons plainly before us all.

*Christian Endeavor Topic for Sunday, September 3. TEXT: Dan. 6 : 10-23.

Just Before Dinner When the Housewife Serves Van Camp's

Think what it means in hot weather to have a stock of Van Camp's in the pantry.

Each can means a hearty, delicious meal waiting to be served. Ready cold in a minute, or hot in ten minutes. Just as fresh and savory as the moment it came from our ovens.

A hearty meal—84 per cent nutriment. Richer than beef, or eggs, or cheese.

An inviting meal, with every bean nut-like, mealy and whole. None crisped, none broken.

A delicious meal, with the tomato sauce baked into the beans — sauce made of vine-ripened tomatoes.

Never has a dish of baked beans been created which can compare with Van Camp's.

So much for convenience and taste.

But the main fact is that Van Camp's are digestible, and home-baked beans never are.

We bake in steam ovens, at 245 degrees. We bake in small parcels so that full heat goes through. Yet we bake without crisping, without bursting a bean, because we don't use dry heat.

Home-baked beans, below the top, rarely get heated above 100 degrees. As a result, the beans ferment—tax the stomach—go to waste. Factory baking is utterly essential to make beans fit to eat.

Let our cooks bake them for you while you rest. They have had decades of experience. They have the finest materials, all modern facilities.

They do the baking for a million homes. Even in cost you can't begin to compete with them.

Ask your grocer to send a few cans, and judge the facts for yourself. But don't get the wrong brand, for you'll be disappointed. Get Van Camp's.

"The National Dish" Van Camp's BAKED WITH TOMATO SAUCE PORK AND BEANS "The National Dish"

Three sizes: 10, 15, and 20 cents per can

Van Camp Packing Company (Established 1861) Indianapolis, Ind.

(162)

Come to the Fertile Northwest!

The Prosperity States of America

¶Get a home in this Land of Plenty. Make a comfortable living—and a good profit—as thousands are, raising fruits, vegetables, grains, grasses, alfalfa, cattle (or dairying), hogs, poultry, bees.

¶A healthful, growing climate—land marvelously productive, in irrigated and non-irrigated sections. Free Government land in choice localities. New extensions of the Northern Pacific Railway and its allied lines are opening up rich fields to the Homeseeker. Come now, while you can buy land cheap.

¶Low One-way Colonist Fares effective daily September 15 to October 15, 1911. Only $25 from St. Paul, Minneapolis, Duluth, Superior, Kansas City or Omaha to any point on Northern Pacific lines west of Springdale, Mont., through to the Coast, and many other points in the fertile Northwest. Similar reduction from Eastern Territory.

¶Low Round-trip Homeseekers Fares first and third Tuesdays of each month. To Montana points Homeseekers' Tickets will be sold every Tuesday in August, September and October.

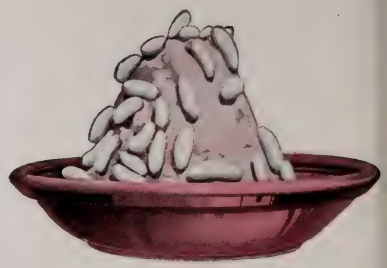
¶Low Round-trip Summer Tourist Fares to the North Pacific Coast effective daily until Sept. 30.

Tell us which state you are interested in, what kind of land you want, and what you want to do. We will send free illustrated booklets. Ask for illustrated folder "Through the Fertile Northwest."

L. J. Bricker, Gen'l Immigration Agent
30 Broadway, ST. PAUL, MINN.

Northern Pacific Ry

NORTHERN PACIFIC YELLOWSTONE PARK LINE



1-5

7 a.m. Puffed Wheat or Rice Mixed with Berries—a Delicious Blend.

10 a.m. To Boys at Play the Puffed Grains —Dry—Taste Like Toasted Nuts.

12 m. The Finest Chefs Use Puffed Rice as a Nut-Like Garnish for Ice Cream.

The Myriad Uses for Foods Shot from Guns

How a Hundred Million Dishes of Puffed Wheat and Puffed Rice Are Being Enjoyed This Summer

Prof. A. P. Anderson—the famous inventor of Puffed Wheat and Puffed Rice—started out to make foods for dyspeptics.

But healthy, red-cheeked children found them out. They found them crisp and enticing, with a flavor like toasted nuts. And they discovered a different way to serve them for every hour of the day.

Now we run our factories night and day to supply those children's needs.

This is the fortunate result: The most digestible cereals ever created have become the children's choice.

Whole-grain foods, made wholly digestible, are supplanting half-grain foods, made half-way digestible.

For Puffed Wheat and Puffed Rice are prepared in this way: Whole, plump grains of wheat or rice are put into bronze-steel guns. Then the guns are revolved for sixty minutes in a heat of 550 degrees.

Think of that—550 degrees. Do you know another cereal which gets half that heat?

The moisture in the grain turns to steam in that heat, and the pressure becomes tremendous. Suddenly the gun is unsealed, and the steam explodes. Every food granule is blasted to pieces. The grains are puffed to eight times normal size—made four times as porous as bread. Yet the coats are unbroken, the shapes are unaltered. We have the whole grains porous, toasted and crisp.

No other process breaks up half of the food granules. This breaks them all, so digestion can act.

These enticing grains, like other cereals, are served with cream and sugar. But they are just as good in a dozen other ways. Note the pictures.

Perhaps the favorite way in summer is to serve in bowls of milk. The grains are crisper than crackers and four times as porous as bread. And they are whole-grain foods which terrific heat has given the flavor of toasted nuts.

Digestion begins before the grains reach the stomach. That makes them good bedtime foods.

Go telephone your grocer that you want these foods. Do it for the children's sake. For there is nothing else like them in ready-cooked cereals—nothing so good for children, nothing they like so well.

Then let them eat them any hour, in any way they want.

Puffed Wheat, 10c Except in Extreme West Puffed Rice, 15c

The Quaker Oats Company—Sole Makers—Chicago

(196)

4 p.m. Girls Use These Puffed Grains in Home Candy Making.

6 p.m. Puffed Wheat in Soup. The Grains are Crisper than Crackers.

10 p.m. Puffed Grains in Milk. They are Four Times as Porous as Bread.

Christian Herald

SUBSCRIPTION, $1.50 PER ANNUM
PUBLISHED 52 TIMES A YEAR

COPYRIGHT, 1911, BY THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

NEW YORK, AUGUST 30, 1911

VOL. 34—NO. 35. PRICE 5 CENTS
OFFICES: BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK

"The Mussel Fisher's Wife." From a painting by Hans von Bartels

Questions and Answers

J. P., New York City. In common with a great majority of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD readers, I am glad to see that you are standing by the President on the controversy with the Senate over the Arbitration treaties. We believe that disputes between civilized countries should be settled by arbitration or by an impartial international tribunal.

Many readers are writing us expressing the same views. We are asking all who wish to advance the cause of Peace on earth to unite with us in the rapidly extending Peace Circle movement and to send us a list of at least ten people, ministers, school teachers, neighbors, any villager or good type of citizen whom you would like to see actively interested. To these we will gladly forward our series of Peace Pamphlets, together with our attractive Organization Leaflet, which should be in the hands of every true believer in the Peace Movement.

C. C. G., Harrisburg, Pa. What did Christ mean when he said to a disciple: "Let the dead bury their dead and follow me."

It was meant to convey that the proclaiming of the Kingdom of God was more important even than to bury the dead—an office which could be performed by those spiritually dead as well as by one who had been called to the Master's service. It is not intended to belittle the office of burial, but simply to put it in contrast with the more imperative duty of preaching the Gospel.

Mrs. W. H. M., Redbank, N. J. 1. Was Ralph Waldo Emerson a Unitarian? 2. Why did he resign from the pastorate of the Second Unitarian Church of Boston? 3. What is Transcendentalism? 4. What are the names of Homer's books?

1. Yes. 2. He resigned because of conscientious scruples against administering the sacrament of the Lord's Supper. 3. As a technical term of Kantian philosophy, it is applied to doctrines which profess to give us a knowledge of things quite beyond the boundaries of experience. In American literature, it represents the Emersonian type of thinking. 4. The Iliad and the Odyssey (though their authorship by many scholars is considered to be doubtful) are generally attributed to Homer.

Dr. J. L., Cadillac, Mich. 1. How many Protestant denominations use the so-called Apostles' Creed in their general or special services? 2. How many use the clause, "The Holy Catholic Church"?

1. Used by the majority. 2. Impossible to say; some use "universal" instead of "Catholic." Rev. Dr. Charles M. Sheldon, of Kansas City (the author of In His Steps), answers the foregoing letter as follows: "I believe Christendom is slowly but certainly simplifying its creeds, and will in time reduce them all to the creed of Christ. His creed covered all the essentials: 'Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, mind, soul and strength; and thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself.' I have never felt the importance of any attempt to unify denominations around a theological or doctrinal set of statements. It will never succeed. The one thing for all Christians to emphasize is Christlikeness, character, God-loving, man-loving lives. The emphasis should not be placed on this or that phrase or sentence, or doctrinal setting of faith. It should centre about Jesus and his example."

L. A. C., Narvon, Pa. Please explain: Did Jephthah actually devote his daughter to God as a sacrifice in consequence of his rash vow?

In a recent issue of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD we explained that commentators are divided on the question whether Jephthah did really sacrifice his daughter, or whether his vow was kept by immuring her in some retreat during the remainder of her lifetime. The Bible says: "He did with her according to his vow." See Judges 11: 39, which seems to point to the other conclusion.

L. C. C., Sparta, Ga. In foot-note 21, chapter 23, of Gibbon's Rome, I find these words: "Julian believed in the Platonician Trinity, and only blames the Christians for preferring a mortal to an immortal Logos." Please furnish me, through the columns of your paper, the constituent parts of the above-named Trinity, and oblige.

The three principles of Plato were (a) the supreme God; (b) the divine understanding, and (c) the soul of the world. According to Plato's system, God first produced the ideal world, i. e., his infinite understanding conceived of the existence of the world and formed the plan of creation. The real world was then formed after this ideal world as its model; and this was done by uniting the soul of the world with matter, by which the world became an animated, sensitive, rational creature—guided, pervaded, and held together by this rational soul.

Mrs. S. A. B., Bannon, Ky., and William B., Little Compton, R. I. Please tell something of the life of George Matheson. Is there a biography of him published?

He was born at Glasgow, Scotland, March 27, 1842; died at North Berwick, August 28, 1906; was buried at Glasgow. His eyesight was always defective, and he became nearly blind during early manhood. He graduated from the College of Glasgow, and in 1867 became the minister of Innellan. In 1886 he became the pastor of St. Bernard's Presbyterian Church, Edinburgh, but resigned in 1899 to devote himself to writing. His list of books is very long. His best known hymn is "O Love that will not let me go." A biography of him can be found in almost any good library.

S. T. H., Whitehall, Md. In the Bible class last Sunday, the teacher said God did not intend us to know or to understand all that was in the Bible. A scholar made answer, "If we could understand all in the Bible, it would be only a drop in the ocean, compared with what God knows," which was right. Are there things in the Bible our heavenly Father does not wish us to understand?

The Bible was given to man, by inspiration, for his enlightenment and guidance. It is a Book much of which can only be understood by the light given to us through the Holy Spirit; hence to the unspiritual and worldly, it is apparently a Book of mysteries. There are some parts, especially those that relate to prophecies not yet fulfilled, that are hard problems, even to the spiritually minded. In the main, however, it can be truthfully said that to the earnest, prayerful, diligent student the Bible will yield up many of its treasures. You should procure a good Commentary which will assist you greatly in understanding the Word and will clear away many of your difficulties. There is no warrant whatever for saying that God did not intend us to understand his Word. We should study it with all the assistance at hand from the ripe experience of consecrated scholarship, and though we may not conquer all, we will be sure to learn very much that will prove to us that it was never meant to be a sealed volume, but that it is an open message to those who would know God's will and who are willing to be taught by the Holy Spirit.

S. B. H., Ipswich, Mass. What is the system of shorthand used most commonly in business? Where can I get a self-instructor in the most commonly used system?

The best of all systems is the Pitman-Graham, which has already been taught to several thousand young readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. The Manual gives full instruction and is equivalent to a regular business course. This system is now used almost universally. We know nothing about the other systems mentioned in your letter, but can confidently recommend that taught in our Manual. You can procure free a Manual for studying this system without a teacher, by sending to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD four of the coupons which appear in this week's issue, each properly signed by a new subscriber and accompanied by 25 cents each.

J. R., Granite, Okla. If a person has done wrong but to himself alone, must he tell it to the world before God will forgive him?

Not necessarily, by any means. Although confession of our sins to one another is good, there are sins we should confess to God alone and the publishing of which to the world would be of very doubtful value. We refer, of course, to the details. We have heard confessions or "testimonies" in meetings which were clearly unprofitable. The publican's cry was simply "God be merciful to me, a sinner!" He did not describe his sin in detail; it was not necessary. His self-abasement and contrition were sincere and sufficient.

M. B., Cawker, Kan. 1. How do you pronounce the name of the poet Shelley? 2. What is a lych-gate? 3. Does "lych" rhyme with "witch" or with "pike"? 4. Please tell something of Mary Johnston, author of The Long Roll. 5. How is "Dieppe" pronounced?

1. Exactly as spelled; say "shell" and then add the syllable "y." 2. A churchyard gate with a covered porch or small chapel, in which a bier may stand—a corpse-gate. 3. With "witch." 4. She was born at Buchanan, Botetourt County, Va., and was educated at home. Her first book, Prisoners of Hope, was published in the Atlantic Monthly in 1898. Her other books have been To Have and to Hold, Audrey and Sir Mortimer. She is a strong woman suffragist. 5. Dee-epp.

Miscellaneous

If D. W. R., Brooklyn, N. Y., will send her address, her questions will be answered by mail.

W. A. T., Elmer, N. J. 1. Yes, so we have heard. 2. We believe not. 3. A number of physicians have abandoned the use of alcohol in treating patients.

B. C. P., Willard, N. Y. Thanks for your letter, which we keep by us. The difference you note is one of terms only. Father, Son and Holy Spirit—"these three are one God," but the three offices are diverse.

Reader, Youngstown, O. Sewing is somewhat precarious as an occupation. While skilled seamstresses earn a fair living, and a few a very good one, the great majority are hard-worked and underpaid. There are many other occupations which offer better advantages.

Twice as Good as Expected

We have received your Dictionary by express to-night, and beg to say that we are more than pleased. It is twice what we expected and the best premium we ever got with any paper for the small sum of $1. It would cost at least $2.50 here, so, you see, I got my paper free.

WILLIAM GRAHAM.

Minnewaukan, N. D.

CASH RECEIPTS AND DISBURSEMENTS

CHINA FAMINE FUND

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, NEW YORK CITY

For the period from December 27, 1910, to June 30, 1911

RECEIPTS

December	1910	$ 80.65
January	1911	12,575.65
February	1911	33,344.18
March	1911	48,703.96
April	1911	22,002.53
May	1911	9,379.75
June	1911	958.25
			$127,044,97

DISBURSEMENTS

Distributed in China Through Secretary of State, Washington, D. C.

December	1910	$ 1,000.00
January	1911	5,000.00
February	1911	20,000.00
March	1911	35,000.00
April	1911	35,000.00
May	1911	4,000.00
			$100,000.00

Paid for Flour Shipped to China

February	1911	$19,000.00
March	1911	875.00
			19,875.00

Paid for Freight on Flour From Minneapolis to Seattle

February	1911		1,225.00

Paid American Red Cross Society

March	1911	$45.50
April	1911	79.25
			124.75

Expenses

Acknowledgments, printing, postage, etc., at actual cost	$9,859.84
Less: Portion borne by The Christian Herald and donated to the fund	4,039.62	5,820.22
		$127,044.97

WE HEREBY CERTIFY that we have audited the China Famine Fund of The Christian Herald, and it is our opinion that the above is a true statement of the cash receipts and disbursements and that all cash received has been fully accounted for.*

ERNST AND ERNST — CERTIFIED PUBLIC ACCOUNTANTS — NEW YORK

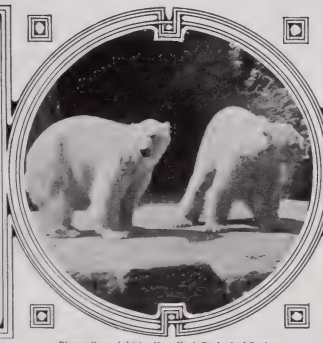
Ernst & Ernst

Certified Public Accountants.

Interesting Facts About Our China Relief Fund

There were 33,554 separate contributions in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Fund. The largest individual contribution was $500. The next largest was $400. There were 31 contributions of $100 each, and 46 of $50 each. The largest collection was $5,181.52, received through the Sabbath School Bode of Paterson, N. J., from Sunday School Societies and Congregations of the Christian Reformed Church. The next largest collection was $747.07, received through Foster Copeland, from citizens of Columbus, O.

NEW YORK, AUGUST 30, 1911



THE · CHRISTIAN · HERALD

A WEEKLY ILLUSTRATED NEWSPAPER FOR THE HOME

An American Bison

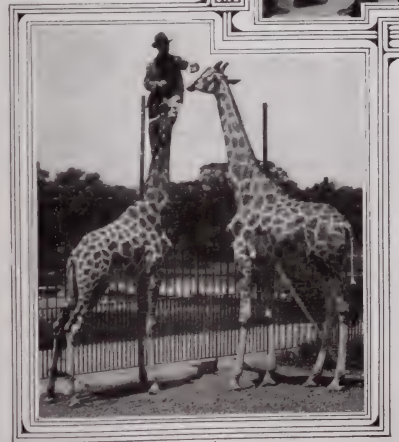
The Polar Bears

A Himalayan Tiger

Photos Copyright by New York Zoological Society

MANAGING A GREAT ZOO

By HARVEY MIDDLETON



THE Zoological Park in the Bronx, New York, was designed and created on lines of the most far-reaching humanity toward wild animals that the skill of man could devise. Nothing has been left undone and no expense has been spared to render the wild animal population not only comfortable but happy from day to day. As a general proposition, the animals of the Bronx Zoo are not pining behind prison bars." The vast majority of them are happier, are better fed and watered than they would be by their own efforts in a state of nature, wherein life is one continuous struggle against hunger and sudden death.

Fifteen years ago Father Knickerbocker awoke to the fact that the Zoological Garden in Central Park was not worthy of the Greater New York then in contemplation. Accordingly, the New York Zoological Society was chartered for the preservation of our native animals and the promotion of zoology in general. The extraordinary combination of hill and dale, forest, meadow, rock ledge and water of the Bronx Park offered to the society an absolutely unique opportunity, and arrangements were made by which the city provided a beautiful park land of 261 acres, the water supply, and police protection, and an annual maintenance fund of $135,000, while the society agreed to provide all the animals. It is probable that no spot in America is so well fitted as the Bronx for an animal sanctuary. You walk about a spacious domain of native woodland, guarding a variety of beautiful trees. Where the trees cease, the natural rock rises in abrupt mounds and ridges, and against these defenses the cages—if the word is allowable—are built.

This vast municipal playground, where eight hundred animals, three thousand birds, and two thousand reptiles are housed as nearly as possible in their own environment, is under the management of Professor William T. Hornaday, the protagonist of bird and beast protection throughout the world, ably assisted by Raymond L. Ditmars, the curator of reptiles. The two principal tasks of the management are the provision of a bewildering variety of diets—eighty-two different kinds of food must be served daily—and the nursing of the sick. Five thousand eight hundred living creatures to feed daily! Problem enough, if they were all of a kind; but complicated beyond description when varying in size from rats to elephants, and in disposition from sleepy serpents to bloodthirsty lions and tigers.

Feeding a Stubborn Python by Force

Photos Copyrighted by N.Y. Zoological Soc.

The $10,000 Nubian Giraffe and His Mate

Small wonder that the item for food alone is $30,000 a year, in spite of the fact that the Zoo raises on a three-acre farm of its own all the perishable vegetables and fruits and also many small animals required as articles of diet in the various departments. Pure and healthy food is absolutely essential, especially for the reptiles, who are the hardest of all to cater for. That hooded terror, the king cobra, for instance, will eat nothing but snakes, preferably alive. Last year the Zoo's farm yielded 2,400 tons of green food, besides 1,000 chickens, 700 pigeons, 400 rats, 650 mice, 550 guinea-pigs, and 128 rabbits. In addition 8,500 eggs were produced and used.

Chickens, rodents, rabbits and guinea-pigs are killed and fed to the reptiles whole, the boa-constrictors crushing their rabbits or rats, although dead, before swallowing them. The large snakes occasionally cause their keepers considerable anxiety by refusing to eat. There was, for instance, the large regal python, captured on the Malay Peninsula. For fourteen months the snake was fed at intervals of about ten days apart with two freshly-killed Belgian hares, sewed together with heavy twine, then pushed ten feet down her throat with a bamboo pole while the snake was held by twelve keepers. Between times she was offered everything known on the menu of a python, but stubbornly refused the food. Then one day a freshly killed pig, weighing thirty-five pounds, was offered to her, and she quickly absorbed it. Since then the python's appetite has been faultless.

The hippo insists on lettuce, the polar bear has a fondness for tomatoes, the angora goat likes tender tree bark, the buffalo must have chopped clover hay sprinkled with corn meal. The monkeys love onions and strawberries in and out of season, the tiger prefers horse, the camel a mash of oatmeal and oil, while the rhinoceros has a distinct partiality for carrots.

Every ounce of food is prepared and carefully weighed in a modern hygienic kitchen equipped with all the appliances of a modern hotel, under the superintendence of a skilled chef, who prepares and sends out daily 650 pounds of beef, 200 pounds of fish, 250 loaves of bread, and 100 heads of lettuce. A considerable quantity of meat is fed raw—especially to the lions and tigers, bears and wolves. Potatoes are usually boiled without peeling and served whole to the animals—about a bushel a day. On Tuesday the monkeys are given an extra treat in the way of peanuts and popcorn, the squirrels being similarly

Continued on page 861

THE American Pulpit

A Sermon by
Rev. J B Shaw, D.D., LL.D.*

LETHARGY OR TREACHERY?

TEXT: Matt. 26:40-47—"Lo, Judas, one of the twelve."

PETER asleep in the garden; Judas much awake leading an attack at the gate. Two pictures that should always be hung together. I name the first Lethargy; the second, Treachery. Is there any doubt what the feeling of us all is when in front of the latter of these? No act of man is more widely detested or more commonly denounced than treachery. Everybody despises the traitor and refuses to give him the least quarter. Judas has gone to his own place in man's muster as well as in God's reckoning. Nothing in all the Passion Play last summer was more pleasing to me than its interpretation of the character and course of the betrayer. His deed is represented as plotted not from any high motive, as some would contend, but from a motive the basest. The thirty pieces of silver are to him an irresistible temptation. He is piqued at the Master's rebuke. His lot is thrown in with the opposition because he foresees, or thinks he foresees, Christ's downfall, and would save himself. "Paint me warts and all," was an ancient monarch's order to his artist. Biography needed no such instructions from this man. It has given us his true portraiture, and before it our souls experience only the strongest revulsion of feeling. This is the sensation awakened by the second picture.

The Effect of the Pictures

But how does the first affect us? Are you inclined to pity Peter and his two companions on "that sad and dreadful night"? Do you find yourself trying to excuse them on the ground of their physical exhaustion, saying that their sleep, instead of being due to weakness of will and therefore wicked, was the imperative demand of nature? That is the way many before you have talked. For that matter, Jesus himself was tender with them. But, tender as was his treatment of them, he was plainly surprised when he came and found them asleep, and gave them to understand this. He dealt Peter a blow that he could never have forgotten—"What, could ye not watch with me one hour?" intimating that his sleep had been a yielding to temptation and enjoining him to watch and pray lest the temptation might be fallen into again. The words, "The spirit is willing, but the flesh is weak," were not spoken as an excuse for the disciple's sleepiness, as so many have construed them, but, uttered in connection with the command to watch and pray and immediately following it, was Jesus' reason for that command. Moreover, his last word to them had in it the sting of irony, and conveyed no uncertain meaning. I can read nothing but blame in this, can you?—"Sleep on now, and take your rest: behold, the hour is at hand, and the Son of man is betrayed into the hands of sinners."

The anxious mother may be exhausted with her long unbroken vigil at the bedside of her sick babe, but her suspense and eagerness will not allow her eyelids to draw even slightly together. Nature makes imperious demand; but her heart is more than a match for nature. The watcher up yonder in the cage is cold and weary from his long-continued and tempestuous outlook; but he knows it would be regarded a crime for him to yield to his physical feelings, and reason overmasters the flesh. The engineer up ahead in the cab is numb from exposure and faint from the strain; but he would as soon think of committing suicide as of going to sleep at his post. His will asserts itself and the body obeys.

Modern Peters and Judases

And yet Peter, at the moment when Jesus needed him as never before and as he would never need him again, and after Jesus had expressly bidden him tarry and watch, allowed the demand of nature to make louder appeal than the charge of his Master, let his own bodily comfort take precedence of the safety of his Lord, and, despite Christ's evident anxiety and confessed sorrowfulness, went to sleep and slept so soundly that the noise of the advancing mob and the flare of their torches failed to awaken him. You must see this picture hung next the other to get the right impression. The sight of Peter asleep in the garden when Judas is wickedly awake betraying Jesus at the gate, is enough to pain and sadden the most flintlike heart.

* Pastor, Second Presbyterian Church, Chicago.

Both these pictures have been numerously reproduced. You can find copies of them to-day almost everywhere. Legion are the modern Judases—men, yes, and women, too, in whose estimate the honor and security of Jesus in this age is of secondary importance, and whose ruin begins just where the arch-betrayer's did—in the setting up of self against the method, mission and even motive of the Master. His policy is a mistaken one; theirs would work better. His is an entirely unpractical programme; they will take the liberty of modernizing it. He is too severe on existing customs and conventions, too ruthless with traditions, too independent of the temporal, too indifferent to the material. All this must be corrected. So off they go and plot some scheme of reform, ending up where Judas did with an alliance with Christ's foes and a complete forfeiture of their personal loyalty to him. Far easier is it, I verily believe, to bargain away the Christ in the twentieth century than Judas found it in the first.

And the Peters of our time are not less plentiful than the modern Judases, followers of Jesus who are asleep at their posts when events most crucial to him and his kingdom are transpiring. We condemn Peter's denial in the courtyard, and rightly so, but much more seriously resultant was his unfaithfulness in Gethsemane. And why? Because it gave Judas the advantage and made the enemy's attack successful. The betrayer might have come with a band ten times as large and failed utterly had Peter been on his feet instead of on his back.

Is it not ever so? Indifference, self-ease, love of personal comfort, selfishness, surrender to the physical are always harder for Christianity to contend with than open outward attack. Jesus can at any time summon ten legions of angels to repulse the latter; but all the inhabitants of the celestial world together would not be a force sufficient to hold back the former and counterbalance their influence. Now as then it is the sleeping Peters in the garden that give power to the plotting Judases at the gate. Because I want you to see this clearly and feel it keenly, because I would hang these modern pictures together before you as I have done in the case of their ancient prototypes, I ask you to walk back with me into the Gethsemane where Christ is now engaged in his scarcely less mysterious and awful passion and let me point out to you several Peters asleep there.

Our Betrayal and Our Sleep

I. We stumble at once over a whole bevy of them. One of the greatest perils Christ has ever had to meet is his now threatened betrayal into the hands of the coming generation. Mark well the evidence. Has not the Bible been expelled from our public schools? Has not religious training been largely abandoned in our American homes? Are not children generally excused from attendance upon the services of the church? Has not the religious instruction of the youth been reduced to a single half-hour's study under a not always competent Sunday School teacher? What does all this indicate but an attack upon Christ and his kingdom more crucial than Judas' betrayal ever began to be? Is it not pre-eminently a time when all who love the Master's honor and desire his increasing sway should be alert and vigilant, guarding his interest with jealous devotion and giving themselves with unflagging valor to the resistance of so great a peril?

Instead of this, what do we find? Great tiers of our Lord's avowed followers who refuse to stand against this assault in front of some Sunday School class of growing boys and girls, or about their own hearthstones, and before their private family altars, and, instead, are studying their personal comfort, insisting upon leisure and ease, or selfishly seeking their own pleasure. Is there any question which is doing the greater harm to-day—a betraying Judas or a sleeping Peter?

II. But come along a few steps farther. The Peters multiply. Here is another group lying in the path fast asleep like so many stones of stumbling. Behold the onslaught which the Adversary is leading against the church just now, so inflaming the masses that the laboring man, the poor, the unemployed and the criminal are all arrayed against it, impugning its motives, resisting its appeals and even resenting its approaches! If there ever wa time when the followers of Jesus needed to be aw and on their feet, it is now. But alas! what stu has fallen upon the Church! Many, as if they forgotten these conditions or were unconcer about them, are engaged in drawing social li through the church and actually exhibiting a des for their fellow-members who are socially infer Nothing could widen the chasm between the chu and the world like this. Still a larger number ercise their charity or benevolence through n church agencies, thereby obliging the church stretch out an empty hand to those knocking at doors for either relief or philanthropic aid and he ing to create the impression that it is not interes in the unfortunate or struggling but cares only the affluent and strong; while not a few by th luxurious living and cold commercialism are leadi the world to believe that the church is the frie and champion of sordid wealth and heartl monopoly.

The Church's Danger

Not until these sleeping Peters, realizing the da ger which menaces Christianity from this quart arouse themselves from their indifference, live si pler lives, denying themselves all extravagance a luxury, and better manifesting the spirit of th Master, who, though he was rich, became poor f the sake of unworthy humanity, will the honor cause of Jesus Christ be secure in our age a country.

It was written in one of the constitutions of t early church: 'The poor shall be esteemed an alt of God." Would that the principle beneath the words were written within the hearts of our twe tieth century Christians everywhere.

III. Come yet farther back into the garden ar you will find another group locked as in the arm of unawakeable sleep. To me the most ominou religious sign of the times is the drift away fro the Church. In some sections it is more than drift—it is like an irresistible tide. Unless it overcome, the Church has its greatest struggle y ahead of it.

The greatness of this peril, so evident to all, enough to take sleep from every Christian's eyeli and rob all church members completely of their res Is this what we find? No, it is the very opposit which prevails. Some of our people, even leader are themselves as careless of their church habits a if there were to-day no need at this point of exampl or influence. The least excuse, and people join th great majority, as little embarrassed by their non attendance at church as their Jewish neighbors o an outside scoffer might be. In the matter of ob serving the Sabbath, there is little, if any, differenc between them and the most worldly people of th community; neither do they draw a closer line i their amusements or social engagements than th gayest people in town or the most pronounced non sympathizers with the church.

Surely, this gross inconsistency, this negatio of the Christian life and profession, this complet erasure of the line of demarcation between th Church and mammon is as great an obstacle to th advance of Jesus Christ in our age as could exist Queen Victoria down at the close of her reign re marked to Archbishop Benson: "As I get older, cannot understand the world. I look at people' frivolities and littlenesses, and it seems as if they were all a little mad." How much harder to under stand the people of the Church of to-day!

The Need that Is Near

IV. One more group I want you to see before we quit the garden. It is made up of those whose indifference to the salvation of lost men all about them is so great that it is as if a deadly sleep had fallen upon them. Two-thirds of the men of this Christian America are outside the Church. Do you get that? At least twenty millions of our fellow-citizens. We speak of it as an appalling fact, but how much does it really appall us? Hundreds of millions of our brother-men are living in the darkness of heathendom. How much does it trouble us? So indifferent is the Church to it all that it would seem stupefied as with some drug.

Continued on page 861

Ma's Tools

T HOME it seems to be the rule
Pa never has "the proper tool" knack to fix things. For the stunt at stumps ma, though, you'll have to hunt.

e caster in the table leg l out. Pa said a wooden peg uld fix it up. But Ma kep' mum fixed it with a wad of gum.

could scarce open our front door stuck so tight. An' Pa, he swore
'd "buy a plane" as big as life—fixed it with a carving knife.

e bureau drawer got stuck one day, push or pull 'twas there to stay.
ys Pa, "Some day 'twill shrink, I hope."
fixed it with a piece of soap.

e window shade got out of whack, would not pull down nor yet roll back.
says, "No one can fix that thing. ' fixed it with a piece of string.

roke the stove door hinge one day
'Twas cracked before, though, anyway).
said we'd put a new door in.
grabbed her hair an' got a pin.

e bathtub drain got all clogged up.
bailed the tub out with a cup;
had a dreadful helpless look.
cleaned it with a crochet hook.

when my things get out of fix
I ask Pa to mend 'em? Nix!
ut Ma just grabs what's near at hand n' togs things up to beat the band.

SELECTED.

They Needed Rain

NEW YORKER, recently returned from a long jaunt through the Middle West, was telling of his trip when some one broached the subject of the weather in that part of the country.

"Dry!" said the traveler; "why, one morning I was finishing up some business with about six feet two inches of Missouri farmer when a little shower came up. He looked up and saw one of his hired men puttering around in the nearby garden, and immediately got up and went to the door.

"'Here, you Tom!' he called, 'come outen that.'

"Tom slowly unlimbered his rounded back and straightened up to shout, 'It's a'right, boss, Ah don' min' working in de rain.'

"'Workin' in the rain!' shouted the farmer. 'D'you 'spose I care 'bout our hide gettin' wet? Come in outen that an' let that rain fall on the ground. It needs it.'"

Anvil Sparks

..MANY foibles are also sins.

..VANITY leads to vain regrets.

..FEELING gives better tone to prayer than rhetoric.

..A SORE heart is never healed with the balm of self-love.

..SEEKING to amend the Scriptures never amends one's life.

..THE wrong way grows less beautiful the further you travel it.

..SOME folks remember their faults not to mend them, but to excuse.

..WE NEVER know how good the world is until we practise goodness.

..THE open doors of opportunity are never discovered by looking backward.

..THE forces against you are always weak when compared with those for you.

..EACH new day is a resurrection day, and a new chance for loyalty to the right.

..A PREACHER cannot preach strong doctrine against little vanities, when it tickles him to be called "doctor."

..THE curve may be the "line of beauty" in the fine arts, but the straight line adorns character.

..YOU must not backbite your neighbors because they refuse to enthuse over your efforts to teach the far-away heathen not to eat one another.

..IF YOU lose treasure, it may some time be returned to you, and if not, it may at least enrich the finder; but if you lose time, it is gone forever.

The Battle Line in Maine

THE liquor forces must not be permitted to take Prohibition out of the Constitution of Maine. It was placed there in 1858 by a popular vote of 28,000 for Prohibition and 5,000 against it. The question was re-submitted in 1884, the vote standing 70,000 to 23,000. The vote on the question of sustaining the Constitutional amendment is now on.

Prohibition should be retained in Maine because its effect on the State for fifty years has been eminently beneficial to the material interests. Sixty-nine per cent. of the farmer families in Maine own their own farms, without mortgages. There are twenty thousand more savings bank depositors than there are voters in the State; the amount deposited being $120,000,000, or an average of $181 for every man, woman and child in the State. One of Maine's greatest merchants, with a nation-wide reputation, bears this tribute to the material advantage of Prohibition: "Maine is rated as a wealthy State, not so much because the people have any advantages in agricultural lines and opportunities for other business, but because the earnings of our men are not spent in the saloon." Ex-Congressman Littlefield gives the facts and figures showing the untold business advantage which Prohibition has secured. Honorable John D. Long, ex-Secretary of the Navy, says: "I have never changed my opinion that the Prohibitory law should be retained in Maine."

. . .

PROHIBITION should be retained on account of its intellectual advantage to the people. There are more schools in proportion to the population, and teachers in proportion to the number of pupils, in Maine than in any other State. The stomachs of the people have not been poisoned nor their brains befuddled with rum. The tall pine trees that laugh at the snow and storm are symbols of the mental and moral stature of the citizens of Maine uncursed by the saloon.

The people of the State, we trust, will have economic sense enough to retain Prohibition, for their own sakes; but the contest in Maine has a wider significance; it is related most vitally to the nation-wide warfare against rum. Maine was the pioneer; for almost a generation it stood alone in its moral courage in the veto of the liquor traffic. For fifty years the liquor forces of the nation have turned their guns upon Prohibition in Maine, and have sought, by every kind of misrepresentation and falsehood, to destroy this provision of the Constitution. Meanwhile, other States, seeing the positive advantage to the material, mental and moral interests of the people in Maine, have been greatly encouraged to copy her example, and at this time there are seven other States where statutory or constitutional Prohibition obtains, and the records show that the saloon has been driven from forty-five millions of the population of this country and from two-thirds of its geographical area. It would be a very poor time for Maine to march downward toward the ignorance, wretchedness and crime of license, when the whole nation seems to be marching toward the heights of abstinence and prohibition, toward the altitude which the Pine Tree State has occupied so long, with her white banner of Prohibition. Should Maine slip out of the Prohibition column, the successful warfare against the liquor traffic would not end, but might be delayed. The true men of Maine must see to it at the polls that there be no halting in the general victories.

. . .

THE friends of Prohibition do not claim that the law has been perfectly enforced. Prohibition against crime has never prohibited crime in the six thousand years of the world's history. It only tends to prohibit; and to claim that the Prohibitory Law is in any way responsible for the illicit sale of drink in Maine is folly in the extreme. There is more illicit selling under license than under Prohibition. There are to-day five thousand "blind tigers" in New York City, where they license ten thousand saloons. That is, one drinking place out of every three is a "blind tiger."

The liquor men are pouring their speakers and literature into Maine to try to convince the people that Prohibition is a failure, and their main claim is that the more liquor is prohibited the more it is sold. The silly hyprocisy of the position is manifest, and yet many good people are deceived by this claim. It is the sale of more liquor that the dealers desire, and that is why it is they are fighting against Prohibition and desperately crying for license. It is much safer for the voter to pay attention to what the ministers and best citizens say, than to what the liquor dealers, who represent the causes of vice and crime for money, say. It is because Prohibition does have a large measure of Prohibition in it that the liquor dealers are massing their energies from the whole nation for its overthrow in Maine. Fortunately, the enemies of the saloon are also coming from all parts of the country to aid in the contest.

. . .

PROHIBITION in Maine must win. The pulpit is almost a unit for it, and the members of the churches and vast numbers of the citizens of all political affiliations and the women, wielding the arm of God, are for it. Fortunately the press is standing by the right in this contest. A journal in Chicago wrote a large number of the editors of the leading papers in the various cities of Maine. The answers revealed the encouraging fact that 49 stood unequivocally for Prohibition; 12 for license; 16 uncertain, with 10 others probably Prohibition, and 4 probably for license.

It is to be hoped that God will use the pulpit, the pew, the press, the mart, the home to beat back the army of vice led by the liquor dealers. It cannot be that the pulpit of Maine has so lost its eloquence, or the pen its power; it cannot be that womanhood has so lost her conscience, or childhood its innocence; it cannot be that the voters have so lost their chivalry or heroism as to permit by law the dram shop, the vice of all vices, the crime of all crimes, the hypocrite of all hypocrites, the greatest enemy of the Home, the Church and the State. The saloon has to go. God, through his Church, has been smiting the great evils that have confronted his Kingdom and degraded his children. It looks as though he intended to destroy the liquor traffic, and it will be well for the good people of Maine to look upward for Divine help as they go forward to the ballot box, to destroy the saloon.

FERDINAND C. IGLEHART.

International Peace

"PEACE on earth," the angels sang,
Heaven with hallelujahs rang,
When the Babe of Bethlehem came.
Prince of Peace they called His name.

Since that time so long ago,
Sabres clash and trumpets blow;
War's wild clarion notes are pealed;
Earth is one great battlefield.

Greed, and jealous fear, and hate,
Keep the nations separate.
Rifles, cannon, swords, and fleets—
Enemies to friendly peace.

But the Golden Age draws near.
Hope, to every Christian dear!
Angels sang the Peace song then;
Earth will soon respond, Amen.

Honest, sympathetic, just,
Nations will each other trust;
Put their useless arms away,
Till the final Judgment Day.

Law and justice shall prevail;
Plots, intrigues, and cabals fail;
Homes be safe; lawmakers wise;
Earth become a Paradise.

Let the angels sing again;
Earth take up the loud Amen;
Reign of War forever cease;
Welcome to the Prince of Peace.

New Windsor, Ill. REV. E. C. CHEVIS.

On Equal Terms

For the Colonel's lady and July O'Grady
Are sisters under their skins.

DOWN on Blue Lick in the Cumberland Mountains lives Mrs. Skinner. It seems as if she has had more than her share of trouble, and is old before her time. Although not much over forty, her cheeks are sunken, and her hair and teeth are disappearing very rapidly. She rides into the college town quite often to sell her "garden truck," and it is very seldom that she has the opportunity to use the money as she wishes, for her husband beats her, and takes the money whenever he knows she has any.

She used to go as often as she could to the Manual Training teacher's house, for although a very busy woman, Mrs. Manual Training Teacher always found time some way or another to talk to all the poor and unfortunate that came to her door. One day their baby died, a very quiet and peaceful death, and their home was so quiet and lonely it seemed almost too much to bear.

Poor Mrs. Skinner heard of it, and her heart sorrowing over her own baby, lost the same way, came once more to see her friend. The two women sat for some time, talking over their trouble, and weeping a little together. When she turned to go, she said, with a heartbreak showing in her face and voice, "It ain't quite so hard to bear when you know that rich folks has to suffer, too." E. W. K.

An Emperor's Kiss

ONE day an aide-de-camp of the Emperor Nicholas of Russia threw himself at his sovereign's feet and begged as an extraordinary favor permission to fight a duel. The Emperor immediately and emphatically refused. "But, sire, I am dishonored; I must fight!" cried the disconsolate aide. The Czar frowned, and asked what he meant. "I have been struck in the face," was the reply. "Well," said the Emperor, "for all that, thou shalt not fight; but come—come with me," and taking him by the arm, the Emperor led him into the presence of the Court, which was assembled in an adjoining salon. Then, in view of the flower of his realm, the Emperor kissed the cheek of the aide-de-camp which had received the blow. "Go now," he exclaimed, "and be at peace; the affront has been effaced." The thought of God's infinite love towards us should help us to bear and forbear.

Germany's Spiritual Reawakening

His Excellency Admiral Buechsel
President of the German Evangelical Press Association

His Excellency Rev. Dr. Dryander
Chaplain to the Emperor and Member of the Com of the German Evan. Press Association

Rev. Julius Richter, D.D.
Secretary of the Press Committee of the German Evangelical Missions

Rev. Dr. Wolf
Secretary of the Press Association for Westphalia

Director Wilhelm Spiecker
General Secretary of the German Evangeli Press Association

From a Special Correspondent

THE materialism of Marx and the monism of Haeckel, widely disseminated through the press of the country, introduced entanglements in German spiritual life which threatened for a time to convert Germany, once the cradle of the Reformation, into the wrestling-place of a desolate atheism. The Church, entrenched in its traditions, seemed to feel so sure of its ground that for a time it paid little attention to this modern philosophy. When it finally realized the astonishing growth of the power of these hostile elements, it also came to see that it had an enemy of herculean strength to combat.

Then began a mighty struggle, such as Germany had not witnessed since the days of Luther. As soon as the Evangelicals realized that public belief in the truth of the Bible, and indeed in the existence of the Saviour himself, was in danger, not only among the so-called cultured classes, but also among the masses, they marshaled their forces for the struggle. As a result of this effort, the materialistic flood, which had reached its highest point, is now receding; the monism of Haeckel has been unmasked as false, morally, and it is proscribed by exact science. A new and deeper religious life is beginning everywhere throughout the land. The glory of the Gospel is coming to be valued in many places.

Germany, which once through the Reformation diffused a holy light through all the world, stands again before the dawning of a new day in its religious life. Materialism, which gained such strength in the last decade of the nineteenth century, with its proud overrating of human acquisition in the field of science, and with its tendency to pleasure-seeking and power, is shattered at its very foundations, and a general longing for spiritual liberation from the darkness of its godlessness is awakened. It is the return of the old Christian idealism that once made Germany great and strong. But still the struggle of light and darkness continues. Still do we stand in the throes of the change, and the timid are appalled, as they hear the confusion of voices that rises day by day from the German press, arguing the deepest problem of humanity, the question of religion.

The great decisive war between belief and unbelief will not be fought out in the pulpits of the clergy, or from the rostrums of the universities, but in the public press. The most extreme views, including everything from the old-time orthodoxy to avowed atheism, still combat each other, and as in the days of the Reformation the question of salvation was discussed in the factories and in the markets, so to-day the daily press is handling religious problems with a vehemence and ambiguity possible only in Germany.

It was a realization of the importance of the present crisis, and the imminent need of a remedy, that called together all the most prominent men in the Evangelical Churches of Germany for the formation of the Evangelical Press Association.

"Now or never" is the watchword which must be sounded, if the Gospel in Germany is to be helped to a new and decisive victory. If, as was largely the case, the press was to blame for the dissemination of the evil power of unbelief, it is equally true that through this same press that great wrong must be righted. Through that powerful influence of the press, which Rosegger called "a mighty pulpit orator," the true spirit of German Evangelism has called into being the Evangelical Press Association for Germany. To this new organization the gigantic work of the renewal of Germany's religious life, through wide publicity, is entrusted. Supported by the beneficent organization of the Home Mission, which was founded in memory of Johann Heinrich Wicherns, already forty press associations and clubs throughout Germany have allied themselves with the central organization. Outside of the central committee, these associations are mostly country and provincial in their nature. At the head of the Evangelical Press Association stands a man whose name is widely known throughout Germany, Excellency Buechsel, Admiral of the Staff of Naval Officers' Corps. At his side as mana stands Wilhelm Spiecker, known as a theolog and in the commercial field as a former directo one of Germany's greatest industrial works. B of the organization may be found the ablest mi and scientific talent of Germany. All are inspi with the deepest enthusiasm over the greatness importance of their task. Over 1,500 newspap are already being served through trustworthy s with syndicate matter from the Evangelical Pr Association. There is no province, State or gr city in the entire country in which it has no representative.

Because of the enormous demand upon the G man Evangelical citizens, rich as well as poor, the support of the Church, for the carrying on social work, and for both home and foreign missio their financial powers are already taxed to the l limit. Moreover, in Germany the influence of press in this connection is underrated, so that efforts on behalf of this particular branch of Chr tian work have not met with the response th deserve. Americans, who owe Germany a debt gratitude as the motherland of the Reformati will readily understand that the conquest of German press for the kingdom of God would alm immediately exert a wide influence over a large p of Europe. This conquest cannot be accomplish with small means. The German Evangelical Pr Association, to carry on a successful work throu the press of the whole country, needs from the b ginning between eight and ten thousand dollars year, and these needs will grow with the expansi of the work.

It is for this reason that the leaders of this mo ment call for assistance from across the sea. Gi of any amount, however large or small they may may be transmitted to the headquarters of t Association through THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, or Director Wilhelm Spiecker, Berlin-Steglitz, Hohe zollernstrasse 7, Germany.

TOPICS OF INTEREST THROUGHOUT THE WORLD

—"THE SALOON," says an observant writer, "is a bank in which you deposit your money—and lose it; your time—and lose it; your character—and lose it; your manly independence—and lose it; your home comfort—and lose it; your self-control—and lose it; your children's happiness—and lose it; your own soul—and lose it!"

—THERE IS WAR between Peru and Colombia over the boundary question. Some time ago, Colombia moved her boundary line a considerable distance into Ecuador. Peru protested that the occupied territory was Peruvian by right, and a battle, resulting disastrously to Colombia, has been fought in Caqueta, the territory in question.

—THE CONDITION OF M. Edmond Rostand, the great French poet, who was severely injured in an automobile accident near Biarritz, France, on August 16, continues serious. The dramatist was for some time held beneath the wreckage of the overturned machine, receiving painful injuries on the head and body, as well as being, it is feared, injured internally. He was removed to his villa at Cambo-les-Bains.

—THE MOST RECENT advices from Rome report considerable improvement in the condition of Pope Pius, who has been so seriously ill that his death was expected at any time. The doctors who are attending the pontiff report that the swelling has diminished in the affected knee and the other alarming symptoms are rapidly disappearing. On August 15 the Pope was permitted to take a few steps about his bedroom, and seemed to be none the worse for the effort.

—THE EASTERN HEAVENS presented on the nights of August 16 and 17 the unusual spectacle of the apparent conjunction of two planets, Mars and Saturn, near the moon. The planets, although appearing to the naked eye and to telescopes of average strength as a brilliant double star, were, in fact, about two-thirds the apparent width of the moon apart. The spectacle was so unusual that Professor E. C. Pickering, director of the Harvard College Observatory, came from his summer home to the observatory to supervise observations of the phenomena. Good photographs of the conjunction were secured.

—ALL EFFORTS TO SECURE modification of the present Sunday observance law at this session of the General Assembly of the State of Connecticut ended when the House refused to reconsider its action in rejecting a bill which sought to give a more liberal Sunday, especially in respect to amateur sports. The Senate had previously passed such a bill and the House had rejected it. The failure to secure reconsideration effectually killed the project.

—A RENEWED PATROL OF the California frontier by United States troops, abolished only a short time ago, was ordered on August 16 by the War Department because of the threatening situation just south of the border in Lower California, Mexico. A company of coast artillery at San Diego was instructed to take the field for patrol duty from San Diego to Yuma, Ariz. Mexican rurales are now proceeding to Tijuana, traveling over American territory with the consent of the United States Government, for the purpose of suppressing the trouble in Lower California.

—WILLIAM R. BADGER, of Pittsburg, and St. Croix Johnstone, of Chicago, among the youngest of the aviators taking part in the international aviation meet at Chicago, lost their lives there on August 15. Death in both cases was due to unexplained accidents, and was in no way caused by carelessness or lack of responsibility of the drivers. Badger careened to his death in a pit in the aviation field. There had been a flaw in one of the wings of the propeller of the Baldwin machine he drove. Centrifugal force broke the propeller, upset the delicate equilibrium of the machine and Badger dashed 100 feet to the bottom of the pit, his neck being broken. Johnstone fell 500 feet under his engine and was drowned as the result of an equally unsuspected defect. Caught under the heavy engine in the Moisant monoplane, he was hurled into Lake Michigan and his body was not brought to the surface until an hour later.

—THE HUDSON RIVER DAY LINE is to build a mammoth n steamer to carry 6,000 passengers. It will be named the Wa ington Irving, and its maiden trip is expected in May, 19 The new craft will equal the fastest passenger vessel in world, as her engines will be built to develop an actual speed twenty-four miles an hour. The new vessel will be 420 f long, twenty feet longer than the Hendrick Hudson, and eigh four feet wide. A feature will be an extension of the hurrica deck to the extreme stern of the craft. She will have thr funnels instead of two, as on the other vessels of the line. T Washington Irving will be fireproof, as steel, asbestos and no burnable materials will be used even for decorative purposes.

—MORE THAN FIVE hundred lives were lost and great devast tion was caused by a typhoon and tidal wave which swept ov Japan, July 20, according to advices brought by the steam Empress of Japan to Vancouver, B. C. Fishing fleets fr Shidzuoka suffered severely, more than 200 fishermen beli drowned. At Tokio a tidal wave swept away many house including a large tea house, with thirty-three people. Tho sands of houses collapsed, the number in Tokio and vicini being over 12,000, according to official statistics. Warehou and factory districts of Tokio suffered severely, eight war houses containing goods worth $16,000,000 being demolishe The loss there was more than $4,000,000. The noted Sheriga inlaid work factory collapsed and fifteen employees were kille those who escaped swimming to roofs of neighboring house A torpedo boat was swept in shore at Tokio and several steam ers foundered, while big liners dragged anchors. Eight forty men on the Aoamori Maru survived when she went dow off Kuno, and 100 fishermen were drowned off there. Th Japanese naval training squadron was cruising off Tosa a two seamen were killed on the Hashidate and seven injure three mortally. At Chiba sixty-four men who went to save fishing depot, were caught in a tidal wave and fifty-three we drowned.

Young People Pledge $1,000,000

A Group of Delegates to the Convention of the "Young People's Christian Union," Photographed on the Capitol Steps at Washington, D. C., After the Close of the Convention

N SUNDAY, August 6, the Annual General Convention of the Young People's Union of the United Presbyterian Church was brought close at Lyric Hall in Baltimore. Enthusiasm the excellent showing of the organization for past year and determination to increase the ionary spirit in the various units of the society ked every session of the convention. At the business meeting, which was held on Saturday, ust 5, a resolution was passed pledging the mem- to raise $1,000,000 for missions during the com- year, and to work continually for the adding of 00 new members to their denominational organ- ions during the same period. Although the task aising such a sum and at the same time enlisting active support of such a large number of people a society whose present membership is 150,000 seem a gigantic undertaking, the young people encouraged by the successful culmination of ner projects which seemed equally quixotic. of the features of the resolution which incor- ated this movement was a hearty endorsement of all the advances of Christian activity among all the Protestant denominations.

The status of the Young People's Christian Union in relation to the Christian Endeavor Society received careful consideration, and, following the presentation and appeal of Dr. Francis E. Clark, president of the Christian Endeavor Society, that the Union unite with that body, the General Committee presented a resolution stating that as more than one-fourth of the United Presbyterian societies already belonged to the Christian Endeavor, and as the church constitution allowed each society to join the older organization if it wished, it did not think it advisable that the union as a body be merged into the Christian Endeavor, but that each society could use its own preference.

Two important changes were made in the constitution. With the election of the four members to the General Committee as provided in the proposed plan to reduce the committee from 13 to 9, provision was made that the first-named member be the president of the convention for the following year instead of being elected at each convention. Also a committee, consisting of the chairman of the General Committee, Rev. Dr. H. A. Kelsey, and one other member to be selected by him, confer with a committee from the woman's organization regarding the union taking over the junior work, which has been under the control of women.

The members of the General Committee elected by the convention were Messrs. C. McNary, Steubenville, O.; P. H. Yourd, Marina, Ill.; W. M. Jackson, Beaver, Pa., and Dr. J. French Kerr, Connellsville, Pa.

At the Sunday evening session, the feature of which was an address by Rev. J. G. Hunt, D.D., of Cairo, Egypt, the incoming General Committee chairmen were introduced. The new officers of the Union for the ensuing year were elected by the Convention and are: Mr. H. A. Caldewood, of Schenectady, N. Y., president; Rev. E. N. Orr, of St. Louis, general secretary; Mr. A. M. Dickson, of East Liverpool, O., treasurer; Miss Sara M. Starr, of New Jersey, recording secretary, and Mr. Frank D. Getty, of Philadelphia, press secretary.

A New Gospel "Find" in Egypt

WHAT may prove to be a very important addition to early Gospel literature was announced as having come to light in Egypt ing recent investigations by an Egyptian Ex- ration Fund party. Fragments have been found Professor Grenfell and Hunt which are believed e portions of an uncanonical Gospel. In great t the fragments are devoted to a conversation ween Jesus and his disciples, in which he warns m to avoid certain wrongdoers. The following iven as a translation:

fore he does wrong he makes all manner of subtle excuses. give heed lest ye also suffer the same things as they: for evildoers among men receive their reward not among the g only, but also await punishment and much torment.

nd he took them and brought them into the very place of ification, and was walking in the temple.

nd a certain Pharisee, a chief priest, whose name was Levi, them and said to the Saviour, "Who gave thee leave to k in this place of purification and to see these holy vessels, n thou hast not washed nor yet have thy disciples bathed r feet? But defiled thou hast walked in this temple, which pure place, wherein no other man walks except he has hed himself and changed his garments, neither does he ven- to see these holy vessels."

nd the Saviour straightway stood still with his disciples and wered him, "Art thou then, being here in this temple, n?"

e said unto him, "I am clean; for I washed in the pool of d, and having descended by one staircase I ascended by ther, and I put on white and clean garments, and then I e and looked upon these holy vessels."

The Saviour answered and said unto him, "Woe, ye blind, who see not. Thou hast washed in these running waters wherein dogs and swine have been cast night and day, and hast cleansed and wiped the outside stain, which also the flute girls anoint and wash; but within they are full of scorpions and all wickedness. But I and my disciples, who thou sayest have not bathed, have been dipped in the waters of eternal life; but woe unto thee . . .

In recent years, many similar fragments have been found in North Africa which, though disconnected and incomplete, bear evidence of having belonged to what is known as the Egyptian version of the Gospel. Clement of Alexandria mentions (about A.D. 200) a Gospel according to the Egyptians. Origen also refers to the same Gospel and so does Jerome, the latter adding that it contained various heresies. Epiphanius took the same view and wrote concerning the "corrupt and preposterous sentiments" of certain parts of the Gospel. In some immaterial points, it contradicted the canonical writings.

It is known that the Church in Egypt was founded in the second century, but this Gospel (assuming it to be identical with that just discovered by Hunt and Grenfell) is believed to have antedated the actual foundation of the church and to have been written very early in that century, before the formal introduction of Christianity into North Africa. Up to the present time, nothing has come to light among the fragmentary relics to show the attitude of this long-forgotten and repudiated Gospel on the miracles and the resurrection. The first seeds of Christianity were sown in Egypt in apostolic times and it is recorded by some ancient historians that Peter founded the Church of Alexandria and several other churches. Tradition says that Mark went to Egypt on a Gospel mission. Long before the time of Christ that country was a seat of philosophy, and when the new religion appeared, it quickly supplanted the old.

Although the reports concerning the newly found "Gospel" do not state the language in which it was written, it was probably the Coptic—a compound of old Egyptian and Greek.

A Fatal Eruption in Japan

—A TERRIFIC ERUPTION of Mount Asama, on the Island of Hondo in the Japanese Archipelago, occurred about 5 o'clock on the morning of July 15. Three persons, one the Rev. J. E. Hail, an American Presbyterian missionary, and the others Japanese students, were killed. A party of seventeen foreigners and another group of seventeen young Japanese were near the crater, and it was reported that all had perished. The majority of the climbers were descending by way of the eastern path at the time of the eruption, which, because of the ashes and stones, is rarely used. Rev. J. E. Hail headed the party of foreigners. Both his legs were broken by the shower of flying rock and he succumbed to his injuries while only half way down the mountain. Among other foreigners injured were the Rev. A. Lloyd, the Rev. Haejke and the Rev. Detweiler, all of whom are suffering from severe contusions, but will recover.

OUR EDITORIAL FORUM

OTTO KOENIG, President GEO. H. SANDISON, Managing Editor THEODORE WATERS, Secretary

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is published weekly by "The Christian Herald," at the Bible House, Fourth Avenue, 8th and 9th Sts., New York City. The officers are: Otto Koenig, President and Treasurer, Bible House, N. Y. City; Geo. H. Sandison, Vice-President, Bible House, N. Y. City; Theodore Waters, Secretary, Bible House, N. Y. City.

Subscription Price. $1.50 a year, in advance.

Remittances should always be made in the safest manner available to the remitter. Register cash remittances.

Foreign Postage.—For each copy to be mailed outside the United States, Canada, and Mexico, add one dollar a year.

Change of Date.—It takes at least two weeks to change the date, after your subscription is renewed.

Expiration of Subscription.—The date on the wrapper indicates when your subscription ends.

Change of Address.—It requires three weeks' time to make the change. Give both old and new address.

Subscriptions may commence with any issue.

Letters should be addressed, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, New York.

Entered at Post Office, New York, as Second-class Matter
Entered as Second-class Matter at the Post Office Department, Ottawa

A Pleasure Deferred

TO THOSE good friends who had joined with us in making up our proposed Palestine pilgrimage party, and in whose company we had anticipated spending two and a half delightful and instructive months in Southern Europe and the Holy Land, we have this week been compelled most reluctantly to announce a postponement. This was rendered unavoidable, in view of the continued and increasing prevalence of cholera in all the Mediterranean ports included in our itinerary, from Gibraltar to Constantinople. We have taken this step only after the fullest inquiry, and are advised that, as there can be no immunity from quarantine delays, our programme in all likelihood would be seriously disarranged. Hence, out of regard for the welfare of our friends—for whose every comfort we feel a personal responsibility—we have yielded to the inevitable. Postponement, however, does not imply abandonment. When conditions improve and quarantines are lifted, we hope to make the proposed Holy Land tour under the same auspices and with pleasanter prospects. And we should rejoice to find no member of our present pilgrimage band absent when we next announce the project.

Multiplied Gifts

ELSEWHERE in this issue we print a financial statement of the Chinese Famine Fund, and also letters from missionaries in China which contain some remarkable statistics concerning the cargo of the ship Buford. It is a new illustration of the fact that God always blesses a work that is done in his name and with the sole purpose of helping humanity. The Buford carried, besides other gifts, 21,000 sacks of flour contributed by readers of this journal. These sacks were apportioned on an average of one sack to a family of four persons. Missionaries who are familiar with the situation write that one sack of that good, sound American flour will keep a family of four alive until the famine time is wholly past. Thus the gifts of our readers on the Buford alone have been instrumental in supporting life in 21,000 homes, aggregating 84,000 souls. Missionary Vinson asks, "Who can estimate the number of lives which that good ship's cargo has saved?" If we add to the cargo the $100,000 sent to the committees in cash through our State Department, the most of it before the Buford arrived, we may be justified in estimating that 480,000 sufferers—men, women and children—have been fed by the bounty of our generous readers and their friends. A great blessing has rested on the work which has now closed. We have reason to be profoundly thankful that American generosity has been once more productive of such excellent and unexpected results.

Blocking Arbitration

IT IS not the altogether unexpected that has happened in the United States Senate, with relation to the arbitration treaties. Still, it is certainly unfortunate that, through the "holding up" of these treaties and the refusal to ratify them unless amended so as to satisfy the demands of senatorial dignity and treaty-making prerogative, the country at large should receive the impression that the Senate was not in sympathy with the peace movement. In the report of the Committee on Foreign Relations, Senator Lodge of Massachusetts characterized the third clause of Article 3 of the treaties as a "breeder of war and not of peace." This clause, which proved a stumbling-block and an offense to senatorial privilege, authorizes the arbitration commission to determine the justiciable character of any question submitted for arbitration but has no reference to the Senate's power of ratification. And the Senate declines to abdicate any of its powers, although Secretary Knox has clearly pointed out that its prerogatives are fully recognized in the text of the treaties, and their legitimate exercise provided for.

These treaties have been openly before the whole country for many months and have received the nation's unequivocal approval. On a matter so plain as to admit of no possible misconception, the President and Cabinet were justified in believing that the Senate would be in the fullest sympathy with the national desire. Its present attitude exposes it to criticism both at home and abroad. To mar the treaties by amendments which would make them of doubtful value is something the country would not approve, no matter how much it might gratify the senatorial dignity. The people are the source of power and Congress is the people's servant. As the matter stands, it is the opinion of the Senate against the overwhelming sentiment of the whole country, which stands back of the President.

We have no doubt, however, that after a period of dignified oratory calculated to soothe their wounded feelings, the Senators will ultimately ratify the treaties. It is not the first time that the Senate has acted in this fashion. The arbitration treaties of 1895 were subjected to a "hold-up," and six years later the Panama Canal Treaty met a similar experience, the opposition melting away in due time, as it will no doubt do in the present case. Meanwhile, we renew our advice to our readers to write to their respective Senators, urging ratification without further delay. By doing so, you will be letting the Senators know just how our good citizens feel on the question and what decision might be expected if, in the last resort, the whole matter were referred back to the people.

The Real Issues in Maine

LET us sweep our glasses along our enemy's lines and our own, and see exactly the status of the Maine battle at this hour.

Those who seek the repeal of prohibition see clearly that they cannot win with those voters who wish to license rather than prohibit the saloon. That all the arguments for local option and statutory prohibition are tricks to capture gullible near-Prohibitionists, ought to be evident to every one.

Arguments for total abstinence should wait until after election, for the question of personal drinking, to which the enemy would like to turn aside the debate, is not now involved. No prohibition ever yet attempted or even possible by State law, under present Federal acts and decisions, can prevent any man who will take the trouble, from importing liquors for his own private use.

The purpose of prohibition, for which Maine is fighting, is to keep out of the ranks of legitimate business and, so far as possible, out of business altogether, those persons who make their living, day after day, by inducing other people to drink. By thus reducing the facilities to drink, by making it harder to buy it, and easier to abstain, we greatly reduce the evil, and if moral forces strongly cooperate—the schools, the pulpit, the press—as infantry and cavalry and sharpshooters should cooperate with artillery, we shall steadily reduce the drinking, and so make easier all the while the task of law enforcement.

Law is a sword, and if at times there are not brave, strong hands to wield it, still let us keep the sword and seek to develop the strength and the courage to use it more effectively.

The liquor traffic of the whole world desires the overthrow of the citadel of prohibition—the Maine Law. Why should any one who is really against that traffic, aid them by removing prohibition from the constitutional citadel to the less defended outer breastworks of the legislature?

The people of Maine have held for sixty years the steadfast opinion that the liquor traffic is not a legitimate business. If there are any conclusions ripe enough to be kept in the State constitution, surely this is one of them. One of the foremost statesmen that New England has ever produced, said recently: "The people of Maine will not repeal prohibition, for they will see it would be a confession to the whole world that for sixty years they have been fools."

If all in Maine who hate and would destroy the saloon, refuse to be divided at this time about secondary questions of how it shall be done, they will on September 11 meet the enemy's proposal to surrender constitutional prohibition with a triumphant "No!"

Pennsylvania Savages

IN THE whole range of heathen warfare or In[dian] outrage it would be difficult to find anything m[ore] inexpressibly revolting and cruel than the sce[nes] that accompanied the lynching of a wretched ne[gro] by a mob at Coatesville, Pa., on August 12. T[he] he was a murderer and a desperado was undispu[ted] He had killed a policeman and committed ot[her] crimes; but he had fallen into the hands of the [law] and would doubtless have suffered for his misde[eds] in due course. But a sudden frenzy had seized [the] ordinarily quiet community. Its anger at the cr[ime] inal gave way to madness and it became a blo[od] thirsty mob. Reason and respect for law and or[der] were alike forgotten in the blinding desire for sw[ift] vengeance. Attacking and overpowering the guar[ds] this riotous mob took the wretched negro from [the] hospital where he was chained to his cot and b[ore] man and cot together half a mile out of town, wh[ere] they literally roasted him to death on a pile [of] blazing fence rails. It is impossible to read wi[th] out a shudder of his frantic struggles for freed[om] his unavailing appeals for mercy, his cries [of] agony, and his shrieking prayers, as he was thro[wn] back again and again on the burning pyre by [the] merciless mob, while fresh fuel was added, send[ing] up long tongues of flames to illuminate the darkne[ss] Not even in Dante's Inferno could a more horri[ble] picture of cruelty and suffering be found. It is [all] so revolting that one hesitates to believe it could e[ver] have occurred in any part of our country. Penns[yl]vania has suffered a disgrace which can only [be] partially mitigated by the prompt punishment [of] the ringleaders in this frightful tragedy. T[his] event shows that lynching and outrage are not co[n]fined to any particular section of the count[ry] Human nature, unfortunately, is pretty much t[he] same everywhere and when once a mob has let [the] evil passions loose, God, religion, law, order, h[u]manity are all forgotten, the old savage natu[re] comes to the surface and any hideous excess m[ay] follow. It is only just to add, however, that [we] have no recollection of any lynching so horribly a[nd] diabolically cruel as that at Coatesville, Pa. Su[ch] occurrences should carry a tremendous lesson of t[he] duty of self-restraint and of the importance [of] respecting law and order, more especially in tim[es] of unusual excitement. Had there been a sing[le] courageous remonstrant in the Coatesville crow[d] the awful tragedy might have been averted.

General Notes

—REPRESENTATIVE NORRIS of Nebraska has introduced in t[he] House of Representatives a resolution requesting the Presid[ent] to ask the various State Governors to appoint delegates to [a] authorized meeting to be held in the hall of the House of R[e]presentatives for the purpose of formulating a uniform law [on] marriage and divorce, the reports and findings to be submitt[ed] to the President, who shall forward them to the Governors. Th[ey] are then to be laid before the State Legislatures.

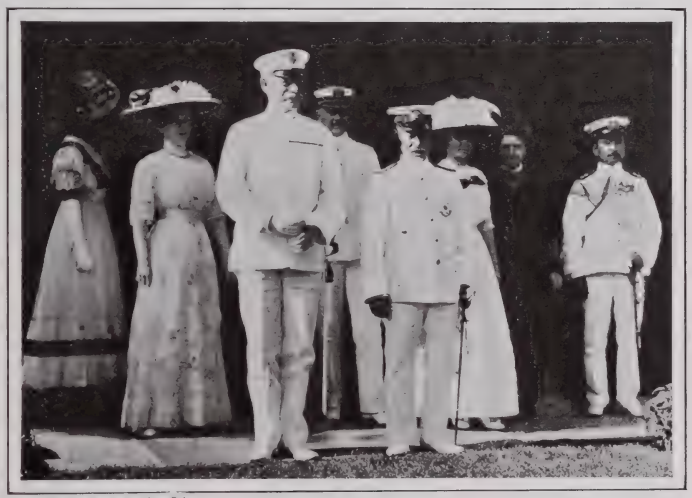
—UNDER THE PROVISIONS of the Insecticide Act of 1910, the D[e]partment of Agriculture is charged with examining specime[ns] of insecticides, Paris greens, lead arsenates and fungicides f[or] determining whether such articles are adulterated or misbrande[d] Inquiries may be addressed to the Insecticide and Fungici[de] Board, Department of Agriculture, Washington, D. C., to who[m] application may be made for copies of the law and rules a[nd] regulations for its enforcement.

Contents of this Number

Wednesday, August 30, 1911

	PAGE
Our Mail-Bag	842
Managing a Great Zoo (Illustrated)	843, 861
Lethargy or Treachery. Sermon	844, 861
By Rev. J. B. Shaw, D.D., LL.D.
The Battle Line in Maine. By Ferdinand C. Iglehart	845
Germany's Spiritual Reawakening (Illustrated)	846
Young People Pledge $1,000,000 (Illustrated)	847
OUR EDITORIAL FORUM	848
THE BIBLE AND NEWSPAPER (Illustrated)	849
Echoes of the Great Famine (Illustrated)	850
Refusing the King's Wine (Illustrated)	855, 856
Sunday School Lesson, by Dr. and Mrs. W. F. Crafts
Caught in the Quicksands. By Lucy Rider Meyer	856
England Facing Great National Strike (Illustrated)	857
Young People's Societies	857
Chats in Our "Comfort Corner" (Illustrated)	858
By Margaret E. Sangster
Our Boys and Girls (Illustrated)	859
By Miss Janet Porter
The Substitute Wedding Journey. By J. S. Ellis	860
How Capital Accumulates	862

THE BIBLE AND NEWSPAPER



Conducted by FERDINAND C. IGLEHART, D.D.

Admiral Togo in America

ADMIRAL COUNT HEIHACHIRO TOGO, after having represented the Mikado at the coronation in London, where he was a distinguished figure, passed through America on his return to his native land. He was accorded a round of receptions in the great cities and the capital of the country such as few men have ever had. The President, ex-President, senators and congressmen, the cabinet-officers, the navy, the army, his own people and the Americans vied with each other in giving him a royal welcome. On August 12 he visited the Military Academy at West Point. He made the trip up the Hudson and back in the President's yacht Mayflower, which Mr. Taft had placed at his disposal. The Admiral and his party were met at West Point by Major-General Thomas H. Barry, Superintendent of the Academy, and entertained at luncheon at the officers' club. There was then an extensive inspection of the principal buildings. The Cadet Corps gave a dress parade and were reviewed by General Barry and Admiral Togo. The Admiral expressed himself as greatly delighted with the Academy, the personnel and proficiency of the cadets. The Admiral visited Theodore Roosevelt at Oyster Bay and presented to the ex-President a five-foot statuette of a Samurai in armor. This unique souvenir was done in lightening metal with exquisite workmanship, and encased in a heavy mahogany box adorned with the Japanese colors. Admiral Togo had kept the prospective gift a secret and had carefully preserved it from the time he left Japan several months ago. Admiral Togo, like Grant, is a man of action rather than words, and yet the short addresses he made on different occasions were timely and sensible. Perhaps the most significant address he made during his stay was that at the reception given to him by the Japan Society of New York in conjunction with the Board of International Hospitality of the New York Peace Society at the Hotel Astor. The Admiral's address, which is worthy of a place in the permanent literature of the world, is as follows:

I thank you very sincerely for this magnificent entertainment. The truth is that I am at a loss for words with which to express my appreciation of the warm and hearty reception which has been accorded me ever since my arrival in this hospitable country. My name, Heihachiro Togo, possesses particular significance at this time. Heihachiro signifies 'peaceful son' and Togo means 'eastern country,' the peaceful man of the East. I consider therefore that the name by which I was christened entitles me to address you on the terms of intimacy. It gives me much pleasure to learn that this function has been given by the Japan Society in conjunction with the Peace Society. I cannot conceive of a happier combination since the relationship between Japan and the United States must ever be one of peace and neighborly good will. In this belief I take advantage of the occasion to declare myself among the foremost advocates in favor of the maintenance of that relationship, in order that our two countries, which have so long lived in harmony and cordial friendship, may continue to do so forever." The Emperor of Japan, who is one of the most remarkable rulers of modern times, has shown great wisdom in the selection of his cabinet and the leaders of his army and navy, taking into account the truth contained in these words:

For by wise counsel thou shalt make thy war; and in multitude of counselors there is safety. (Prov. 24:6.)

Copyright by George Grantham Bain

Admiral Count Togo with General and Mrs. Barry and Their Party at West Point

Never Made a Mistake

Mrs. Willa A. Leonard, who is 71 years of age, has just resigned the position of Chief of Counterfeit Detectors in the United States Treasury Department at Washington. For forty-seven years she has held that position, during which time there has never been an official mistake recorded against her. The money passed first through the hands of subordinate examiners and came for final judgment to Mrs. Leonard, whose opinion was the last word. In her long lifetime she never made a mistake in judging between counterfeit and good money. Millions upon millions of dollars passed through her hands, and the miracle of her sagacity was manifested until her resignation the other day. What a splendid example of ability, constancy, energy and integrity is set by this public servant of threescore years and ten! To her the nation's voice of commendation should be that given to the faithful steward:

Well done, thou good and faithful servant. (Matt. 25:21.)

George Heber Jones Injured

Missionary progress in Korea in recent years has been greater, perhaps, than that of any country on the globe, and one of the most potent factors in the religious revolution of Korea has been the Rev. Dr. George Heber Jones, who has represented the missionary society of the Methodist Episcopal Church. On returning to New York City from a long trip in the West, he hastened to an apartment house to greet his family. The hallway was dark. When he got to the end of the corridor he saw the elevator door open, and thinking the car was there stepped forward, but the car was at the top of the building, and Mr. Jones fell twenty feet to the basement. He had a heavy valise in either hand which held him feet downward. It was at first thought that his injuries were fatal and so the city papers reported; but it is a matter of congratulation and gratitude not only to his family and friends but to the universal civilized world that the physicians say he will recover. He was carried to the Harlem Hospital, where every attention possible was paid him. He will have a long period of convalescence, but will be spared to heroic leadership in the great battlefield where he has been so victorious. To a friend visiting him at the hospital he had not a word of complaint or regret, but expressed his gratitude to God, who in such a peril had preserved his life. The intimate communion of this afflicted child of God with his heavenly Father and gratitude at his escape from death are expressed in these words:

For I have seen God face to face, and my life is preserved. (Gen. 32:30.)

Lilies in Lake Pepin

In Lake Pepin on the upper Mississippi there have appeared vast beds of beautiful flowers of the lily species. People are wondering where they came from, as there is nothing exactly like them anywhere in this country. Those who have visited Egypt say that these flowers are none other than the lotus of the Nile. In color, size, shape and fragrance they are said to be identical with the sacred flower of Egypt. If this be true, their appearance on the Mississippi is a mystery. Whether they shall prove hardy enough to stand our cold winters or not is to be seen. Palestine was exquisitely beautiful in its flowers and delicious in their fragrance. The lily was the symbol of purity. Christ, who came out from the heart of absolute beauty, himself the perfection of all beauty, has been symbolized by the flowers of the Holy Land.

I am the rose of Sharon, and the lily of the valleys. (Song of Solomon 2:1.)

Tadpoles Generated by Electricity

By a telegram from Paris, Professor Betaillon, a biologist of Dijon, claims that he has been enabled to bring tadpoles from frogs' eggs by electricity. In his experiment he pricked frogs' eggs with a fine platinum needle. Then he subjected the pricked eggs to electrical discharges and produced his tadpoles. He has attempted the same process of generation with fish eggs, but without success. Some misguided scientists have been desperate in their attempts to read God out of the universe and prove the theory of spontaneous generation. The claims of Professor Delage of the Sorbonne that he can develop life by chemical processes and such experiments as those of Professor Betaillon give encouragement to those who believe that animals and men can be made by artificial processes as soon as science shall have discovered the proper elements combined in their proper proportions. Such expectations and claims are utterly unscientific. Dr. William Hanna Thomson in a current magazine, refuting the follies of pantheism in modern thought and literature and the theory of spontaneous generation, says: "No living thing ever comes except from a living thing. It is nothing but life which generates life. This dictum of Pasteur has never been shaken. There is no such thing as the production of life from that which is not living." Men's arts have made incubators which hatch the chickens without the hen, but science has never discovered any chemistry that can make an egg out of which a chicken can be hatched. Professor Betaillon can prick frogs' eggs with a needle and treat them to electrical explosions in manufacturing tadpoles, but he will never find any chemistry which will enable him to make a frog's egg without the living frog. The Bible story of the creation of man is true, and science rightfully interpreted confirms and will ever continue to confirm its statements. Spontaneous generation in the spiritual is as impossible as it is in the natural world. Spiritual life cannot be produced by an exercise of the will, however strong, or by environments, however friendly. God's life must come and touch the human soul before it can be made alive. The God-life must be brought to it by the crucified Christ. The necessity of this divine regeneration Christ thus declares:

Marvel not that I said unto thee, Ye must be born again. (John 3:7.)

Discolored by Nitrate of Silver

Miss Elizabeth Jones has written a letter to one of the New York papers pleading with some one to find a cure for chronic nitrate of silver poisoning, which has discolored her, which she suffered two years ago. In the letter of inquiry she says: "The physicians who have treated me pronounce my case incurable, but I have faith that there is somewhere in the world a known remedy, and I ask you to help me find it. I am only twenty-seven years of age, and dread the thought of a lifetime of this terrible affliction, put upon me by an accident, or a joint mistake of a physician and myself. I will go to any part of the world to be treated if I can have a hope of cure by a reputable practitioner." This discoloring of the body is dreadful, but that of the soul by sin is worse, and though it may be difficult or impossible to find a remedy which will restore the color to the skin, Christ can take away the blackness of a sinful heart and make it whiter than snow. The psalmist prays for this spiritual purification.

Purge me with hyssop, and I shall be clean: wash me, and I shall be whiter than snow. (Ps. 51:7.)

ECHOES OF THE GREAT FAMINE

Taking Flour on Wheelbarrows to Siuning

Carrying the "Buford's" Cargo Up the Grand Canal

Setting Out from Chin-kiang for Their Homes

LETTERS received lately by THE CHRISTIAN HERALD convey the news that the work of the relief committees in Shanghai and Chin-kiang has practically closed. At the same time, the relief which has been already distributed to hundreds of thousands throughout the famine districts will go on doing its work for many weeks to come. Some highly instructive figures are furnished by the missionary correspondents regarding the good that has been accomplished through the Buford's cargo. Rev. John W. Vinson of the American Mission at Haichow writes that the 4,800 bags of flour apportioned to Yaowan alone went into four thousand homes and will keep twenty thousand people alive until harvest. Assuming that the same ratio prevails in other districts, the 21,000 bags of CHRISTIAN HERALD flour sent out on the Buford would keep alive 21,000 families aggregating 84,000 souls, a very large number of whom would doubtless have perished had not the good ship brought the gifts of God's people of America to feed them. These figures, it should be remembered, refer to the cargo only. The results accomplished with the food provided by the $100,000 cabled through THE CHRISTIAN HERALD will be reported on by the Committees later. It will then be known how greatly the gifts sent from America were multiplied by divine blessing in the saving of hundreds of thousands of lives in China.

According to the following letter from Chairman John C. Ferguson of the Shanghai Relief Committee, the contributions from America enabled the relief workers to reach a much wider field and accomplish more than was originally contemplated. This must be regarded as a reason for sincere thankfulness. Mr. Ferguson writes as follows:

"All of the flour sent on the Buford has been distributed, and you will be glad to know that reports from every quarter say that the flour reached them in the best condition and that it was greatly appreciated. Through the contributions which the readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD and the American Red Cross and the Seattle Commercial Club have been responsible for, we have been able to send large quantities of foodstuff into the famine districts since the Buford cargo was sent. The contributions have come in so liberally that, instead of confining ourselves to the places which we originally selected, we have been able to add Lingpi, Nan Hsuchow, Wuho, Szechow and Fengtai, in Northern Anhui, and Hsuchowfu, Tao-yuen and Tsingkiangpu, in Northern Kiangsu, besides sending small amounts of relief to several other places. One of the most important places which we have added is Yungchen, in Honan Province. You will see from the map where a bit of Honan Province dips into the northern boundary of Anhui Province. This is the district of Yungchen, and though it was at first denied that there was any famine in this district, later investigations made by Bishop White showed that the famine there was as bad as in any district we were helping. We therefore decided to send relief and have sent about 5,000 bags of kaoliang to them.

"We have now practically reached the end of our work. A full, detailed report will shortly be published."

Rev. John W. Vinson of the North Kiangsu Mission (American Presbyterian) writes from Haichow as follows:

"Our portion of the Buford's cargo is now being distributed at Yaowan. The 4,800 bags of flour reached us in first-class condition. We hailed its coming with thanksgiving and tears of joy, knowing that here was food and relief for some of the countless multitude of the weak and sick, the hungering and starving of the Pichow district. We figure that one bag of flour will nourish a family of four until harvest. So relief is going out to something like 4,000 homes. Just our portion of the Buford's cargo means life for nearly 20,000 people. When one remembers that Yaowan is only one of the seven or eight distributing points, who can estimate the number of lives which that good ship's cargo has saved?

"Americans, accustomed to plenty, can form no conception of the pitiful scenes which we have been forced to witness daily. The most callous hearts would have been filled with compassion to see men and women, once vigorous of body and strong of frame, staggering under the weight of a single bag of flour. Some are actually too weak to carry it!

"Are the people grateful? To study the faces of those who receive relief would be of the deepest interest to the psychologist. There are some f faces in which one can read only greed and co ousness; the little we can give them is not enou but the gratitude and thankfulness of the gr majority are detected in their eyes. One can the stolid look of dumb despair changing to joy a life and hope. Some express their joy in a bri smile of gratitude; others only by a hysterical s

"We have undertaken a new departure in fam relief at Yaowan. Through the generosity o Chinese merchant, five or six buildings have b put at our disposal. In these buildings we n have 430 boys and girls, selected from the m needy homes. We are taking in new ones ev day. Our limit is 700. These we will feed a take care of every day until harvest in June. provide for their food 500 bags of flour from Buford's cargo have been set aside. This, w rice and bean cake, makes porridge which is both wh some and nourishing. T empty flour sacks will be us to make clothes for our lit waifs.

"It is a sight worth seeing watch our 430 children when a meal is served. No tempt is made to seat them tables. They simply squ around in large circles on t ground. Each child is p vided with an earthenwa bowl of about the capacity o pint, and a pair of chopstic The bowls are filled fr large wooden buckets by mea of wooden dippers; the ch does the rest. The physiolog would have to change his es mate of the amount of food small boy's stomach can ho We used to hear that the capa ity of the stomach was thr pints; but some of our boys e eight or nine bowls—not f from a gallon! The explan tion is this: For the pa several months they have be living on a diet the chief i gredient of which was wat supplemented with a handful grain and sweet potato leav It was necessary to consu large quantities of this diet order to obtain sufficient nou ishment to support life. T stomach gradually expanded order to accommodate itself the increase in the volume food. The average Chine boy only knows he has h enough when he can no long swallow. So it is not surpr ing that our boys eat three or four quarts. W hope for smaller capacities."

Children at the Suchien Orphanage

. . .

All the missionaries agree that the famine will r sult in largely increasing the number of orph charges who will have to be supported or cared f This is an aspect of the situation that was n unforeseen. THE CHRISTIAN HERALD readers w unquestionably do their share in aiding these lit people, who have been deprived by the famine their natural protectors, and who are helpless a friendless. Any readers who wish to give a mite the orphanage work can do so by forwarding the offering through THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bib House, New York.

One Million Subscribers

FEW papers are read and re-read as is THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, and none affords greater pleasure and delight, or makes warmer or more lasting friends. It is indisputable that THE CHRISTIAN HERALD has a larger percentage of renewals than any other paper, and that, from its very beginning, it has retained a larger percentage of permanent subscriptions than any other publication; and its subscription list is constantly increasing. What has been done in the past is only an indication of what may be done in the future, provided we all work heartily together with a view to securing the object upon which we have now set our hearts.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD has the faith to believe that there are a million families in this country who would be glad to subscribe for it were they acquainted with its surpassing worth. We further believe that all of our present subscribers are so thoroughly pleased with the paper that they would be glad to see our faith fully realized. They know the blessed influence THE CHRISTIAN HERALD exerts, for they themselves have felt it. Week after week they have scanned its beautiful pages, have read its inspiring messages, have reveled in its literary and artistic wealth, have been deeply interested, edified and instructed, and, after having read it from beginning to end, have sent it to some distant friends that they also might enjoy its perennial riches.

Almoner of Nations

The achievements of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD have never been equaled by any other publication. It has collected and distributed nearly four million dollars in charity. The farmers of Finland, Sweden, Norway and Russia, the martyrs of Armenia, the orphans of India, the reconcentrados of Cuba, the famine sufferers in China, the rescued men of the Bowery, the thousands of waifs from the tenements happy in The Christian Herald Children's Home, all rise up and call it blessed. God be thanked for the opportunities and the privileges which were ours in the past; and may he graciously continue to pour out his blessing upon THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, its editors and proprietors and readers, and make us increasingly useful in his service.

But, in addition to these great monumental charities, there is the mission of blessedness and usefulness of the paper itself, which results in light, cheer, hope and happiness in the home circle. And it is this which we now wish to extend. We are engaged in a great Home Missionary effort. You can help us. We know you will help us, and thus have part and parcel in all the good which, under divine blessing, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD will accomplish in years to come.

We know that we are making a good paper and we are glad of it. Started for the sole purpose of disseminating spiritual truth, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD has been true and loyal to its mission, and tens of thousands have been led by its means into the clearer, fuller light that now irradiates their lives and makes the world through them brighter, better and happier. And what THE CHRISTIAN HERALD has done for these tens of thousands it can and will and must do for other hundreds of thousands—perhaps even—and may God grant that it be so—for millions.

To bring this about we have determined to enlist the cordial co-operation of our friends, and ourselves to make such a financial sacrifice as will demonstrate our own sincerity in the matter. THE CHRISTIAN HERALD cannot be produced at less than its regular subscription price, which is $1.50 per annum. But to interest those who cannot appreciate its beauties, simply because they do not see the paper, we have decided to accept an unlimited number of one-third year trial subscriptions at twenty-five cents each, subject to the easy conditions set forth in the annexed coupons, and in addition we intend to distribute a number of handsome gifts in token of our appreciation of the efforts of all those friends who will help us in the work.

Four Months at Half Price

Time Limit Extended to September 15

OUR Special Mid-Summer Subscription Offer has proven so popular, and we have received so many requests from friends who desire to help us achieve our goal—One Millon Subscribers for The Christian Herald—that we have determined to extend the period during which coupons may be forwarded.

We now desire to announce that we will accept coupons, good for four-months New subscriptions. if mailed

NOT LATER THAN SEPTEMBER 15, 1911

But friends desiring to receive a copy of our new hand water-colored picture "Dreamland," as a reward for their efforts in our behalf, should send in their six signed coupons as soon as possible, as we have but a limited number of "Dreamland" pictures, and we can send them out only as long as they last.

Every friend added to our list makes The Christian Herald that much stronger, and this offer enables your friends to try The Christian Herald for four months at half price, in addition to which you will receive the rewards offered you on the following pages. Help us to add your friends to our influence by getting them to sign the coupons on pages 852-853.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

Our Generous Offer

We could not make this sacrifice but for the experience of the past, that a very large percentage of our subscribers renew, and when they renew, they are glad to pay the regular subscription price, because they are satisfied that THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is well worth all we ask for it.

Let us begin this work by doubling the present number of its subscribers. While this is a great undertaking, an unprecedented task, it is nevertheless an easy one, for it means just one new subscriber for each and every one now on our list. Surely every subscriber can do this, and we believe you will do your share, while we will gladly do everything within our power to help you.

Read the Directions on Following Page

Read the following pages carefully. You will find there a number of coupons and directions for helping along the work, also a list of the gifts we intend to distribute among those who assist us on our way to the million mark. You, dear friend, can earn any or all of these gifts in return for almost no effort on your part, and you will have the additional satisfaction of knowing you have helped make THE CHRISTIAN HERALD the most influential paper in the world.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

THE greater the circulation of any publication, the greater must be its influence. The greater the circulation of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, the greater will be its power for doing good in the world.

Do you realize what it would mean if THE CHRISTIAN HERALD had one million subscribers? It would mean that the paper would enter one million homes fifty-two times a year, and be read regularly by five million souls. Five million souls banded together by one thought—the welfare, the godspeed of humanity, of which THE CHRISTIAN HERALD would be the instrument.

You, dear reader, are one of the already large army of souls who believe in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. Surely you will be willing to help us make that army more powerful for good than ever before. We need your personal influence, just as we need the collective influence of all our friends.

Can We Reach the Million Mark?

If we can bring THE CHRISTIAN HERALD up to the million mark, the abiding result will accrue to the direct benefit of every one of our readers. We can give you a better and a bigger paper. We can enter into campaigns for the common good, with the assurance of wider success than ever before. We can extend the charitable work of our friends who contribute, through the publication, to the succor of the poor. We can extend these enterprises, your enterprises, as we have never been able to extend them before. And, with the help of our friends, God willing, we mean to do it.

This is Our Plan

Our plan is as follows: On these two pages you will find six coupons. Please tear them apart at the dotted lines, then distribute them among such of your Church and Sunday School friends as will be likely to subscribe. They will thank you for doing so. Explain to them the beauties, the riches, the great attractiveness of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, and urge them to give it a trial.

Tell them that THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is a great national home newspaper, which will keep them up to date on matters of interest; that it describes every event of national interest, whether it happens at home or abroad; that it is illustrated on nearly every page with graphic pictures of men, women, places and events of interest; that in addition to news matter it publishes magazine features of interest to every one in the family—special articles on live topics, short stories, serial stories, a children's department, etc.; that it offers them annually one and a half times the quantity of reading matter offered by the popular magazines; that its large corps of correspondents live in every country on earth; that its readers constitute a great influential family to which it will benefit them to belong.

Tell them of the wonderful offer we are making, and how each coupon which you show them saves them one quarter of a dollar on this one-third year subscription, and you will be surprised how quickly they will avail themselves of the exceptional opportunity thus offered.

If six coupons are not enough for your purpose, write us, and we will send you as many more as you may require, absolutely free of all charge. Do not forget, however, that the coupons are good only until Sept. 15th, and cannot be mailed after that date.

Your Reward

In return for your trouble in doing this, and quite aside from the satisfaction you will feel in helping to bring THE CHRISTIAN HERALD up to the million mark, we offer you any one or more of sixteen different rewards.

Among these rewards you will be sure to find some which you will be eager to possess for so little trouble. These rewards are for you, remember, not for those whom you will induce to subscribe, and you should take advantage of the opportunity to possess them. For instance:

FOR 2 COUPONS: Suppose you have but two friends who are lucky enough to be invited to subscribe, and who will sign only two of the coupons, accompanied by 25 cents each. In return for your service in forwarding us these coupons, you may have your choice of any one volume of the now famous Christian Herald Home Library, which contains a volume of interest for every one in the family. The titles of these books are as follows: Entertainments for Home, Church and School—Handy Man's Manual of Facts and Figures—Business

A SUBSTANTIAL REWARD

52 Times A Year — THE CHRISTIAN HERALD — BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK CITY — $1.50 per Year

25 Cents

IN ACCORDANCE with your offer to accept this Coupon and Twenty-five Cents for a Four-Months' Subscription to The Christian Herald, beginning Sept. 1st, 1911, I send herewith 25 Cents, and I hereby certify that I am not now a subscriber to The Christian Herald, and that this subscription is not intended to take the place of any subscription now on your books.

Good Only Until Sept. 15, 1911

Name of person influencing this subscription:

Name.....

Street.....

Town..... State.....

52 Times A Year — THE CHRISTIAN HERALD — BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK CITY — $1.50 per Year

25 Cents

IN ACCORDANCE with your offer to accept this Coupon and Twenty-five Cents for a Four-Months' Subscription to The Christian Herald, beginning Sept. 1st, 1911, I send herewith 25 Cents, and I hereby certify that I am not now a subscriber to The Christian Herald, and that this subscription is not intended to take the place of any subscription now on your books.

Good Only Until Sept. 15, 1911

Name of person influencing this subscription:

Name.....

Street.....

Town..... State.....

52 Times A Year — THE CHRISTIAN HERALD — BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK CITY — $1.50 per Year

25 Cents

IN ACCORDANCE with your offer to accept this Coupon and Twenty-five Cents for a Four-Months' Subscription to The Christian Herald, beginning Sept. 1st, 1911, I send herewith 25 Cents, and I hereby certify that I am not now a subscriber to The Christian Herald, and that this subscription is not intended to take the place of any subscription now on your books.

Good Only Until Sept. 15, 1911

Name of person influencing this subscription:

Name.....

Street.....

Town..... State.....

Read the Coupons Carefully

Each Coupon attached hereto will be accepted in lieu of ONE QUARTER DOLLAR if accompanied by 25 Cents for a FOUR MONTHS' Subscription to The Christian Herald. But no subscription induced through this offer will be permitted to take the place of one now on our books. Each subscription must be NEW.

Copyrighted, 1896, by Braun & Co.

THE FAMOUS DREAMLAND PICTURE IN COLORS
18 x 13 Inches, ready for framing. SEE OPPOSITE PAGE

SPECIAL NOTICE! Remember, this offer will hold good only until September 15, and we reserve the right to return any coupons and money sent us after that date. All subscriptions must date from the first issue in September.

Address: Special Coupon Offer,

MID-SUMMER OFFER!

Hints for Men and Women—Helpful Talks With Girls—Healthful Sports for Boys—How to Speak and Write Correctly—Marvels of Modern Science—and Practical Suggestions for Mother and Housewife. If this does not attract you, you may have one volume of the set, Masterpieces of the World's Best Literature. Or you may have a life-size fac-simile of the Declaration of Independence, that priceless document which should hang framed on the wall of every American home, and with this we will give you a copy of The Story of the Flag.

FOR 3 COUPONS: If you have three friends who will sign coupons, and you will send them to us, accompanied by 25 cents each, we will send you a copy of The Life of the Rev. T. De Witt Talmage, or we will send you one volume of his celebrated sermons, although we have but a limited number of the latter, and in case they run out before your order arrives we will reserve the right to have you substitute some other reward.

FOR 4 COUPONS: If you induce four of your friends to subscribe, we will send you as a reward a new volume of sermons by the late Rev. Dwight L. Moody, which have never before been published. Or we will send you a Music Simplifier whereby you may learn to play the piano at home without a teacher. Or we will send you a volume which will teach you how to write shorthand without an instructor. The practical utility of these three rewards will be appreciated.

FOR 5 Coupons: Have you read The Life Work of Louis Klopsch? Although many thousands of our readers are the fortunate possessors of this volume, there are probably some who would like to possess this account of the achievements of the greatest "Captain of Philanthropy" the world has seen. You may have this splendidly illustrated volume in return for inducing five of your friends to sign coupons, and send them to us accompanied by 25 cents each.

FOR 6 COUPONS: We are sure that a majority of our friends will send us six signed coupons, accompanied by 25 cents each. For all who do, we offer splendid inducements. For sending us six coupons you may have as a reward a complete set of The Christian Herald Home Library of eight volumes, the titles of which have already been mentioned. Or you may have a beautiful American flag, 4x6 feet in dimension, worthy to float proudly over any home in the Nation. Or we will send you a Red Letter New Testament, beautifully bound in leather, soft and flexible, with overlapping edges, red under gold, and with every word recorded as having been spoken by our Lord, printed in red. Or we will send you a copy of that fascinating volume entitled The Great Hereafter, by Rev. Madison C. Peters. Or we will send you a copy of Hero Tales, that interesting volume containing accounts of glowing deeds of American citizens. Or we will send you that useful book entitled Before the Doctor Comes, containing information which will tell you just what to do in case of an accident or sickness, before the arrival of a physician. Or we will send you a copy of the volume entitled The True Life of Christ, from the testimony of the apostles.

Extra Reward for Six Coupons

Think of being able to secure for nothing but a little effort any one or more of the above rewards! We are sure you will try to induce SIX friends to sign coupons. But now comes the most enjoyable surprise of all!

Do you remember "Dreamland," that beautiful photogravure of a little child asleep? "Dreamland" evoked the praise and admiration of hundreds of thousands of our readers who now have the picture framed upon their walls. It was, indeed, so popular with our readers that we felt that many of them would like to have the picture in colors. We inquired if this could not be done, and we have succeeded in procuring a number of copies of "Dreamland," in water colors applied by hand.

You know how beautiful was the photogravure, but you can hardly have a conception of how much more beautiful is the picture since it has been rendered into colors. If the child seemed to be a living, breathing specimen of human beauty before, it now seems as much more so as day is more beautiful than night.

You May Have this Picture, Too

We have secured One Thousand of these beautiful pictures, and we will present a copy Free to all friends sending us Six Coupons, accompanied by 25 cents each, as long as the pictures last. Send in your coupons AT ONCE, so you will receive one of the thousand copies of "Dreamland."

Now for Victory!

Whichever rewards you select, may success attend your efforts. We feel sure that the most active friends in this aggressive campaign will be our present subscribers, who know and appreciate the good THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is doing, and will be glad of this opportunity to encourage the efforts of its editors and proprietors to maintain its high standard as the brightest and best family paper in the wide, wide world. On the following page you will find a description of these rewards and a list from which to select those which please you.

AWAITS YOUR CO-OPERATION!

Resolve to Act at Once!

Do not feel hampered by lack of material. If you have more friends who want to subscribe than you have coupons let us know, and we will send you more free of charge. Do not forget that no name will be accepted for a subscription which is now on our books.

DREAMLAND—In Colors

The miniature reproduction in black and white on the opposite page cannot give more than a vague idea of the beauty of the hand-colored reproduction of Dreamland, the picture which proved such a favorite with our readers. This was the picture of which Mrs. Sangster wrote:

"There is not a mother, or for that matter a grandmother, in this wide land, from coast to coast, who will not want a Dreamland picture for her own as soon as she sees it. The artist has chosen an ecstatic moment in home life when the household darling, weary with play, has been caught in the toils of slumber. Here she lies, every muscle relaxed, the dimpled hand and the dancing feet quiet in repose. It is all one can do to keep from dropping a kiss on the rosy cheek. But we must not do that, for we might waken the baby and call her back from dreamland. The Christian Herald has offered its readers many beautiful pictures, but this one surpasses all former productions."

FURTHER INDUCEMENT

We have secured just One Thousand of this beautiful hand water-colored picture "Dreamland." To all friends sending us Six Coupons, together with 25 cents for each one-third year subscription to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, we will present a copy Free, as long as the Thousand last. Send in your coupons at once, so you will receive one of the thousand copies of "Dreamland."

Christian Herald, BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK CITY

52 Times A Year — THE CHRISTIAN HERALD — BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK CITY — $1.50 per Year

25 Cents

IN ACCORDANCE with your offer to accept this Coupon and Twenty-five Cents for a Four-Months' Subscription to The Christian Herald, beginning Sept. 1st, 1911, I send herewith 25 Cents, and I hereby certify that I am not now a subscriber to The Christian Herald, and that this subscription is not intended to take the place of any subscription now on your books.

Good Only Until Sept. 15, 1911

Name of person influencing this subscription:

Name.....

Street.....

Town..... State.....

52 Times A Year — THE CHRISTIAN HERALD — BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK CITY — $1.50 per Year

25 Cents

IN ACCORDANCE with your offer to accept this Coupon and Twenty-five Cents for a Four-Months' Subscription to The Christian Herald, beginning Sept. 1st, 1911, I send herewith 25 Cents, and I hereby certify that I am not now a subscriber to The Christian Herald, and that this subscription is not intended to take the place of any subscription now on your books.

Good Only Until Sept. 15, 1911

Name of person influencing this subscription:

Name.....

Street.....

Town..... State.....

52 Times A Year — THE CHRISTIAN HERALD — BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK CITY — $1.50 per Year

25 Cents

IN ACCORDANCE with your offer to accept this Coupon and Twenty-five Cents for a Four-Months' Subscription to The Christian Herald, beginning Sept. 1st, 1911, I send herewith 25 Cents, and I hereby certify that I am not now a subscriber to The Christian Herald, and that this subscription is not intended to take the place of any subscription now on your books.

Good Only Until Sept. 15, 1911

Name of person influencing this subscription:

Name.....

Street.....

Town..... State.....

These Rewards Are for YOU!

One Volume Christian Herald Library

Given for Only Two Coupons

This reward consists of one volume from our celebrated Christian Herald Library, which consists of eight volumes, entitled as follows: Entertainments for Home, Church and School, Handy Man's Manual of Facts and Figures, Business Hints for Men and Women, Helpful Talks with Girls, Healthful Sports for Boys, How to Speak and Write Correctly, Marvels of Modern Science, Practical Suggestions for Mother and Housewife. Note that there is a volume for every one in the household: the man, the woman, the boy, and the girl. Whichever volume you may select, you will find it very useful indeed and well worth the little effort which you will expend in getting only two friends to sign each a coupon. Add 3c. for actual postage when sending for this reward.

One Volume Masterpieces of the World's Best Literature

Given for Only Two Coupons

We have a number of odd volumes of this set on hand, and will be glad to send any one of them as a reward to a subscriber who will seed us 2 coupons properly signed and accompanied by 25 cents each for new four months' subscribers. In case the supply of odd volumes becomes exhausted, the reader should send in a second choice of 2 coupons, accompanied by 25 cents each and the necessary postage. Add 4 cents actual postage for any one of the Masterpieces.

The Declaration of Independence and Story of the Flag

Given for Only Two Coupons

This is an exact life-size facsimile of the Declaration of Independence, that priceless document which was signed by the fathers of the nation, and which is preserved in the State House, Philadelphia. It should hang framed on the wall of every American household. Accompanying the Declaration will be sent a Story of the Flag, which is a vivid history of our National Emblem. In sending for these rewards, add 3 cents for actual postage.

One Volume Talmage's Sermons

Given for Only Three Coupons

We have a number of odd volumes of sermons by the late Rev. T. De Witt Talmage, which we will be glad to send to any of our friends who will send us 3 coupons properly signed, accompanied by 25 cents each. Our stock of these is limited, and if exhausted some other reward will be substituted. In sending for one of these volumes add 14 cents for actual postage.

Life of Rev. T. De Witt Talmage

Given for Only Three Coupons

This Life of the celebrated preacher is an illuminating account of his achievements on the oratorical platform and his travels in the Holy Land. If you have not read it, you should do so. In sending for this reward, add 23 cents for actual postage.

Shorthand Without a Teacher

Given for Only Four Coupons

This volume is a complete manual of shorthand. It has been thoroughly tested and thousands have learned shorthand from its pages. It will impart to you the principles of shorthand very readily, after which your proficiency will depend upon the practice you give the subject. Many people are earning a living to-day who first studied the rudiments of their calling in this little book. If you select this reward, send 4 cents for actual postage.

Life Work of Louis Klopsch

Given for Only Five Coupons

Although a great many readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD have already secured a copy of The Life Work of this great captain of philanthropy, there are still some who would like to secure a copy of this fascinating work if they could easily do so. Simply get five of your friends to sign coupons, and send them to us accompanied by 25 cents each, and as a reward we will send you this beautifully illustrated volume, which contains the story of the Life Work of your late friend, Dr. Louis Klopsch. You must have contributed to many of the charities mentioned in this book, and it will interest you to see how they were dispensed. If you select the Life Work of Dr. Klopsch as a reward, add 19 cents for actual postage.

"Thou Fool" and Other Sermons by Moody

Given for Only Four Coupons

This is a volume of twelve sermons which were delivered by the late Mr. Moody, but which were never before published. They are in Mr. Moody's best vein, and contain an inspirational message which will be appreciated by our readers. Every subscriber of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD should own a copy of these sermons. If you select this reward, add 6 cents for actual postage.

The Music Simplifier

Given for Only Four Coupons

This is a really good method for learning to play the piano or organ without a teacher. It is practical, and has been endorsed by some of the world's best musicians. We believe it to be the best system for teaching music without a teacher on the market. Many a young person who cannot afford the expense of a regular music teacher, might well try this simplifier. If you select this reward, add 4 cents for actual postage.

The American Flag (4 x 6 Feet)

Given for Only Six Coupons

This large American Flag is one of the best rewards we have to offer. It is worthy of being flown from any home or public institution in the land. It will not fade nor shrink, and you will find constant use for it on all of the holidays throughout the year. Six feet long by four feet wide, bigger than the top of your dining room table, and given in return for a little effort on your part in having six of your friends sign coupons. Send them accompanied by 25 cents each, and we will send you the flag without cost, except 9 cents for actual postage. Send the 6 Coupons immediately, so you may be among the thousand friends who will receive a copy of the beautiful picture, "Dreamland," water-colored by hand.

The Christian Herald Home Library, 8 Vols.

Given for Only Six Coupons

This is the celebrated Christian Herald Home Library of eight volumes, containing books for every member of the family. Their titles are as follows: Entertainments for Home, Church and School—Handy Man's Manual of Facts and Figures—Business Hints for Men and Women—Helpful Talks With Girls—Healthful Sports for Boys—How to Speak and Write Correctly—Marvels of Modern Science and Practical Suggestions for Mother and Housewife. You will find this is one of the most useful sets of books ever published, and whether you are head of the family, the housewife, the son or the daughter, you will never regret earning one of these useful sets by having six of your friends sign coupons and sending them to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, accompanied by 25 cents. If you select the Home Library, add 20 cents for actual postage. Send the 6 Coupons immediately, so you may be among the thousand friends who will receive a copy of "Dreamland," water-colored by hand.

Carefully Read Every Word

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is ever ready to give generous recognition to each and every effort kindly put forth by its subscribers, with a view to the enlargement of its sphere of usefulness. So to-day we again come before our subscribers with an opportunity for service in the one hand, and with generous recognition in the other.

We are planning to double our circulation, and to this end we are making a great financial sacrifice to attract new people by offering them a four months' subscription at a great bargain, in the hope of winning them ultimately as permanent subscribers. But it requires the efforts of tens of thousands of people to accomplish what we are seeking to attain, and it is but right and proper that those who co-operate with us in this matter should be duly recognized and properly rewarded: hence we have arranged the following list of

Unusually Liberal Rewards

No. of Subscribers	Rewards	Add for Actual Postage
For 2 Coupons--	Your choice 1 Vol. Christian Herald Library	$ .03
For 2 Coupons--	1 Vol. Masterpieces of the World's Best Literature (Odd volumes as long as they last.)	.04
For 2 Coupons--	Story of the Flag and Declaration of Independence (Life size ready for framing.)	.03
For 3 Coupons--	1 Vol. Talmage's Sermons. (Odd volumes as long as they last.)	.14
For 3 Coupons--	Life of Rev. T. De Witt Talmage	.23
For 4 Coupons--	1 Vol. Shorthand Without a Teacher	.04
For 4 Coupons--	"Thou Fool" and Other Sermons. By Dwight L. Moody (Never before published.)	.06
For 4 Coupons--	The Music Simplifier. (A really good method without a teacher.)	.04
For 5 Coupons--	Life Work of Louis Klopsch	.19
For 6 Coupons--	1 Set, 8 Vols. Christian Herald Home Library (See description elsewhere.)	.20
For 6 Coupons--	American Flag (4 x 6 feet). (Will not fade or shrink.)	.09
For 6 Coupons--	Red Letter Testament. (Flexible Leather, Red under Gold.)	.05
For 6 Coupons--	The Great Hereafter. By Rev. Madison C. Peters	.43
For 6 Coupons--	Hero Tales. By Francis Trevelyan Miller	.15
For 6 Coupons--	The True Life of Christ. (From the writings of the Evangelists.)	.09
For 6 Coupons--	Before the Doctor Comes. (Should be in every house.)	.14

SPECIAL INDUCEMENT

We have secured One Thousand copies of the beautiful hand water-colored picture "Dreamland." To all friends sending us Six Signed Coupons accompanied by 25 cents each for Six New Four Months' Subscriptions, we will present not only the rewards which they select from the above list, but in addition we will send Free a copy of "Dreamland" as long as the thousand copies last. So send in your coupons at once.

WHEN SELECTING REWARDS, You Must Send the Postage Marked Opposite the Reward of Your Choice

Red Letter Testament

Given for Only Six Coupons

This is our regular Red Letter Testament, beautifully bound in Divinity Circuit, overlapping Red under Gold Edges, and a bookmark. Every word recorded as having been spoken by our Lord is printed in red. Every reader of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD should have one of these Testaments, and here is your opportunity to procure one for the simple effort of getting six of your friends to sign coupons. Send them to us accompanied by 25 cents each, and not only the Testament will be yours, but you may be among the thousand friends who will receive a copy of the beautiful picture "Dreamland," water-colored by hand. If you desire the Testament, add 5 cents for postage.

The Great Hereafter. By Rev. M. C. Peters

Given for Only Six Coupons

The title of this volume gives one an inkling of the subject which Dr. Peters selected to discourse upon. It is a philosophical treatise on life after death, and it cannot fail to awaken the most profound reflection in the minds of its readers. It is a large book, and if you select it as a reward, you must add 43 cents for actual postage. Given for only 6 coupons. Send the 6 coupons immediately, so you may be among the thousand friends who will receive a copy of the beautiful picture, "Dreamland," water-colored by hand.

Hero Tales. By Francis Trevelyan Miller

Given for Only Six Coupons

Some of you may have read Hero Tales, but if you have not, there awaits you a real treat in this account of the heroic deeds of men, women and children. The book inspires one to self-sacrifice and patriotism, and will help to pass many an evening spent around the winter lamp. If you succeed in having 6 coupons signed and send them to us accompanied by 25 cents, we will send you Hero Tales, and you may be among the thousand friends who will receive a copy of the beautiful picture "Dreamland," water-colored by hand. Add 15 cents for actual postage if you elect Hero Tales as a reward.

The True Life of Christ

Given for Only Six Coupons

Here is an inspiring work which is based on the writings of the four evangelists, Matthew, Mark, Luke and John. In vivid, forceful manner it portrays the life of the Saviour as perhaps it has never been portrayed, except in the Bible itself. If you desire this great book and send us 6 coupons, properly signed and accompanied by 25 cents each, add 9 cents for actual postage and we will send it to you at once. Send the 6 coupons immediately, so you may be among the thousand friends who will receive a copy of the beautiful picture, "Dreamland," water-colored by hand.

Before the Doctor Comes

Given for Only Six Coupons

Here is a book which should be in every household. It tells you exactly what to do in case of accident or in case of sickness, while waiting for the appearance of the family physician. Under such circumstances the knowledge which you may obtain from this book may mean the difference between life and death. It is a volume full of real utility, and should be in the hands of every one of our readers. Get six of your friends to sign coupons, and send them to us, accompanied by 25 cents each, so that you may be among the thousand friends who will receive a copy of the beautiful picture "Dreamland," water-colored by hand. If you select Before the Doctor Comes, add 14 cents for actual postage.

REMEMBER: September 15th is positively the last mailing date!

Address SPECIAL COUPON OFFER THE CHRISTIAN HERALD BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK

REFUSING THE KING'S WINE*

Sunday School Lesson by Dr. and Mrs. Wilbur F. Crafts

T WILL be the teacher's own fault if this lesson is not one of thrilling interest in every Sunday School ss. It appeals to boys especially as story of heroic youth who helped h other by the "gang spirit" in a -off time. And hardly less it ap- ls to girls, for it is heroic boys that is worth having most admire. And h boys and girls should be inter- ed in this story of school life about tiff examination of boys from a for- n land by their king. That brings nome to the ambitious boys and girls foreign parentage, especially to vs, of Daniel's own race, some of om are proving in our schools "bet- " than some of our American boys girls who do not equally appreciate blessing of our free public schools. boys of athletic proclivities the ry is pertinent as showing what t of diet and physical habits will p them to win. To men and women st home from foreign travel, and the eater number who expect to go, this ry is timely, of boys who were loyal their national ideals in a strange d, when it was not only difficult but nost dangerous to be so. To many itish people, and to some of other nds, the story will recall the recent ur when, tempted to drink the health King George in wine, they did or not have courage to avail them- ves of his permission to drink it in ter.

This lesson of loyalty to national in- tutions and customs makes the ory, in men's classes, a good opening n for the autumn elections, espe- lly those in which "No license" and ohibition are the issues, and most of in Maine, where a battle to retain nstitutional Prohibition occurs the y after this lesson is taught with pies of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD in e hands of every teacher. Whether e Maine battle, which is of world- de interest, is won or lost, it should followed by a great campaign every- here of such pledging and organiz- g and experimentation as Daniel's ory suggests.

Why Daniel Was in Babylon

When Daniel was born, a majority his people in Palestine were so much ven to idolatry, Sabbath-breaking d intemperance that God allowed the ssyrians to carry them captive—first e tribes beyond Jordan, then those of alilee and Samaria, and, last of all, udah—in order that they might be urged of these three besetting sins. While arrangements were being made transport the people of Judah, some uths of "the king's seed" were taken Babylon as hostages, of whom were aniel and his three companions, mem- ers of the true nobility, for they were lso from families God had marked for ercy when the Assyrian destroyer ad gone through the land. While thers perished, these were safeguard- d against death, though carried cap- ve. In Babylon these four talented uths encountered the perils of pros- erity, for they were put in the king's ivil service academy to be trained for laces near the throne. Choicest meat nd wine, that had first been honored s an offering to the national idols nd then had been sent to the king, ere by him sent to these foreign uths as a great honor and favor. he king supposed this food and drink ould minister both to health and joy. ut these boys had been told by their eligious teachers and their national ulers not to eat or drink what had een offered to idols, and they banded hemselves together under a "purpose" r pledge that they would not eat or rink these idol sacrifices, even at the isk of displeasing the king, and of being unpopular with all their school- mates.

It is instructive to note that they carried out their purpose as inoffen- sively and politely as possible. They recognized the sincere wish of the king to do them a favor, and asked permis- sion of the king's steward that for ten days their preferred diet of vegetables and water should be tried. The sequel was that they were "fairer and fatter" in body, and keener of mind than other pupils who ate the king's meat and drank his wine. It is not probable that they saw as clearly as intelligent boys of to-day that this result was largely hygienic, under natural law. They may have thought it was chiefly due to supernatural interposition. Nor is it to be supposed that they refused the meat because of any such views of vegetarianism as are held by many to- day; or that they refused the wine chiefly because they had learned from Solomon that it is bad for body and brain.

Boys and girls to-day who have good parents and wise teachers have one more reason than "Daniel's Band" for abstaining from wine, namely, that they have themselves been taught in public school and Sunday School good reasons for abstaining such as Daniel never knew.

In Germany boys and girls who drink have been tested more thor- oughly than were Daniel and his schoolmates. Dr. Paul Bergman (Die Enthaltsamkeit, March, 1907), princi- pal of a school in Germany, obtained the consent of parents of some of his pupils to make a test of a small quan- tity of light wine upon the mental working ability of a class of girls thirteen to fifteen years of age. Shortly after taking one half a wineglass of light wine (eight per cent. alcohol), the girls were given a dictation exercise. They made from one to seven more errors than they did before; it took them longer to think, and the writing, spelling and punctuation were consid- erably worse. There were more erasures. Parallel experiments were tried upon the boys, giving them beer instead of wine, with similar results. The boys agreed that the beer made thinking more difficult. Among the results obtained by Professor Kraepe- lin at Heidelberg University, in test- ing the effects of alcohol upon mental work, was one which showed that un- der the influence of alcohol a man memorized sixty figures after sixty repetitions, while before taking the alcohol he memorized one hundred with only forty repetitions. The exercises requiring the highest powers of the mind were most seriously affected by alcohol. Benjamin Franklin, when his fellow-printers were all given to drink, and it was commonly supposed to be essential to health, abstained and made note that he could therefore set more type and in better quality—the very thing that Dr. Aschaffenberg has proved by careful tests, that even Ger- mans accustomed to daily use of beer do a tenth more work on the average on days when they drink nothing than on days when they drink even one ounce of pure mild wine or beer, con- tained in less than one bottle of wine or less than three glasses of beer.

"Then said Daniel, Prove thy servants, I beseech thee, ten days; and let them give us pulse to eat, and water to drink"

American Boys Have More Reasons to Refuse Wine

THEY REFUSED THE MEAT AND WINE IN ORDER TO BE LOYAL TO THEIR PARENTS, THEIR CHURCH AND THEIR COUNTRY. And when to-day parents and Church and government all bid boys and girls do some things, and warn them not to do others, obedience is loyalty and wisdom, even if they do not yet understand all the reasons for doing and not doing these things.

This principle goes beyond youth and beyond wine. When American Protes- tant Christians go to Sunday horse- races in Paris and Sunday bull-fights in Madrid, and to gambling casinos at Monte Carlo, they are disloyal to their parents, to their church and to their country.

As to the effect of wine and other alcoholic drinks on health, the best ex- periments are those of British life in- surance companies that insure mod- erate drinkers and total abstainers separately and give to each class what- ever that class falls short of the aver- age expected number of deaths. For sixty years the abstainers have been getting from 26 to 27 per cent. more rebates than the moderate drinkers. Of those who pass the strict medical examination for insurance at sixty years of age, those who are very mod- erate drinkers live on the average only to sixty-eight. The abstainers aver- age twice as long—to seventy-five years.

We should not forget that in Babylon the boys who let wine alone were "fairer as well as fatter." Brandy blossoms do not add to the beauty of either boys or girls, nor do "the wounds without cause" and "redness of eyes" that were observed in drinking men by Solomon three thousand years ago.

The People that Excel in Abstinence

As this is an international lesson, it is appropriate to compare the per capita consumption of liquors. Great Britain consumed in 1909 an average of about twenty-five gallons for every man, woman and child. Germany drank about the same per capita as Great Britain, and France most of all. The United States drinks about twenty-three gallons per capita, a lit- tle less than Great Britain, but much more than Canada. There might well be an international contest as to which nation shall drink least, for the Em- peror of Germany and the manufac- turers of Great Britain are beginning to see that in the supreme battle of the ages between Britain, Germany and the United States for the world's mar- kets, the nation drinking the least alcohol will win. In that view the temperance movement should be raised from the personal and the economic aspects that we emphasize, to the pa- triotic plane. Abstinence and prohibi- tion should be promoted for our coun- try's sake, as well as for our own sakes and for Christ's sake.

Courage to Refuse Wine in Society

In the temperance work of to-day too large a share of the effort is directed against drinking in barrooms because of the bad environment. The boys in our church Sunday Schools are much more in danger from the wine offered them at dinners and banquets and so- cial parties by the hand of some fair woman or famous man—some social queen or king.

It will strengthen us to put with the story of Daniel's great refusal other great refusals in later ages. Dr. Samuel Johnson, of London, at a time when drinking was the almost uni- versal habit even of kings and bishops and scholars, had the sense and cour- age to stand almost alone as an ab- stainer.

A young mechanic who worked well, talked well, read books on great civic problems and attended public meetings thoughtfully, being urged to engage in the discussions, said, "How can I ever be anything when my father is a drink- ing man?" He solemnly signed the pledge of total abstinence and began to make short speeches. The young men said, "Let us send him to the legis- lature." At every step he did his best. Finally Massachusetts sent him with a petition to Congress. John Quincy

Continued on next page

* The International Sunday School Lesson for September 10, 1911. Daniel and His Companions. Dan. 1:8-20. GOLDEN TEXT: "It is good neither to eat flesh nor to drink wine, nor anything where- by thy brother stumbleth." Rom. 14:21.

REFUSING THE KING'S WINE

CONTINUED FROM PRECEDING PAGE

Adams invited him to dinner. While at dinner Mr. Adams filled his glass, and turning to the young mechanic, said, "Will you drink a glass of wine with me?" He hated to refuse. There was an ex-President of the United States. There was a great company of men. All eyes were upon him. And so he hesitated and grew red in the face, but finally stammered out, "Excuse me, sir, I never drink wine." The next day this anecdote was published in a Washington paper. It was copied all over Massachusetts, and the people said, "Here is a man that stands by his principles. He can be trusted; let us promote him." And so he went up higher. He was made a Congressman, then a Senator, and finally Vice-President of the United States. That boy was Henry Wilson.

International S. S. Association
TEMPERANCE PLEDGE

That I may give my best service to God and to my Fellow-men

I Promise God and Pledge Myself never to use Intoxicating Liquors as a drink and to do all I can to end the Drink Habit and the Liquor Traffic.

[Signed] .....

General Nelson A. Miles, U.S.A., told the writer that he drank no intoxicants in a tour of the world, though daily the chief guest in companies of famous men where almost everybody drank as a matter of course. When Hon. William J. Bryan, one of the candidates for the United States Presidency, was in Japan, and the health of Admiral Togo, who was present at the banquet, was proposed, Mr. Bryan drank the toast in water. "You will drink my health in champagne, Mr. Bryan," said the Admiral. "Admiral," was the reply, "all your victories have been won on water; when you win on champagne, I will drink them in champagne."

Speaker Champ Clark said to the writer: "When I drank with anybody, I had to drink with everybody, or give offense. Now that I refuse everybody, I offend nobody."

In the long and growing list of famous men of all nations who now refuse wine, we must include President Taft, who said before he was President, "I have turned my glass down to stay."

Now, let me tell of a young man who was "ready" in an hour of great temptation that came suddenly and unexpectedly upon him. He was the son of an American college president, and just turned twenty-one. He had gone to Paris for a special course in surgery. At the depot of his native town many comrades had gathered when he departed, among them his sweetheart. She knew how severely his Christian principles would be tried in such a city as Paris, and springing to his side, after good-bys had all been spoken, she whispered, "Charley, dare to be a Daniel!" With a look of disappointment he said, "Only that old saw?" But she cheerily answered, "Only that, Charley; but it may mean much to you." He bore a letter of introduction to a distinguished Frenchman, who, soon after his arrival, gave a small banquet in his honor. He was not so sure that his table etiquette was up to the French standard, and was not a little disturbed by that misgiving as he sat, the cynosure of all eyes. He noted also with dismay that before each plate were glasses, ruby, purple, amber and white, the first three for wines of corresponding color, the last for water. During the dinner the host filled his ruby glass, an example followed by the guests generally, and proposed the toast, "To the wives, daughters and sweethearts of America!" Following the custom of such occasions the world over the American guest was expected to respond to this compliment, not only to the women of his native land but to himself.

A servant at the direction of the host had filled the young man's ruby glass. What followed can best be told in the words he wrote home: "Mother, for a moment I was in an agony of trepidation. I would rather have faced a cannon. All had risen and in the hand of each was the wine I had pledged from childhood not to taste. My head swam. Suddenly I remembered the words, 'Dare to be a Daniel!' Touching my white glass, a servant filled it with water. Rising I said: 'I beg leave to say that to the typical wife, daughter and sweetheart of America the purity of this, nature's own beverage, illustrates the lives they aim to lead and the dangers which they seek to avoid. Permit me to use it in their dear name.' The host substituted quickly his white glass, followed by all the others and the toast to American womanhood was fitly drunk in water.'

TO THE RESCUE

Written especially for the Evangelistic Committee of New York City

Fanny J. Crosby. I. Allan Sankey.

COPYRIGHT, 1911, BY THE BIGLOW & MAIN CO., NEW YORK.

CAUGHT IN THE QUICKSANDS

By LUCY RIDER MEYER

"WHY hast thou forsaken me?" a woman moaned in a last desperate appeal to God. She had come to the place where she realized with terrifying clearness that her whole life was yielding only blight and shame.

She was a much-to-be-pitied victim of morphine, and no slave in shackles was more helpless than she. Thirty-five years ago she had resorted to the drug during an illness, finding in it, as she thought, a happy way of escape from pain and a short cut to that peculiar state of mind so often mistaken for happiness. But the horrible habit had fastened its cruel fangs into the very fibre of her being. She knew the meaning of her bondage sometimes and quivered helplessly under its terrible power. She had come to loathe her weakness, but she was powerless.

One evening she drifted into a mission opened in the neighborhood. Her breath came quickly and her heart pounded in her body as she heard the testimonies. "I drank like a fish for twenty-three years," said one man. "I was drunk solid the last ten years; had lost job after job and I got to where I would have sold my soul for whisky, and was cleaning spittoons in the saloons for drinks. But now—I'm free! The Lord has set me free, bless his name!"

Mrs. Stevenson went home determined to find freedom for herself also. But it was when she began the struggle that she became conscious of how the quicksands were closing about her.

A rap at the door, and she dragged herself wearily from her knees. A deaconess stood before her extending a cordial invitation to the evening revival services.

"It's strange, it's very strange, sister. I wonder if God has not sent you to me at this moment when I am groping for help." The woman's lip quivered sensitively. "I have been one of those negative Christians," she went on. "I have believed in God after a fashion, but much of the talk I've heard about his being an ever-present help, and all that, has sounded like pious twaddle. But surely there is something strange about your coming in here just now." The haggard woman told her story.

"We'll fight this out together, and I'll stay with you till you win," promised the deaconess, taking her hands and looking courage into her eyes.

Mrs. Stevenson went down on her knees again, but this time a friend was at her side. And a prayer—oh, such a fervent prayer!—went up for strength that she might put the serpent-like thing under her feet. "We ask it in Jesus' name," implored Sister Bertha solemnly. Then they rose calmly, but it was to face a fight more awful than either could dream.

That first awful day! During the brief absence of the deaconess in the afternoon there was a moment of torturing temptation, when the poor drug fiend stole like a thief from room to room, hoping wildly that she might find in some overlooked place enough of the drug to still the torment that racked her. She searched with desperate eagerness, praying all the while that she might find none, but disappointed that her prayer was answered.

There came a time when the physicians had to be called. They remonstrated, begging her to make the fight along different lines. "You'll die," they said.

"But I'd rather die than touch it again. I must fight it out now or never. I'm going to do my part, and if God is God I shall not be without help."

"She cannot live through it," was the verdict of the older physician.

"She may live, but I'm not sure but that she will be left insane," said the younger man.

"He that overcometh shall inherit all things," was the promise that kept ringing through the sufferer's mind and upheld her through the awful struggle. The crucial night came when she writhed in convlusions. The deaconess and another friend held her sustaining her in her perilous passage through the black waters of her trial. But when morning dawned came the miracle of a recovered and almost normal woman, conscious of triumph.

During the following months, the completeness of this victory was manifest and puzzled physicians were forced to admit that indeed "more things are wrought by prayer than this world dreams of."

England's Tempestuous Railway Strike

An Open-Air Meeting of Strikers in Prince Regent Lane, London, England

Newly Opened Office of the Federal Employment Exchange, New York City

ON AUGUST 15 the government and press of Great Britain were aroused by a threat of the nalgamated Society of Railway rvants and the allied railway unions declare a general strike, tying up the railroads of the United King-m. There was a great deal of dis-der in Liverpool that evening, and though no strike order had been ven by the leaders the streets were ll of idle men.

Toward evening the ruffian element the docks and railroad yards carried e disorder to such a height that the borists, to a great extent, withdrew om the demonstrations. Troops were mediately rushed into the city by e government to protect property id facilitate the conduct of business, which had been almost entirely suspended. All the great liners which ply from the Mersey were held up by the strike. Efforts at conciliation were carried on for a day and a half with absolutely no success. On August 17 the various unions of railway employees voted to strike.

Thirty thousand government troops were immediately held in readiness to guard trains and see that they were moved in safety. The most serious aspects of the strike came in the cities of Liverpool and Manchester. Here the transit facilities were badly crippled. Sympathetic strikes were declared by many other unions, and the result was that the food supply was running perilously low, while for three days there had been no removal of refuse. The infant mortality in poorer districts increased 40 per cent. during these first two days.

It was largely due to the persuasive abilities of Mr. David Lloyd-George, Chancellor of the Exchequer, that the government plan which was first set forth by Premier Asquith was reformed in such a way as to appeal to the unionists, whom he finally induced to call off the strike and submit all the difficulties to an arbitral board. This board consists of two representatives of the labor party, two representatives of the employers' interests, and a non-partisan chairman. Under an agreement which was reached during the night of the 18th, the labor leaders agreed to terminate the strike, lend all assistance possible to conciliation boards, and abide by the decisions of these boards on the condition that the employers reinstate all the men who have been out without penalization.

There were many strange scenes in different parts of the country due to the strike. In Liverpool the electric service was maintained for two days by barristers, clergymen, and college undergraduates, who volunteered to fill all the positions from stoker to head electrician. Now that a settlement has been reached, the grievances of the men will undoubtedly be remedied, and the hope was confidently expressed in London on August 20 that within two days the railway systems would be operating upon their regular schedules, and the steamship lines would be handling traffic in the regular way.

YOUNG PEOPLE'S SOCIETIES

My Denomination*

THE lack of a knowledge of history is at the bottom of many of the orst blunders of nations and of men. he wisest statesmen have realized iis, and the biographies of the great-t nearly always indicate that they ere close students of history.

One of the most valuable features of he historical pageant now so popular, not only that we may thus become ore familiar with the history of na-ons, but that the idea of the ageant has been enlarged to meet as ell State and county and town his-ory.

In the same way, it is a good thing hat a lesson has been given us which alls for research into the origin and rowth of our various denominations. t is true that the characteristic fea-ures of each are getting to be less and ess conspicuous; and that the great dea is gaining ground everywhere, "In ssentials, unity; in non-essentials, berty; in all things, charity." Yet till the noble men who worked out the arly creeds, and who separated them-elves from some main theological tem, often at great pain and sacrifice, n order to cling to some tenet which eemed to them fundamental—these nen and the schemes which they de-ised should be known to their every escendant, and to those of their fol-owers. Let every Methodist thrill new with the story of the Wesleys; et the Baptists rejoice over the chievements of Roger Williams and George Whitefield and Adoniram Jud-on; let the Congregationalists re-read he story of the pilgrims and the pro-tests of the Roundheads; let the Presbyterians turn again to the fiery words of Lasky and Melville and John Knox; and let us all join with the Lutherans and the noble "Dutch Reformers," in reverence to the memory of Luther and Melanchthon and Huss and Calvin and the other "saints of whom the world was not worthy."

Among the numerous offshoots from these great main denominations are many small but interesting bodies of Christians, who, for conscience' sake, laying stress on some particular doctrine, have taken new names and have built up churches as monuments to their faith. Let those of you who belong to them, study well, each of you, the reasons which brought your special branch into being. You will learn of some heroism of which you had not previously known; and you may be nerved by the knowledge to perform better work for your church.

A good grandmother, upon visiting the home of her married daughter, found that her children had not been taught in the Scriptures. She at once began to remedy the deficiency. They were greatly interested in the Bible stories, as all children are, and one little boy of six was especially struck with that of Moses. Just after he had learned it, he attended church with the grandmother and heard the minister say something about "Moses."

"Grandmother," he whispered excitedly, "is that our Moses?"

He was overjoyed to find that it was.

So whatever our denomination, we share together the glory of the Scripture heroes, and especially that of our great Leader. Essentially, we are one.

We are not divided,
All one body we;
One in hope and doctrine,
One in charity.

* Christian Endeavor Topic for Sunday, September 10. TEXT: Acts 20: 17-35.

Christian Athletics*

HUMANITY has always been interested in athletics. The man who could shoot the straightest, run the fastest, leap the highest, has been admired by his fellows quite as much as the man who has excelled in intellectual or moral strength.

In ancient Greece and Rome, the beauty and perfection of the body were chief objects to all. Their statues show to what an extent they succeeded in developing it. No nation has ever surpassed Greece in this respect. The Jews cared little for athletic games, but as Paul traveled abroad and came in contact with the Greeks and their exercises, he was evidently greatly impressed by them. Especially was their likeness to the exertions necessary in the spiritual life brought to his mind. We all know how effective are the figures which he borrowed from those exercises.

We all know also how necessary it is that one who would excel in any sort of exercises should keep in practice.

Keep the watch wound or the dark rust assaileth;
Play the sweet keys, would you keep them in tune.

It is in this leading thought which governs our sports, that we find perhaps our most important spiritual lesson from them. Mr. Moody, in one of his greatest sermons, drew a similar moral from the story of the manna, which was to be gathered freshly every day.

"If we would be strong and vigorous," said Mr. Moody, "we must go to God daily. A man can no more take in a supply of grace for the future than he can eat enough to-day to last him for the next six months; or take sufficient air into his lungs at once to sustain life for a week to come. We must draw upon God's boundless stores of grace from day to day, as we need it."

Dr. Farrar relates that John L. Clem, the famous "drummer-boy of Shiloh," at the close of the war went to see General, then President Grant, and asked him for an order of admission to West Point.

"But why do you not take the examination?"

"I did, Mr. President, but I failed to pass."

"How was that?"

"Why, Mr. President, I lost four years from my schooling, while I was in the war."

The President led him on to tell of his experience, the long and honorable story of those four hard years. Then he gave the youth a sealed note and said, "Take this to the Secretary of War. I guess it will fix you up."

As young Clem handed it to the Secretary, he said, "I hope that is an order to admit me to West Point."

"Well, it isn't," returned the Secretary. "It's a commission as second lieutenant in the regular army."

When the President was asked why he gave young Clem such a position without a West Point diploma, he said, "I know." He well understood the boy's faithful service and valuable experience, and his opinion was well justified, for the youth "made good," and has steadily risen in the service.

So our great Leader is estimating our efficiency, and if we faithfully run our race every day, a reward will come to us; and as it was with the young drummer boy, it may be better than we had dared to hope for.

* Topic of the Epworth League for Sunday, September 10. TEXTS: I. Tim. 4:7; I. Cor. 9:24-27.

CHATS IN OUR "COMFORT CORNER"

Vain Regrets

By MARGARET E. SANGSTER

THERE is a homely proverb to the effect that "there is no use in crying over spilt milk." A good deal of wisdom of a pithy sort is condensed into the familiar adages that have come to us from our ancestors. Our grandmothers and theirs knew that "a miss was as good as a mile," that "it's a long lane which has no turning," and "that all's well that ends well." A still higher and more beautiful axiom lives for us on the pages of God's word, where we are told that "all things shall work together for good to them that love him." Most of us, although we know better, are very much in the habit of crying over our spilt milk. In other words, we lament our past errors. Looking back over the landscape of life we see a milestone in the past where we made a mistake. Two ways met there. We hesitated which to take and we made the wrong turning. Looking back over the manner in which we have trained our children, used our opportunities or spent our incomes, we see very plainly that everything might have been different, and perhaps everything would have reached a higher level of success, if only we ourselves had been of keener vision, of wise judgment and of firmer will.

Mr. Beecher once said that if our foresight were but equal to our hindsight we should all be a thousand times more complacent. Vain regrets strew our paths with withered flowers. They make us melancholy, and, worse still, rob us of strength to go forward.

Of one thing we may be certain. We are fallible human beings. We cannot avoid a misstep now and then. With the best intentions we say the thing which we repent or do the thing which we cannot undo. Each of us day by day has reason to acknowledge "We have done the things we ought not to have done, and left undone the things we ought to have done, and there is no health in us."

Once having taken our penitence in prayer to the feet of the Lord and humbly asked his forgiveness, why should we pick the burden up again and insist on carrying it on with bowed shoulders and drooping heads?

> There are briers besetting every path,
> That call for patient care;
> There is a crook in every lot,
> And an earnest need for prayer,
> But a lowly heart that leans on God
> Is happy anywhere.

If we commit our way unto the Lord let us take the comfort of believing that he directs our steps. If at any moment we act according to the light we have, let us not shed tears later because we fancy another course would have been wiser. Away with the folly that sits down and broods over yesterday when the word for to-day is "Up and doing with a heart for any fate." As our poet Longfellow tells us, we should be "still achieving, still pursuing," while we "learn to labor and to wait."

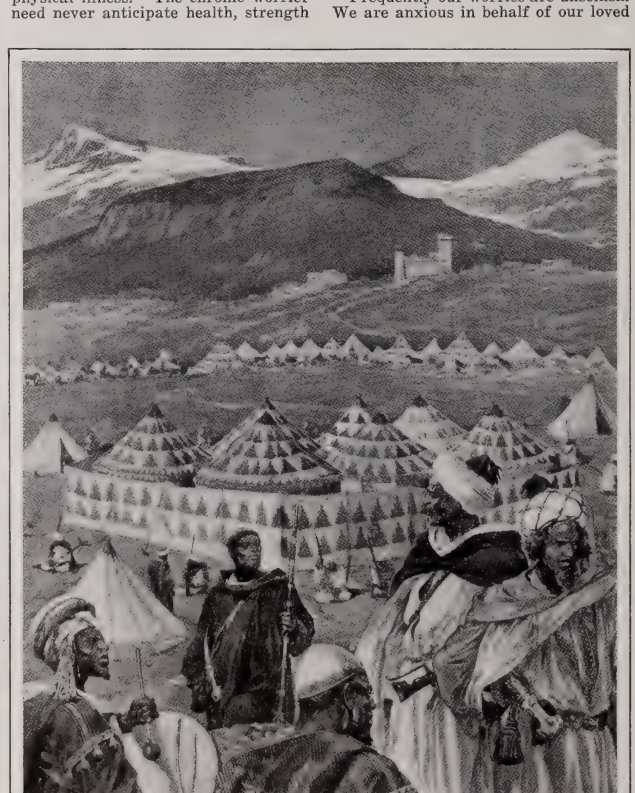
. . .

Relief from Anxiety

ONE of the most delightful physical sensations of which we are aware is that of relief from pain. Every function of the physical life should be automatic. Breathing, for example, if accompanied by the slightest pain, indicates trouble that must be taken in hand at once. Pain in any part of the body is a danger signal that cannot be ignored if one would preserve health. Most of us know by experience the blessedness of being lifted out of an abyss of pain to the level land of normal health. On the day when a convalescent is sure that the tides of wholesome life are pouring in at flood, when again there is an impulse to begin work or at least to supervise it, happiness returns and makes her abode where previously there was lack of ease or acute distress.

In a similar way, in the mental life, relief from anxiety brings ease and freedom and imparts new vitality to thought and new vigor to action. Mental worry is a fruitful cause of physical illness. The chronic worrier need never anticipate health, strength and joy in living. We worry over a great many things concerning which we should be at ease. It may be too much to demand of poor human nature that it shall never be anxious over the future, and yet the most futile fact in the realm of human experience is needless anxiety about to-morrow. To-day is all we have. We are not sure of an hour in the future, but the present has gold in its mouth.

Most of us are equal to the situation if we limit our endeavors to it precisely as it confronts us. We are not equal to the accumulation of possible disasters that loom up in the middle of the night when we lie awake listening to the ticking of the clock and watching the tedious hours as they creep along.



Frequently our worries are unselfish. We are anxious in behalf of our loved ones. We see this or the other d one overborne by care and break under a too heavy load. We note r takes on the part of the young difficulties in the path of the old.
weary ourselves in making plans other people. They may or may be conscious of our extreme solicitu
Whatever effect it has upon them, tendency in our own lives is distinc toward weakness and failure.

Where is the remedy? How are to get relief from the pernicious ha of anxiety? Is there a way out? S pose we go confidently to the Book books. As we turn its pages we everywhere promises that should g us new courage and fortify us agai the demon of fear. Away back Deuteronomy we are told that "the loved of the Lord shall dwell in saf by him." Again, there is that bea ful word, "As thy days thy stren shall be." Still again, "The Lord i strong tower, the righteous runn into it and is safe." Yet again, "Go our refuge and our strength, a v present help in time of trouble. The fore will we not fear though the ea be removed and the mountains carr into the midst of the sea." Always we trust Jehovah, "underneath us the everlasting arms." Our Lord h self assured us that "our Fat knows the things we have need of fore we ask him." And he said, "Su cient unto the day is the evil there
The little sparrow that was worth half farthing was not too small to seen and noted by the Father abo
Let us take this consideration into core of our being for our comfort help, and let us send our worries, gr and small, into the rubbish heaps life. Prayer in faith is the best p scription for relief from anxiety.

. . .

Paper-Bag Cookery

WHEN the phrase "Paper-b cookery" was first mentioned my hearing I imagined it to be a n variety of picnic convenience. Pa bags are among the commonplace ar cles with which we are familiar, a they are devoted to numerous uses.
for utilizing them as cooking imp ments, the notion seemed absurd.
now transpires that paper-bag cooke has been introduced into English hon by a noted London chef, and its wa of popularity has literally swept acr
the United Kingdom. Our Brit cousins have been completely carr away by its charming novelty.
this side the Atlantic the idea w probably meet with immediate a proval and acceptance, the fact bei that almost everything on the ta may be prepared to excellent adva tage if inserted in a paper bag. T bags are made of specially adapt paper, and are of different sizes. T article to be cooked, whether roast broiled meat, chicken or vegetable, placed in the bag which completely e velops it, and is folded in such a w that none of the juices escape in t cooking process. The bag is plac upon a gridiron and the gridiron set in an oven. Full directions f paper-bag cookery will be given in book soon to be published in New Yo Among others who indorse it as like to be a relief to the housewife and addition to the comfort of daily livi Marion Harland and Christine Te hune Herrick have been mentioned.

Drawn by R. Caton Woodville, for the Illustrated London News

A Sultan's Household in Camp

DURING the journeys which the recent troubles in Morocco made necessary for the Sultan, he was accompanied by a considerable part of his extensive household. As the Sultan is a polygamist this retinue usually consisted of a number of his wives, their attendant slaves and other servants, and a corps of guards. This household camp of the Sultan was always pitched in the centre of the main camp and surrounded by a high wall of canvas, an open space and a cordon of guards. The tents used are fourteen feet high and about twenty feet in diameter. They are richly lined with silks and velvets and embroidery, and furnished with rugs and divans like rooms in the home palace.

GOOD WORK DONE BY OUR BOYS AND GIRLS

THE GROUND-SPARROWS

A Prize Winner by Harriet Yates

Margery Mettler
...ner Contributor

THERE was once a pair of ground-sparrows that built their nest under a white thistle. The nest was shaped something like an egg. Soon there were four pinkish tiny eggs in the nest, I would watch carefully every I passed by to see if they had ...ed, but I was careful not to ...nten the mother

I noticed a leaf ...ing over the nest, every time the ...er left the nest ...eaf was moved to ...r it from view. ... day I saw four ...y little baby spar... instead of the ... pink eggs! The ... newcomers look... all yellow beaks ... heads, and when ... one would come ... they would open ... mouths wide, ex...ing to be fed. For ... days I missed see... the mother, and ...ed our bird dog ... killed her, so I ... to feed the little ... with corn meal, ... I thought there ... a chance of the ...er coming back, ... left them in the ..., and she did re... In about two weeks they were ...g about from thistle to thistle. ... looked so darling! I watched ... by the hour, day after day, until ... grew quite big and fat and flew ...y.

Prize Photograph, Alexander Boyer, age 11

...n The Hollow Tree Snowed-in Story Book ...bert Bigelow Paine.

Going for the Doctor

JACK

Wait a bit, my little miss,
What makes you walk so fast?
You have the day before you,
And the sky is not o'ercast.

BESS

...going to the doctor's, sir,
... my doll's very ill:
... as a raging fever,
... I b'lieve she has a chill.

JACK

... bandage round her head,
... mustard to her feet;
... her cambric tea to drink,
... nothing much to eat.

BESS

... those things an hour ago,
... fever won't abate;
... all this sad trouble, sir,
... the pudding that she ate.

JACK

... if the doctor is not in,
... does not care to come?
... charges—as he often does—
... most outrageous sum?

BESS

... not in, than I shall wait;
... what if his charge be high?
... think because of a thing like that ... would let my dollie die?

...DYS BARR BOGART,
... Jersey, age 11.

AN ADVENTURE—A True Story

By Mary Little, Ohio, age 13

Julia Stewart
A Cozy Corner Girl

"I DARE you to fling an oar overboard," said Louise, a bit tired perhaps of handling the tiller ropes of the small boat in which she and her chum were taking an afternoon row on the lake. "That will be great fun," said Gertrude; and over went the oar, quick as wink. Then what promised to be fun began. Round and round they went in a circle, vainly trying to reach the discarded oar, which only bobbed farther and farther away from them, for the wind was rising and the lake grew rougher by the minute.

"Oh, Louise, if you only had not dared me to do it!" Gertrude cried, fairly wringing her hands in despair. "And look! Quick, quick! the steamer is coming! The steamer! Why, it is here!" And hoping to escape the huge hulk, the two thoroughly terrified girls made one last and desperate effort to paddle straight with their single oar and regain the one they had so foolishly lost. It floated teasingly out of reach, however, and the huge night-boat bore down upon them. Only in the nick of time, by sheerest luck, a dreadful accident was averted, for the lookout on the deck spied them, and the big boat swerved from its course just enough to leave them untouched. As the foolhardy girls sat speechless in their little cockleshell, bumping about in the troughs of great waves that followed in the wake of the steamer, some one on shore spied them and put out to the rescue, but once more safe and sound on dry land they felt outlandish and foolish enough about their stupid dare.

This story in the June contest won a Brownie Eastman Kodak.

"Wait a bit, my little miss"
First Prize Winner, a Kodak

Upon the Way

Baby Blue went out to play,
And met Rob Roy upon the way.

"Good morning, sir, how do you do?
Are you a-walking this way, too?"
Rob Roy he smiled and bowing said,
"Pleased to go, Miss Curly Head."

"Wont you take my dolly, sir,
If you don't mind to carry her?
Isn't she a picture fair?
Such rosy cheeks and golden hair?"

"Dollies! pooh!" Rob Roy guyed;
"I'm no sissy boy," he cried.
"Let's play horses, Oh, I say,
Over the brook by the old wood-way."

Baby Blue raised high her head.
"I am no tomboy, sir," she said.
"I love my dolly, sweet and true,
Good morning. Robin Roy, to you."

MILDRED BROODING, age 10.

Prize, a very beautiful box of Japanese water color paints.

"A Good Time"—Wentworth Lawson, age 11

"Ivory Soap, Water and a Few Grains of Common Sense."

The experience of a dear old lady who has used Ivory Soap for thirty years is summed up in these words:

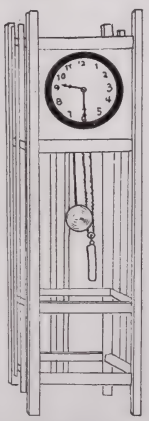
"Recipe for every use to which soap can be applied: Take a sufficient quantity of Ivory Soap, and as much hot, or cold, water as the case may demand. Combine, and use with a few grains of common sense for any purpose desired, and be sure of best results."

For bath, toilet and fine laundry purposes; for the nursery; for shampooing; for anything and everything that necessitates the use of a better-than-ordinary soap, Ivory Soap is unequalled.

Ivory Soap . . 99 44/100 Per Cent. Pure

Prize Winners and Honor Roll

First Prize Winners



Pearl Woodgerd, 11; Wesley Toby, 12; Fay B. Mock, 13; Gladys Zemlicka, 10; John H. Gray; Gladys Barr Bogart, 11; Mary Little, 13; Harriet E. Yates, 10; Kate Williams, 16; Carl Harris, 11.

Twenty Supplementary Prize Winners

Edna Gorman, 14; Esther Kalin, 12; Grace Litchfield, 10; Elsie Veld, 11; Courtney K. Meade, 15; Howard James, 14; Courtland Casey, 8; Frank J. Williams, 9; Lucy Hubbard, 13; Ura Griffin, 16; Edith Bixby, 16; Freeman Hubbard, 17; Cathryn Yoder, 16; Ruth M. Gottschalk, 13; Helen Brown, 9; Alma E. Hilton, 12; Nelle McClurkin, 16; Martha R. Dawson, 15; Donald Hill, 14; Elinor Bray, 13; Rosemary Ladner, 14; Valerie I. Elder, 12; Dorothy Bangs, 11; Ethel M. Williams, 10; Elizabeth Hodgson, 14; Lucile King, 16; Walter Eichelberger, 9.

Honor Roll

Alice Chapman, 13; Tressie King, 12; Frances Day, 12; Nellie Heath, 12; Mattie Beck, 15; Gertrude E. Mather, 10; Kathleen Carmen, 12; Elsie Guyton, 11; Mathilda Noweck, 14; Gladys Clare; Ruth Lester; Mildred H. Bobb, 12; Mearlee Eidson, 7; Mable Palmer; Violet M. Holly, 10; Gladys Geilhard; Zenda Ford; Veta Gordon, 12; Lester Palmer, 12; Nina Johnson, 10; Ada Wooley, 12; Esther Bryant, 16; Helen Holl, 10; Evelyn Andersen, 12; Georgia Warren; Herbert Durand, 9; Ada L. von Wolffradt; Ottilie Meiner; Ruth Alvera Stafford; Ruby Ridenour, 12; Helen Hudson, 14; Glenna Leary, 11; Edna Meyer; Virgil Vanstane; Mary Little, 13; Ellen LaRue, 15; Jacob Stam; Margaret Edington, 14; Marion B. Warren, 13; Florence Beavis, 9; Georgiana Frazee, 10; Lillian Blair, 11; Ernest St. Clair Jeans, 13; Edward C. Annis, 16; Mildred J. McCrae, 15; Ruth S. Ayers, 10; Purney D. Kempton, 5; Alice Bauer; Frances Reckmyer, 12; Katie May Eagleton, 11; Richard Walker, 13; Frieda Faecke, 12; Bessie M. Day, 13; John H. Vondell, 13.

"The Kitchen Clock"

Prize answer to the "Little People's" Rebus—Carl Harris, age 11.

Good-Night Verse

"No good thing will He withhold."

Lovingly and Faithfully,

The Aunt to the Cozy Corner

The Substitute Wedding Journey

By J. S. ELLIS

IF TOM had not been so young, and Ellen both inexperienced and young, the calamity would not have seemed so grave.

Ellen had had her heart set on a visit home all the year. It was to be their wedding journey, for in the year that they had been married they had not had one. She had come bravely out alone to the little Western town, where Tom had met her at the station. Then they had walked to the parsonage and were married. This may do for the prosaic, but for the poetically minded it is not enough. Ellen wanted a real wedding journey—with the groom along. Tom wanted what Ellen wanted, if he could get it.

It is so easy to plan a vacation on paper. All expenses are met promptly, and without difficulty. Trains arrive on time. Hotel clerks are obliging. They would spend two days in Chicago, a day at Niagara, and reach home in time for their wedding anniversary.

Housekeeping for two is such fun! Ellen could do all the work in sight, get dinner ready for the kindling of the fire, and have time left in the forenoon for an hour's ride with Tom on the gang-plow around the big field. The afternoons were simply without bound or limit. Of course one did not need to do dishes while one's husband was resting. Besides, doing dishes was such a diminutive affair. Two plates, two cups, a salt-shaker, and a vegetable dish; then the butter tucked away in a keg under the drip of the flowing well, and you were done. After that it was two o'clock, with five hours ahead before Tom drove the wet-flanked horses from the field, his face and clothing gray with dust. There was time on these afternoons to walk a half mile across the field to talk with Mrs. O'Brien about the crops and the weather; time to go through the rooms in a very housewifely way, with thimble and cambric needle, looking for mending. But all of her clothes were so ridiculously new that there was positively nothing to mend. Tom's overalls were a source of comfort. They broke out in the most unexpected places, and kept developing unforeseen weaknesses. Sewing for one's husband might be prosaic for some, but it was not to Ellen, who was poetically minded.

Both agreed on the trip home. Ellen was enthusiastic, and, of course, Tom wanted it. The rich rains had fallen on the fertile, upturned land. The wheat had sprung up in a night. The dainty lines of green that shot like an arrow across the fields thickened and fattened until they covered the ground. Then the wheat grew in a wise that astonished the pioneers of '81. June gave the cool, moist weather that the wheat needed. July threw in an extra measure of moisture, then applied the heat. Ellen—not tall, remember—was struck at the armpits by the wheat, when, in July, she was carrying Tom a lunch. She stretched her arms straight from the shoulders and the wheat stalks touched the palms of her hands with their graceful heads.

"Oh, you beauties!" she cried, clasping some of the long heads and putting them to her lips.

The wheat-fields stretched over the vast plain were undulating in the breeze like waves of the sea. The deep green tints were giving way to a gray, which would, in a fortnight's time, be exchanged for gold.

The land which they were farming was owned by a non-resident, a man who spent his winters in California and his summers in the North. The business on his dozen or more farms was largely transacted through an agent. Neither Tom nor Ellen had seen him, but Ellen, following Hawthorne, had named him Old Gathergold.

"How soon do you think we can go?" asked Ellen as they sat in the long Northern twilight looking out over the fields of blowing grain.

"Right after harvest and threshing. The way it looks now it ought not to take another month."

"Will Old Gathergold come for his share?"

"Not likely. Vail looks after that."

"How much wheat do you suppose we will have, Tom?"

"Ho! ho!" laughed Tom. "We can't count our duck-eggs until we find them all—not in this country. Something might happen."

"Now?" cried Ellen. "Why, it is almost ripe. I looked at some kernels this morning and they were like little soft bags of milk."

Tom agreed. He had to. "It sure could not go wrong now. We are counting so much on it."

A week later he was at the back of the farm, examining the wheat. Some unusually ripe strips had attracted his attention from the house. He found Pete O'Brien out on a similar errand. The farmer's face was haggard, and he was beating his hands nervously.

"Tom, man, this is bad," he said, when Tom came up.

"What's bad? What do you mean?" Tom asked anxiously.

"It's black rust. We had it seven years gone, but that's the last till now."

Tom's courage oozed away as he listened. He had had no experience with this foe of the wheat men, but he had heard enough to stand appalled. He looked out over the wheat-fields, apparently so full of promise.

"It will not take it all, will it?" His voice was thick as he spoke.

"If it is as bad as it was seven years ago we will not get flour enough for a biscuit."

Tom turned quickly away to hide the tears which he could not control. But when he looked around again the Irishman was looking out over the wheat-fields with the sadness of years of struggle written on his face.

"It's a hard wur-r-d to take the wife and childer," he said.

Tom choked up again. "That's it. If it was only myself I wouldn't care. I could lose the year's work. But how can I tell Ellen?"

That Ellen would soon have to be told was evident. The heads of wheat instead of being heavy with plump grains were light and empty. The straw crinkled down to a sickly yellow. Yet still Tom hesitated to disillusion Ellen, who was laying gorgeous plans for their wedding trip. It was not only the loss of the outing that was troubling Tom. With a total loss of the crop he wondered how they were to live through the winter, and how another crop was to be raised.

They were sitting on the kitchen stoop, watching the sun go down with brilliant sky-coloring. Ellen had been talking of what was now uppermost in her mind, day and night—their wedding trip; the mother waiting to see them.

The time had come when she must be told. Tom did it as gently as he could, each word like a little stab at his own heart. She listened with a frightened look on her face, from which the color had fled. Then she ran into the house. Tom paced the bare ground between the wheat-field and the house until the clock struck twelve, then went in. Ellen was lying in the dark on a rough lounge which he had made. He tried to find her hand, but she drew away.

"Let me alone, now," she said drearily. "It will be all right."

He was little more than a boy in years, and it passed the limit of his short experience to know what to say. So, making now—as was his way—her wish his, he left her.

Tom may, or may not, have slept soundly after retiring. The night had been so troubled he could not have told himself. But presently into his dreams floated the aroma of cakes and coffee.

"Hello, old sleepy head!" called a bright voice.

Tom sat up in the sunlight that was flooding in at the window, and rubbed his eyes. He was profoundly grateful for the sunshine that he saw on a face in the door.

"Well, Ellen," he said, "you look capital! How did I sleep so long?"

She had put on a dainty gingham that he liked best of all her house dresses, over this a white apron tied in a bewitching bow at the back. With her brown hair brushed back and a bit of lace at her throat she made a pleasing picture.

"I have not given up our wedding journey," she volunteered, smiling across the breakfast table. "But it is to be a 'black rust' wedding journey. Why can't we hitch up Pete and Dick to the wagon and go somewhere—anywhere, just so it is going?"

Tom fell promptly in with the plan. "We can, by cracky!"

"Could we get a tent anywhere—borrow it—do you suppose?"

"I'll get a tent if I have to hook two of Mother O'Brien's sheets from the line to make it," vowed Tom.

For this Ellen awarded him the largest and most delicately browned cake on the platter.

"We will drive to the old Missouri," said Tom. "Go fishing. If there isn't any harvesting to do we will have more time than money, anyway."

It did not take long to arrange their simple affairs. The extra horses were turned out in the pasture. The cow was taken to a neighbor's. Then with tent, camp-stove, dishes and provisions loaded into the wagon the wedding journey was begun.

If the pace was not so swift as if it had been taken in a Pullman, each mile meant more, had more of deep pleasure in it, than the miles that snap by the car window. If the way was rougher, it was a happy wife and happier husband who received the jolts, and they laughed over them. The wagon was often stopped for the wild roses that banked the wayside. There were wonderful mirages to look at of grain elevators as tall and stately as castles, of sparkling lakes that reflected in their bosoms the trees that lined their shores.

After three days of slow-going they drove over the bluffs into the valley of the Missouri. They pitched the tent in the shelter of a plum grove, and carried in bedding and provisions. The camp-stove was set up under the shelter of a friendly elm. Tom drove into the bark of the tree nails for hanging their pots and pans.

The camp in order, Tom walked down the river to the little village, where they had ordered mail to be sent. He came back whistling.

"Ellen, you'll have to give our legal friend, 'Old Gathergold,' a new name. Listen to what Harry Vaile says:

"'Mr. Markham, your former lawyer, writes me to this effect: "Tell the boys not to get scared. If the crop is gone I will see that they get backing until another crop is raised."'

"How is that for Old Gathergold?"

"He shall be Prince Splendid," said Ellen, musing, with hands clasped about her knees.

The first night in the timber was a revelation of forest sounds and forest music. An hour before dawn a catbird—sweet mockingbird of Northern skies—began to pour out its music. Ellen could not rest for the joy that filled the morning. Sitting on the ground before the tent she was combing her brown hair when the words of an old, old love idyl came to her:

> Whither thou goest, I will go;
> And where thou lodgest, I will lodge.

It was a real wedding journey this time, for the groom was with her.

John Wanamaker
ANNOUNCES that on request a copy o
the Fall and Winter Catalo will be sent you postpaid
Over 1000 fine pictures o still finer merchandise
A valuable book, for refer ence or for ordering goods you should get one.
We never seem able to prir enough to meet all request
so write us TODAY:
"Send Catalog No. 44."
JOHN WANAMAKER
New York

EVERYWOMAN SHOULD EARN $25 PER WEE
Introducing our very complete line of wool suitings, wash fab fancy waistings, silks, hdkfs., petticoats, hosiery, etc. Des direct with the mills, our prices are low. Others make $10 $30 00 weekly—you can also. Samples, instructions, etc., in case, charges prepaid. No money required. Exclusive terri
Be first to apply for Agency. Standard Dress Goods Co., Des Standard Building Binghamton, N.

Free Pictur
Beautiful Enameled N toes suitable for frami 12x16 inches, with api priate texts to hang in ery room in the ho
Lovely Floral Designs their natural colors an enameled back-grou often sold at stores for
We will mail you one for 2c. to cover mailing
C. A. BIEL
Dept. 873 DENVER, C

I TRUST YOU TEN DAYS. SEND NO MON
$2 Hair Switch Sent on Approval. Choice of Natur or straight hair
Send a lock of your hair, and we will inch short stem fine human switch to ma
If you find it a big bargain remit $2.00 in 5 da or sell 3 and GET YOUR SWITCH FREE shades a little more. Inclose 6c postage.
Free beauty book showing latest style h dressing also high grade switches, pom wigs, puffs, etc. Women wanted to hair goods. ANNA AYERS,
Dept. A159 22 Quincy Street, Chicago

THE "BEST" LIGH
A portable, pure white, steady, safe light. Brighter than electricity o acetylene, 100 candle power. No grease dirt nor odor. Lighted instantly. Costs 2 cts. per week. Over 200 styles. Every lamp warranted. Agents wanted. Write for catalog. Do not delay.
THE BEST LIGHT CO.
3-70 E. 5th St., Canton, Ohio
MAKES AND BURNS ITS OWN GA

OXALBITO
AN ANTISEPTIC DRESSI that is better than any ot preparation for healing c ulcers or wounds of any Get it from your druggist, or a bottle will be sent by mail for 25 Cents.
OXALBITOL CO., Honesdale,

TYPEWRITERS VISIBLE WRITER
or otherwise
L. S. SMITHS, OLIVERS, UNDERWOODS
¼ to ½ M'F'RS PRICE
Shipped ANYWHERE for Free Tr
RENTED allowing Rent to APP
PRICES $15.00 UP
First Class Machines Fresh from the MFrs—Write for Illustrated Typewriter Emporium, (EST. 1892) 92-94 LAKE ST., CHICAG

ALL FOR 2
Three beautiful 12-inch LINEN C terpieces, Holly, Eyes and Daisy signs, 4 Doilies and our catalog sho ing over 600 designs of art embroid goods and 70 different EMBROID
STITCHES. All delivered for 20 c
P. W. KELLER CO., Waterloo, Iowa

Corns Permanent relief is secured only by removing roots and all. A-Corn Salve does that easily, quickly and safely, and costs only 15 cents at druggists' or by mail.
Giant Chemical Co., Philadelphia

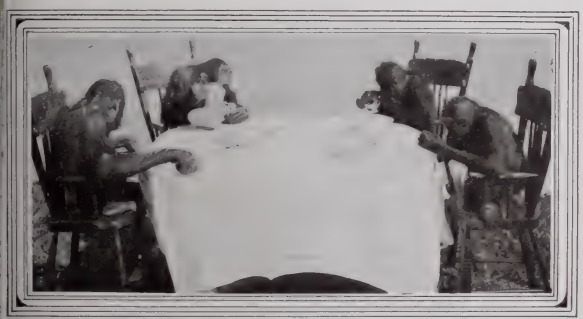
Managing a Great Zoo

Continued from page 843

lated on Wednesday, while the elephants get six quarts of peanuts every Monday.

The Zoo's hospital is in charge of Dr. W. Reid Blair, who must be prepared at any moment to treat a wide variety of complaints, from the broken leg of a dainty gazelle to the toothache of a tiger. Every kind of bird, beast, and reptile has the advantage of the best medical treatment and nursing in the event of illness, and there is an operating theatre where even the poorest monkey may be operated on for appendicitis or a hastily swallowed thimble!

"You can take it from me that it's no joke having to handle a sick boa-constrictor or python," said a keeper. "These are far more dangerous to a doctor than the smaller poisonous snakes, for the latter can be held down by means of a forked stick; but a forty-foot serpent wants a dozen or more men. The great art is to keep the reptile quite taut, so that he has no chance of getting you in his deadly coils; for, should he succeed, he would very soon crush the life out of you. I myself was nearly badly damaged by a big python last year when we were holding him for the doctor to examine. It was the tail end man, when the brute suddenly managed to get a coil around my arm. Luckily, two extra keepers were near, and they came to my assistance, but I thought the bone would have been crushed before they freed me.



"Snakes frequently suffer from toothache, while those of the poisonous variety contract abscesses in their heads. These have to be lanced, and when the virulent nature of some of the poisons is taken into consideration, it is a great tribute to the skill and care exercised that mishaps are practically unknown when dealing with these reptiles.

"Elephants, in spite of their bulk, are somewhat delicate, and suffer from colic when first coming from the tropics. Huge mustard plasters and thick blankets have to be roped on to the sufferers, and large doses of gin and ginger are also administered. Very often, however, an elephant will acquire a distinct taste for the latter treatment, and will feign illness at every opportunity in order to obtain his 'dope.'"

The increase of the animal collection at the Bronx is going on steadily at the rate of about $50,000 worth annually. The most valuable animal in the park at present is the big male giraffe, whose value is set at $10,000, although he is really priceless. If he should die he could not be replaced, for nobody in possession of a full-grown male would sell him. This giraffe has been in the park six years, and has grown five feet since he arrived. The female, a smaller animal, is worth $8,000. Next to the giraffe the most valuable captive is the Indian rhinoceros—one of the rarest and also most wonderful animals in existence. So far as is known, there are no more than six or seven of these animals in captivity, and in India the range of the species has been reduced to a small area. The specimen in New York was captured in Assam by the soldiers of the Maharajah of Nepaul in the winter of 1907, and was furnished to the Society at a cost of $6,000 by Carl Hagenbeck, the famous wild-beast importer of Hamburg. He is now worth nearly $10,000, and could not be duplicated.

The herd of American bison, or buffalo, figure at $400 apiece. These massive, unwieldly brutes are the pride of the Bronx Zoo, for it is this herd that the Federal Government mainly relies upon for the stocking of the Western plains, where buffaloes once roamed by the hundreds of thousands.

In the monkey house the chimpanzees and orang-outangs are the prizes. There is one chimpanzee there who has resided in the monkey house for fifteen years and could not be duplicated for $1,500. A baby orang-outang brings from $300 to $400, but the Zoo now has one that is worth a thousand dollars.

Copyright New York Zoological Society

Four O'clock Tea in the Orang-outang House of the Bronx Zoo

By far the most interesting part of the exhibit are the bears, of which the society boasts no less than 17 distinct species, represented by 37 specimens. "If properly established," says Dr. Hornaday, "no captive wild animals more fully repay their cost and keep than a collection of wild bears that has been judiciously formed. It is true that they are very troublesome, and that every bear is a storm centre, but we like them for all that. When comfortably installed in large, clean yards, with plenty of sunlight, fresh water, rocks to climb upon, and a good variety of food, they are full of action, and constitute a great attraction to visitors."

Certainly it would be difficult to imagine any more playful creatures than the Bronx bears. The grizzlies in the centre pit are the delight of the visitors. They are big, clean-furred, hard-muscled fellows, and their growth has been as rapid and satisfactory in every way as if they had been in their own native wilds. In the centre of their pit is a deep pool, in which floats a large knotted log. Two of the bears are at that log nearly all the time playing water polo with it. One will give it a vigorous thump with a powerful paw and send it rolling across the pool, where it will be met with a swinging blow from the other bear that rolls it back again. Suddenly both bears will make a dive at it, and the next instant the air will be full of waving paws and water will be splashed for yards until after the mix-up, when two great shaggy faces will reappear above the surface, and one could almost be sure that they wore a grin.

In the polar bears' den two magnificent specimens disport themselves the year round. They have a wooden ball to play with, and the chief object of the game seems to be to keep it submerged. Whenever it pops up they both whack at it at once; then as likely as not they forget the ball and clinch, and both disappear beneath the surface. Presently one of them comes up and occupies himself by cheerfully pawing down the other until it seems as if the under bear must be on the verge of drowning. All that one sees of him is an occasional pinkish paw waving signals of distress, and the curve of his back through a swirl of water. Then up comes the great white creature, and one is almost disappointed to see that he is not even gasping.

Lethargy or Treachery

Continued from page 844

Yet this is not half so amazing as our seeming unconcern toward the religious life of our own kith and kin. Our unsaved children give us, apparently, but little anxiety. Our sons and daughters are growing up outside the Church, in some cases with practically no religious instruction whatever, and we are as gay and lighthearted as if they were all safely gathered into the fold. Of most of us, I fear, our children could remark what Gladstone said of two of his university professors: "I knew and respected them both, but neither of them attempted to exercise the smallest influence over my religious life."

I asked a returning missionary, "Why do you go back so soon when you have been ill through most of your furlough?" Her eyes watered as she replied: "I cannot sleep from thinking of those benighted men and women about our station. I must hurry back to them." Contrast that, sleeper in the garden, with your feeling. How much do you lie awake thinking of your unsaved boy, to say nothing of your unconverted neighbor or the heathen?

You are afflicted with sleepy sickness of the soul, and it is as certain a sign of disease as is unnatural physical drowsiness. You need radical treatment. God press the need in upon you!

What shall the treatment be? A specialist recently said that he knew of forty-nine different recipes for insomnia; but that, while sometimes one would work and sometimes another, there were times when none of them was effective. There is one cure and only one for spiritual sleepy-sickness, and it never fails to work. It cured Peter, and it will cure you. What is the cure? The old-fashioned remedy of repentance—genuine and profound repentance. Repentance is a change of mind, and nothing but that will give us a different thought of discipleship, a different feeling about it and a different attitude toward it. He who truly repents will receive the reviving, renewing, restoring grace of God, without which the same deep stupor will continue to hold us bound, but with which we shall become alert and active, brave and unwavering, splendidly loyal and vigilant down to the end.

Awake thy Church ere yet the day departs,
For while she sleeps swift works the reaper, Death.
O God, forgive, and into torpid hearts
Send, like a mighty wind, thy quickening breath.

Write To-day for Your FREE Copy

The "STANDARD"

Advance Fall

BULLETIN Is Ready

Don't buy any of your Fall Apparel anywhere until you have seen it.

All the Pretty New Styles.
All the Season's Best Values.

Standard Mail Order Co., 244 W. 17th St. NEW YORK

For 18 Years We Have Paid 5%

THE earnings of our patrons are compounded semi-annually, or remitted by check if preferred, and are paid upon funds from the day of deposit to the day of withdrawal. Our depositors have the excellent combination of thorough safety of capital, liberal earnings, with the privilege of withdrawal, whenever desired upon short notice.

Depositors in All Parts of the World

In 18 years this Company's assets have increased from $9,000 to over $2,300,000. Loans and investments are made, following conservatively the strongest regulations of the New York State Banking Laws; deposits are secured by mortgages on the best class of New York and Suburban Real Estate, the strongest security.

Write for Information

INDUSTRIAL SAVINGS and LOAN CO. NEW YORK CITY

Industrial Savings & Loan Co.
2 Times Bldg., B'way & 42d St., N.Y.

10 CENTS A DAY

buys the Pittsburgh Visible Typewriter. Made in our own factory at Kittanning, Pa. $65 now—later the price will be $100. The best typewriter in the world, far excels any $100 machine made. Entire line visible. Back spacer, tabulator, two color ribbon, universal keyboard, etc. Agents wanted everywhere. One Pittsburgh Visible Machine Free for a very small service. No selling necessary.

To Get One Free and to learn of our easy terms and full particulars regarding this unprecedented offer, say to us in a letter "Mail your FREE OFFER."

The Pittsburgh Visible Typewriter Co.
Dept. 30. Union Bank Bldg. Pittsburgh, Pa.

BLYMYER CHURCH BELLS. UNLIKE OTHER BELLS SWEETER, MORE DURABLE, LOWER PRICE. OUR FREE CATALOGUE TELLS WHY.
Write to Cincinnati Bell Foundry Co., Cincinnati, O.

SOCIAL WORK—THE NEW PROFESSION

Training with field work under Specialists in Civics, Charities, Child Helping, Settlements, Recreation, etc. Short Course $12.00. Diploma Course $75.00. 9th year opens October 4. Graham Taylor, Pres. Julia C. Lathrop, Vice-Pres.
Chicago School of Civics and Philan., 31 W. Lake Street, Chicago.

New York, New York City. Avenue A. 63d and 64th Sts.

Have You Chosen a Profession?

There are Opportunities in Medicine, especially Homeopathic Medicine. Send for Catalogue O. New York Homeopathic Medical College and Flower Hospital. Royal S. Copeland, A. M., M. D., Dean.

PATENTS SECURED OR FEE RETURNED.
Free report as to Patentability. Illustrated Guide Book, and List of Inventions Wanted, sent free.
VICTOR J. EVANS & CO., Washington, D. C.

WANTED—RIDER AGENTS IN EACH TOWN and district to ride and exhibit a sample 1912 Model "Ranger" bicycle furnished by us. Our agents everywhere are making money fast. Write at once for full particulars and special offer.

NO MONEY REQUIRED until you receive and approve of your bicycle. We ship to anyone, anywhere in the U. S. without a cent deposit in advance, prepay freight, and allow TEN DAYS' FREE TRIAL during which time you may ride the bicycle and put it to any test you wish. If you are then not perfectly satisfied or do not wish to keep the bicycle you may ship it back to us at our expense and you will not be out one cent.

LOW FACTORY PRICES We furnish the highest grade bicycles it is possible to make at one small profit above actual factory cost. You save $10 to $25 middlemen's profits by buying direct of us and have the manufacturer's guarantee behind your bicycle. DO NOT BUY a bicycle or a pair of tires from anyone at any price until you receive our catalogues and learn our unheard of factory prices and remarkable special offer.

YOU WILL BE ASTONISHED when you receive our beautiful catalogue and study our superb models at the wonderfully low prices we can make you. We sell the highest grade bicycles at lower prices than any other factory. We are satisfied with $1.00 profit above factory cost. BICYCLE DEALERS, you can sell our bicycles under your own name plate at double our prices. Orders filled the day received.

SECOND HAND BICYCLES—a limited number taken in trade by our Chicago retail stores will be closed out at once, at $3 to $8 each. Descriptive bargain list mailed free.

TIRES, COASTER BRAKE rear wheels, inner tubes, lamps, cyclometers, parts, repairs and everything in the bicycle line at half usual prices.

DO NOT WAIT—but write today for our Large Catalogue beautifully illustrated and containing a great fund of interesting matter and useful information. It only costs a postal to get everything. Write it now.

MEAD CYCLE CO. Dept. L-71, CHICAGO, ILL.

White Lead on the Farm

Iron Work

There is one sure and easy way to protect iron work against rust. Give it two coats of red lead and linseed oil, then add a coat of

"Dutch Boy Painter"

Pure White Lead

and linseed oil, tinted as desired. That is the method used by architects and contractors for protecting the iron work on the largest buildings, and it is the one best way to treat every piece of iron on the farm. It not only affords perfect protection against rust, but adds greatly to the appearance of things.

Our Free Painting Helps. We will send you free on request color schemes and miscellaneous painting instructions. Ask for Helps 2750

National Lead Company

New York Cleveland Chicago
St. Louis Boston Buffalo
Cincinnati San Francisco
(John T. Lewis & Bros Co., Philadelphia)
(National Lead & Oil Co., Pittsburgh)

GUARANTEED MORTGAGES

For Large and Small Investors

Don't think, because your capital is small, that it can earn only 3½ per cent. or 4 per cent. It used to be so—the small investor for hundreds of years had no chance beside the capitalist. Our

First Mortgage Trust Bonds

On New York and Suburban Real Estate

put you exactly on a par with the wealthiest investor. You have the same security and the same certain returns—5 per cent. or 5½ per cent. You have the same opportunity to withdraw your capital if you should need it.

Under Supervision of New York Banking Department

Write for our Booklet

NEW YORK MORTGAGE CO.
Dept. D, 1475 Broadway, New York City

LADIES EASE YOUR FEET

A customer writes, "You could not have fitted me better. For the first time in years my feet are comfortable. The soft glove-like feel of is simply charming." Soft, easy, durable, neat, stylish; genuine hand-turned shoes of Vici Kid. No lining to wrinkle and chafe; no breaking in necessary. Absolute comfort and fit guaranteed or money refunded. Price includes rubber heels. All styles. Write for free catalog and self-measure blank. Customers everywhere.

PILLOW SHOES

$3.00 Post-paid in U.S.A.

PILLOW SHOE COMPANY
184 Summer St., Dept. 3, Boston, Mass.

Beautiful Iridescent

FrenchPearlNecklaces

These necklaces of high-grade unbreakable French filled pearls have all the sheen and rosy glow of genuine Oriental gems. Leading society women wear them. They cannot be distinguished from real except by an expert. Exclusive shops charge $2.50 to $5. Buying by mail at importer's prices saves you this profit. Send one dollar to-day. If not entirely satisfactory after ten days' examination return and money immediately refunded. Illustration 1/2 size.

$1.00 15 INCHES LONG

Natt & Co., 32 C Union Square, New York City

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD
BOND BOOK

We have received so many requests for copies of the financial articles which have been appearing in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, that we thought it wise to preserve them in pamphlet form. Any reader may secure a copy of this useful booklet, without charge, by forwarding 4 cents in stamps to cover postage. Address The Christian Herald, Dept. 96, Bible House, New York

POST CARDS

10 Hallowe'en - 10c | 10 General Subjects, 10c
10 Thanksgiving, 10c | 10 Birthday - - - 10c
Three packages for 25c. 100 cards, 80c
Special Assortment Birthday or Remembrance Cards, 100 for 60c.
MADISON ART COMPANY, MADISON, CONN.

ZOBO THE MUSICAL WONDER.
YOU CAN PLAY IT Without Learning.
Sing into the mouthpiece. Zobo does the rest. For Home, Church and Sunday School Entertainments. Full information FREE on request.
STRAUSS MFG. CO., 355 Broadway, Dept. 19, New York

How Capital Accumulates

THE total population of the United States for 1910, inclusive of Alaska, Hawaii and Porto Rico, was 93,402,266, and the per capita of United States money in circulation was $35.01, as compared with $26.94 in 1900, when the population was 76,295,220. This per capita circulation seems very small compared with the amount of business we see being done about us. If we take the present population with this per capita, we find that it amounts to $3,270,013,332.66. To this should be added $724,874,308 of outstanding national bank notes, the total giving us a fair idea of the actual money available for circulation.

Enormous as are these sums, they are small compared with the amount of business done in the whole country in 1910, and absolutely insignificant as compared with the estimated wealth of the United States in personal and real property, viz., $139,500,000,000.

We should not attempt to estimate the business done in this or any other country by the amount of money in circulation. In 1910 the bank transactions alone amounted to $9,826,141,452, or more than three times the total of all the Government money in circulation.

The Savers

Not counting money deposited in banks to be checked against in a business way, and for which interest is not usually allowed, there were in our 7,178 national banks in 1910, deposits classed as "savings," amounting to $576,607,824.23. This money was kept in the national banks, not for greater safety, but because of the interest allowed, which averaged 4 per cent.

Now, the national banks, like the savings banks, must set these deposits to earning a higher percentage than they pay their clients, else they would have to go out of business, so they look about for legal investments that pay five or six per cent.; in some States, particularly in the West, the permissible rate is higher. In this, and other legitimate ways that may be considered hereafter, the banks meet their obligations and pay dividends to their stockholders. These earnings, it will be seen, come through the judicious investment of other people's money.

In addition to the money kept as an investment in national banks, we must consider the money deposited for the same purpose in savings banks, private banks, and loan and trust companies that act as depositories. In 1910 these banks had in all 9,142,700 depositors, to whom was paid an average of 4 per cent. on a total of $4,070,246,000. It will be seen that about one in every ten of our population is a depositor in a savings bank, or some kindred institution. But this by no means exhausts the receptacles for the people's savings, though the remaining holdings are seldom so available that they could be classed as "other people's money" by the capitalist anxious for a loan and ready to give good security for the same.

Unproductive Savings

We have no means of estimating, even approximately, the amount of money that is hidden away in old jars, the mattress, or the more dignified strong box, but without doubt it runs into the tens of millions. Much of this money is held on to through the miser's love of tangible possession; still more through ignorance, and perhaps the larger part because there is not available a safe place of general deposit. No matter what the reason for the withholding of this money from circulation, it is very certain that in the aggregate the owners are losing annually large sums in the way of possible interest.

The postal savings banks, which we should have had a generation ago, but which are now in successful operation, promise to release from hiding innumerable small sums that will total a great deal; these banks will carry into the remotest corner of the country those lessons of thrift which we have been considering, and which are bound to have an educational value that cannot be reckoned in dollars and cents.

The Government, as we have seen, pays two per cent. to its postal savings depositors, and each depositor, after his credits have reached $20, can exchange them for a gold bond bearing two and a half per cent. We expect great things from these postal banks, particularly in the districts remote from savings or other banks of deposit; but another interesting question arises here. We can see how the savings banks and the other banks earn the money to meet interest and other obligations, but where does the Government get the cash to pay interest and the unavoidable expenses without loss?

Government Banking

The Government will conduct this banking business in offices in which the rent, light, and janitors, with much of the clerical work and safes or vaults, are already provided for under the regular postal regulations. The long delay in starting this essential work had the advantage of showing our authorities the merits and disadvantages of the systems adopted in other lands, and so enabled them to select the best, and to add innovations of their own that increase the safety and labor-saving effectiveness of the work. Speaking on the subject a few days ago, a gentleman connected with this branch of the general post office in Washington said: "The postal savings banks of our country are conducted quietly and economically, and under the excellent system provided and our greater facilities, it will not cost the Government, counting dollar for dollar, one tenth as much to manage its postal savings banks as it does the private concerns."

"But," it may be asked, "won't the expense for interest be vastly greater than the operating expense, and if so, mustn't it be paid by the United States Treasury?" Surely through the Treasury in the last analysis, but it will not be met through a Congressional appropriation, like other post office expenses and deficiencies.

The Government meets its routine departmental expenses from the money collected through the customs and internal revenue; but other extraordinary expenditures have been assumed, such as the building of the Panama Canal and the vast schemes for irrigation of arid lands; and, to provide the necessary cash, the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to sell from time to time gold bonds at two and a half per cent.

The Government, let us suppose, needs $100,000,000 to meet the current expenses of the enterprises named. Ordinarily bonds for this amount would be sold on the open market, but there will be the required money in the postal savings banks already bearing two per cent. interest, without any trouble or complication.

This is another illustration of the use of other people's money—the small savers' money—for their advantage and the good of the people at large.

An Appreciative Reader

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is welcomed in our home. "Questions Answered" are eagerly read. Moody's sermons don't come often enough. Please give us another serial story. Dr. Iglehart's "Bible and Newspaper" can't be excelled. Other timely articles are all above the standard of excellency. J. E. E.
Shelly, Pa.

The New Inheritance Tax Law Of New York State

Non-residents may now carry bank balances or deposit their securities in New York City, either temporarily or permanently, with the assurance that they will not be subject to the Inheritance Tax.

The new law, now in force, provides that intangible property, defined by the law as "incorporeal property, including money, deposits in bank, shares of stock, bonds, notes, credits, evidences of an interest in property and evidences of debt," held in New York by bona fide non-resident decedents, is not taxable in that state.

This Company has complete facilities for handling active and reserve accounts and for the safe keeping of securities, and cordially invites such business.

We have prepared a booklet containing the text of the new Inheritance Tax Law, together with explanatory notes, which we will be pleased to furnish upon request.
Ask for Booklet N 342

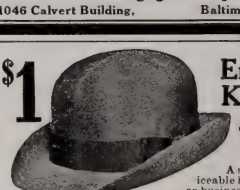
Guaranty Trust Company of New York
28 Nassau Street

Fifth Avenue Branch, 5th Ave. & 43d St. — London Office, 33 Lombard St., E.C.

Capital and Surplus - - $23,000,000
Deposits - - - - 163,000,000

5% How Much Does Your Money Earn

Can you get it when you want it?



Is it amply safeguarded from danger loss?

This Company pays 5% interest on yo savings. Interest checks reach you alwa on the first days of January and July. over sixteen years there has never bee day's delay.

You can withdraw all or part of yo money at any time without notice—it never tied up and out of your control.

Ask for the booklet telling about the careful, conservative management of this Company, its ample resources and its methods of doing business.

The Calvert Mortgage & Deposit C
1046 Calvert Building, Baltimore, M

$1 Engli Kno abou Hat

A stylish ... iceable hat for ... or business. Ge ... English Felt. Folds ... compact roll without damaging. Broad outside ... Would sell for $2 in most hat stores. Colors: Ecl Dark Gray Mixture, Brown Mixture, and Wh Weight 4 ozs. Sent postpaid promptly on receipt ... State size and color wanted. Satisfaction guara ...
PANAMA HAT CO., Dept. C, 830 Broadway, New Yo ...

PATENTS That Protect and P
Advice and Books F ...
Rates Reasonable. Highest References. Best Servi ...
WATSON E. COLEMAN, Patent Lawyer, WASHINGTON, ...

The above buildings on 320 acres in North Dakota, security for Wells & Dickey Company Loan No. 4899, $3,000 Mortgage now owned by the largest Savings Bank in Minnesota.

6% interest on your money invested in a mortgage on a farm as above (and we have made many such mortgages without worry or trouble on your part, should appeal to most conservative.

We desire to place our Booklet "A" in the hands of investors who are considering the best place to invest their money—place where it will be safe and bring them a good rate of interest. The Booklet tells all about the safety and desirability of our mortgages and will be sent free upon request.

WRITE FOR IT TO-DAY

WELLS & DICKEY COMPANY
Established 1878. Capital and Surplus $700,000.00
SECURITY BANK BUILDING - MINNEAPOLIS, MI...

THESE GREAT PRICE-WRECKING MERCHANDISE BOOKS FREE

They Show The Most Wonderful Merchandise Bargains Ever Offered

Check off the books you are most interested in and MAIL COUPON TODAY

We Guarantee a Saving of 30% to 50% on Every Purchase

Never before in the history of merchandising have such phenomenal price wrecking bargains as these been offered. We are known far and wide as "The World's Bargain Center." During the past six months we have inaugurated a buying campaign that has placed us in possession of one of the largest stocks of brand new dependable merchandise ever gathered together by any one institution. We have searched the markets of the world for the best bargains obtainable and you can rely absolutely upon every item published in any of these ten Big Price Wrecking Merchandise Books as being a genuine money saving bargain.

Our Stock Includes Everything Under The Sun

Anything and everything you want from a needle to a harvesting machine. No difference what your requirements may be—we can supply you at bargain prices. The few bargains here listed have been selected with unusual care from our immense stock and merely give you a hint of the tremendous money saving advantages you will enjoy by sending us your orders. Make up a selection from this page and send us the order today. We guarantee you complete satisfaction or your money back. And don't fail to send coupon below for the Big Merchandising Books most interested in.

CHICAGO HOUSE WRECKING COMPANY

Our Guarantee

Every article bought of us is guaranteed a decided bargain. If any article does not please you or fails to come up to your expectations, then you may return same at our freight expense both ways, and we will refund your money in full. Satisfaction guaranteed in every instance.

Our Reliability

Our capital stock and surplus in excess of $1,500,000 is proof of our responsibility. Any publisher of any paper in America will tell you that we "MAKE GOOD" on every statement. Write the greatest bank of the west—The Commercial Continental National Bank of Chicago.

Steam and Hot Water Heating

We furnish complete Hot Air, Hot Water and Steam Heating plants of every kind. It makes no difference whether it is an old or a new building, we can furnish material at real Wrecking Prices.

Our Special Heating Booklet, which we send free to those interested, tells all the facts and gives much valuable information. Send us sketch or diagram of your building or home and we will make you an estimate.

Plumbing Material

Everything needed in Plumbing Material. Our prices mean a saving to you of 30% to 50%. Here is an illustration of a bathroom outfit sells at $37.50 ing at.

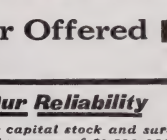
Your plumber would ask you about $60 for this same outfit. Our catalog describes all our outfits in detail. Shows how to install them without the aid of a plumber at a saving of at least 50%. Send for this book today.

Handsome Colonial Dresser, $5.60

1 A. D. 4101. One of our best price wrecking bargains. Made of seasoned hardwood, elegant golden quarter-sawed oak finish. 38x19 inch top; 18 inch square French beveled mirror; artistic scroll mirror standards; mirror frame attached so glass will stay at any angle desired; top ornamented with pedestal carving. Four drawers of splendid fit and workmanship, with good locks. Large drawers have reinforced bottoms, all drawers have steel stops. Single panel ends. Finish and cabinet work equal to that regularly found in $15 dressers; weight 100 lbs. Shipped from Indiana.



Premier House Paint, $1.08 Per Gal.

Ready Mixed—Guaranteed

Mr. V. Michaelsen, the best known paint man in the U. S., is at the head of our Paint Department, which is the strongest guarantee that all materials and workmanship in Premier Paints are the best obtainable. Every shipment is fresh from our paint factory, properly ground and mixed in exact proportions, thus insuring strongest color, durability and ease of application.

FREE With every order amounting to $7 or more, we will give two good quality camel hair paint brushes, suitable size for house painting. Send for big free Paint Book and Color Card.

100 As't'd Carriage Bolts, 45c

Every farmer, mechanic and blacksmith should have this handy bolt assortment which consists of 17 lengths and sizes from ¾ to 5 inches long by ¼-16 and ⅝-inch diameter. Bolts are all of first quality with well cut threads; useful at all times—indispensable in cases of emergency. You would ordinarily pay about $1 for a lot of bolts like this. Our price wrecked to only 45c.

Seamed Tapestry Brussels Rug

20 M. T. 7265. Extra high quality with pure worsted face. $8.65

Closely woven in a very handsome Oriental pattern that's sure to please you. Strictly fast colors. Three contrasting medallions in tan, brown, green and ivory. Three-toned green the predominating color. A remarkable bargain at this special price. You would ordinarily pay about $1 for a lot of bolts like this. Our price wrecked to only 45c.

Noble Junior Oak Heater, $2.65

Here's a price wrecking bargain you can not afford to overlook. Only $2.65 will buy this economical, attractive and durable Oak Heater. Guaranteed first class in every respect. Made of the best available materials throughout. All cast parts made of chemically tested Southern pig iron. No scrap iron used in its construction. Burns hard or soft coal or wood. Ten inch fire pot; big ash pit; standard shake grate; triple plated, highly polished nickel trimmings. The method of buying entire foundry lots enables us to save you 50% on all stove purchases. Send for free stove catalog.

Blacksmith's Tools and Anvils

We have everything the blacksmith can find use for in his shop—tools of every description: Forges, Post Drills, Bolts, Hammers, Dies and complete tool outfits. All at bargains.

Brand New Anvils, All Weights; 50 pounds, $1.74; 70 pounds, $2.35; 100 pounds, $3.45.

Write for Special Blacksmiths List. It's a money saver for you.

Extra Quality Linoleum Sq. Yd. 41c

20 A. D. 384. An extra good quality, well finished and seasoned print Linoleum that usually sells for nearly twice as much. Terra cotta, tan and cream tile pattern, printed extra thick. From a most reputable manufacturer and guaranteed to give splendid wear. One of the best sellers and a genuine bargain at this price. Six feet wide, per running yard, only 82c; per square yard, 41c.

Building Material

A complete stock of brand new Lumber, Doors, Windows, Millwork, Builder's Hardware and everything needed to build or construct. Write for our lumber price list. We will save you 20% to 50%. Our Free Book of Plans contains 96 pages of modern homes, bungalows and barns. It is sent free on application. It quotes prices outright for the complete buildings.

Hercules Indestructible Hog Troughs $1.95

Strongest and best Hog Trough ever offered. Made of ⅛ inch boiler steel. Can't be broken, yet price is lower than for commonest kind. Saves feed, easily cleaned, sanitary, suitable for all stock and poultry. Length 5 ft., width 12 ins., depth 8 ins., weight about 40 lbs. Wrecking price $1.95. Over 150 other styles and sizes.

Washington Fir Tanks

Finest, strongest Storage Tank made. Clear, free from defects, will not rot. All sizes. Sample of wood, full description and prices, sent free. Special tank and trough circular.

Ladies' All-Wool Panama Skirt only $2-65

This All Wool Panama Skirt is offered to you at half its real value. We captured an entire stock at a ridiculously low price; you get the benefit. Made in the latest kilted flounce style and is cut to give the new straight line effect. Side gores are trimmed with silk braided loops and buttons. Cut to give perfect hang by alternating plaits. Full sweep around bottom, ample room in walking. Best workmanship, fit guaranteed. Colors, black or navy blue. Sizes, 22 to 30 waist, 37 to 44 length. Cloth sample on request. Give your measurements when ordering. 27 A. D. All Wool Panama Skirt, $2.65. Postage 25c extra.

$20.75—And We Pay the Freight

This high-grade Harris A Sewing Machine, guaranteed for 20 years, for only $20.75 and we pay freight to all points East of Denver, Col. Besides you are allowed 60 days in which to try it in your own home. Notice the beauty of design; golden quarter-sawed oak, hand polished ball bearings, drop front, automatic lift. A full set of attachments with each machine. The finest material, best workmanship. Greatest bargain offered. Send for our Sewing Machine Catalog—free.

Cement Coated Wire Nails $1.42 Per Keg.

Nails that are built for keeps—outlast all others and hold better. Cheaper than wire nails. By a patented process they are coated with cement preparation that lasts forever. Drive easily but are hard to pull out. Once used them and you will have no others, as for every purpose they are far superior to the common kind. Full kegs—not lb. weight.

Size	No. to Keg	Price
6od	1,000	$1.42
5od	1,300
4od	1,800
3od	2,600
20d	3,100
10d	6,500	$2.02
8d	10,000	2.17
6d	17,900	2.27
4d	29,900	2.37
3d	54,300	2.62

Buggy or Harness

This Fine Leather Quarter Top Buggy, black body, dark green gear, ⅞ tires, narrow or wide ....., $34.95

Fine Single Strap Harness

$10.98 At this price we furnish new set single harness, made of leather throughout, strongly sewed; guaranteed to be satisfactory.

Send for our Free Harness Booklet.

Pumps, Windmills and Air Pressure Systems

Everything from a kitchen storage pump to the largest size wind mill. Our stock is clean, new and up-to-date. Let us have a special plumbing catalog, including a complete line. Let us know your needs. We can estimate exactly on your requirements. Every pump guaranteed the very best material, every casing perfect and finished in best possible manner. Rejuvenated Air Pressure Water Systems, ranging in price from $48 up.

Men's U. S. Army Shoes, $1.45

Made from good grade Satin Calf leather, blucher style as here shown. Good solid soles cut from best leather, nailed to the uppers. This is a neat appearing, strong serviceable shoe made to stand hard knocks of soldier wear and we guarantee will give splendid satisfaction. All men's sizes. A wonderful bargain at special price-reducing sale price, per pair $1.45. 28 A. 758. Send for our Big Shoe Catalog.

Rawhide Rubber Roofing, $1.22

Per Roll of 108 Sq. Ft.

Best quality, made from pure asphalt. Fire, frost, water and weather proof. Not affected by heat or cold. Recommended by fire underwriters. Large headed nails and cement for laps with each 108 sq. foot roll.

1 ply, guaranteed 6 years, per roll, $1.22.
2 ply, guaranteed 9 years, per roll, $1.49.
3 ply, per roll $1.71.

Write for free samples and Great Roofing Book.

Magnificent Suit Less Than Cost $4.95

We secured the entire stock at a ridiculously low price. You get the benefit. Handsome Black Cheviot Suit, newest model, tailored by experts. Coat round sack style; vest popular single breasted. Notice—we send with this suit an extra pair of pants, that latest mode. Color is gray, guaranteed. Order by Lot No. 26—W. 62. $4.95 Suit with extra trousers..

Write For Our FREE Catalog.

$10 Ladies' Handsome Tailored Suits, only $4.95

These man tailored suits were made to retail for $10. Made of good quality black Thibet, in the latest, up-to-date style. Coat is 28 inches long, semi-box back style. Skirt is made in the panel front and back style, stitched to the knees, giving ample room in walking. Best workmanship and fit guaranteed. Color, black only. Sizes 32 to 44 bust measure, 22 to 30 waist, 37 to 44 length. Tell us your measurements when you order. Samples of material free on request. 27 A. D. 1728. Shipping weight, 5 lbs. Price Wrecking Bargain, $4.95.

Stock Feed Cookers, only $4.37

Very durable; jacket extra heavy steel; kettle best quality gray cast iron and can readily be removed from the casing. Interior arranged so that fire and smoke pass around kettle before going into smoke stack, bringing entire bottom of kettle in contact with the fire, making it possible to boil contents much quicker than with any other cooker. Guaranteed actual number of gallons specified. Big door permits large chunks of wood for fuel.

4 C. 1991. 15 gals., $4.37; cover 57c extra. Other sizes up to $13.58.

$36 Buys this Fine 2 H. P. Gasoline Engine

Here's the best, strongest, most reliable and most durable Gasoline Engine ever offered for anything like this price. Brand new and strictly high grade in every respect. Every part carefully machined and accurately fitted. Best material. Binding guarantee and 30 day's trial. Full instructions. Send for catalog—at a saving of 50%.

Famous Wool Finished Blankets

24 D. 780. This famous Wool Blanket, woven from yarn especially prepared. Ends have deep, fancy borders and are finished with silk tape. Soft, warm, comfy. Gray or tan. Do not show soil quickly. Positively guaranteed. Size 66x80 inches. Shipping weight about 4 pounds. State color when ordering. Price per pair..... $1.98

Open Face Dust Proof Watch

A price wrecking offer on this Watch. Genuine movement, guaranteed for 1 year. Solid nickel case, screw back and front, richly engraved. Stem wind; hardened and tempered main spring. Latest model. Will last a lifetime. $1.95 28B W. 3. Price ..... Postage on watch 5c. By registered mail 16c. 30 days' trial.

Corrugated Steel Roofing

$1.25 Per 100 Sq. Ft. Greatest price wrecking Roofing offer ever made. We have literally smashed prices and this is your opportunity to save 50%. We bought 5,000 squares at a forced sale and must dispose of it quickly. Specify lot 700 as we do not pay freight at this price. Write for prepaid price list. FREE—One fine utility hammer with order.

Galvanized Wire 100 Lbs. $1.35

Suitable for fencing or any purpose where ordinary wire can be used. This wire is known as Galvanized Wire Shorts, that term being used to denote mill or factory ends—lengths 50 to 250 feet, but not enough to make a full 100 lb. spool. New—the same as regular spools. Gauge 6, approximately 1,025 ft. to 100 lb. coil, $1.35; gauge 8, about 1,435 ft. to 100 lb. coil, $1.40; gauge 12, about 3434 ft. to 100 lb. coil, $1.65. Others cheap.

Pipes, Fittings

Rejuvenated Pipe, complete with threads and couplings, suitable for gas, oil, water and conveyance of all liquids.

1 inch, per foot - 3c 1¼ inch, per foot - 4c

Larger sizes at correspondingly low prices. Write for list of Pipe fittings, Valves and everything connected with well drilling and piping supplies.

Special Single Barrel Shot Gun, $3.70 Smokeless Steel; taper choke bore, reinforced breech, case hardened frame, good quality fore end pistol grip stock, rubber butt plate; wt. about 6¾ lb. 12 or 16 gauge with ejector, $3.70.

CHICAGO HOUSE WRECKING CO.,

THIRTY-FIFTH AND IRON STS., CHICAGO

CHICAGO HOUSE WRECKING CO..
35 & Iron Sts.. Chicago, Ill. P. E. 373

I saw your adv in The Christian Herald.

I am most interested in the Merchandise Books opposite which I have placed this check mark X. Please mail them to me Free of cost.

Furniture and Rug		Plumbing Book
Clothing Catalog		Roofing Book
Ladies' wearing apparel		Paint Book
Boot and Shoe Catalog		Jewelry Catalog
Dry Goods Book		Sewing Machine
Grocery Book		Sporting Goods

NAME.....

ADDRESS.....

Post Toasties

With Peaches and Cream

"The Memory Lingers"

Christian Herald

SUBSCRIPTION, $1.50 PER ANNUM
PUBLISHED 52 TIMES A YEAR

COPYRIGHT, 1911, BY THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

NEW YORK, SEPTEMBER 6, 1911

VOL. 34—NO. 36. PRICE 5 CENTS
OFFICES: BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK

"THE SHEPHERD." From the Painting by Charles Emile Jacque, in the Metropolitan Museum of Art, New York

Oswego Serge—for men's attire depends not on fashion's whims. It is a staple fabric and worn through all seasons.

A serge suit is part of every man's wardrobe. Whether the suit be custom-made or ready-to-wear, the sterling quality of Oswego Serge speaks for itself. Oswego Serge is made by

American Woolen Company

Wm. M. Wood, President.

Oswego Serge is made in a deep, rich Navy Blue and in Black.

Oswego Serge is made of the finest wool and—quality considered—priced low.

Whether ordering a custom-made suit of your Tailor or a ready-to-wear suit of your Retail Clothier, insist on Oswego Serge.

If unable to obtain Oswego Serge, send us the name of your Tailor or Retail Clothier, accompanied by money order or check for quantity desired, at $3.00 per yard, and we will see that you are supplied. Your Tailor will do the rest. Samples furnished on request.

AMERICAN WOOLEN COMPANY OF NEW YORK

J. CLIFFORD WOODHULL, Selling Agent

American Woolen Bldg., 18th to 19th Sts., on 4th Ave., New York

NEW YORK, SEPTEMBER 6, 1911

THE · CHRISTIAN · HERALD

A WEEKLY ILLUSTRATED NEWSPAPER FOR THE HOME

THE DAWN OF THE WORLD'S PEACE

A Great National Symposium on the Rising Tide of Arbitration and Its Future

IN this issue, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD presents the first instalment of a most remarkable symposium of public opinion on the great question of International Peace and Arbitration, which is now being discussed throughout the country. We have received letters on the subject from the President, State Governors, United States Senators and Representatives, admirals and generals, presidents of universities, leading ministers of the various denominations and men prominent in finance and business. These letters are in response to a series of inquiries submitted by THE CHRISTIAN HERALD which invited a free expression of opinion on the following points:

Whether the era of World Peace is remote or at hand.
Is the martial spirit essential to a nation's existence?
Is a reduction of forces practical or advisable?
How to make the judgments of the International Arbitral Court binding.
Whether all international differences are capable of arbitration.
How can the Church best aid the Peace movement?

The result is seen in the letters below, which constitute a representation of public sentiment that is especially timely in view of the recent conclusion of the International Arbitration Treaties with France and Great Britain. These treaties have not yet been ratified by the Senate, although the honor and good name of the country are pledged to their support.

THE WHITE HOUSE
WASHINGTON

I yield to no one in my love of peace, in my hatred of war, and in my earnest desire to avoid war. I believe that we have made great strides toward peace within the last decade. No one that I know of goes further in favor of settling international controversies by arbitration than I do, and if I have my way and am able to secure the assent of other powers, I shall submit to the Senate arbitration treaties broader in their terms than any that body has heretofore ratified, and broader than any that now exist between the nations. In laying down my office, I could leave no greater claim to the gratitude of my countrymen than to have secured such treaties.

Wm. H. Taft

Photo Copyrighted by Harris & Ewing

Photographic Reproduction of the President's Letter

It was sent August 21, as a contribution to The Christian Herald's Peace and Arbitration Symposium, the first instalment of which is printed in this issue. In this letter Mr. Taft reiterates the sentiments expressed in his recent addresses.

VIEWS OF GOVERNORS

World-Peace a Natural Incident of Human Evolution, Writes Governor Baldwin of Connecticut

I CONSIDER the present agitation for International Arbitration and World Peace to be a natural incident of the evolutionary process by which the "ascent of man" has gradually advanced to its present stage. I think there is no need of further modes of organization to produce practical results: those now in use are sufficient, if properly directed. Among private organizations, I should especially commend the usefulness of the Carnegie and the Ginn Peace Foundations, and of the American Society for the Judicial Settlement of International Disputes. I think it a fair question whether the judgments of an international court, when one is set up, should be made enforceable through methods of preventing commercial intercourse, or by seizures of territory, or left to the effect of public opinion. I should incline to favor trying the latter plan first. Public opinion will be largely governed by the feelings and views of religious men. These questions are large enough to engage the attention and interest of adherents of all the great world religions, but address themselves with special force to believers in Christianity.

The true basis of patriotism, to state it in a word, is loyalty. Loyalty flows from intelligent and loving devotion to the principles of the government prevailing in one's country, attachment to its ideals, and reverence for its great historical figures. It cannot exist without the spirit of self-sacrifice: it can exist without the martial spirit. The martial spirit belongs to the things that are temporal; and the spirit of self-sacrifice belongs to the things that are eternal.

Simeon E. Baldwin Hartford, Conn. Governor.

* * *

Peace the Universal Desire, Writes Governor Woodrow Wilson of New Jersey

I NEED not say in reply to the questions contained in your letter that I consider the

Continued on next page

State Governors Give Their Views

present agitation for International Arbitration and World Peace a deep-seated and permanent thing, representing the fixed and universal desire of the human heart, but I do not feel that I have given the matter as yet the sort of consideration which would make my suggestion as to the best means of advancing the great cause particularly serviceable to those who are bearing the chief part in it. Like all men who are thoughtful of public affairs, my views are slowly forming in the matter, and are not a little guided by the great things that have already been accomplished.

Woodrow Wilson

. . .

Wars Between the Great Nations Avoidable by Arbitration, Writes Governor Carey of Wyoming

I believe that there is a fixed and universal desire of the human heart that wars should pass away, and yet I cannot hope that the time is in the near future. The right of revolution will always bring war; but I do believe that wars between the great nations of the world can be avoided if disputes are referred to a court of arbitration. It will take time to accomplish this, but since the close of our Civil War, the world has made wonderful advances in this direction.

David Starr Jordan
Pres. Leland Stanford Jr. University

Rear-Admiral Wainwright
U. S. Navy

The most practical organization of such a movement toward international peace would be for two or three of the greater nations of the world to agree on a fixed line of policy between themselves; as for instance, if the United States and four other of the nations in good standing could agree definitely among themselves on a line of action, that if a difference arose between two of these nations, the other three should arbitrate the difference. If an international court should be established with power to enforce its judgments, backed by the guarantee of those nations which signed the international arbitration treaty, I believe the question of International Arbitration would become a settled fact.

. . .

I scarcely think that we are now in the beginning of the era of world peace, but I do believe that we are in the beginning of an era when wars will be less frequent than they have been heretofore.

The true basis of patriotism I believe is the love of country and its institutions. It seems to be absolutely necessary that the martial spirit should be cultivated among the people, and until we have approached nearer the world's peace, this spirit should be kept alive and should not be permitted to fail. The Christian world would abolish war, and yet not at the expense of honor. I believe you will find most Christian nations in favor of war wherever it is necessary to maintain national honor. But I can see no reason why honor cannot be maintained through an international court, backed by the strength of the great nations.

Joseph M. Carey

Cheyenne, Wyo. Governor.

. . .

Nearing Peace in the Christian World, Is the View of Governor Chase S. Osborn of Michigan

I consider the present agitation for International Arbitration and World Peace entirely reasonable, so far as Christian nations are concerned. It represents the new heart tendency. Such a movement if agitated would lead to a growth of sentiment, out of which organization would naturally grow.

If an International Court were able to enforce its judgments by the guarantee of the signatory powers to an International Arbitration Treaty, the effect would be of great practical good. We are possibly nearing peace in the Christian world.

True patriotism is true love of country. True love of country comprehends love of all the people. A state of mind wherein war is abhorrent and deplored and wherein all reasonable steps to avoid it would be taken, but wherein there would be no cringing fear of war, is the ideal condition.

(Communicated by Governor Osborn's Secretary.)
Lansing, Mich.

. . .

Empower the International Court to Carry Out Its Decrees, Writes Governor Mills of New Mexico

I am heartily in favor of arbitration to settle disputes between nations. I believe that the people of the world are rapidly coming to the conclusion that all disputes can be settled by arbitration, rather than by a resort to arms. Of late years, the cost has become so great that nations hesitate to enter into war if it can possibly be avoided. In my opinion, the International Court at The Hague will in a very few years be the tribunal in which all disputes between countries will be settled; but we must also bear in mind that in order to make the decisions of that court obeyed by the nations, there must be a power somewhere to see that they are carried out. This condition prevails in the local courts of our country, and I can see no reason why it will not also prevail in the international courts.

William Mills

Santa Fe, N. M. Governor.

. . .

A Nation Should be Martial—When Occasion Demands, Writes Governor Willson of Kentucky

The present agitation for International Arbitration and World Peace is deep-seated, fixed and permanent, but not universal. The creation of an International Court would be the greatest achievement for peace in all the history of man. I think it is already the greatest achievement for man.

I do not consider that we are now in the beginning of the era of World Peace. I think we have made a good start. I cannot undertake to fix the stage of the movement.

I believe firmly in a spirit that is martial—when occasion demands. I believe in organization, discipline and learning the lesson of obedience and cooperation. I believe that it would be dangerous to have the true soldierly spirit lowered. I believe the Christian soldier is a model Christian.

Augustus E. Willson

Frankfort, Ky. Governor of Kentucky.

. . .

War May Soon Be a Memory of the Past, Writes Governor Hadley of Missouri

The time will come, possibly in the lifetime of those now living, when it will seem inexplicable that nations should go to war over questions that could be settled with honor by submitting the same for settlement to an International Court of Arbitration. There is, in my judgment, the same reason why civilized nations should provide for such a court to arbitrate international differences, as there is that the people of any nation should provide courts for the settlement of controversies between its citizens.

HERBERT S. HADLEY,
Governor.

. . .

We Shall Have Wars Until the Millennium, Writes Governor Gilchrist of Florida

Some people have advocated "peace, peace," long before and ever since the advent of the Great Prince of Peace in this world. Many men advocate "peace, peace" among individuals. The laws of each State recognize the importance of peace by providing certain punishments for the violation of such. The bickerings and the violations of peace between men arise from petty jealousy, injustice from one to the other, vanity, conceit, envy, covetousness and all other uncharitableness. The nation is but an aggregation of men. In my opinion, we are going to have wars and rumors of wars until the day of the millennium. This day will not come during our lifetime. In my opinion, universal peace is a sw lovely dream. The establishment of the In national Court of Arbitration to which you r would do much towards the maintenance of pe Without power to enforce its decrees, judgmen the same would simply produce a moral eff
With power to enforce the same, they could es lish peace by waging war, if necessary.

As to your question: "What is the true basi patriotism in the highest sense?"—it is to do y duty, "heart within and God o'erhead."

Albert W. Gilchri

Tallahassee, Fla. Governo

. . .

An Agreement to Disarm Not Visionary, Write Governor Shafroth of Colorado

I consider the present agitation for Internatic Arbitration and World Peace as deep seated, re senting a universal desire for peace, and which, if kept up, will be as certain to produce International Arbitration upon almost all questions as that progress is being made in our civilization. I believe this end is to be obtained among most of the nations of the world within the next decade or two. There is as much reason for arbitration of national disputes as there is for the existence of the right of a trial by jury.

Senator John Sharp Willia of Mississippi

Woodrow Wilson, Ph.D.
Governor of New Jersey

An agreement of disarmament is not visionary. There is an illustration of the actual effectiveness of such an agreement. At the close of the War of 1812, between the United States and Great Britain, there was a treaty formed which provided that there should be kept upon Lake Ontario, Lake Champlain and the Great Lakes, by each of the parties, an armament not exceeding upon each of those lakes of one vessel of one hundred tons capacity, with not to exceed twenty sailors upon the same, and with an armament of not exceeding one twelve-pound gun upon each vessel. That treaty between the United States and Great Britain has been in existence for nearly a century and it has never been violated. If such a treaty can be carried out, after the belligerent feeling which always exists after a war between nations, an agreement ma between nations at peace with each other would religiously observed.

John F Shafroth

Denver, Col. Governor.

. . .

Make a General Peace Treaty Open to all Nations Writes Governor Mann of Virginia

I consider the present agitation for Internatio Arbitration and World Peace deep-seated and p manent, representing an almost universal desi and prompted by a strong, growing sentiment in t minds and hearts of the best and wisest of men, w prefer tribunals of reason and equity to the arbit ment of force, which decides nothing except t superiority in brute force, military skill and sources of one nation over another. That this sen ment is growing is evidenced by the willingness

Continued on next page

U. S. Senators Write on Arbitration vers like Great Britain, and I might add France l Japan, to consider the treaty proposed by esident Taft.

President Taft, representing a country which s not desire acquisition of territory, should fol-up his proposed treaty with Great Britain by paring a general treaty so worded that all the ions of the world desiring to come in could make mselves parties to it, the weak and strong alike, n terms of perfect equality. The President uld have power given him by Congress to appoint cial envoys, men of character and standing fully mitted to the movement, who should be charged h the duty of bringing the attention of the pow-to the treaty and urging their acceptance of it.
e treaty, to be effectual, should embrace every sible difference between the powers, thus afford-to the weak the same rights possessed by the Senator Coe I. Crawford

South Dakota

Senator Charles Curtis
Kansas

rong, and manifesting to the world the willingness the more powerful to be magnanimous and brave r justice and right.

In addition to the permanent court of arbitration, hich I hope will be established, there should be a eat International Court of Appeals, composed of presentatives from the highest tribunals of all e powers not interested in the case appealed, or such other way as may be agreed, and to this urt there should be an appeal of right upon all uestions involving the honor or territory of any of e powers. By the terms of the treaty of arbitraon the judgments of the permanent court, which ould have exclusive original jurisdiction in all ases, and of the High Court of Appeals, with apellate jurisdiction only as stated above, should be nforced by the signatory powers, other than the tigants, in such way as the treaty should provide, as the International Court dealing with the case hould order.

In conclusion, let me say that in my judgment the an or men instrumental in bringing about a treaty etween the nations of the world for settlement of ll questions by arbitration, will be entitled to, and think will receive, the gratitude of all mankind, ne highest honors the world can bestow, and the lessing which God has set apart for peacemakers.

Richmond, Va.

U. S. SENATORS ON PEACE

An International Police Needed to Enforce the Arbitration Court's Findings, Writes U. S. Senator Coe I. Crawford, South Dakota

THE Arbitral Court should have power to declare and enter a final and binding judgment. In most cases, public opinion will suffice to make such judgment binding and to enforce it. For extreme cases, however, where force may be necessary to execute the final judgment of the court, an international police, maintained by the joint contribution of the nations establishing the court, would be employed, just as other courts employ sheriffs and marshals to enforce their decrees. The establishment of an International Arbitral Court must come, if it come at all, as the result of a broad and enlightened public opinion extending throughout the leading nations of the world. The court would serve the interests of peace among nations just as local courts of justice promote peace between individuals, by administering justice according to principles of equity which an enlightened people have learned to uphold and sustain.

Cases have arisen between nations, just as they sometimes arise between individuals, in which no judgment or decree of a court can furnish adequate remedy. Wanton and deliberate insult, which arouses all the fire and patriotism of a race; butchery of the innocent and helpless; attempts to partition territory or destroy national existence, might arise and be of such a character that nothing but a resort to arms would satisfy the people outraged, and a failure to fight would be sure evidence of abject meanness and cowardice. Happily such cases are now so rare as to be almost inconceivable. Nevertheless, they might arise, and should they do so, no self-respecting nation would agree to refer them to an Arbitral Court. At least nine-tenths of the disputes between the civilized nations of the world could with perfect honor be referred to such a court, and be determined according to simple rules of justice and equity.

I have an abiding faith that in the not remote future we shall see an International Arbitral Court in which the great majority of differences between nations will be amicably settled, and that such a court will greatly reduce the number of wars and cause a practical disarmament of the great military establishments that are impoverishing the people of the world. But we shall not entirely abolish war.

Washington, D. C.

The International Court Should Be Clothed with Ample Power, Writes U. S. Senator Charles Curtis, Kansas

I note what you say in regard to International Arbitration. This is a question that I have taken great interest in for years, and the promoters have my best wishes in the movement. They will also have my assistance in every possible way to bring about the desired result.

I think the international court, if established, should be empowered to make its judgment effective and binding, and the nations entering into the agreements should agree to stand by its findings. I do not think there is any question but what all differences and disputes arising between nations could be settled by arbitration, especially if they were taken in time. I hope and believe we are now in the beginning of an era of world-wide peace, and feel sure if the friends of this movement keep up the good work that eventually their efforts will be crowned with success.

Washington, D. C.

Great Armaments May Produce Universal Bankruptcy, Writes Senator John Sharp Williams, Mississippi

No greater folly was ever indulged in than "the tremendous armaments of the leading nations." It would be better for the mass of mankind to have a general war and be done with it and find out who is the strongest and let the strongest power exert its tremendous power by disarming everybody else. Quick death in a universal war would be preferable

Representative M. Sheppard
Texas

Representative R. P. Hobson
Alabama

to slow death by universal taxation. There is no way out of the present armament situation, if it keeps on increasing on land and on sea, except universal bankruptcy of the nations, after having ground down producers on the farms and in the workshops for generations. Somebody has to set the example—to set the pace would be a better phrase. Nobody is so fortunately situated, geographically, historically and institutionally, as we ourselves are to do it. The proposed Anglo-American Arbitration Treaty ought to be followed up by an identical Anglo-German and Anglo-French Arbitration Treaty, and then, in course of time, the people joining in these arbitration treaties ought to give notice to the balance of the world that any nation that tries to go to war without arbitration shall meet in battle, not only the armies and navies of the nation with which it goes to war, but the armies and navies of those who have said: "Let us have peace."

I do not believe that there is "any difference,

John Burroughs

Copyright by Pach Bros.

Representative Sulzer
New York

quarrel or dispute that could arise between nations that is incapable of adjustment by arbitration, according to the principles of law," unless it be a question involving the independence of a nation. All this talk about exempting questions of "national honor" is foolishness. I know what personal honor is, but I never have understood what is meant by national honor. When it is analyzed, it becomes a question of national interest of some sort. A nation cannot be insulted, and even when one considers personal honor as a rule, it merely means to each man the thing that that particular man will fight about.

I believe if any question of national existence were at stake, all treaties would be swept aside, just as an individual, if his life were at stake, would sweep aside all contracts and all laws in order to defend it.

So far as "a country's honor" is concerned, I again fail to comprehend precisely what it is. So far as "its territorial integrity" is concerned, that's only a high-sounding phrase to cover the plebeian question of dispute about boundaries.

God alone does know whether we are now "in the beginning of world peace." I feel certain, however, that that era is not as remote as it was a generation ago, and that after another generation, it will not be as remote as it is now. If this last conclusion be not true, then all we have been taught about the evolution of man through civilization into enlightenment under the guidance of a just God is false.

United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

WHAT NATIONAL EDUCATORS SAY

The Era of World-Peace Already Begun, Writes President Jordan of Leland Stanford University

IN MY judgment the present movement against war and in favor of orderly determination of disputes, international or personal, is a permanent one, a natural outgrowth of the spread of civilization, the natural outcome of the spread of religion, science, and of the spirit of democracy. The civilized world is more and more interested in human development, less and less in the pomp and display of militarism; while, on the other hand, it is coming to realize its crushing expense, which in the past was considered among the unavoidable ills of life.

The practical side of the movement must take

Continued on next page

World-Peace Begun, Write Educator

Hon. Albert W. Gilchrist
Governor of Florida

Hon. Joseph M. Carey
Governor of Wyoming

Henry Clews
The Great American Banker

Hon. Simeon Baldwin
Governor of Connecticut

Hon. Agustus E. Willson
Governor of Kentucky

three forms. These are indicated in the threefold division of the work of the Carnegie Endowment. 1. The development and extension of recognized international law, in checking the possibilities of international war, and in minimizing its evils. With the development of international law goes the extension of the scope of The Hague Conferences, and the work of making The Hague Courts more permanent, more powerful and more distinctly of a judicial character. 2. The study of the nature, origin and effects of war, as shown in history. This involves the investigation of the motives behind the growth of the terrible war debt of Europe (about $26,000,000,000), the methods of the "unseen empire" of finance by which this war debt is controlled and promoted. It involves the study of the growth of military and naval armament, which has for a century constituted the chief item of expense of almost every nation, and the operations of the gigantic armament lobbies, conscious and unconscious, by which these expenditures in the name of patriotism are continued and extended. It involves the unprejudiced investigation of what this nation really needs in the way of armament. It involves the study of the use of foreign wars and war scares to induce armament expenditures, and especially as a weapon against democracy, and to prevent internal reform. As laws are silent in war, so also are the voice of justice and the call of reform. The effect of war in causing the deterioration of the national stock through the slaughter of the strong, leaving to the weak and lame the duty of parentage, should be fully investigated. There is no question that the downfall of nations in the past is due to this cause, and that the same influence is potent to-day in every militant nation. The relation of militarism to the spread of infectious diseases needs also fuller investigation.

The third element is the establishment of an efficient propaganda to make the facts known to the people. This must be done by lectures, books, published essays, and by the organized co-operation of various groups of men. The clergymen of the world should be counted on as missionaries of peace. Courses of instruction on the history of war and peace should be given in all colleges and universities, as they are now given in several. The movement from war to arbitration is the most important political struggle of our time, and our schools of higher learning cannot ignore it. The American School Peace League is bringing the teachers of the lower schools in line with this work. The World Peace Foundation is devoting its strength to the various forms of propaganda in this and other countries, and its work meets everywhere with a warm response. With the work of propaganda goes the effort to secure the interest of business men, of representatives of labor, and in general of all men who have in mind the welfare of the nation.

The establishment of an International Court guarantees the acceptance of its decrees. It is not conceivable that a decree once issued should among civilized nations require arms for its enforcement. The establishment of the International Court is, next to the signing of unrestricted treaties of arbitration, the most important matter now ahead of us.

So far as civilized nations are concerned, we are now in the midst of an era of world-peace. It is not, however, the kind of peace we ask for, the peace of mutual trust and the orderly settlement of difficulties. It is the peace of bankruptcy armed to the teeth, the peace of which Gambetta said that its end is "a beggar crouching by the barrack-door." The nations are at peace because their credit is not adequate for war, because war would bring universal ruin, because war can no longer bring wealth or strength or plunder, because the leaders of finance will no longer lend money to be used in wasting the wealth of those who to an equal degree are also their creditors.

The only real peace comes through the stoppage of waste, through the release of the common folk from crushing debt, through the elimination of costly pomp and murderous armament from the relations of nations. The ideal of peace between nations is found in the four thousand miles of our Canadian boundary, artificial most of the way, disputed most of the way at one time or another "with all the brutal frankness of blood relations," and yet for a century without a soldier on either side to defend it, without a warship, without a gun. When all frontiers are like this, Europe will be at peace. Only the vanity of rulers and the secret work of the relentless armament syndicates now stand in the way. But these are no small opponents, and as the advocates of peace become efficient and respected, the "strong, silent men" who deal in armament will join them and vitiate their efforts.

The influences which make for "arbitration and a great navy," to enforce peace by a show of power, are the most dangerous enemies of the Peace Movement to-day. With them there can be no compromise. By peace, we mean mutual trust, not mutual fear. True patriotism has nothing to do with the martial spirit. To respond to the drum is not patriotism. The patriot is not the soldier of fortune. The patriot is the man who loves his country, who believes in what his nation stands for, and who will give his life, if necessary, that his nation may stand for righteousness. The martial spirit belongs to the mediæval world, when fighting was the chief business of men, and when plunder was the chief motive for fighting.

The growth of science, the development of invention, the spread of religion are all bound up in the maintenance of peace. Virility depends on struggle, the struggle against the evils of the world and the conditions of life. It is in no way dependent on drums and flags, nor on the killing of men either individually or collectively. War was once universal. We have driven it to the boundaries of nations. We have made it illegal everywhere else. We have made it so costly that its continuance means national ruin. The whole world is still paying the bills incurred by Napoleon, Bismarck and the grafting counselors of the Czar. Just as baronial wars, religious wars, feudal wars, inquisitions, crusades and coats of mail, vanished when people saw them with clear vision, so international wars will come to an end, all of a sudden, when people see them as they are. That time has now come, and only the money that is in it to builders and promoters keeps alive the standing armies and the navies of to-day.

David Starr Jordan

Stanford University, Calif.

. . .

The Rising Tide of World-Peace as Viewed by President MacLean, University of Iowa

A few years since I believed the present agitation for International Arbitration and World Peace to be ephemeral and visionary. Now I believe just the contrary. The peace advocates have become practical. They recognize that civilization is only partially evolved, and that armies and navies for police purposes are necessities. The rise and progress of industrialism and the unified world-wide commercial interests made possible by rapid transportation make for a new internationalism and peace. The propagation of socialism is a symptom of oncoming peace. The reaction of taxpayers against the burdens of increased armaments are beginning to influence the governments. Leaders in education are bringing the agitation for peace into the schools and colleges, so that within a generation the life of the nations will be affected.

The peace movement, therefore, promises to be organized so as to produce practical results. Wh responsible government leaders with statesman-li views, such as President Taft in this country a Asquith and Balfour in England, urge treaties th will submit all differences to arbitration, practic results will soon be assured. The creation of international court as the next development fro The Hague Conference, with a guarantee by t signatory powers to an international arbitrati treaty, would mean the inauguration practically an era of world peace.

True patriotism is based upon love—love of t Fatherland. When the ethical sentiments and rel tionships that are central in Christianity permea civilization, moral restraint and discipline will ta the place of fighting among nations, as it has do in the tribe. What is known as martial spirit wi find opportunity for its exercise in the game of lif and especially in the development of a healthy, ath letic and out-of-door life in place of the artificial an conventional life of fashion of the present day. W must preserve the martial spirit if it be under th paradox, "We will have peace if we have to figh for it."

George E. MacLean

Iowa City, Ia.

. . .

The Age Is Changed and We Are Nearing World-Peace Writes President Emeritus Northrop, University of Minnesota

A great change has come over the world within year. The people have come to a realization of th fact that wars are generally unnecessary, and tha the keeping up of tremendous armaments in prep aration for possible wars is an intolerable burde and a largely unnecessary waste. I believe that th maintenance of peace is a fixed desire of a grea majority of our people, and is likely to become a almost "universal desire of the human heart."

I regard the arbitration treaty between the Unite States and Great Britain as the greatest step ye made in the interest of peace. If such treaty i ratified, other nations will undoubtedly be ready t join in the movement by making similar treaties and when that is done, we shall have gone a lon way in the direction of universal peace.

I believe we are drawing very near to an era o World Peace. I did not think so two years ago but I think so now. People are thinking. Wome are all for peace. Men are realizing as never be fore what it means to spend hundreds of millions o dollars in yearly preparation for killing human be ings, when suffering humanity needs every dollar o it for its own relief. And men are concluding everywhere that nations, like men, would best settle their differences by law and not by force. Hence arbitration commends itself to all unbiased thinkers, and specially to the common people.

The "Christian attitude" in common life among men is to "love your neighbor as yourself," and there is no better rule for the guidance of nations. Love worketh no evil. The age is changed. Christianity has done real work. Men are as ready today to fight for a real principle or right as they ever were, if they must, but they feel, as men in the past never have felt, that there is always a better way, and that differences among nations can be settled by law just as well as differences among men.

Cyrus Northrop

Minneapolis, Minn.

Continued on next page

Is an Era of Arbitration Coming?

Hon. Wm. J. Mills
Governor of New Mexico

Hon. Chase S. Osborn
Governor of Michigan

Hon. Herbert S. Hadley
Governor of Missouri

Hon. John F. Shafroth
Governor of Colorado

Hon. William H. Mann
Governor of Virginia

EPRESENTATIVES DISCUSS PEACE

ls and Obstacles to World-Peace Discussed by Congressman Richmond P. Hobson, Alabama

HE Arbitral Court can best serve the cause of peace—

1) By its membership being most carefully selected, so as to mand international confidence, and then by its decisions m the start being really judicial, not diplomatic or semi-slative;

2) By having the court reinforced by a great international mission, elastic in membership, to take the part of the grand y and States' attorneys, in investigating and determining the cts in each case when there is a difference.

3) By receiving the hearty co-operation not only of gov-ments but of the public of all nations, evolving a compelling ld public opinion, before which individual nations would w.

4) By allowing its course to be evolutionary, a growth, nulative in its process, as its activities naturally increase, efully avoiding forcing it upon the nations, to the premature tailment of the individual sovereignty of each.

5) By developing and maintaining the sea-power of the ions in favor of arbitration, so that at least an equilibrium, best a preponderance on the high seas is in their favor.

I believe that all questions should be submitted to itration, but as long as there is no judicial ap-al from the decisions of the Arbitral Court, and long as human nature remains fallible, cases y arise when the acceptance of the decision may or even should be withheld. A nation's higher egiance to nature and nature's God might be operly invoked in certain cases.

Permanent World Peace can only come after the ll development of an effective world organization th legislative, judicial, and executive machinery, ed and proven effective. Such an organization st be a growth, like similar organizations within ilized nations. With the experience of the civilized tions for guides, and with the new conditions of tercommunication, evolutionary processes will be re rapid than in the past. But, nevertheless, in-rnational organization is in its infancy. The rld has scarcely passed the common law period. ternational law has not even been authoritatively dified. There isn't yet even the embryo of an ternational executive power. The growing world blic opinion is a nebulous forecast. Nations ually from birth are sovereign, and it will take ong period to bring about even a partial surrender that sovereignty to a higher agent made up of any nations.

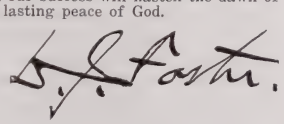
In the last analysis, the peace of the world will ogress only in proportion to the moral progress mankind. A condition of peace is but the reflec-n of a stage of moral evolution; it rests abso-tely upon the average standard of character and oral development of the myriads who make up ankind.

The dawn of peace took place in Palestine nine-en hundred years ago. Justice, liberty, charity, otherhood, the forerunners of peace, will advance rectly with the spread of the Gospel and progress ward the full light of noonday will come in direct roportion as the masses of men the world over me to shape their lives according to the teachings the Master.

Washington, D. C.

. . .

asten the Dawn of the Day of the Lasting Peace of God, Writes Representative D. J. Foster, Vermont



What we are seeking to accomplish is the develop-ent of a system of international jurisprudence nalogous to the systems that maintain to-day in the rogressive nations of Christendom. The develop-ent of international law has lagged far behind e development of law within the nation. With ich a system of international jusriprudence, with its international court of arbitral justice with its doors always open, thereby inviting the nations to send to it their differences for adjudication, the interests of world-peace would necessarily be strongly advanced.

The difficulty in the past has been, not that nations were keen to go to war for the settlement of their international differences, but that there was no other method than war known. The rapid development of arbitration as a method of settling international differences, under the leadership of the United States and Great Britain, in the nineteenth century, plainly indicates how gladly peaceful methods for the settlement of such differences are resorted to in the great majority of instances. Such an international court, recognized by the nations as their instrumentality for the settlement of international difficulties, having for judges men known the world over for their learning and wisdom and probity, would give a tremendous impetus to the present tendency toward the peaceful settlement of international differences.

In the modern nation, no difference, quarrel or disturbance could arise between its citizens that is incapable of adjudication by the proper court. I believe it can be truthfully asserted on general principles that no difference, quarrel or dispute could arise between nations that is incapable of adjudication according to the principles of law. There is no essential difference between national honor and individual honor, between national boundaries and private boundaries, between international differences of every sort and private differences of every sort. And as the private citizen throughout the civilized world has learned to submit to the adjudication of the courts all his claims and differences—albeit they involve his honor, his good name and all that he holds most dear, so I believe that the civilized nations are plainly seeing that they could with all propriety submit to a proper court all their differences for adjudication.

In the United States, as well as in other modern progressive nations, mob rule is occasionally substituted for law. And with the establishment and development of such a system of international jurisprudence as I have just referred to, with its international court of arbitral justice, it is undoubtedly true that a crisis might arise where a country's honor or territorial integrity or its national existence was at stake, when international mob rule would be substituted for international law and the judgment of the international court. But I submit that the likelihood of such crises would become less and less with the passing decades.

I believe that by the development of this new method of dealing with international differences the sphere of war will be tremendously circumscribed. It must be remembered, however, that civil war as well as international war vexes the world, and that there are countries in which there has not yet been fully developed the idea of nationality, so essential to this international union. We are no longer dreamers. We are addressing ourselves to the task of devising a practical method of relief from conditions that have become intolerable. We are bound to succeed, and our success will hasten the dawn of the day of the lasting peace of God.

Washington, D. C.

. . .

The Era of Universal Arbitration at Hand, Writes Representative H. M. Towner, Iowa

More progress has been made toward securing universal peace and the determination of international issues by arbitration within the last ten years than in any century before. It would be impossible to predict that an era of universal peace would be inaugurated at any particular date. Doubtless there will continue to be infractions of the international code after it is universally agreed to follow one, just as there continue to be infractions of any code notwithstanding the great body of people are supporting it. Nevertheless I believe that the era of a universal acceptance of common principles by which international questions may be determined in a peaceful code of arbitration is at hand. I believe that it may safely be said that we are entering upon an era of universal arbitration, even if it cannot be said that we are entering upon an era of universal peace.

The true basis of patriotism is the doctrine that one's country is deserving of the love of its citizens when it represents that which is highest and best in manhood and citizenship and in the service of a common humanity. Ideas may differ as to the best methods of promoting the highest interest of one's country, but certainly all can unite on the proposition that that country serves its own people best which places its code of law and of ethics and of citizenship upon the highest grounds of justice to all men before the law.

That law will of course be a reflex of the characteristics of the individual nation. While it may and must differ from that of other countries, there will gradually be an approximation to certain almost universally accepted canons of righteousness to which all people must eventually approach. It is not the highest duty of patriotism to cultivate the military spirit of a people, although a cultivation of that spirit may be necessary. Protection of life, liberty, and property is a necessary incident of every government, and implies a certain physical force back of the established principle. So it is with nations; back of the established and accepted code of international law there must exist a material force to support and enforce it. The police force of a city, State or nation must have its analogous police force in international affairs. This does not imply either the exaltation or depreciation of the military spirit. It implies only a recognition of facts which ought to be universally recognized.

In my judgment a nation may well educate and cultivate its people in the spirit of a national system of protection without cultivating unduly the military spirit, which is certainly not the highest type of Christian manhood. That nation is best protected which is best loved by its people, and that nation will be best able to maintain its honor and dignity among the nations of the world which raises among its citizens the highest standards of citizenship and insists upon a recognition of that justice which it is willing to concede to the humblest of nations and to demand from the greatest.

Washington, D. C.

. . .

The Time Ripe for the Adoption of International Arbitration, Writes Representative Claud U. Stone, Illinois

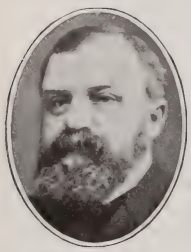
I am firm in the belief that all contentions between nations, even though they involve a country's honor or its territorial integrity, can be and should be submitted to arbitration.

The time is now here for the adoption of such a policy, and the enlightened sentiment of all the civilized world demands it.

Washington, D. C.

Continued on page 884

The Heavenly Home



An Unpublished Sermon by DWIGHT L. MOODY, AMERICA'S GREATEST EVANGELIST*

TEXTS—Rev. 13:8; 20:12; 21:27.

The fifteenth of twenty remarkable sermons by Moody, never before published, and the existence of which was disclosed only a few months ago. The absolute authenticity of the sermons is vouched for by the evangelist's son, Wm. R. Moody, who cordially approves their publication in this paper. The sermons are the exclusive property of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD.

I WAS speaking about Heaven the other day, trying to show who would be there, and to bring out from Scripture how my Father has a dwelling-place there. His Son and the angels are there, and if we are true children of God, our names are all there in the Book of Life.

I want to read you some verses about our names being in the Book of Life. Phil. 4: 3—"I entreat thee also, help those women which labored with me in the Gospel, with Clement also, and with other my fellow-laborers, whose names are in the Book of Life." That's what Paul wrote about those who labored with him. Revelations 13:8—"And all that dwell upon the earth shall worship him, whose names are not written in the Book of Life of the Lamb slain from the foundation of the world." All that are not written in the Book of Life shall worship the Antichrist. There's a line between those that are for Christ and those against him. Marked difference!

Dwight L. Moody

Rev. 20: 12—"And I saw the dead, small and great, stand before God; and the books were opened; and another book was opened, which is the Book of Life; and the dead were judged out of those things which were written in the books, according to their works."

God's Records

I was once asked in England to sit with a judge on the bench while he was trying some cases. A man came in, and the clerk of court asked if he had ever been arrested. He said, "No." A man opened a book, and read, and said, "Yes, sir, this man was arrested at such and such a time—four or five times." When that record met him, that man turned pale. There was the book! And you know, God has books, and every man must meet his own record. I believe God makes every man write his own record, and he must meet it.

Rev. 21: 27—"And there shall in no wise enter into it anything that defileth, neither whatsoever worketh abomination, or maketh a lie; but they which are written in the Lamb's Book of Life."

Let the man who is living a double life, a dishonest life, and loving personal gratification and pleasure, make light of that. "There shall in no wise enter it anything that defileth, neither whatsoever worketh abomination, or maketh a lie; but they which are written in the Lamb's Book of Life." I have never seen a man who lived a dishonorable life, a selfish life, an impure life, but that he is all the time making sport of those who are living pure and serving the God of heaven. I would rather trifle with everything else—with any of the Apostles—than to trifle with God, because every man must meet his own record. God keeps books. You can make all manner of sport you want to; but there is one thing of which you may be sure: be sure your sins will find you out.

Look at Dan. 12: 1—"And at that time shall Michael stand up, the great prince which standeth for the children of thy people; and there shall be a time of trouble, such as never was since there was a nation even to that same time: and at that time thy people shall be delivered, every one that shall be found written in the book." Every one shall be delivered! You will give more to have your names there than in any other book you have ever seen.

Where Do You Parents Stand?

I closed a sermon by entreating parents to be sure to have their children's names in the Book of Life. That's the aim of life. It's not to buy and sell and get gain, and leave millions of money, making the way of perdition easy for them. Look into the records all over this country where men have worked for years to leave property to their children, and it has been swift destruction to them. A mother dying in one of the Eastern cities, when she found she must go, and had all her faculties, requested the father to bring the children in separately that she might give them a dying blessing. The oldest of the seven was brought in first, and the mother talked as much as she could, and gave him her dying blessing, and a motto to take with him through life. Then she took the next child, and she kept on till the last; and the infant was brought in, and she kissed it and kissed it, and gave a message that the father was to keep until the child understood it. It was hard for the mother to part with the last; she seemed to be holding on to it to the last. They took the child from her, and she looked up into the husband's face and said, "I charge you bring all these children home with you." God charges you to bring every one home.

I suppose our cities are full of temptation, of whisky shops. Let's you and me make it our chief business to bring our children home with us. Perhaps there will never be a better time in your life than just now. Get your minister to pray with them. Why should there not be inquiry meetings all over the land? Men are talking about religion; talking about Jesus Christ. They can't find a fault in his character or his message, but they may find a good deal of fault with his messengers. This world can't get on very well without that message. It can't get on very well without the Son of God. God makes no mistakes. I don't care how you get your children to Christ, only get them.

Have you got your name there? Are you doing all you can to bring your children to the Book of Life? The next thing is, to lay up our treasure in heaven and not down here. That's what Christ taught in the Sermon on the Mount. It's an important sermon—about fifteen hundred sermons' worth condensed into that one.

The Place for Treasure

Matt. 6: 19—"Lay not up for yourselves treasures upon earth, where moth and rust doth corrupt, and where thieves break through and steal: but lay up for yourselves treasures in heaven, where neither moth nor rust doth corrupt, and where thieves do not break through nor steal. For where your treasure is, there will your heart be also." If our treasure is down here, of course our heart will be here. But if our treasure is up on high our hearts will be there. Talk about the things of time! If a man is living for the things of this world, his life will show it. If he is a true child of God, and you talk to him about eternal treasure, his face will light up. I believe that every man laying up treasures down here, and who is not right toward the kingdom of God, is doomed to disappointment. What shall it profit if we gain the whole world and lose our soul? What have you? You know you can't take the world away with you. You can't do it! Some one advised a man who had all his treasures down here to go to England and buy that precious jewel in the English crown, and try to carry it to heaven!

A friend of mine during the war went to see the owner of one of those great Western farms, to get him to give something to the Christian Commission and the wounded soldiers. The farmer took him up to the cupola of his house and said, "Do you see those great herds of horses and cattle? There's thirty miles of fence around that pasture! Do you see that farm? Well, that farm is all mine. Not a mortgage on any part of it. And in the city, those large buildings are mine too." After he had got through pointing out his earthly treasures (and he was living on borrowed time), my friend said, "What have you up yonder?" "What do you mean?" said the farmer. "What have you beyond this life? Have you any treasures beyond this life? You are already living on borrowed time. The threescore years and ten have long run out. Are you going to be rich for part of a thousand years, and be a bankrupt in eternity, entering the eternal world a pauper?" "It does look rather strange, if you look at it that way, doesn't it?" said the rich man. But he died as he lived, and the children went to quarreling about the property, and the lawyers got the most of it. Living for this brief life here! O man, woman, get your eyes open. Is it true that we are going to live forever? If so, let us live, let us pick up some things for the eternal world, and then our heart will be there. If you see a man's goods coming along on a freight train, you know the own or his agent is not far off. So He says, "Lay not for yourselves treasures on earth." Man, do y know that everything under the sun is going to shaken? I believe these nations are going to awfully shaken. I tell you these earthly thin look pretty small to some men. Do you know th most of the world's great fortunes have been a cumulated in the last thirty years? I have not a doubt that these great millionaires thought th would be perfectly satisfied if they had a millio and there isn't any satisfaction with thirty millio nor a hundred millions. They are not satisfie Why? Because the heart is not satisfied here. Do think of my abusing the rich. I don't know, but believe I would be ten times as dissatisfied as th if I had their millions. A man that is envious these rich men, that wants to get it, is as bad as t man who has it. What's the difference? All t fault is this: That you should not set your hea and affections on anything down here. That's t teaching of the Sermon on the Mount.

"Build Higher"

When I was in England, they told me about bed-ridden saint. There came two birds and the flew around the nearby tree, and by and by we off and got some hay and straw and began to bui a nest. And the bed-ridden saint said, "Bui higher." She was sure a cat would destroy t nest. She was tempted to send out a servant tear it down. She kept saying, "Build higher." am trying to get people to build higher. Wake u You will be disappointed if you don't build highe Be rich towards God, and you'll be rich foreve The nest was built, and one day she sent the serva out to see if there were any eggs, and the serva found them. By and by there were little birds, an every morning, the first thing done was to look an see if the birds were there. But one morning t feathers were scattered all around. The little bir had been torn to pieces by a cat, and the old bir was chirping her mourning for her lost ones. Ma what a picture of life! What we want is to "buil higher." Then it will be easier to live a higher lif

I remember hearing years ago of a rich man b ing stricken down, and he sent for a lawyer to mak out his will, and he went on willing away his pro erty, and his young child didn't understand wh death was. She heard the father giving away th old home. He was willing that away. The litt thing seemed troubled, as if he was going to giv the home to mother, and said, "Where are you? She went up to the bed, and said, "Have you a hom in that land where you are going to?" Oh, ho these questions do come home to us! and how child may ask a question that no philosopher ca answer! Father, mother, have you a home in th land—that land to which you are going? What horrible thing it must be to be a houseless an homeless soul forever!

Now, come. Isn't it the height of madness for man or woman to spend all their time down here a many do, if they are going to live again? It seem to me that a man must get that thing settled; i death ends all, let us "eat, drink and be merry," an give up our churches and our Bible. But, if man i immortal, and going to live on, let us get ready See what Paul says in his letter to the Colossians "Set your affections on things above, and not o things on the earth. When Christ, who is our lif shall appear, then shall ye also appear with hi in glory."

Where the Heart Is

Now people say, "How are you going to set you affections on things above, how control you thoughts, and how get them into a heavenly cha nel? Tell us." Listen. You can talk about country. You can get a book on France, and rea up French history, and all about France, and ge so full of France that you can talk about nothin else but France. What we want is to read abou this heaven, talk about heaven, think about heave and we'll begin to have our thoughts there. Isn that the way to "set your affections on thing above"?

I was going to New Orleans, and there was lady in front of me who had got acquainted wit another lady. One of them lived at Cairo, four o five hundred miles from Chicago. They got s attached to each other that one said, "I wish you stop over a day with me." The other said, "I like to, but my trunks are gone on." Listen! "tent and an altar" will do down here; let us pac

Continued on next page

* This sermon, never before published, was preached by Mr. Moody in Tremont Temple, Boston, Mass., January 26, 1897.

A CRY OF THE SOUL

O LORD, and must it ever be
That sin shall stand 'twixt man and Thee?
Must all our days be spent in strife
To drive the evil from our life?

O gracious God, our Lord and Father,
Show us the way, forsake not, rather
Be Thou our keeper and our guide.
Can harm befall when at Thy side?

We love Thee, but in spite of all,
We feel the power of that fall
Whence evil came into our life,
Entailing never ceasing strife.

Thou Great Deliverer, lead the way
Through love unto the perfect day
Of glorious, sinless purity,
Of heavenly sweet security.

We know we cannot win alone;
We cannot for our sin atone;
We would, O Lord, from sin be free;
In faith we cast ourselves on Thee.

—CHARLES REMINGTON MCNALLY.

The Heavenly Home

Continued from preceding page

and get a check clear through. Our treasures up on high. Our reward is up there. I have people coming to me and saying, "Mr. Moody, you aren't looking for your reward down here?" No. The Almighty Lord, high over all, is coming. The morning time is coming, and I want to get ready. No man who lives in Christ Jesus is going to get his reward here. I want to tell you something: If the world hasn't something to say against your Christianity, I wouldn't cross the street for it. I pity the man of whom when he dies they'll say, "No one had anything against him." Every mean and lying rascal will have something to say against you. Of course. Own up, now. What was John the Baptist's reward? Got his head cut off. But where is Herod to-day? Where is John to-day? Been in heaven nearly nineteen hundred years, and how his name shines out! I can hardly think of John but tears come to my eyes. "Great is your reward." People ask: "Shall we know each other in heaven?" Well, at the Transfiguration, when God came down, and Christ had gone up to the Father, and the three, Peter and James and John, were on the mountain peak, and the glory of God lit up that mountain, who appeared there but Moses and Elias? I don't read that Christ had to introduce them. I expect to know Moses without any introduction, and I know Elias and the prophets. Get acquainted with them down here, and you won't want any introduction when you get up there. "I shall be satisfied when I awake with his likeness." If that's going to satisfy me, that's enough.

I want to know my mother in heaven, do you think I shall not be satisfied? He gave me love for my mother; he put it into my heart; will he not satisfy that? O my friend, you will know that child of yours when you get there. He will take better care of it than you. You don't know that it has been a million times better to be taken up into glory and be with the Master, and by and by you'll be with the child again. Let us get our heart's affections set on things above. We pray, O Lord, that thou wouldst lead our thoughts from this world to the heavenly; help us to set our hearts affections on things above; help us that when we go, there shall be a shout of victory on our lips. And now we want to ask that thy blessing may rest upon us. May there be victory for Christ to-day. Let our prayers go up to heaven. And we ask it that Christ may be glorified. Amen.

The Rising Generation

By EUGENE THWING

TWO young women recently obtained licenses as qualified aviators. They met all the demands of the licensing board, flying high, remaining there as long as required, cutting the figure eight in the air, and alighting within a few feet of a specified mark. Miss Moisant did all this one month after taking her first lesson with an aeroplane.

Every day, now, some one is flying from Boston to New York, or from New York to Philadelphia, or from St. Louis to New York, or elsewhere. Atwood, the young aviator who made the flight through the air from St. Louis to New York, two weeks ago, going part of the time at the rate of ninety miles an hour, is planning to fly all the way across the continent from San Francisco to New York for a $50,000 prize.

Who could have believed a few short years ago, that such an editorial comment as the following would be made in all seriousness by a paper like the New York Times?

> Seemingly almost anybody, man or woman, after a week or two of instruction and practice, can fly, and while it is still true that though
>
> The feathered tribe on pinions cleave the air—
> Not so the mackerel and still less the bear,
>
> plain ordinary humans are not debarred from cleaving it as much as they please if they will be at a little more pains than it requires to learn to run an automobile.

It is remarkable that most of the dreams and hopes of both mythology and science have come true, every one—automobiles, telegraph and wireless messages, steam, railroad tunnels, steel vessels, and now the aeroplanes. One after the other man has conquered the land, the water, and the air. To what field of conquest shall he next rise?

. . .

A PROMINENT architect and a manager of one of the big insurance companies were conversing the other day on the subject of certain great business enterprises in which many wealthy and influential men were concerned. In a moment's lull in the conversation, one of the gentlemen exclaimed, "Do you know that every one of the men you have been naming began life as a poor boy?" Then they reviewed the list of powerful captains of industry and finance, and recalled the struggling experience of each at the beginning of his career. Through sheer energy and persistence he had risen step by step to his present eminence.

Dr. William Mathews, at one time professor of English Literature in the University of Chicago, said: "It is remarkable how many of the world's great men have been little men." He mentioned such examples as Lord Nelson, of whom the people first exclaimed, "Why make that little fellow a captain?" And Napoleon, the "Little Corporal," and Aristotle, "a pygmy in person though a giant in intellect," and Tom Moore, the Irish poet, who was so small that George IV. once threatened to clap him into a wine-cooler. If Dr. Mathews had been writing to-day he would have pointed to Admiral Count Togo, one of the world's littlest and greatest of men.

Dr. Mathews referred to physical littleness when he said that "history is full of examples of pygmies, who, tormented by a mortifying consciousness of their physical inferiority, have been provoked thereby to show that their lack of flesh and blood has been more than made up to them in brains. Many a Liliputian in body has proved himself to be a Brobdingnagian in intellect." Equally true is it that many a Liliputian of to-day grows into the Brobdingnagian of to-morrow by increasing the very same powers and possessions which were so small at the beginning.

. . .

MAN is constantly rising. It is natural and inevitable that the right-minded man who has any conception of his possibilities and of his place in the universe should feel both the upward impulse of his own nature and the resistless attraction of the greater things above him.

As long as there are "more worlds to conquer," a Cæsar, or an Alexander, or a Napoleon cannot rest in camp. As long as the realms of the air are unconquered, venturesome man cannot be content to remain on Mother Earth; he must "mount up on wings as eagles." As long as business power, and influence, and wealth beckon from the heights, ambitious man must rise to conquer.

Only the man who does not feel the inner impulse to rise, and who does not listen to the call, "Come up higher," which is constantly sounding above him, stays down in the valley of little things all his life and remains a pygmy till he dies. "The great are only great because we are on our knees. Let us rise up," said Prud'homme, long ago. We must never be satisfied with our attainments if we are to rise to greater ones, because the moment we reach the place of self-satisfaction we come to a halt and go no higher. There is no limit set for us which we do not set ourselves. Any good achievement requires earnest effort, and by the same pains which one achievement cost we may go on to others if we do not pitch our tents too soon.

. . .

THE earth and everything upon it have been brought under the dominion of man. The first command of the Creator in this respect has been obeyed. The sea has been unable to bar his progress. Now even the air is his domain. He has risen to almost unbelieveable heights in science, in business, in power. What next? The impulse to rise is only increased by the flights already made. Still the call is sounding, "Come up higher."

Before reaching the greatest heights, it is necessary to touch the lowest depths. There is a proper starting-place for every flight. Long ago the would-be aviators took their flying machines to the tops of mountains or high buildings for the start. Invariably they fell with a crash. Now the "bird men" rise from the ground and ascend thousands of feet into the sky. There are heights immeasurable to which man and woman may rise. There are achievements yet to be gained more glorious than anything in the past. The starting point is in the deep places of human need and woe. Many whose ears have heard the call are even now accomplishing wonders in service, and are constantly rising to higher planes of helpfulness. Perhaps man's eagerness to win new victories will more and more find its satisfaction in conquering disease, stamping out filth and sin, curing poverty, alleviating pain, soothing sorrow.

OUR GOLDEN HONEYMOON

HOW sweet the golden weddings are
At end of fifty years!
Our golden honeymoon, dear heart,
The lengthening pathway cheers.
Bright are the tints in the afterglow
As soft the shadows fall,
And many the joys that still shall come,
For the dear Lord cares for all.

Love still is sweet in this honeymoon,
More sweet than in years gone by;
We shun the words that would cause a pain,
Or bring a tear to the eye.
And we know the love in the other heart
Is tender, fond and true;
And joys are sweet in the afterglow,
Though days or years may be few.

—ELIZA ANN ESTES KENDRIE.

Among the Bheels of India

INDIA has numerous railways whereby the work of the Gospel is greatly helped. The Tapti Valley branch of the Bombay-Baroda Railway runs through Khandesh, where a great number of Bheels dwell, and it is beside one of the flag stations of this railway that the new school of Bhadbhunja was opened on the 18th of May, 1911. The people themselves pointed out a spot just behind an old grogshop frequented by the Bheels as suitable for the purpose, and the government having granted the material a schoolhouse was built there at a cost of about $75. Mr. Joshi, the native magistrate of Navapur, and two missionaries were present on the day of opening, and Mr. Joshi urged the Bheels to send their children to school. Thirty-five families enrolled each a boy. A magic lantern show, explaining the life of Christ, etc., and heartily enjoyed by the people, was given in the night. The Bheels belong to the wild tribes. Several mission bodies now carry on aggressive work to evangelize this people. They have been a problem to Indian governments, and at times wholesale destruction was thought to be the best way to solve it. Of recent years, however, the Bheels are treated well and induced to live a settled life as cultivators of the soil. Secular and primary education is altogether in its infancy and all engaged in this department unite in admitting the difficulties encountered. The school at Bhadbhunja is the first of a series planned by the Scandinavian Alliance. Support for ten school teachers is hoped for to carry out the project successfully.

A Preacher-Magician

AT THE blast of the cornet the passerby in New York turns to see a man waving a handkerchief, in which there appears, in a mysterious manner, a knot. This is followed by two or three other magical effects. By this time we are a part of a company of two or three hundred men, who crowd around to see the street magician, who proves to be a preacher of the Gospel. Rev. Frank B. Lane, working under the direction of the Evangelistic Committee of New York City, has chosen this unusual method of drawing his noon-day congregations. He uses the art of magic, paper tearing, and other objective illustrations to present the great truths of the Gospel of Jesus Christ. He gets and holds the attention to the end of the service. Mr. Lane divides his time between the public parks and the tents of the Evangelistic Committee. In the latter he conducts a special work for boys and girls every night from seven until eight o'clock. It is no uncommon sight, after the evening lesson is finished, to find him surrounded by a company of eager, happy children, clamoring for more of this message. "Through the eye-gate to the heart" is an open pathway of approach, not only for the child, but the adult as well. That this teacher of truth is following closely in the footsteps of the Master in "Hear ye then the present-day parable" accounts for the ready response to his earnest appeals.

OUR EDITORIAL FORUM

OTTO KOENIG, President GEO. H. SANDISON, Managing Editor THEODORE WATERS, Secretary

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is published weekly by "The Christian Herald," at the Bible House, Fourth Avenue, 8th and 9th Sts., New York City. The officers are: Otto Koenig, President and Treasurer, Bible House, N.Y.City; Geo. H. Sandison, Vice-President, Bible House, N.Y.City; Theodore Waters, Secretary, Bible House, N.Y.City.

Subscription Price, $1.50 a year, in advance.
Remittances should always be made in the safest manner available to the remitter. Register cash remittances.
Foreign Postage.—For each copy to be mailed outside the United States, Canada, and Mexico, add one dollar a year.

Change of Date.—It takes at least two weeks to change the date, after your subscription is renewed.
Expiration of Subscription.—The date on the wrapper indicates when your subscription ends.
Change of Address.—It requires three weeks' time to make the change. Give both old and new address.

Subscriptions may commence with any issue.
Letters should be addressed, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, New York.

Entered at Post Office, New York, as Second-class Matter
Entered as Second-class Matter at the Post Office Department, Ottawa

The Nation's Voice on Peace

WITHIN a year, one of those wonderful transformations which constitute the real miracles of modern life, has taken place in the minds of the people of this country. What that transformation means is told in the remarkable series of letters which appears in this issue of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. Here are men occupying the highest stations—statesmen, educators, admirals, legislators, and others—all uniting in the declaration that the wonderful thing has happened, and that not only our own land but the world is even now looking for the dawning of the era of universal peace, if indeed that era has not already begun!

Coming at a time when the whole country is discussing the Arbitration Treaties that have just been concluded with France and Great Britain, with a strong likelihood of similar treaties being shortly made with Germany and Japan, this presentation of enlightened public opinion on a great world-wide question is highly opportune. That THE CHRISTIAN HERALD should have been chosen as a medium for its publication was logical and natural, since its readers are more widely distributed than those of any other religious journal, and represent all shades and denominations of accepted Christian belief. These letters constitute a symposium which is unique and convincing, and should be universally read, reflecting as they do the soundest and most representative sentiment of the nation. Far above partisanship, their general tone is one of unrestrained approval of the course our government has followed in assuming the duty of leading the nations in the paths of peace.

This present generation and the next which shall follow it, will not accept the old view of war—that worst of evils which has so long filled the world with sorrow, suffering and injustice. Within the last few years we have enacted the role of peacemaker along our own borders and among the Latin republics. We have held out the hand of amity which France and England have grasped. We have made overtures to Germany and Japan, and both are even now considering them in the friendliest attitude. These powers once bound in mutual peace-pact and agreed to submit all their disputes to arbitration, who shall say where the peace movement may not next penetrate? There can be no step backward. The new treaties must be ratified. They belong to the history of progressive civilization and must stand. "Treaties have been made and broken before," some one will say. True; we know the sadness of it all; but history has also shown that in God's own good time there comes an end to every evil that afflicts his children, and who shall say that it may not be his will now to put an end to war? Let us pray that it may, and meanwhile let us work hopefully, bravely for it. It is alike the duty of the State, of the Church and of the individual to aid in bringing about international peace and friendship, and none should fail to do their part in this great effort to secure the world's future happiness.

Life Not a "Gamble"

ONE of the many recent biographies of the late John W. Gates, the picturesque millionaire speculator, represents him as formulating his philosophy in these words:

> Life is a gamble. Everything is a gamble. When the farmer plants his corn he is gambling. He bets that the weather conditions will enable him to raise a good crop. Sometimes he loses, sometimes he wins. Every man who goes into business gambles. Of course the element of judgment enters in, but the element of chance cannot be ruled out. Whenever a man starts out on a railroad journey, it's a gamble whether he ever reaches his destination. All life is a gamble.

That there are certain kinds of business which might truthfully be classed as " a gamble," is undeniable, but to apply such a term to life as a whole shows incapacity to look at things in the right perspective. If a reliable census could be made of all who make money by their wits, by trading on credulity, by bold though riskful tactics much of the success of which depends on what is called chance, it would be a pretty good-sized volume. But Mr. Gates did not refer to the mere vulgar accumulator—to the man whose mind is a machine geared for acquisition and working overtime. He was evidently a believer in chance and held it as a fetish. With all of his good qualities, he adopted a view of life which invested it with little of real meaning or purpose. Material success is frequently responsible for such wrong conclusions. To one who has given up all his energies and talents to the chase for wealth during many years, we can readily understand how it may seem to him like a gamble, a thing of chance, full of disappointments and startling surprises. Too often the spiritual eyes do not open to life's real purpose until too late. There are many who are so wedded to the world and so in love with what it has to offer, that they do not realize that real life means growth spiritual as well as material; that it means increasing attainment toward God and helpfulness toward our fellow-man. In order to get the best there is in life, we need far more than wealth; we need self-denial, sacrifice, suffering. To set it all down as a "gamble" is to misunderstand it wholly. He who goes deeper learns life's purpose and object and at last discovers that it is, in each individual case, a mission. All who look for the interpretation of the problem to Him who is the source of life and wisdom, find that life, far from being a gamble or a thing of chance, is rightly understood only as it enables us to do his will and to become like him. And this divine likeness comes to us as we follow him in faith and acknowledge his guiding hand in all our ways.

The Tramp Question

GERMANY has a word, wanderlust, or travel-hunger, which aptly describes a condition of mind that seems to be innate and which some anthropologists regard as an inheritance from our nomad forefathers. Every tendency of our civilization is to a fixed home and a fixed occupation, yet with every effort of church and school this wanderlust unfortunately persists. Mr. James Forbes, director of the National Association for the Prevention of Mendicancy, is authority for the statement that there are in the United States at this time two hundred and fifty thousand tramps or "hoboes." As a rule, the men composing this great army are able-bodied; many have been fairly well educated in our public schools, and are fully up to the average in mental endowments. We shall not attempt to follow Mr. Forbes in his estimate of the loss to the country of the wasted earning power of these men, nor in his calculations of loss suffered by the responsible members of society through their supplications and depredations. Undoubtedly, many of these tramps are honest men out seeking employment, and the pity of their case is that they too, in their honest search for work, may contract the wanderlust habit. With a knowledge gained largely through many years of experience with the Bowery Mission, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD never has and never will cast a stone at the unfortunate man who has lost his grip on home and, indeed, on all things that make life worth the living. We have seen the most unpromising of these cases develop, under proper influences, into the finest members of the working world. Before we condemn these men it behooves us to ask who is to blame. An examination will reveal defects in our home life, in the public training of our youth, and even in our laws, each of which must bear its share of the responsibility for the increase of human inefficiency leading to the present anomalous social conditions.

A Last Word on Maine

ON THE eve of the battle in the Pine Tree State, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD would speak a final word of cheer and encouragement to the rank and file of the Prohibition army. Theirs is a campaign which is in a very large sense a national one. Its influence will be felt in every State of the Union. Victory for Prohibition now would inspire the hosts of temperance everywhere. It is therefore of the highest importance that every one should be at his post when the battle opens. There should be no laggards. With every true son of Maine ready to cast his ballot for the honor and the welfare of the State, the white banner can be borne to certain triumph.

Maine, which sixty years ago said to the nation "Dirigo! I lead!" must not now surrender her proud and well won post of honor. Experience has vindicated the wisdom of her experiment; the slan and misrepresentations of the liquor forces ca change the unalterable facts. It is a tribute to moral and social virtues of Maine that she sh now be the central target of abuse for the ener of temperance. Prohibition was put into her stitution by a non-partisan vote. If taken ou the constitution now, the whole liquor questio the State will become a party plaything and citizens will have to face conditions that will found to be indescribably demoralizing and degr ing. It is not the thin edge, but the whole we which the liquor interests are now striving to d in. They want to shatter State-wide prohibi and are using specious argument and cunning vice to "coerce" even the temperance voters. I well for the men of Maine to remember that th is no escape from the lawless saloon through render or retreat. All experience and observat prove that it is the mother of criminals, the mu plier of offenses of every sort against the law, debaucher of legislatures, the maker of heavy b dens that tax and oppress every community wher has free sway. For every dollar secured throu the taxation of the liquor traffic or through lice fees, there is a ten-fold equivalent of sorrow shame, of broken homes, blighted hopes and deba manhood. All the arguments ever invented can wash that guilty traffic white nor endow it wit single redeeming virtue. The only way to cont it, or to render it impotent for evil, is to crush it of existence!

This is true of the liquor traffic everywhere. consider it a good rule," remarked an observa citizen of Portland, "to find out what the liq dealers really want and then go the other wa This advice stands good for the people of Ma to-day. They know that the enemy wants consti tional prohibition repealed and they should be every energy to defeat this by voting to retain p hibition in the constitution. Make no comprom with the enemy, but meet the assault with a resol "No!"

General Notes

—AT THREE O'CLOCK on the afternoon of August 22, the ex session of Congress adjourned. There was a general sigh of re for this release from what has been a very trying work during hot weather of July and August. There was none of the hila which so frequently in the past has marked the adjournment. T last meeting of the session transacted no important business. Pr ident Taft's veto of the cotton tariff revision bill was the only portant matter considered. The record of measures introdu during the session is 14,038, and 484 resolutions in the House, 3,296 bills, and 58 resolutions in the Senate. Only a small proport of these were passed.

—THE LAST DAYS of the extra session of Congress were mar by President Taft's veto of two bills which had engaged the tention of both the House and the Senate for considerable ti In his message to Congress, explaining his veto of the new w schedule bill, the President characterized it as political rather th scientific revision. The bill provided for a flat ad valorem d of 29 per cent. on all raw wool, and proportionate rates on woo manufactures. The President is convinced that a ratification this measure would be practically a repudiation of the tariff co mission for whose creation he worked so enthusiastically. In message on the cotton tariff revision bill, Mr. Taft characteriz it in much the same way. He asked that action on both th matters be postponed until the reports of the investigating comm sions become available.

Contents of this Number

Wednesday, September 6, 1911

	PAGE
The Dawn of the World's Peace (Portraits)	867 to 871, 884
The Heavenly Home. Sermon . . . . By Dwight L. Moody	872, 873
The Rising Generation. By Eugene Thwing	873
OUR EDITORIAL FORUM	874
THE BIBLE AND NEWSPAPER (Illustrated)	875
The Coming of the Mission Ship (Illustrated) By Chr. Schmitt	876
Womanhood in Foreign Lands (Illustrated) By Kate Upson Clark	877
Methodism's Fourth Ecumenical (Portraits)	878
Chats in My Veranda Nook (Illustrated) By Margaret E. Sangster	879
Courage to Say No	880, 881
Sunday School Lesson, by Dr. and Mrs. W. F. Crafts
Our Boys and Girls (Illustrated) By Miss Janet Porter	882
The Best Chair. By Anna Phillips See	883, 887, 888, 889
Our Mail-Bag	886
Christ in the Home. Christian Endeavor Topic	886
Spiritual Ignorance. Epworth League Topic	890

THE BIBLE AND NEWSPAPER

Conducted by FERDINAND C. IGLEHART, D.D.

England's Strike Ended

GREAT BRITAIN and the civilized world rejoice at the end of the fierce railroad strike in the United Kingdom. Industrial paralysis fell upon the cities and villages as the men left their work and the cars were idle at the depots and the boats at the docks. In some of the cities the lights went out, the water was shut off, the food supply was reduced and even exhausted, and there were panics and mobs nearly everywhere. In some places the clash between the strikers and their friends and the government troops resulted in bloodshed. The board of arbitration composed of representatives of both sides has come to an agreement, and the men have gone back to their work, the cars are run on schedule time, the boats are plying the waters as usual, and food and other supplies and the traveling public are moving along their accustomed channels. The British Government is to be congratulated upon the ability and tact with which it confronted the grave situation, and the workmen have made many friends by the wise manner in which they managed their part of the conflict. The strike illustrated the tremendous power of labor in the activity and happiness of society and the enormous influence that the common people of to-day have in the settlement of momentous questions. It emphasizes the important fact which must be taken into consideration in every dispute between workmen and employer, and that is, that capital and labor are two halves of one whole, each depending upon the other for its life and thrift, and each deserving of its proportion of responsibility, opportunity and reward. Human selfishness will always cause friction. The disposition to get the largest amount of work for the smallest pay on one side, and to claim the largest wages for the least amount of work on the other side is an instinct of our sinful humanity, which causes most of the conflict in the industrial world. As Christ's royal law of love is obeyed by both capital and labor, peace between employer and employee will prevail still more and more, and the gap between the conditions and the hearts of capital and labor will be more nearly closed. The settlement of labor and every other dispute in life can be effected by obedience to the Golden Rule.

Therefore all things whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them. (Matt. 7 : 12.)

Guarding London's Food Supply at Covent Garden Market During the Strike

Record Speed Round World

Andre Jaeger-Schmidt, a young French journalist, left New York for Paris, August 19, in the last lap of a journey around the world which he expects to complete in forty days. The globe-trotter is twenty-eight years old, with blue eyes, light hair and a light mustache. He wore a light brown suit, coarse brown shirt and a red necktie; he carried a bag, which was his only luggage. He told the reporters that he had had an uneventful trip, that he suffered delays by a storm in the Japan Sea, and by missing train connections. The previous record of the world-excursion was made in 1908 by Henry Frederick, who made the trip in fifty-four days, seven hours and twenty minutes. He was the first globe-girdler to take advantage of the Trans-Siberian Railway. Nellie Bly in 1889 made the trip all around the world in a little over seventy-two days, but at that time the Trans-Siberian Railway was not in existence. Mr. Lafitte started the new magazine Excelsior recently in Paris. He selected Mr. Jaeger-Schmidt, a member of the staff, to attempt the circuit of the globe in record-breaking time, and it looks as though the young man will complete his journey a day ahead of time. We are all travelers on the roadways of this planet. Some are running and some walking, some are laughing and some crying, some are climbing the steps of preferment and others passing through the lowlier vales of humility; but we are all on a journey. We shall go on this round earth a little distance and for a short time, and then we shall sail across a sea for another land whither we are bound, which Christ has prepared for his followers. The journey and the promised land are symbolized by the invitation and promise of Moses to Hobab.

And Moses said unto Hobab, Moses' father-in-law, We are journeying unto the place of which the Lord said, I will give it you: Come thou with us, and we will do thee good. (Num. 10 : 29.)

Anonymous Millions for Missions

Some unknown friend of foreign missions has just made a gift of $1,000,000 to the Endowment Fund of the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions in Boston. The name of the donor is not given, the only information being that "it is from a New York family which is affiliated with the church of another denomination than the controlling Board." The Board is under the authority of the Congregationalist denomination. The gift is a part of a $2,000,000 endowment which the Board has been trying for several years to raise. It is the largest amount the Congregational Mission Board has received since Mr. John D. Rockefeller gave $1,000,000 for its colleges in the Far East several years ago. We have often wondered why our multi-millionaires did not bestow a larger share of their benevolences on the foreign missionary cause. While we would not have a penny less of their money given to libraries, universities, hospitals and other great causes, we would suggest that God-fearing millionaires might create endowments of ten or twenty millions for the work of foreign missions, so powerful a factor in the best education and civilization of the world. Some very rich men are setting a good example in this respect. The late John S. Kennedy left $30,000,000 to the Christian Church and the institutions that are its legitimate offspring. It would not be a surprise to us if within a generation every aged needy minister of the Gospel would receive a pension from the Lord's money, and if the means of Christ's followers were poured out in sufficient amounts to send the Bible and a preacher to every person in the world. One of the prides and glories of our present time is the heroism of the men and women who have gone out into the foreign mission field, and the loyalty and generosity of the rich and poor in furnishing them with a support, in obedience to the command of the Master:

Go ye into all the world, and preach the Gospel to every creature. (Mark 16 : 15.)

Dangerous Moving Picture Shows

There are moving picture shows which are instructive and elevating, there are others that are corrupt and brutalizing in their nature. So many of this dangerous class are exhibited that the laws have been appealed to to prevent some and protect children especially against others. The Chief of Police of Berlin has issued an order that children under fourteen are forbidden from visiting moving picture shows after 9 P.M., even when accompanied by adults. The theatre managers undertook through the courts to prevent the execution of this order. The provincial authorities have followed the step taken by the Chief of Police. Some of the moving picture shows of America are a great menace to public morals, especially those of the young. One of the judges of New York the other day declared that he would visit the jail penalty upon those who permitted children under thirteen unaccompanied by parents to attend the public moving picture shows. Mr. Pinkerton, the detective chief, said in an interview the other day that he could trace very many of the murders and other crimes committed by youths to the demoralizing scenes of the baser moving picture shows. There is here emphasized the tremendous fact that we become like that which we look upon. If the pictures and books and people and scenes we look upon are bad, we become bad; and if good, we become good. If we become like Satan by looking at moral evil, by the same law we become like God in looking at Christ. The apostle refers to this great law when he says:

We all with open face beholding as in a glass the glory of the Lord, are changed into the same image from glory to glory, even as by the Spirit of the Lord. (II. Cor. 3 : 18.)

Preachers Stopped Bull Fight

A Sunday bull fight had been arranged and advertised at Helena, Ark. The good people protested against such brutality and such a desecration of the Lord's day. Those planning the fight paid no attention to the protests that were made. The Helena Ministers' Association marched in a body to the West End Park and threatened to ask for the militia to enforce the laws of Arkansas against such an event, so the managers of the show abandoned the contest and gave the spectators back their money. The ministers of Helena were men of moral courage and deserved the commendation and congratulation of the churches and of the good citizens who are not church members who love law and order and they have set a splendid example to the ministers of the country, so many of whom now recognize that they are to be patient, humble preachers of the Gospel not only, but brave soldiers of the Cross, ready to confront and confound the powerful and brazen champions of moral evil to be found everywhere. The militant spirit of the Helena preachers is in obedience to the command:

Fight the good fight of faith. (I. Tim. 6 : 12.)

Swordfish Kills Whale

It is claimed that Captain Fraser of the Bermudian was eye-witness to a desperate fight between a baby sperm whale on the one side and a monster shark and swordfish on the other. On his arrival in New York the Captain is reported to have given the newspapers a description of the struggle. The fight took place 445 miles southeast of Sandy Hook. The thresher, a fish of the shark species, fifteen feet long, lifted himself out of the water and threw himself down hard on the whale, lacerating its sides with his tail. A swordfish, which is usually the companion of the thresher in attacking big game, dived under the whale and thrust his weapon into its stomach. The whale tried desperately to get away, but it bled and spouted from the wounds, and jumped out of the water in its agony and attempt to escape, and the swordfish kept up its steady stabs until in a few moments the whale turned over dead. It is not likely that these murderers of the deep killed the whale because they were out of food and were in quest of flesh or blubber, but it illustrates that hatred which exists in animalism all the way from the bottom to the top and is the basis of the murders on the battlefield and in the ordinary paths of life. This hatred, which is the parent of murder, individual and general, is rebuked in the Scriptures. There are some Christian people who are otherwise exemplary who cherish hatreds and revenges and are charitable enough with themselves to believe that they are only expressions of righteous indignation against wrong, when in reality they are the vice that draws down such fearful prophecies and provokes the divine displeasure.

Whosoever hateth his brother is a murderer. (I. John 3 : 15.)

The Coming of the Mission Ship

Capt. Jackson of S.S. "Harmony"

The Mission Ship Casts Anchor at Nain

An Eskimo Leaving for Home

THE Moravian Mission Society owns a ship called the Harmony. It is but a small vessel of only 400 tons, yet it has been enabled for many years past to furnish the missionaries and Eskimos on the Labrador coast with necessities both for body and soul. It is a ship with a history, and if all were known, the fact would stand out bright and clear that a number of earnest Christian friends in all parts of the world are the cause that this particular craft has been permitted for so many years to cross the Atlantic, to face the dangers of pack ice and icebergs, to navigate an uncharted coast with innumerable shoals and reefs, to encounter the gales and snowstorms in this arctic current successfully and without loss of life or vessel for more than one hundred years.

It is not of the ship but of her arrival on the coast of Labrador that I wish to tell you. This year the Harmony left the London docks on the 30th of June. While about two hundred miles from the coast she encountered heavy pack ice. A dense fog surrounded the ship, and during the night we were kept awake as the vessel frequently bumped against the pans, which made her timbers quiver from stem to stern. Happily the ice was not solid and the Harmony was able to force through, but we were glad when the fog lifted and showed us a clear passage ahead.

How beautiful the icebergs looked! But in spite of this our captain gave them a wide berth, as they are dangerous neighbors, especially in a dense fog. One night, one of these bergs loomed up high near the ship, and a collision was only avoided because the noise of the waters washing its sides could be heard long before the ice itself became visible.

After a journey of three weeks she reached Nain, safe and sound. The arrival of the mission vessel in the harbor is always an occasion of great rejoicing. The Eskimos run to the beach and shoot off their guns to salute the ship, and the whole settlement commemorates its indebtedness to Almighty God in a special and unique way. After the anchor is cast the missionaries and Eskimos collect at the end of the wharf near to the ship, and sing with heart and voice a verse in Eskimo similar to our old Doxology: "Praise God, from whom all blessings flow!"

The boats are now gotten ready and every one goes off to visit the ship. The missionaries are anxious to receive the letters from their friends and relatives, but above all they wish to hear from their children. Eight months of arctic winter have elapsed since they heard from them last, and they wonder what news the ship may bring them. Now they stand on the deck of the dear old vessel, shaking hands with the captain; but soon all retreat to the little cabin on deck to open the most important letters. The anxiety of the whole winter centres in the one question: "Are my children well?" and while good news is received we see tears of thankfulness trickling down the cheeks of these parents. An outsider might say: "Why this sentiment and emotion?" "Do not our sailors leave their home for months and think little of it?" Quite so, and we sympathize with all who must leave their loved ones for so long a time. But this little missionband on the lonely icebound coast of Labrador is worse off than any sailor. Their children leave for Europe at the age of eight, and the parents probably do not see them again before they have grown into manhood or womanhood. The furlough of a missionary comes only once in ten or fifteen years, and all he receives from his children while in the field is this annual letter in midsummer.

Eskimo Women at Nain

Just think! If you are a parent, would you like to part with your child for ten long years and only hear from him once every summer? There is no doubt that this is the sacrifice that missionaries in various parts of the world are called upon to render.

The arrival of the mission ship is a red-letter day. The news from one source and another of the past nine months can hardly be pressed into one or two hours, and the recipients often lie awake the first night after the arrival of the ship, full of excitement, thinking of all that has occurred and not finding a wink of sleep.

And the Eskimo, notwithstanding his phlegmatic temperament, joins in most heartily, for to him also the arrival of the ship means a new supply of many good things. Soon he marches off to the store to replenish his exhausted stock of necessaries. A laughable picture he presents after he has made his purchases, for on looking closer we find he has used his boots for molasses, his cap for tea, his outer garments for flour and hard tack; but his face shows every satisfaction, as it wears a broad smile, and soon he has deposited his treasures in his kayak and is off to his home on an outside island.

It has given me much pleasure to acknowledge your kind and generous gift of $207 as mentioned in detail in a separate letter.

Nain, Labrador. CHR. SCHMITT.

AMONG THE WORKERS AT HOME AND ABROAD

—EVANGELISTS HART AND MAGANN of Fairbury, Ill., recently closed a Union Tabernacle meeting at Elkins, W. Va. All of the churches in the city united and built a large tabernacle which was well filled each night. There were over two hundred who accepted Christ during the closing day of the services.

—A NATIVE CHRISTIAN worker in Siam would greatly appreciate a copy of Matthew Henry's Commentary on the Bible, or any of F. B. Meyer's or Spurgeon's writings. Any reader of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD having one of these books to spare may write to Miss Stella Hartford, Arcola, Ill., for information.

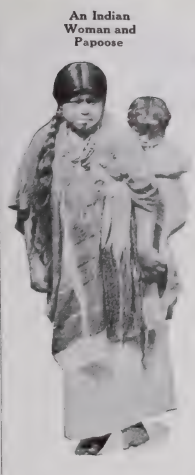
—REV. LOUIS ALBERT BANKS has entered the evangelistic field and is doing excellent work in Ohio and other Western States. Dr. Banks is an eloquent speaker, and a man of deep spirituality, and his ministry both in the pulpit and elsewhere has been greatly blessed in past years. His home address is 499 North Sandusky Street, Delaware, O.

—JULIUS ROSENWALD, a wealthy Hebrew of Chicago, recently gave $25,000 toward the construction of a Y. M. C. A. building for colored men. He has also given $50,000 to aid in building a hotel for men to be conducted under Christian auspices. He lately wrote, "I do not believe there is a better work done anywhere in the world than the work done by the Y. M. C. A."

—THE DISTINGUISHED scientist, Sir Oliver Lodge, writing in Hibbert's Journal on a lofty theme, says: "No matter how complex and vast the reality must be, the Christian conception of God is humanly simple. It appeals to the man in the street; it appeals to the unlettered and the ignorant; it appeals to babes." It is to be noted that a majority of the more serious scientists of our day are disposed to the orthodox view of religion and have little in common with the higher critics.

—THE MOUNT HERMON Federate School of Missions in the Santa Cruz Mountains, California, recently dedicated its new mission building, which cost $4,700. Rev. H. W. Gilchrist made a historical address at the dedication. Mrs. D. B. Wells, of Chicago, is teacher in the study classes. Among the missionaries present were Mrs. L. E. Troyer (Baptist); Miss C. J. Pierson, Methodist deaconess; Rev. Hetty Douglas, Congregational minister at Little Shasta, Calif.; Rev. Hugh Taylor, Presbyterian; Mr. and Mrs. Wildman Murphy, Presbyterian, and Miss Florence Miller, field secretary of the Christian Women's Board of Missions in the United States.

WOMANHOOD IN FOREIGN LANDS



The Grecian Mother Carries Cradle and All

How the Chinese Mother Carries Her Son

An Indian Woman and Papoose

His Excellency the Baby Rides in Japan

The Zulu Woman's Unique Way of Carrying a Baby

HINA is the paradise of the mother-in-law. A Chinese mother cannot visit her own married daughter (and she has no other kind after childhood) without the permission of the mother-in-law. The daughter plays a slavish part in her husband's home, and finds her chief moral support in the thought of the retribution which she will sometime wreak upon the heads of her own daughters-in-law. This is one of the important reasons why sons are so much more desired than daughters by the mothers of China.

Jacob Speicher gives touching accounts of the peasant woman and the peasant home of South China. There is little of hope or joy to be found there. We can understand how famine and disease are so common among them when we read that the usual daily wage of a man is but ten or fifteen cents for the support of a whole family.

The French peasant is cleaner than that of most other countries, and the thrift of the typical Frenchwoman is proverbial. It is largely due to her knack of saving that France has had such a wonderful financial record. No nation can long keep it in debt. Its indemnities are quickly paid. It can afford to buy anything it wishes, and the chief element in this "forehandedness" is the faculty for judicious spending, which marks the French housemother. She is a careful mother, but the decline of the population in France indicates that the maternal instinct is not so strong there as in most other countries. The French are the most artistic and polished among the nations of Europe, and their women are said to be the most fascinating and attractive in the world.

The pagan woman of Africa is said to be, on the whole, the most wretched among all on the sad roll of heathen womanhood. "Her lot," says Mrs. Singer of Rhodesia, "is unwritable and unspeakable," but the Zulu woman is probably the least degraded of them all. Surely in our picture she sparkles with happiness, and she seems to have a sense of the security of the baby on her head, which is incomprehensible to the rest of us. One encouraging feature for the African woman is that in Blantyre a man was counted worth only two yards of cloth, while a woman was worth six. The Gospel is banishing slavery now from that land, as well as from others. Assyria is largely Mohammedan, but the Syrian mother loves her child as truly as the Christian loves hers. Happiness in the domestic relations is not common there, and a woman's husband may divorce her at will. There is no knowing how soon this poor woman may be parted from her baby, but in the meantime she must know something of the joy of motherhood. The work of Fidelia Fiske was a source of most of the spiritual uplift which has come to her sex in that benighted land.

The sweetness, gentleness and cleanliness of the Japanese woman are all revealed in this tiny sketch. Long ages of training in courtesy have made good manners a habit with her. The little child whom she carries so easily on her back will grow up to be "soft-spoken," deferential, considerate. His mind will be bright. His code of morals will not be like ours, but we live so inadequately up to ours, and he may be so much better than his, that perhaps we may not be so far apart as might appear, in such matters.

Mrs. Lo, the poor Indian, looks somewhat neater in our picture than most travelers describe her. Contrary to the general belief, the American Indians are increasing in numbers. As they are also adjusting themselves constantly more and more nearly to the standards of civilization and intermarrying with the white settlers, they will soon become, it is predicted, an integral part of our population, industrious, clean and eager for education. The papoose gazing at us in such pretty shyness over his mother's shoulder, will probably distance her by many generations in culture.

If this beautiful Arabian baby is a girl (which, from the proud and affectionate way in which it is held, we fear it is not) she may arrive at a womanhood without a veil. This means that she can breathe freely, and with that power may come in more of that blessed freedom, "not used as a cloak of maliciousness, but as the servants of God," which womanhood enjoys under the dispensation of Christianity. The Arabian woman is now laboring in the dense darkness of selfish and sensual Islamism, under which women are merely the toys or slaves of men.

A Mother and Child from Syria

An Arabian Woman and Her Child

It is difficult to recognize in this Greek peasant a descendant of the most highly civilized people that the world had ever seen before the advent of our Lord. The traveler through what were once Achaia and Macedonia sees not only the ruins of once matchless temples and statues, but the mere remains, as it were, of the godlike race which built them. The modern inns of the Greeks are generally foul and ill-served; their schools poor or altogether lacking; but they are said to bear themselves proudly, as behooves the sons of such ancestors. Art and literature no longer flourish in the land of Praxiteles and Homer, and the problem set before the Danish king of Greece and his English queen, is indeed a hard one; but they are said to be meeting it bravely. The long, straight features of this Grecian mother suggest the classic type. Her child, under the reviving force of the new order in Greece, may inherit not only the physical likeness of his great ancestors, but also something of their spirit.

If the women in the backward countries can only be Christianized, the establishment of the good home there will be virtually secured; and in the good home lies ever the hope of the race.

KATE UPSON CLARK.

Methodism's Fourth Ecumenica

Bishop Edwin H. Hughes
San Francisco, Calif.

Bishop Joseph C. Hartzell
Funchal, Madeira Islands

Mrs. Jane Bancroft Robinson
President Woman's Home Miss. Soc'y

Bishop Earl Cranston
Washington, D. C.

Rev. H. K. Carroll, D.D.
Sec'y Eastern Section Exec. Com.

THE Ecumenical Methodist Conference—the great timekeeper of Methodist progress the wide world around—which meets in Toronto, Canada, October 4 to 17, records a remarkable growth in Christian evangelical work all over the earth. It is just ten years since the previous gathering in London in 1901. Before that, there were two Ecumenical Methodist Conferences—in Washington, D. C., in 1891, and in London in 1881—when the workers of world-wide Methodism first met for mutual exchange of thought and methods and for the stimulating review of the advance of Christ's kingdom in all lands.

The decade just closed has been a wonderfully fruitful one. During this period the important Methodist Church of Japan has been formed; the mission in France begun; the North Andes and the Austro-Hungary Mission Conferences have been organized; the North Africa Mission has been established, etc. In addition, the development of the work has increased in Italy (which has doubled, there now being twenty-four churches as compared with twelve in 1900); in the Czar's dominions, Russia and Finland (where there are now over 7,000 evangelical members affiliated with the Methodist enterprises); in the Scandinavian peninsula; in North and South Germany, Switzerland, Bulgaria, the Philippines, India, Malaysia, China, Mexico, South America, and notably in Korea.

The decade has also been marked by the wonderful expansion of the Laymen's Missionary Movement. During the recent national campaign of the Movement under Chairman J. Edgar Leaycraft, Colonel Elijah Halford and Secretary S. Earl Taylor, seventy-five conventions were held in all parts of the United States.

Other new features of the M. E. Church work during the decade are the "Commission on Evangelism" (which has now over 900 chapters in every conference of the United States) and the "Methodist Federation for Social Service."

Over a million members around the globe is the reported gain of the Methodist Church during the decade, the grand total for all countries and for all the branches of the denomination throughout the globe being 18,000,000, and over 6,500,000 in the United States.

Bishop Wilson T. Hogue
Easton, Ill.

Bishop W. A. Candler
Atlanta, Ga.

Col. E. W. Halford of the Laymen's Miss'y Movement

The Ecumenical Conference is an inclusive body, embracing the entire denominational family of Methodists, and including the four groups, which, though not Methodist in origin and history, are similar in doctrine, polity and practice—the United Evangelical Church, the Evangelical Association, and the two bodies of the United Brethren in Christ. The assembly brings together five hundred ministerial delegates and hundreds of representative laymen and laywomen from all the Methodist branches in Great Britain, Ireland and Austr and all in the United States and Canada, and cluding the new M. E. Church of Japan, whi American in origin. A wide variety of topi listed on the ten days' programme. The busi sessions will be held in the Metropolitan Ch Toronto, and mass meetings in Massey Hall. An the noted speakers and delegates are the Right Walter Runciman, a member of the British Cab whose topic is "International Responsibilities"; Arthur Henderson, M.P., of London, a British l leader, who, with ex- President Fairbanks, cusses the labor ques

For the first time ir twenty years' history the Ecumenical Meth Conference, a numbe representative Meth laywomen will be gates and take p Among them are Jane Bancroft Robi Ph.D., of Detroit, the eran Christian educ and pioneer of the coness movement in Methodist Church, president of the Wom Home Missionary Soc and Mrs. W. F. McDo of Chicago, head of Woman's Foreign sionary Work.

The work of the Epworth League, which has developed along evangelistic lines, will be prese by its leader, Bishop Quayle, of Oklahoma. 2,000 senior chapters have been added during past four years, and a forward movement ha gun in foreign fields. The League, which has a 30,000 enrolled, has made special progress in mark, where there are 3,000 members; in Germ where there are 5,600 members; in Italy, about members; in Norway, 4,000 members; in Swi land, 4,000; in Sweden, 6,000, in addition to membership in this country. J. A.

The World's Most Famous Picture Stolen

DISPATCHES from Paris report that, incredible and impossible as it may seem, it is a fact that Leonardo da Vinci's masterpiece, the "Mona Lisa," was stolen on August 21 from the Louvre, where it had been exhibited in the famous Salon Carré for the last five years. A great crowd collected in the neighborhood of the museum, where, however, no information was given to the public. The museum had been closed, said the policemen at the main entrance, because of the bursting of a water pipe.

M. Bénédite, assistant curator of the Louvre, received a correspondent in his office immediately after the Chief Inspector of Police and sixty detectives, who had been searching every nook and corner of the many miles of exhibition rooms and corridors, had left the premises without having found the precious picture.

"'La Gioconda' is gone. That is all I can say," said M. Bénédite. "So far we have not the slightest clue as to the perpetrator of the crime. The picture was last seen in its usual place yesterday morning at 7 o'clock, when two of the guardians stopped before it and exchanged remarks about the enigmatic smile of 'La Gioconda,' which for centuries has inspired so many eulogies. Yesterday being cleaning day, the museum was closed to the public, and no one noticed the absence of the picture. This morning the guardian of the Salon Carré noticed its disappearance, but attributed it to the negligence of the official photographer, who often took it up to his own studio and returned it the next morning before the gates were open to the public. Toward midday, however, the man became uneasy and informed the Superintendent, who rushed to my office and told me nobody knew what had become of the picture."

Feeling about the affair is intense in Paris. An extraordinary number of absurd theories are advanced, while there is general criticism of the Louvre authorities, who have proved unable to guard what is considered the most precious work of art in the world.

"La Gioconda," also called "Mona Lisa," is a portrait of Madonna Lisa del Gioconda of Florence, third wife of Francesco del Gioconda. It was painted in the course of Leonardo's second Florentine period, 1503-6. The artist spent almost four years on the work, and even then pronounced it unfinished. Soon after the picture was painted it was purchased by King Francis I. of France, who was an ardent admirer of Leonardo's work, and afterward appointed him his Court painter. Leonardo died in France in 1519.

That "La Gioconda" is one of the first half dozen pictures in the world is a commonplace; that it is the finest picture in existence has been the opinion of a number of those best competent to judge. It is said that $5,000,000 was once offered to the Fr Government for the picture. This may not be though the story has frequently been repeated it serves as a criterion of the value that is se this wonderful masterpiece.

According to legend, the painter kept the wor ful smile hovering round the mouth of Mad Lisa while he was at work on the picture by ha beautiful music continually played in the stud

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD distributed a great r copies of the picture, "Mona Lisa," among friends during last year's subscription period, received many comments of approval on the derfully artistic character of the portrait.

Now, it may be that some of our readers di avail themselves of a chance to possess a cop "Mona Lisa." We have still a limited numb copies of this picture in stock, ready for fram and in order that all of our friends may hav equal chance to possess a copy we make the fo ing offer:

To any reader of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD will send us two of the coupons which appear last week's (August 30) issue, each proj signed by a new subscriber, and each accompa by twenty-five cents (four months' subscriptio half price) we will send as a reward a copy of famous picture, "Mona Lisa," done in sepia ready for framing.

CHATS IN MY VERANDA NOOK

Women in Council

By MARGARET E. SANGSTER

SOME weeks ago an interesting problem was presented for discussion by our thoughtful Women in Council. The following letter restates the problem, and several phases of opinion offered are published this week. The views of sensible women on decisions that touch the home from any point are worth reading and thinking about. What we want when we, who live at widely separated distances, meet and try to help one another is that each should say briefly and directly just what she would say if we were sitting on the veranda face to face exchanging our views.

"What Shall She Do?"

"You ask us to send brief replies to the question 'What Shall She Do?' Possibly this woman of forty-three with a moderate fortune has never considered the years of future loneliness in store for her as a single woman. Her hesitation to accept a widower of suitable age on the ground that he has saved nothing is, of all things, the most unreasonable. Of course she has never stopped to consider the expense of so large a family. Household expenses are not light, and doctors' and undertakers' bills, as a rule, are enormous. If this woman could see in round numbers the amount earned and expended upon this family she would undoubtedly open her eyes wide with astonishment. The man is a hero and deserves praise, not blame. The love and companionship of a Christian gentleman, with the average amount of common sense and business ability, more than offsets a very moderate fortune. My reply to her is this: Name the happy day at once, and feel assured that you are getting the best of the bargain. K. C."

"Let Her Marry Him"

Here is a man's contribution on the subject: "Let her marry him by all means, as she likes him. She has probably enough for both. She can keep her own pocketbook, and if he is a Christian man he will be satisfied with a good home and kind treatment. From a man who has raised five children and has twelve grandchildren."

Yet would it not be a trifle humiliating for a man to let his wife have the exclusive use of the pocketbook? Of course it would be her own, which would make a difference, but I have never found women the happier because husbands obliged them to ask for money, and were the shoe on the other foot it would certainly pinch. Would it not be better for the man to keep in harness and settle down to hard work for the support of his wife quite as if she had not an individual bank account?

"Love Should Be Enough"

"In the case of the spinster and the widower, if they love one another there should be no difficulty. He has endured an awful loneliness and there is a great void in his life. If her love goes out to him and his to her so that this void is filled, other considerations should not stand in the way. S. R."

A Voice from Over the Sea

An English friend steps in, makes a bow and contributes the following: "Neither age nor money matter. Does this woman love this man? Unless she can say and feel that compared with him all other men are as shadows she has no right to become his wife. Does her heart throb more quickly when he comes? Is life divinely sweet when she is with him? Is her favorite color his? Does he worship the ground she walks on? Does she ask God every day to bless him? Love is everything. Without it these two people should dismiss the idea of marriage. JOHN."

ON GOOD TERMS

Old Don and young Donald are very good friends.
The horse will be happy to carry the boy.
He feeds from the basket the housekeeper sends,
And to share its provision gives Donald great joy.

"Why Be Encumbered?"

"The lady in question is still fancy-free, and I see no evidence that she is in love. Her suitor is of middle-age, a widower who has only a moderate salary and has lost five children. It looks to me as if he cannot have had much vitality or good health, as his children have been sickly and died. Why should she, being independent, encumber herself with the care of an invalid, whose chances of earning money will diminish as he grows older? She might better remain single and in order to have an object in life adopt a healthy orphan boy and bring him up to a useful manhood. "COMMON SENSE."

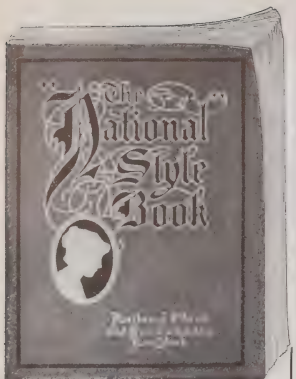
This correspondent is not to be blinded by sentiment, but surely she goes too far in her conclusion that the children who died were necessarily victims of inherited weakness. An epidemic may have swept through the family. Accident may have caused a fatal termination in one or another child. There are vacant chairs in homes and empty cribs where parents are healthy and survive to a good old age.

Another Bit of Counsel

"Why should a woman be afraid to continue a spinster? Why should she bother herself with the constant companionship of a husband simply that she may write 'Mrs. John Blank' on a visiting card? If she is in love, of course, the balance may tip the scale. She could easily buy or rent a house and carry on some agreeable business. Industrious and honest men are not too plenty in this world. E. H. S."

This is a little pessimistic, is it not? There are just as many pure honest and industrious men in the world now as there ever were in the past, and a woman can do no better than to give her heart to one of them. Of course, if she have no heart to give she is far better off in single blessedness.

. . .



For the Next Meeting

ANOTHER problem is suggested for our next meeting: Mr. and Mrs. Edward Bean are living in a suburb where most of their neighbors are well to do. The Beans have started their lives as husband and wife on a very small capital of income, but they have health, energy and culture. Mrs. Bean is asked by a friend to accept a position in the wholesale house of which he is the head. Before her marriage she was in business and was in receipt of a liberal salary as a confidential secretary. If she accepts the proposition held out to her she will earn nearly as much money as her husband does. They will go to town together daily and return about the same time at night. She must employ hired help in the home, and it goes without saying that the coming of a child in the circumstances would prove an unwelcome embarrassment. Shall she be a bread-winner or shall her husband be the sole support of the family while she does what she best can with the amount that he earns? This problem is submitted to Women in Council and also to men who read this page and are kind enough to tell us what they think.

. . .

When Johnny Goes to School

THERE have been several important eras in Johnny's life, although it as yet has covered only six years. There was the day when he cut his first tooth. His proud parents felt that they had ascended in the social scale when they felt the sharpness of that first white toothlet and told their friends how fast the baby was getting on. After a while Johnny learned to walk and then to talk. Or the talking preceded the walking or both seemed to come on together with such amazing rapidity that from being as a little bundle of rudiments Johnny suddenly became a human entity. The day dawned when Johnny's mother, grieving at the sacrifice, cut off his golden curls, while his father, exulting, beheld in the little chap the future man. Most marked and most dreaded by everyone except Johnny is the day on which he first goes to school. That day removes him definitely from the exclusive jurisdiction of the home. It sends him out into the big bustling world. He is under the care of Teacher, and she, while not so sweet or so wonderful as Mother, is still very wonderful and very lovely. If she is pretty Johnny adores her. If she is plain he does not find it out, but other things being equal the teacher who is pretty is more popular with the small boys than she who lacks comeliness. When Johnny goes to school his mother and father should make up their minds to help him to what the school pledges to the pupil. They should praise the school, sympathize with the teacher and see that the little fellow is always on time and in his place.

Better Clothes More Stylish Clothes And Money Saved

You may have the pleasure of being better dressed and save money. You may have more stylish, better fitting, more serviceable clothes—if you write for this, your free copy of the "NATIONAL" Style Book. The proof is that over one million women buy their apparel from this Style Book, finding there greater satisfaction in every kind of apparel than they can secure elsewhere.

Just write for the copy of the "NATIONAL" Style Book we have reserved for you, and see for yourself the new styles and money-saving it offers.

The "NATIONAL" Style Book is Reserved for You

We know from over 23 years' experience in pleasing over a half million women that we can please you.

We know "NATIONAL" garments will fit you better, will be more becoming and will save you money. And, therefore, to enable you to investigate, we have reserved for you one "NATIONAL" Style Book and are waiting to send it to you free—if you merely send us your name and address.

It costs you nothing to investigate. It means much to you. It means that you may select all your apparel from the largest Ladies' Outfitting Establishment in the whole world, that you may have in your own home, a choice of all the new styles and yet actually save money on every garment you buy.

To prove this, just write for the "NATIONAL" Style Book we have reserved for you—see the new styles and judge for yourself the saving.

YOUR STYLE BOOK SHOWS:

Waists,	98 cents to $10	Petticoats,	98c to $6.98
Skirts,	$3.98 to $15	Furs,	$2.25 to $42.50
Dresses,	$10 to $30	Ladies' Coats,	$10 to $50
Hats,	$2.98 to $15	Misses' Suits,	$10 to $20

NATIONAL Tailored Suits, $15 TO $40 Made to Measure

Each Made-to-Measure Suit is actually cut and made to order and each is guaranteed to fit perfectly, or we will refund your money. In writing for your Style Book, be sure to ask for samples of materials for "NATIONAL" Tailored Suits and state the colors you prefer. Samples are sent gladly, but only when asked for, and they are well worth asking for.

The "NATIONAL" Policy

We prepay postage and express charges on all our garments to any part of the world. You may return at our expense any "NATIONAL" garment not satisfactory to you, and we will refund your money.

NATIONAL CLOAK & SUIT CO.,
218 West 24th Street, New York

COURAGE TO SAY NO*

Sunday School Lesson by Dr. and Mrs. Wilbur F. Crafts

A GOLDEN image was made by order of King Nebuchadnezzar, and set up in the plain of Dura. Its dimensions were ninety feet in height and nine feet thick—the proportions of a pillar, or obelisk, which might be compared in height with many church steeples which we are accustomed to see. But the image at Dura was a monster in its day, and has been a puzzle ever since, for how could it have been possible to make a construction of its size of gold? In recent excavations at San (Tanis Zoan) a colossal statue of Rameses II. has been disinterred, which, including the pedestal, is one hundred and fifteen feet high; but it is of stone. The idea has been advanced that Nebuchadnezzar saw that statue of Rameses at the time of his Egyptian victories, and that it was the suggestion to him of the image which he afterward made. It is quite generally conceded that the image at Dura was an obelisk surmounted by the eagle-headed national divinity, representing the Babylonian kingdom as a great world power.

Another theory is that the image was suggested to King Nebuchadnezzar by the dream he had of the great image whose head was of fine gold, his breast and his arms of silver, his belly and his thighs of brass, his legs of iron, his feet, part of iron and part of clay (Dan. 2: 32, 33). When Daniel by the power of God interpreted the meaning of the dream, he said to King Nebuchadnezzar, "Thou art this head of gold." If this saying prompted Nebuchadnezzar to put up the image, he strangely forgot the sequel, for Daniel told him about the stone which came out of the mountain and smote the image, and crushed it into pieces until it became like chaff.

The amazing statement that the whole image set up by Nebuchadnezzar was of gold is not to be doubted when we consider that it was probably a wooden image gilded, or plated with gold. It was the custom then to speak of objects as "golden" thus treated.

Those present at the dedication formed a large company of the great men, such as rulers of provinces, generals of the army, judges, treasurers, etc.—in fact, all the great ones from Chaldea to Egypt, a truly national gathering representing the whole Babylonian kingdom. It has been said that Nebuchadnezzar would take any angel and yoke him to his chariot if he wanted to go in a certain direction; here he takes the angel of music (the harp, the psaltery, the dulcimer, the flute, etc.). If he had set up the image which we have gazed upon, that would have been bad enough, if he meant it to be an idol, and to elicit the service of adoration; but Nebuchadnezzar proceeds further, and makes music an ally of his evil work. A herald cried aloud, "At what time ye hear the sound of the cornet, flute, harp, sackbut, psaltery, dulcimer, and all kinds of music, ye fall down and worship the golden image that Nebuchadnezzar the king hath set up." And when the music sounded forth they all fell down and worshiped it. No, not all; three young men did not. There would have been four if Daniel had been there. Probably for some duty he was absent. The Chaldeans were quick to detect Shadrach, Meshach and Abednego, three of the Jewish captives—the same noble ones who had taken the brave stand for abstinence in the king's school. At once their refusal was reported to the king. His anger was hot, and forthwith he ordered them into his presence, and he threatened if they did not bow down and worship the image he would order them to be thrown into the fiery furnace. But they were not to be intimidated, and they replied: "Our God whom we serve is able to deliver us out of the burning fiery furnace. But if not, be it known unto thee, O king, that we will not serve thy gods, nor worship the golden image which thou hast set up." Let us finish the story by reading it from the Bible—Dan. 3: 19-28.

They Are Slaves Who Will Not Choose

Did Shadrach, Meshach and Abednego take the stand they did because they had no temptation to do otherwise? Let us set it down as a fact that it always costs a follower of God something to be true; right action comes out of determination to do the right thing, rather than because it is natural or easy to do it. Undoubtedly the tempter suggested to those three young men, Shadrach, Meshach and Abednego, that when they were in Babylon they should do as the Babylonians do; that it was a matter of foolish pride to set themselves up to be better than others; that it was perilous to them as captives in a strange land to defy the king; that it was ungrateful in them not to meet the wishes of a king who had been generous in his treatment of them, particularly of their religious scruples about food; that they would probably be obliged to relinquish their official appointments; that they would thus lose the opportunity to be of assistance to their fellow captives who were only hewers of wood and drawers of water—slaves. Just a moment of bowing down, with a mental reservation that it does not mean anything, simply a concession.

But they were true followers of God, and they did not yield. So through long centuries they have been, and will continue to be, examples to make other young men strong to do the right.

There was a time in Scotland when some of her noblest witnesses for Christ were young men. Three young martyrs (one only seventeen years of age) wrote thus to their friends: "Our time is short; we have little to spare, having got our sentence at one o'clock, and we are to die at five this afternoon. Good news! Christ is no worse than he promised. Blessed be he that we were born to witness for him! Be valiant for God. Him that overcometh, he will make a pillar in his temple."

To Stand Firm the Duty of the Hour

The celebrated John Randolph in one of his letters to a young friend said: "I know nothing I am so anxious you should acquire as the faculty of saying no. You must expect unreasonable requests to be referred to you every day of your life, and must endeavor to deny with as much facility and kindness as you acquiesce."

The test will not come to us in the same way it came to Shadrach, Meshach and Abednego. Let us consider in what form it will come. In the preceding lesson we were warned against the temptations of strong drink. Sabbath-breaking is an evil to be classed with it, in its colossal proportions, and, too, because nearly all Sabbath-breaking is connected with strong drink. Liquor and Sabbath-breaking are twin evils in our nation. We shall all need to take a stand against one just as much as the other. Sunday ball-playing has its lures for our young men. A Japanese baseball team of the Waseda University is now touring the United States. One match arranged for them was on Sunday. Much as they desired the meet, they firmly declined to play ball on Sunday. It is said that "after considerable discussion, the American team yielded, and thus was kept the

Continued on next page

*The International Sunday School Lesson for September 17, 1911. In the Fiery Furnace. Dan. 3. GOLDEN TEXT: "The Lord is my helper, and I will not fear what man shall do unto me." Heb. 13:6.

Hose That Wear Six Months At Common Cost

You get this guarantee if you buy six pairs of famous Holeproof Hose for men, women or children—"If these hose do not wear without holes, rips or any necessity of darning for six full months from the day you buy them we will replace them free." That means six months that you don't have to think about darning. It means six months of comfort and six months of style.

We pay an average of 70 cents per pound for our yarn, yet yarn is sold for as low as 30 cents. We spend $55,000 a year merely for inspection. Yet with all these advantages "Holeproof" sell at the cost of common hose.

FAMOUS Holeproof Hosiery FOR MEN WOMEN AND CHILDREN

Try "Holeproof" today. But get the genuine. For the genuine only are soft and light. No common hose were ever softer or better. Insist on this signature on every pair—

Carl Freschl, Pres.

Six pairs of plain or mercerized cotton "Holeproof," guaranteed six months, cost $1.50 up to $3.00, according to finish and weight.

There are twelve colors, ten weights and five grades for men. Seven colors, three weights and three grades for women, and two colors, two weights and three grades for children. Silk hose for men cost $2.00 for three pairs, guaranteed three months. Three pairs of women's silk hose cost $3.00, guaranteed three months. The genuine are sold in your town. We'll tell you the dealers' names on request, or ship direct where we have no dealer, charges prepaid on receipt of remittance. Write for free book, "How to Make Your Feet Happy."

HOLEPROOF HOSIERY CO.
904 Fourth Street Milwaukee, Wis.
Holeproof Hosiery Co. of Canada, Ltd., London, Can., Distributors for Canada.
Tampico News Co., S. A., City of Mexico, Agents for Mexican Republic. (211)

Are Your Hose Insured?

THE HAT WITH THE MOST FRIENDS!

3 Felt Hats IN ONE $1 Sent Postpaid to You for Only

THE HAT THAT DON'T BLOW OFF

The nobbiest and most comfortable hat you can buy at any price for dress, business, travel, motoring, and all sports. It is made of genuine English felt, has flexible leather sweat band, and will wear like iron. Can be rolled up and interval shapes without damaging. All sizes in black, blue, brown and gray. If not exactly as represented—drop me a line and I will refund your dollar by return mail—and you may keep the hat. You can't lose—send ME a dollar to-day. Two for $1.50. Write for Booklet of Working Clothes for Workingmen.

GEO. K. BUNGAY, 28 S. William Street, N.Y.

20,000 $18 BENNETT Typewriters In Use

$18 in U. S. A.

You're losing far more than $18 every year by being without the Bennett. This light, thoroughly modern typewriter can be carried wherever you go—slipped into pocket or grip. It saves you time—stenographic charges—insures neat business-like letters, makes carbon of orders, does all the widely advertised $100 machines do. LET US PROVE THIS. See the efficient work. Write for catalog and Special offer. Splendid chance for agents. Foreign Address: 75 Cannon St., London, E.C.

B. L. W. Bennett Typewriter Co., 366 Broadway, New York

POST CARDS

10 Hallowe'en . . 10c | 10 General Subjects, 10c
10 Thanksgiving, 10c | 10 Birthday . . 10c
Three packages for 25c. 100 cards, 80c
Special Assortment Birthday or Remembrance Cards, 100 for 60c.
MADISON ART COMPANY, MADISON, CONN.

New Commissioner of Education

R. PHILANDER PRIESTLEY CLAXTON, of Knoxville, Tenn., e newly created United States Commissioner of Education, has had a training which peculiarly s him for his new ost. Five expert ucators have held e same post as head the Federal Government's Bureau of ducation since 1867. mong them were ree famous Christaneducators: Henry arnard, General ohn Eaton and Dr. illiam T. Harris. r. Claxton's educaonal work in the past uarter century has aken a wide range, ncluding superinendencies of city chools, directorship f normal training, nd university professorship. He has edited ducational journals, onducted research work in Europe for the Southern Education Board, served on the Council of the National Education Association and on the board of directors of the Playground Association of America. He is also a leading official of the American School Peace League. It was under his auspices that the new department for training teachers for scientific temperance work was inaugurated at the University of Tennessee. A Methodist layman and a strong advocate of peace and total abstinence, Dr. Claxton's voice has been frequently heard on public platforms and in the pulpit. His ripe experience may be expected to do much in the promotion of Federal oversight of educational methods.

J. A. S.

Dr. P. P. Claxton

Sunday School Lesson

Continued from preceding page

ourth commandment." Mary H. Bowen, uperintendent of Japanese work for he California W. C. T. U., says: Whatever be the outcome of these ames, it is certain that the young apanese traveled seven thousand iles to teach unconsciously a great esson." Let all ball-players stand up nd take notice, and let all spectators t Sunday ball games also take notice.

"You will lose your job if you refuse o work on Sunday," is the argument Satan presents to young men of the Jnited States, and to young women s well.

Girard of Philadelphia one Saturday ordered all his clerks to come on the morrow to his wharf, and help unload a newly-arrived ship. One young man replied quietly, "Mr. Girard, I can't work on Sunday." "You know our rules." "Yes, I know. I have a mother to support, but I can't work on Sunday." "Well, step up to the desk, and the cashier will settle with you." For three weeks the young man could find no work, but one day a banker came to Mr. Girard to ask if he could recommend a man for cashier in a new bank. The discharged young man was at once named as a suitable person. "But," said the banker, "you dismissed him." "Yes, because he would not work on Sunday. A man who would lose his place for conscience' sake would make a trustworthy cashier." And he was appointed.

A Christian Chinaman opened a rice store with a partner who was not a Christian, making the express stipulation that it should be closed on Sunday. It was a risk, because all of the other Chinese rice stores in that city kept open on Sunday. But it was soon discovered that their customers adapted themselves to the Christian rule, buying twice as much rice on Saturdays as on other days. And the closed door on the Sabbath was a silent sermon for Christianity and the Sabbath.

The social question and the Sabbath is coming to be more and more a stumbling-block in our nation. Dinners, receptions, whist parties, and even dances are given on Sundays by the so-called leaders of society, and less prominent people follow the pace. To decline such an invitation gives opportunity for the thrust, "Oh, so you think you are better than other folks." But what of that? One certainly will be "better" by not participating in such affairs on God's day.

Since the advent of the bicycle and the automobile and special Sunday excursions by steamer and by rail, the Sabbath has received fresh wounds, and it has become all the more necessary for Christians to take a decided stand against these things. Two years or more ago, when a Japanese commission was visiting the United States, a very elaborate Sunday excursion and dinner were arranged for them by the authorities of a certain city. The invitation was politely but firmly declined by the entire commission. It was afterward revealed that most of them were members of the Christian church in their home land.

Sayings of Noted Men About the Sabbath

"The Sabbath is God's merciful appointment for the common benefit of all mankind. It is not a yoke, but a blessing."—Bishop Ryle.

"The Sunday is the core of our civilization, dedicated to thought and reverence."—Ralph Waldo Emerson.

"Religion, teaching the sanctity of the workman's weekly day of rest, has proved itself a good, though strict keeper of his liberty."—Rev. C. B. Smith, D.D.

"Sabbath-breaking corporations are the worst enemies of the workingmen and of the Republic."—Bishop Mallalieu.

"There is abundant justification for our Sunday laws, regarding them as a mere civil institution, which they are, and he is no friend to the good order and welfare of society who would break them down, or who sets himself an example of disobedience to them."—Justice Strong, United States Supreme Court.

"The enemies of Sunday in a republic are the enemies of the poor man and of the political sanity of the community at large."—Joseph Cook.

Answered Prayers

C. V. G., Long Branch, N. J. "God has answered many prayers for me in the past year."

X. Y. Z., Oberlin, O. "God has answered my prayers through many trials and difficulties."

E. A. W., Dallas, Texas. "When in trouble I went to the Lord for help and I did not go in vain."

Mrs. J. P., Bluemont, Va. "I wish to acknowledge God's goodness in answering my prayers."

An Electric Lamp
To Replace All Other Lamps

THERE is no longer any excuse for dim and unsatisfactory electric lights—low efficiency lamps—in the home, store or office.

The improved Tungsten is the highest development of the electric lamp and places electric lighting well in advance of any other form of illumination.

It gives a pure, white light—like sunlight—the easiest all-around light on the eyes.

In the home or in the store it brings out all the beauty of furnishings or merchandise. Does not distort or shade natural colors.

It actually gives three times the light of the old-fashioned carbon lamp at an equal expense for current.

Now you can buy a Tungsten lamp that will withstand all the wear and tear that any lamp will ordinarily receive. It has the rugged "wire-type" filament—giving maximum light during the full life of the lamp. This lamp is one of the famous Westinghouse products—

The Westinghouse Wire-Type Tungsten Lamp

Try half a dozen of these lamps in different parts of the house. If you have been using the comparatively feeble carbon lamps, the difference will be amazing. Even if you have been using ordinary Tungsten lamps, the ruggedness of the Westinghouse Wire-Type will prove an added economy over the saving in current itself.

To get the genuine Westinghouse Wire-Type Tungsten lamp is worth going to a little trouble. It will be no trouble to you, however—for if you have any difficulty in finding a dealer who will serve you, let us know and we will see that the lamps are furnished you.

The thing you must see on the lamps you buy is the little seal shown in the illustration marked "Westinghouse Tungsten." Be sure it's there.

All Good Dealers, Many Lighting Companies

WESTINGHOUSE ELECTRIC AND MANUFACTURING CO.

Incandescent Lamp Dept., (Westinghouse Lamp Co.,) Bloomfield, N. J.

YOU CAN AFFORD to have a new Song Book in your Church or Sunday School, and one for every person when you can get "FAMILIAR SONGS OF THE GOSPEL" for $3 for 100. Words and music, 83 very best songs. Sample copy 5 Cents. E. A. K. Hackett, 100 North Wayne St., Fort Wayne, Ind.

Every Purchase Of Household Supplies Helps Furnish Your Home

Can you think of an easier or more practical way of saving? You have to buy household supplies right along. Our way you get your money's worth, full value, in tea, coffee, spices, extracts, soaps, or whatever you purchase and, in addition, equal value in your choice of some handsome article for your home.

No. 5.
Oak, Golden-Oak Finish
One of 1500 Articles Given With Your Purchases.

You Can Add To Your Home Comfort Without Adding To Your Expenses

By LARKIN Factory-to-Family Dealing

When you buy direct from us, the manufacturers, you save and get in extra value the profits and expenses of the wholesaler, salesagent and retailer.

Buy Where You Can Do The Best—Your thrifty neighbor does. With modern transportation and postal-service, we are all neighbors: wherever you live you can trade with us profitably and satisfactorily. Satisfied Larkin customers are everywhere.

30 Days' Free Trial—You can test the quality of our goods and the economy of dealing with us without risk.

Send For Our New Fall Catalog—It is Free
Simply Fill In And Mail Coupon Below.

Larkin Co.—BUFFALO, N. Y.
Please Mail Your New Fall Catalog No. 63
Name _____
Address _____
(G. P.—170)

Original SIEGEL-COOPER & CO., Chicago
During the year 1911 we aimed to secure
"One Million More Customers"
to Shop by Mail at "Chicago's Big Store"
We aim to ship every order within 24 hours

This Large FALL 1911 Catalog FREE

Write Today for Your FREE Copy

Paris, London and New York Fashions at Chicago Prices

Fine Silk Seal Plush Coat with guaranteed satin lined throughout for $14.75 and the best grade rich, soft and silky plush is used in the making.
The coat is cut semi-fitting which is now the correct fashion.
The back is cut without any centre seam—the collar the most striking type of shawl collar and rolls gracefully to the top button. The closing is made by 3 large metal buttons and silk cord loops are employed in place of buttonholes.
The coat is lined throughout with guaranteed satin; every attribute of style is carried out in every line. The color is a lustrous jet black making it look many times its value, while the material can with difficulty be distinguished from the genuine Alaska seal.
Sizes 32 to 44
Order by No. 19Z30
Price, delivered free from Chicago to your home . . $14.75

Here is a Richly Trimmed and Dressy Voile Skirt for $2.95
Made from fine Italian evenly woven voile, trimmed with bands of lustrous black taffeta silk and broad strappings of fancy silk novelty braid.
The design is one of the fashionable and becoming plaited styles, showing tasteful arrangement of kilt plaits, alternated by box plaits down the center of front and back. At the center of back a deep inverted plait provides graceful lines to the skirt hooks invisibly beneath the plait. Comes in Black only. Sizes 22 to 30 waist measure, or 36 to 44 front length.
Order by No. 81Z31
Price, delivered free from Chicago to your home . . $2.95

The New Sweater you need now only $1.59
Knitted from fine Australian Worsted in a fancy zig-zag stitch that is decidedly attractive. It is generously proportioned both front and back, adding much to the becoming trim effect. Long sleeve, pearl buttons used for the neck opening. Sizes 32 to 44 bust measure; almost a gift.
Order by No 6Z37
Price, delivered free from CHICAGO to your home $1.59
Comes in White, Red, or Oxford Grey

FREE DELIVERY FROM CHICAGO TO YOUR HOME

—OUR GUARANTEE—
If you are not pleased—more than satisfied—with any article, return it at our expense, and we will refund your money as cheerfully as we accept it

Address Dept. Z for free 168-page Catalog

THE ORIGINAL SIEGEL COOPER & CO
The Big Store Chicago's Economy Center
—CHICAGO—

Our Boys and Girls

September in the Cozy Corner

I ONCE read in an old Book of Days, half Latin, half French, and I have never been able to find the book, nor to forget the old-world lore of it, this quaint line: "September: the Month of Peace, the Month of Beauty, the Month of Dreams."

In Northern lands the folk-name for September is Summerend, and in old songs and runes sung or said before the peat-fires of Denmark and Norway and Sweden one is constantly reminded that it was in the month of September that God created Peace. I myself have heard, half sung and half said, which one of them all he must choose to save, he stooped slowly and thoughtfully among them and in his strong protecting arms lifted September, saying, "Because thou art the month of fulfilment, and because thy secret name is Peace." When the little favorite sheep was safely folded at last, and the storm raged with greater and greater violence, the gentle Shepherd turned away from it and said half to himself: "You are lonely, little one, and I too am lonely without the others. And are we not all the children of my Father?" Then, between the angry gusts of snow and sleet, he made his

"Piping Down the Valleys Wild, Piping Songs of Pleasant Glee" around a peat-fire, in the little legend-ridden town of Goteborg, this exquisite folk-tale of Christ, represented as a Shepherd of the Months, that were straying like sheep upon the rough and rugged hills of Time.

"Thy Secret Name Is Peace"

IT WAS winter. A great storm gathered in the northern heavens and so the good Shepherd went swiftly out upon the hills to corral the sheep and bring them into the safety of the fold. One by one he gathered them about him, but before the fold could be reached the wind and the snow swept the hills with such violence and the flood arose so rapidly that the good Shepherd realized that he dared hope only to make his way along the perilous mountain pathway with one sheep in his arms, and even then scarcely thought to save its frail little life in the biting blasts. As he looked long and lovingly over the little flock, each one of which he treasured so dearly, deciding way back, and safely brought to the fold June, saying: "Because thy secret name is Joy." One by one, slowly and with untold patience and love, each sheep was gathered in his arms and brought safely to shelter, and in this order he said to them: "May, because thy secret name is Love;" "April, because thou art made of tears and laughter;" "July, because thou art Beauty;" "August, thou quiet Mother;" "October, because thy name is Content;" "March, because thy name is Strife;" "February, because thy name is Hope;" "November, because thy name is Silence;" "January, because thou art Life asleep;" and "December, whom I have left to the end, for neither tempest could overwhelm thee nor flood drown thee; for thy name is Resurrection and the Life."

And some one who was listening too asked: "But how then was September chosen first?" and the teller answered, "Because its secret name is Peace, and Peace is the secret name of Christ."

Many Surprises for All

SEPTEMBER finds us busier than ever in the Cozy Corner. I should like to have filled this entire page with our Autumn plans and the delightful things we have in store for you all. But there is not room. I can tell you this much, however: There are many surprises coming. Among them: We shall be going on a magic airship. Isn't that just splendid!

Those of you who have followed our Boys' and Girls' Department in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD from the beginning have watched it grow constantly more interesting from week to week. Your work grows better, too, and it is your interest and enthusiasm that lead us on. We used to award five or six prizes, where now we send ten or twelve "regulars." And how many supplementaries do you think we sent CHRISTIAN HERALD boys and girls last month? One hundred and ninety in all! This shows how much your work is improving.

Everybody who has ever written to the Cozy Corner Aunt will, I hope, enter this prize contest, and all those who have never written as well.

Our prizes this week are: An A No. 1 Brownie kodak, a beautiful box of Japanese water-color paints, a regulation Junior League best base-ball, and fifty Cozy Corner supplementary prizes for photographs, verses, drawings—subjects: "The Start," "The Rain," "The Little Schoolhouse on the Hill;" and for the best copy of the picture on this page, "Piping Down the Valleys Wild," in pen and ink, oils, water-colors or crayon, we will send a special extra prize of a Brownie Eastman kodak, A No. 1.

Good-Night Verse

The grass withereth, the flower fadeth, but the word of the Lord shall endure forever.

Lovingly and faithfully,

The Aunt in the Cozy Corner

Bible House, New York.

Floors That Stay New

The only way to keep any floor i is to coat it with Elastica Floor Finish.
It doesn't crack and mar as do bri floor finishes. It needs no constant placing like wax.
Stamp on it, romp on it, roll furnit on it—you cannot injure Elastica. water doesn't turn it white.
These facts are not true, as you proba know, of any other floor finish made.

Due to the Oil

The reason is this: We have worl out a way of using a large percent of rightly treated oil in the manufact of Elastica Floor Finish. Thus we p duce a varnish which is tough and elas yet the oil is so treated that the varn dries quickly and becomes very hard.
There is nothing else like it—the secret is alone. It is the final result of 40 years spen the study of varnish.
A floor coated with Elastica can be abused you dent it, yet you cannot mar the finish.
There are other floor finishes called "elast but no other finish can stand the test, as genuine Elastica does.

For Any Floor

Elastica is for every uncarpeted floor—indoc porch floors, hard or soft wood, natural or pain It protects the wood and protects the paint, doubles the life of linoleum.
You will never use anything else when know it.

TRADE ELASTICA MARK.

FLOOR FINISH

Look for this Trade-Mark on a Yellow Labe All others are imitations.

Sent Free—We want to send you a bo "How to Finish Floors," fi with expert suggestions about finishing old new floors. Also samples of Elastica coated paper for tests. Also a beautiful bookmark—t to repay you for writing us.
Simply send us your name and address—a po will do.

Ask for Book 113

Address Standard Varnish Works, 29 Bro way, New York, or 2620 Armour Av., Chicago 301 Mission St., San Francisco, Calif. Or Inter tional Varnish Co., Ltd., Toronto, Canada.

STANDARD VARNISH WORKS
ASK YOUR DEALER

5% WITH THE SAFEST SECURITY 5%

WE PAY 5% on deposits and our assets are ov $2,300,000. Deposits are secured by mortgag on the very best class of New York and suburb real estate. Our business is conducted conser atively in the strictest accordance with the stri gent New York Banking Laws.

Patrons All Over the Worl

Deposits with this Company represent a profitable investment, eliminating speculative features. Deposits may be withdrawn at any time, upon short notice. Earnings paid for every day and compounded semi-annually, or remitted by check, as desired.
Write for Booklet.
Industrial Savings & Loan Co.
2 Times Bldg, B'way & 42d St., New York

INDUSTRIAL SAVINGS & LOAN NEW YORK CITY

SUEDE SKINS

Ideally artistic for Table Throws, Pillow Covers, Book Covers, Shopping Bags, Den Hangings, etc. Sizes, 25 in. to 30 in. wide by 36 in. to 40 in. long. Price, Express prepaid, $1.75
Satisfaction guaranteed or money back. Faltless Velvet Suede Skins cannot be equalled for their velvety softness and fascinating colors.
Send for Folder of Free Samples
ONONDAGA HIDE & LEATHER CO.,
68 E. Water Street, - - Syracuse, N. Y.

FAULTLESS VELVET SUEDE

Any Color

Wanted: Men and Women Agents

Sell Linenwear Hosiery made for men, women a children. Some sheer as silk. Linen toes and he Double soles. Triple wear. Big profits. S $1 for 3 sample pairs or write for full informat

H. E. Robinson, Gen'l Agent
LINENWEAR HOSIERY CO.
164 West 129th Street, NEW YORK CI

THE BEST CHAIR

By Anna Phillips See

I DON'T feel like going to club-meetings," said Marilla Holt gloomily. "Besides, I haven't t anything to wear."

Mrs. Duncan consciously smoothed e princess dress that encased her tundity. She was a short, very out woman whose three dimensions peared nearly the same. Her large es met her neighbor's melancholy ze with bovine placidity. For a mo-ent she rocked luxuriously before re-arking:

"You'd ought to go out more, Ma-lla. You look as blue as a whetstone. hy, you're getting to be a regular onk, living here all alone since your other died and Edith got married."

Her neighbor made no reply, but the nhappiness of her deeply-lined face as intensified. No gray locks softened e rugged features. Her hair, still rown at fifty, was drawn tightly ack into an uncompromising twist.

Mrs. Duncan was urgent. "Do come ong with me to the Ladies' Club. hat lecture on Antiques ought to in-erest you."

She glanced toward the highboy and he long mahogany sofa that graced Marilla Holt's sitting-room. It was a leasant place. The warmth radiated y the Franklin stove was decidedly greeable, though the almanac de-ared that the season was spring and he month May. By the fire on a ushioned chair, a large yellow cat lay sleep.

"Seems a pity to love old things and ot know anything about them, but if can't make up my mind to attend the rayer-meeting, I'm not going to any lubs."

"Well, Marilla, you're missing a lot," aid Mrs. Duncan, rising ponderously o take her leave. "Sometimes our neetings are just culture, you know; ut this one on old furniture is likely o be real interesting.

"Oh, speaking of antiques," she con-inued, with a glint of curiosity in her ye, "what did you send Edith? I eard that your mother wanted her to ave some of the old things, being as he's the only grandchild."

Marilla Holt flushed as she replied, with a touch of defiance: "Yes, mother lid say that in her last sickness, so I ave Edith some china and the blue-and-white bedspreads and the pig-pen hair."

"The pig-pen chair! What do you nean?" interrupted her hearer.

"Don't you remember that old rush-ottomed chair with the high back and the queer feet that stood against our pig-pen for so long? We children used to climb on it so we'd be tall enough to throw the food over the side of the pen. It stayed outdoors so many years the rush bottom dropped to pieces and the wood bleached a sort of gray. When Edith came here to live she thought the frame was pretty, and she brought it into the house. She painted the chair white and put a turkey-red seat in it and had it up in her room. She always liked the old thing so much I sent it to her."

"Um-m," was Mrs. Duncan's non-committal rejoinder. "Well, I must hurry along. The men-folks will wonder if they're going to have anything to eat to-night."

It was when Edith and her young doctor-husband were furnishing their apartment in the city, that the girl had sent home for whatever heirlooms her aunt chose to give her. Then—how Marilla Holt despised herself for it!—she had sent Edith a tea-set that had come to her from relatives she disliked, and two blue-and-white bedspreads that were the happy hunting-ground of the moth, and the pig-pen chair. She knew very well that her mother had not meant that one when

Continued on page 887

HERE, MADAM, are Genuine Bargains.

No matter what others offer, you'll always find "STANDARD" qualities better, and "STANDARD" prices lower

1200. Here is a practical, serviceable skirt of good quality wide-wale diagonal. It is a charming example of the very newest fashion ideas. Made with stitched Pentilon panel Front back and paneled sides outlined with stitching. The pleated flounce provides ample width around bottom. Cut in semi-Empire effect with high waist line and fitted inside girdle. Cloth trimmed silk buttons provide tasteful trimming. Carefully tailored and well made. A splendid combination of style, quality and service at an exceptionally low price. May be had in black, blue or gray. Sizes 22 to 29 inch waist and 37 to 43 inch length. (Larger sizes 50 cents extra.) $2.98

1219. A skirt that's new, graceful and becoming. Excellently tailored, of good, all-Wool Black Voil, fashioned with panel front hand-somely embroidered below knee producing the Pentilon effect so popular this season. Rounded knee-length side gores effectively embroidered in matched design. Finished with deep pleated flounce which together with the inverted pleat back provide full delightful sweep. A splendid style, of a durable, dressy material and yet priced so low. It's really an excellent $5.00 value. Sizes 22 to 29 inch waist and 37 to 43 inch skirt length. (Larger sizes 75 cents extra) $3.98

1402. Here's a suit of charming simplicity, strictly tailored and of excellent material. Being plain in style but of splendid quality, it will appeal to those who want a good, serviceable well-made suit, and best of all, it is priced fully one-third under value. Made of fine all-wool good weight broadcloth lined with durable satin and tailored throughout in the best possible manner. The 28-inch jacket has a notched collar, welted cuffs and slashed pockets. Cut with straight front and semi-fitted back. Plain skirt with paneled front and inverted pleat back. Made in our own tailor shops during the dull summer months at a considerable saving. It is positively better than the average $15.00 suit offered at retail. Comes ready-made in black or blue. Sizes 32 to 44 bust. (Larger sizes $2.50 extra) $10.98

2022. Here's a practical, dressy waist of splendid quality puree-silk, black taffeta, charming style, buttoning invisibly in front beneath a broad tailored paneled of rich silk embroidery. Eight side pleats, each with 4 rows of stitching provide neat, effective trimming. Long sleeves with tucked cuffs and back. A splendid $3.00 waist. Sizes 32 to 44. Special $1.98

2033 Charming embroidered waist of splendid Mohair in black or white. A becoming peasant style with elbow length seamless sleeves. The front and cuffs are exquisitely embroidered in raised silk applique. Yoke, cuffs and back appropriately tucked. An up-to-date style of dainty dressiness. Carefully made. Good $1.50 quality. Sizes 32 to 44. Special $1.00

2411. A superably styled dress of splendid quality all-silk taffeta in black, navy or gray. The bodice is becomingly styled in "Pensant" model with seamless sleeves and Gibson pleats both front and back. Inlaid collar and yoke of handsome silk embroidered lace. Bodice, sleeves, cuffs and skirt are richly embroidered with heavy silk applique. A pleated girdle defines the waist line and the skirt is fashioned with Pentilon panel front. Both front and back are inlaid with sections of pleating. Sizes 32 to 44 Bust with 40 inch length skirt finished with deep basted hem to allow for lengthening or shortening. (Larger sizes $2.00 Extra) Special $8.49

2417. A charmingly styled dress of good quality Cuffed Panama in Black, Claret Red or Blue. The bodice is fashioned in "Peasant" style with seamless sleeves and is effectively embroidered with applique of silk soutache braid inlaid yoke and under sleeves of fine cream Oriental lace. The skirt is made in Empire effect with button trimmed box pleated front, kilted side gores and a broad, loose panel "loop" panel in back. A superb style of tasteful becomingness and neat, dressy appearance. The material alone, if you bought it retail, would cost you more than our price for the whole dress. Beautifully made and carefully sewed. So you see it's really a remarkable value at our special price (Sizes 32 to 44 Bust Larger sizes $1.50 Extra) $6.98

2501. Plaid back rubberized raincoat modeled after the English slip-on coats but of single textile fabric. A splendid, inexpensive coat thoroughly waterproof, and will give good service. Made with full, box back, loose front, high military collar and storm-strapped cuffs. Tan only. Sizes 32 to 44 Bust. Larger Sizes 75 cents Extra $2.97

2713. Here is an unusually attractive dress of good quality, fast color Gingham in neat black or blue Shepherd plaid pattern. The bodice is effectively styled with Gibson pleated front and back, and is trimmed with wide turned and reversed matched material. The collar and cuffs are neatly trimmed to match. Matched buttons provide an appropriate finish. The skirt is made in Empire effect with panelled front and deep, pleated flounce. The collar cuffs, revers, belt and skirt are prettily piped with bias bands of black sateen. Sizes 32 to 44 $1.98

Have you received your free copy of the "STANDARD" Advance Fall BULLETIN? If not, write for it to-day. It's FREE.

STANDARD MAIL ORDER CO. 244 West 17th Street, NEW YORK

Is World-Peace Dawning?

Continued from page 871

All International Questions Solvable by Arbitration, Writes Representative Morris Sheppard of Texas

I will combine my answer to your four inquiries in the following statement: I believe that all questions arising between nations may be solved by arbitration according to the principles of law. What steps should be taken to bring about such a condition, I am not yet prepared to say. Whether the time of universal arbitration is remote or near I am equally unprepared to state. But let us never lose faith in the final advent of peace and in doing everything we possibly can to hasten it.

Morris Sheppard

Washington, D. C.

A World's Supreme Court Needed to Keep World Peace, Writes Representative William Sulzer of New York

I am a man of peace, and indulge the hope that the day is not far distant when there will be peace among the nations throughout the world. And the best way to bring this about is through the establishment of an International High Court of Justice that will have the same jurisdiction over international matters that our United States Supreme Court has over inter-State matters.

I have advocated the creation of such a court for many years, and if the great powers of the earth would consent to such an establishment and agree to abide by its judgments, the problem of the elimination of war would be solved.

William Sulzer

Washington, D. C.

A NAVAL HERO'S VIEWS

International Peace will be the Gift of the Strong to the Weak, Admiral Wainwright Declares

THE martial spirit is only one of the forms by which patriotism may be manifested. Patriotism is love of country; and its true basis is love of liberty, life and property. It is devotion to home and family, which as civilization spreads, increases its boundaries, suppressing individual and local selfishness and inducing sacrifices for the general good. When this spreads to its ultimate boundary the result will be international peace.

Heretofore, patriotism would have availed little without the manifestation of martial spirit, and even at this day should there arise a country where this manifestation was absent, the true patriot could but look on and see his land and fellow-peoples a prey to the greed and selfishness of countries where a martial spirit is cultivated.

Even at the present time, China forms an object lesson. There are numerous true patriots among the followers of Confucius; but for many years the martial spirit has been kept down. Now the patriotic Chinaman is doing all possible to encourage the martial spirit and to give to military men their due importance in the body politic.

One of the laws by which this world is governed is that all good shall come by slow process of evolution. We may be one with the law and ride on the wave of progress; to be backward is to be overwhelmed; to be in advance is to be ineffective. At this period of the world's history, to reduce our army or navy would be in advance of its present stage of evolution. The President is now showing the best course to take in the interest of furthering international peace. On the one hand, offering effective means to preserve peace; on the other, endeavoring to so strengthen the army and navy as to give due weight to the wishes of the country he leads.

We must take the world as it is and endeavor to aid in its improvement. When capitalist and laborer willingly arbitrate all differences; when few if any men are striving to take another's property, even by due process of law; when no man wishes another evil—then we shall have international peace. It will be a gift of the strong to the weak, as slowly but surely the peoples of this world progress toward better things.

Richard Wainwright

Rear-Admiral, U. S. Navy.
Washington, D. C.

Arbitration Has Its Limitations, Writes General William Crozier, U. S. A.

Your letter of June 28 was received during my absence, and followed me in my travels, which extended to Texas, Mexico, and Havana. I am much interested in the subject of arbitration, and think that the questions enclosed with your letter are pertinent ones.

To be frank with you, I must say that anything which I would write upon the subject would be in the line of suggesting some limitations of the usefulness of arbitration as a means of settling properly all of the great questions which arise in the progress of civilization.

William Crozier

War Department, Washington, D. C.

Let Financiers Withhold the Funds to be Used for Wars, Writes Henry Clews

I believe that the proposition of Mr. Speyer relative to the withholding of funds by nations, to be used for war loans, would be a good idea provided the nations so acting are banded together to prevent war and insure international peace.

I believe that we are on the threshold of the era of universal peace. The United States and Great Britain are a powerful team yoked together, and if the present movement organized by our great and wise President leads to an agreement between this country and England, as I believe it will, both France and Japan would be eager to join the combination. No one nation would wage war against a neighbor in the face of protests from the four mentioned, if the four act in unity, with no selfish ends to serve.

Henry Clews

New York City.

Fast Approaching an Age of Universal Peace, Writes the Veteran John Burroughs

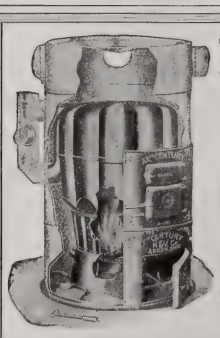
I am here in the mountains for rest and recreation. I certainly believe we are fast approaching an age of universal peace.

John Burroughs

Roxbury, N. Y.

Boston Garter

Velvet Grip



WHEN you want comfortable, reliable garters for your half-hose, ask for Boston Garter. Look on the metal loop for the trade marks "Velvet Grip" and "Boston Garter," and also look for our exclusive moulded rubber button.

Boston Garter doesn't slip or let go---it holds up your sock as smooth as your skin---it is comfortable, convenient, durable. That is why it will pay you to get the genuine.

For sale in stores everywhere. Sample pair sent postpaid on receipt of price.

Lisle . . . . . 25 Cents
Silk . . . . . 50 Cents

GEORGE FROST CO., MAKERS
BOSTON, - - MASS.

The Greatest Home Comfort

Does not come from wealth or large income. It comes from having the home evenly, cleanly and economically heated. The proper kind of a Furnace costs less than stoves or grates.

XXth Century Furnace is used and praised so universally by so many thousand home owners everywhere—in every climate. It is made right, it has the only sensible and Economic Fire Pot, ever made. It burns all kinds of fuel—even cheap grades of soft coal, slack, etc., with perfect combustion and yields one-third more heat at one-third less cost than any other made.

THE CHEAPEST HEAT FOR ANY HOME COUNTRY OR CITY

And yet clean, healthful. No work, no repairs; sanitary, ideal. Write us, giving a sketch or plan of your house, indicating the number of rooms to be heated, and let us tell you how you can get a XXth CENTURY FURNACE, and try it on our Common-Sense Guarantee plan. Ask for our little booklet, No. 16.

The XXth Century Heating and Ventilating Co.,
16 Ira Avenue, Akron, O.

Without Door $1.00 PER SECTION With Door $1.75 IT FITS ANY SPACE

On Approval. Freight Paid

Lundstrom

IT GROWS WITH YOUR LIBRARY

SECTIONAL BOOKCASE

Endorsed "THE BEST" by Over Fifty Thousand Users

MADE under our own patents, in our own factory, and the entire product sold direct to the home and office. That is the reason we can offer them at such reasonable prices. Our Sectional Bookcases are the product of years of undivided attention to this one line of manufacture. Book sections have non-binding, disappearing glass doors, and are highly finished in SOLID GOLDEN OAK. Other styles and finishes at correspondingly low prices. Write for New Catalogue No. 112

THE C. J. LUNDSTROM MFG. CO., Little Falls, N.Y.
Manufacturers of Sectional Bookcases and Filing Cabinets
New York Office: 372 Broadway

AGENTS! BIG PROFITS

Makes every Man an expert
No experience necessary
Guaranteed for life

New patented Automatic Razor Stropper. Automatically puts a perfect edge on any razor, old style or safety. Big seller. Every man wants one. Write quick for terms, prices and territory
C. Brandt Cutlery Co., 84 W. Broadway, New York

We Carpet YOUR Floor $2.50

Fashionable. Artistic. Sanitary. Designs from real Turkish Rugs.

Brusselex Art Rugs

Fast dyes. Close woven, durable. Can be used both sides. All colors and sizes. 9 x 6ft —$2.50; 9 x 9ft.—$3.50, 9 x 12ft — $4.50. Sent on receipt of price. Freight prepaid. Your money back if not satisfied. Catalog in colors, free. Write today
Keystone Rug Co., 604 D. Bourse Bldg, Philadelphia, Pa.

OUR MAIL-BAG

Questions and Answers

M. B., Germantown, Pa. What is the distinction between soul and spirit as they are referred to in Heb. 4: 12?

In the passage referred to, the soul represents the animal desires, the intellect, the affections and passions, while the spirit represents the higher part of our nature which reaches beyond things visible. The soul of the man whose thoughts and desires do not rise to higher perceptions than those that relate to this life is in sharp contrast to that of the man who seeks after God and the things of the Spirit. In Ecclesiastes the same idea is expressed in the reference to "the soul of the beast that goeth downward." The spiritual in man lifts him above the mere human nature and gives him the power to enter into relations with the Infinite.

C. G., LaSalle, Ill. Was Sherlock Holmes a real person or a character in fiction?

Sherlock Holmes is a character in fiction, the invention of Sir Arthur Conan Doyle. It is said that a certain professor at Edinburgh University, who was gifted with very wonderful powers of deduction, was the inspiration and model of the creation.

Jessie B., New Haven, Conn. For the benefit of our Sunday School class, can you throw any light on the question (which came up lately) where did Cain's wife come from, in view of the fact that the population of the world at that time must have been extremely limited?

This question comes up periodically to trouble the student. Commentators can do little more than speculate on the subject. There is an ancient Arab tradition that she was his sister and that her name was Save. Still another legend gives her the name of Azura. These traditions are referred to by Epiphanius, showing that the early church dealt with some of the same questions we meet to-day. The "land of Nod" simply means "land of exile." There is a suggestion in Gen. 4: 14, 15 that Adam's posterity had increased considerably in Cain's time.

Mrs. T. A. A., Garbes, Okla. What were the "high places" spoken of so often in the Bible?

They were natural or artificial eminences where worship was made either by sacrifice or offering upon altars. After the deluge, it was apparently the custom to build temples and altars on high ground. Noah built an altar upon Ararat; Abraham built one on a mountain near Bethel; Jacob and Laban offered their sacrifices on a mountain (Gen. 31: 54). In later times and with the spread of idolatry the high places and groves became the scenes of much wickedness. It was to check this and to put a stop to the nature-worship of gods and goddesses of the hills and woods that these places were forbidden to the Israelites and they were commanded to destroy them as monuments of idolatry. As a rule the grove was so planted as to surround the "high place." Some of the most ancient bas-reliefs from Egypt and Assyria show such temples on hills the approach to which is surrounded by trees.

M. B., Wellston, Mich. What is meant by the "angel" in Isa. 37: 36? Was it the Spirit of God?

We are not told what form God's messenger assumed, nor is it even certain that the language employed by Isaiah is meant to be literally interpreted. Sennacherib's repulse and the destruction of his army had been prophesied and this was followed by the miraculous fulfilment of the prophecy, which fulfilment is attributed to God, whatever the secondary agency. Some commentators have held that the messenger was the plague or some sudden and overwhelming storm, but these of course are simply conjectures. The historic fact remains of the terrible visitation which cut off 185,000 Assyrians in one night.

J. H. M., Harrisburg, Pa. Please explain, for the benefit of an old reader, the doctrine of foreordination.

Foreordination or predestination is set forth in Rom. 8: 29; 9: 11-18; Eph. 1: 5, and other passages. It is not emphasized to-day in any church we know of. It has been the subject of endless and, we might almost add, profitless controversy. A fixed, irreversible decree, deciding the fate of an individual beforehand, is incompatible with the character of God as revealed in his Son.

H. W. E., Carlton, Kan. Why are springs and wells often constant in their flow in spite of drought in the surrounding country?

There are several possible explanations. Geologists tell us that there are under ground rivers and streams as large as those which flow on the earth's surface. In most cases their sources and outlets are both unknown. It is not uncommon for springs and artesian wells to tap such sources of supply. In spite of the severest drought the earth, except in desert regions, contains a certain amount of moisture at a depth of from six or eight feet downward. This is attracted by gravity and passes downward till it encounters rock or clay through which it cannot pass. It is then carried along that stratum until it once more reaches the surface or comes so near that man may obtain it by boring or digging.

Save Money and Be Comfortable

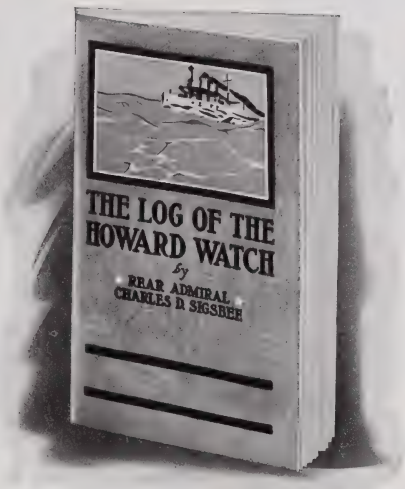
by wearing Linene collars. They fit perfectly, require no laundering, can be worn both sides, and cost so little that they may be discarded when soiled.

10 Collars for 25 Cents at the stores, or by mail 30 Cents in U. S. stamps. SAMPLE BY MAIL for 6 Cents.

State size and style

REVERSIBLE COLLAR COMPANY
Dept. T, Boston, Mass.

Kaleidophane



Makes art glass out of plain glass

It is a thin, translucent material, easily applied to any pane of glass without removing it. Reproduces perfectly all the rich coloring and beautiful designs found in stained glass at a fraction of the cost. Will not fade from light or washing. Made in many patterns, appropriate for homes, hotels, cafés and other business places. Also churches, clubs and public buildings. Use Kaleidophane wherever privacy is desired. Shuts out the view but admits the light. More economical than curtains or shades for transoms, cellar or bathroom windows and store windows in stores and offices. Cuts like cloth and sewed to put on. Write today for free samples.

KONINSKI ART CO., Dept. C, St. Louis, Mo.

LADIES Ask us for our new 68-page catalogue (free) illustrating many new and useful inventions for the home. Make your work easy and enjoyable.

Franklin Mfg. Co. - Box A - Pitman, N. J.

Send your name for this little book —It is free!

The Howard Watch

Every man and boy who takes pride in American achievement will enjoy reading "The Log of the HOWARD Watch."

It is a voluntary contribution to HOWARD literature by Rear-Admiral Sigsbee. His service, as you know, covered the whole navy history, from the middle of the Civil War.

"The Log of the HOWARD Watch" is a remarkable evidence of the fitness of the HOWARD Watch for the hardest kind of practical service.

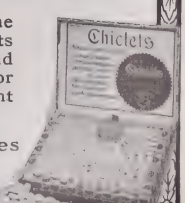
A HOWARD Watch is always worth what you pay for it.

The price of each watch—from $40 to $150—is fixed at the factory and a printed ticket attached.

Not every jeweler can sell you a HOWARD Watch. Find the HOWARD jeweler in your town and talk to him. He is a good man to know.

This interesting little chapter of American History is yours for the asking. Drop us a post card—Dept. W.

E. HOWARD WATCH WORKS, Boston, Mass.



DURING 1910, 2,623,412 CHICLETS WERE SOLD EACH DAY

Chiclets

REALLY DELIGHTFUL

The Dainty Mint Covered Candy Coated Chewing Gum

The singer's tones are more dulcet, the speaker's voice more clear, when Chiclets are used to ease and refresh the mouth and throat. The refinement of chewing gum for people of refinement. It's the peppermint —the true mint.

For Sale at all the Better Sort of Stores

5¢ the Ounce and in 5¢, 10¢ and 25¢ Packets

SEN-SEN CHICLET COMPANY, METROPOLITAN TOWER, NEW YORK

OMO DRESS SHIELDS

are the only dress shields that are odorless when purchased and odorless when worn.

REMEMBER

The reason for this, is that they are made from a tropical gum, and contain absolutely no rubber. They are light, cool to wear, do not chafe, are absolutely moisture proof and washable.

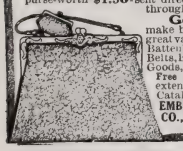
EVERY PAIR WARRANTED

At all good stores, or a sample pair sent for 25c. Our "Dress Shield Brieflet" sent free.

INFANTS' PANTS

A dainty, comfortable garment that will keep baby's clothes dry and clean, To be worn over the diaper. Made of OMO Sanitary Sheeting, which is absolutely waterproof and odorless, white, soft and easily cleansed. With or without lace trimming. 25c. to $1.00.

OMO BIBS



are made of the same sheeting and have all the good qualities of OMO Pants. Prices 15c to 50c.

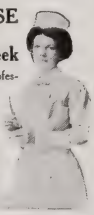
At your dealer's

The OMO Manufacturing Co., Dept. C. H. Middletown, Conn.

This Leather Bag 89¢ Postpaid

Here's one of our greatest bargains. Seal grained 11-inch leather bag-heavy silvered frame, handsomely ornamented taffeta lined-inside pocket-leather coin purse-worth $1.50-sent direct, or can be bought through our agents for 89c.

Good Agents



make big money selling our great values in Embroideries, Battenbergs, Silks, Millinery Belts, Bags, Petticoats, Dress Goods, Waists, etc. We give Free Sample Outfits and extend Credit. Write for Catalog and Proposition.

EMBROIDERY & IMPORT CO., 1901 Pine St., St. Louis

BE A TRAINED NURSE

AND BE INDEPENDENT

Earn $10 to $25 a Week

One of the most profitable and best paid Professions open to women. Home Instruction.

To those sending on or before Oct. 20th, we make this Special Offer:

Plan 1. $30 Cash full Payment of Course
Plan 2. $25 and $5 monthly for 2 months
Plan 3. $15 and $5 monthly for 5 months
Regular price of Course, $50.00

Send postal for illustrated booklet and application blank

Rochester Nurses Institute, 176 Institute Bldg., Rochester, - - N.Y.

LABLACHE

FACE POWDER

Summer Pleasures

are enjoyed by thousands of women who are immune from complexion worries. They are the users of LABLACHE and are recognized by faces free from wrinkles—that are never shiny or disfigured by exposure to the elements, and a skin always smooth and velvety. It is cooling, refreshing, pure and harmless.

Refuse substitutes.

They may be dangerous. Flesh, White, Pink or Cream, 50c. a box of druggists or by mail. Send 10 cents for a sample box.

BEN. LEVY CO., French Perfumers Dept. 22, 125 Kingston Street BOSTON, MASS.

Christ in the Home*

IN MANY parts of our land the custom of grace before meat, even in Christian families, is dying out. It is a beautiful ceremony, and let us hope that it may be restored to its old favor.

As for the even more significant and fundamental custom of daily family worship—what has become of it? In our cities, alas! it has been largely sacrificed to the terrible daily rush of practical life. Except in the families of clergymen and church officers (sometimes not even in them) the sweet and sacred morning or evening prayer of the united family is no longer known. In the smaller towns and the country districts it survives more generally, but nowhere is it so prevalent as it once was, and the life of the home is suffering for the lack of these quiet daily reminders to the family as a whole, of the reality and the watchfulness of the Most High.

But it is in the heart that the spirit of Christ must do its most vital work; and it is from the hearts of the members of the family that the influences must proceed which mark out the home as the abode of Christ. It is a common thing to place upon the mother the responsibility for the moral and spiritual tone of the home. Important as is her mission there, it is doubtful whether that of the father is not quite as great. Has not too much been placed upon the mother in this regard? Has not the father been somehow allowed to cherish the feeling that he has not really very much to do in establishing the spiritual status of the home?

There is little doubt that this mistake has been committed in the past, and that the wreck of many homes may have been due to it. Let it be understood by you young people that the part of the father is quite as important in the creating of a spiritual atmosphere in the home, as is the part of the mother. The father has his practical work to do in the earning of the family living. The mother has her practical work to do in promoting the cleanliness and order of the home, and in feeding and clothing the family. But both father and mother, by precept and by example, must unite to present to the children the highest mental and spiritual ideals.

We do not always remember that the young people in the home have also their share of the work to do in perfecting the home. Many of us have even known homes in which fathers and mothers were unequal to the task of making them what they ought to be, and a devoted son or a lovely daughter atoned for the lacks of their elders.

It is the work equally of every member of the family to build the perfect home, and according to the home you build on earth—according to the atmosphere which you diffuse around you here below—will be the home which you will enjoy hereafter.

This is illustrated by a quaint old story which tells of a wealthy society woman who died and went to heaven. She expected to find a grand mansion awaiting her there, but the angel who was set to conduct her showed her to a very humble and unfinished dwelling. She was much dissatisfied, and asked, "Why am I given such a rough and unsightly home? I am accustomed to living in a palace, and I expected to find a finer one awaiting me here."

The angel shook his head and explained, "We have to build our houses of the materials which are sent up here by the future owners for the purpose. We have done the best we could with the poor material which you sent us."

Let us see to it that our heavenly homes are provided with foundations of love, a frame of iron loyalty, and for the rest of the structure all that can possibly be needed of "joy, peace, long suffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness and temperance."

*Christian Endeavor Topic for Sunday, September 17. TEXT: Eph. 6 : 1-18.

We Want to Send a Sample of Utility Board to Every Man Who Owns a Home

Or who contemplates building a home—or is interested in building operations of any kind—

Utility Board is a finished wall board that has rendered lath and plaster obsolete—

It is made of fibre—very strong, very tough, very durable—

It is waterproofed on both sides, is impervious to moisture and when once put on it is there to stay as long as the house lasts—

Utility Wall Board comes in various lengths and widths—It is attached directly to the studding and does away entirely with the need for lath and plaster—

It is the one Wall Board with which you can safely use wall paper—At the same time the surface is especially adapted to tinting and stenciling—

You can use it in a hundred ways in making over the old house as well as in building the new—Ask us for suggestions—

Utility Wall Board is more lasting than lath and plaster—more impervious to heat and cold—more nearly fireproof and sound proof—more easily and quickly put on—and it costs 25 per cent less—

It marks the greatest advancement that has been made in interior building construction in a hundred years.

A beautifully illustrated book of interiors together with a sample of Utility Wall Board will be sent for the asking—Write for them.

THE HEPPES COMPANY, - 4511 Fillmore Street, - Chicago

EVERYWOMAN SHOULD EARN $25 PER WEEK

Introducing our very complete line of wool suitings, wash fabrics, fancy waistings, silks, hdkfs., petticoats, hosiery, etc. Dealing direct with the mills, our prices are low. Others make $10.00 to $30.00 weekly—you can also. Samples, instructions, etc., in neat case, charges prepaid. No money required. Exclusive territory. Be first to apply for Agency. Standard Dress Goods Co., Desk 3 J, Standard Building Binghamton, N.Y.

I Was Deaf 25 Years NOW I HEAR PLAINLY

with this artificial EAR DRUM in my ears. I never feel them—they are perfectly comfortable, and no one sees them. I will tell you the true story, how I got deaf, and how I made myself hear.

Medicated Ear Drum Pat. July 15, 1908

ARTIFICIAL EAR DRUM COMPANY
2 ADELAIDE STREET DETROIT, MICH.

FOR INDIGESTION

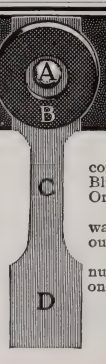
MURRAY'S CHARCOAL TABLETS

Once Only, for trial A 25c box for 10c

A. J. Ditman, 2 Astor House, N. Y.

HARTSHORN SHADE ROLLERS

Original and unequalled. Wood or tin rollers. "Improved" requires no tacks. Inventor's signature on genuine:



Stewart Hartshorn

HONEST MAN OR WOMAN WANTED

in every town to represent well-known wholesale firm. Experience unnecessary. Must furnish good references. Easy, pleasant work. Permanent position.

McLEAN, BLACK & CO., 1351 Doty Building, Boston, Mass.

The Millions Who Don't Have Corns

Do you know that millions of people never suffer from corns? Just as soon as they feel one they attach a little Blue-jay plaster. There's no pain after that, no inconvenience. One simply forgets the corn.

In that plaster lies a bit of soft wax—the wonderful B & B wax. That gently loosens the corn, and in two days it comes out. No soreness, no feeling of any sort.

Why pare a corn at the risk of blood poisoning? Why nurse and protect it? Millions of people remove them at once. They never suffer at all. Why do you?

A in the picture is the soft B & B wax. It loosens the corn,
B protects the corn, stopping the pain at once.
C wraps around the toe. It is narrowed to be comfortable.
D is rubber adhesive to fasten the plaster on.

Blue-jay Corn Plasters 15c and 25c per package

(9) Also Blue-jay Bunion Plasters. All Druggists Sell and Guarantee Them.

Sample Mailed Free.

Bauer & Black, Chicago and New York, Makers of Surgical Dressings, etc.

St. Regis Everbearing

The Raspberry for the Million and the Millionaire. "There's Millions In It."

You can now have wonderful raspberries from next June to October by setting out the plants this fall.

Never before has a plant been grown which would fruit the first season.

Then, for four months the St. Regis produces continuously—heavy crops of large, luscious, sugary berries of bright crimson.

Big profits growing St. Regis for market—the fruit keeps in perfect condition longer than any other red raspberry.

Endures drought and severest cold without injury. Awarded Certificate of Merit by American Institute of City of New York.

FREE—Our 1911 CATALOG AND PLANTING GUIDE—Includes Nut Culture, Fruits, Roses, Shrubs, Evergreens.

GLEN BROS., Glenwood Nursery
1804 Main Street,
(Established 1866) ROCHESTER, N. Y.

Kalamazoo
Stove Book FREE

Write for the stove book with the astounding inside facts about stove making and stove selling—how you can save $5.00 to $40.00 by buying stoves direct from the factory. Built by experts—prices $6.50 and up, east of the Mississippi. Stove Book yours for the asking with description of 400 sizes and styles of stoves richly illustrated.

Stove or Range
Shipped Freight Prepaid
30 Days' Trial

You don't decide finally until you've used the stove or range 30 days and then it comes back to us—at our expense—if you're not satisfied. 170,000 people have tried Kalamazoos and bought. 360 Days' Approval Test. Cash or credit terms. Shipment within 24 hours. Repairs at cost or less if ever needed. Your interest demands that you get our proposition first. Now send for the Stove Book and Catalog No. 103 at once.

Kalamazoo Stove Company Mfrs.
Kalamazoo, Michigan

"A Kalamazoo Direct To You"
And Gas Stoves Too

Rugs, Carpets, Curtains, Blankets
From the Mill We Pay Freight

Manufacturers' prices save you dealers profits. We give a guarantee of satisfaction and save you 33 1-3 per cent. We have 75,000 satisfied customers. The well-known Regal Rug, 6x9 ft., reversible, all-wool finish, $3.75. Our Brussels Rug, 6x9 ft., greatest value known, $1.85. Splendid grade Brussels Rug, 9x12 ft., $11. Famous Invincible Velvets, 9x12 ft., $16. Standard Axminsters, 9x12 ft., $18.50. Fine quality Lace Curtains, 45c per pair and up. Tapestry Curtains, Wilton Rugs, Linoleums, at mill prices. Write today for our NEW ILLUSTRATED CATALOG, No. 14. Sent free. Shows latest designs in actual colors.

UNITED MILLS MFG. CO.
2438-2462 JASPER ST., PHILA.

MARVEL SOLDER
INSTANTLY MENDS ALL LEAKS

In all kinds of household utensils—enamled, tin, iron copper vases etc. Mends Hottest Heat. Just squeeze from tube and spread over hole or crack with fingers. Hardening, it makes solid, smooth surface. Catches on immediately. Fine for motorists.

Send 10c for trial tube.

MARVEL SOLDER CO. AGENTS WANTED
1937 Broadway New York QUICK SALES BIG PROFITS

LEARN TO WRITE ADVERTISEMENTS MAKE More Money
We can positively show you by mail How to Increase Your Salary. Book mailed free. Page-Davis, Dept. 44, Chicago.

THE BEST CHAIR

Continued from page 883

she said: "Give Edith the best chair and anything else you feel to part with." The old lady had intended her grandchild to have a mahogany chair that stood in the "front room," a low-backed chair with curving legs and a haircloth seat that lifted out. Marilla had re-covered the seat with green plush and the olive color harmonized well with the reddish brown of the wood. It was the only mahogany chair in the house; the Holt heirlooms happened to be in other forms.

The mother had never suspected how much her daughter cared for this chair, and Marilla would have died rather than reveal the reason of her affection for it. The one meagre romance of her colorless life centred about the chair, for Jared Ellis had liked it and had always sat on it when he came to call on Sunday evenings. Once, for a blissful moment, he had pulled her down on his knee and kissed her, murmuring in a breathless boyish voice: "O Marilla, you're as sweet as a pink!" and had looked at her in an adoring way that set her pulses leaping. She had been filled with a happy shy expectancy, but he had said no more than that. Soon afterward he went to the West and never returned. In the inmost shrine of her heart Marilla had treasured that kiss and that look, and she loved the mahogany chair.

To the introspective woman, living alone with memories, the furniture of her home seemed almost alive. To part with any of it wrenched her like saying a last good-by to a friend, and to part with the mahogany chair was like giving up the one romance of her youth. She had struggled to compel herself to send the chair to her niece, but she could not do it. She had finally compromised on the pig-pen chair, for Edith had always admired it.

The next morning Marilla Holt was in a penitential mood. Because of the lateness of the season, her spring cleaning was yet undone, and she naturally turned to this form of penance. To perform a disagreeable duty was some relief to her conscience. Enveloped in a scarlet hug-me-tight that was incongruously gay, she mounted resolutely to the attic, ready to begin at the top and work down.

For long hours, with hands that were blue with cold, Marilla sorted, dusted and rearranged the varied contents of the attic. She was looking over her mother's garments in a vigilant search for the devouring moth when she heard Sarah Duncan calling under the open window. Marilla thrust out her head.

"You wouldn't expect anybody of my heft to climb three pair of stairs when they could holler, would you? Say, Marilla, I just ran over to see if you had anything you could spare for the home missionary barrel. I hear there's an old lady in the missionary's family. I thought perhaps——"

Marilla Holt knew what her neighbor had in mind. She also knew that her mother would have wished her wardrobe to be of use to some one. In spite of this she called down rather shortly:

"I don't know as I've got anything I want to give this year, Sarah."

"All right," said Mrs. Duncan, adding pointedly: "I just thought I'd let you know what we needed, that's all."

Marilla turned from the window somewhat disturbed. She sat down on a hairy, brass-studded trunk and pondered. Her mother had not been a Holt; she had loved to give things away. Marilla could not understand the feeling, though she respected it. Why didn't she herself like to give? All at once, as by a sudden illumination, she saw herself as others might see her. "I believe I'm stingy," she cried out loud in dismay. "Stingy, and I never knew it before."

Her early supper over, Marilla sat

Continued on next page

"See How Easy it is, Tilly?"

Show the new girl just once what can be done with Jell-O and then you will always be sure of one fine dish for dinner. She may spoil everything else, but she will make a fine dessert of for she cannot go wrong there.

JELL-O

And Jell-O isn't a dinner dish alone. It is served at lunch and supper, and is never out of place.

Jell-O and hot water, without anything else, make these delicious dishes in a minute.

There are seven delightful flavors and seven beautiful colors: Strawberry, Raspberry, Lemon, Orange, Cherry, Peach, Chocolate.

At all grocers', 10c. each.

The splendid recipe book, "DESSERTS OF THE WORLD," in ten colors and gold, will be sent free to all who write and ask for it.

THE GENESEE PURE FOOD CO.,
Le Roy, N. Y., and Bridgeburg, Can.

The name JELL-O is on every package in big red letters. If it isn't there, it isn't JELL-O.

Cleverest Fall Hat $2

New English Cloth Alpine

Worn by best dressed men

Sold by metropolitan hatters for $3. We sell American made for $2, expressage paid. Looks right, fits right, feels right. You want this hat because it's different. Proper for all occasions. Up-to-date colors—light gray striped, dark gray striped brown striped. Dark gray cloth, with medium brown rough cloth. Finest cloths—silk serge lined; brown and hunter heavy silk stitched; band and bow same cloth as hat. Money back if you don't like it. Put a $2 bill to an order and mail it NOW. Send for our new Fall Style Book of Hats and Caps FREE FRENCH POCKET HAT CO., 60 So. 8th St., Philadelphia, Pa.

MUSIC LESSONS FREE

Pupils play in Supreme Court and win great applause.

Free lessons in your own Home for Piano, Organ, Violin, Guitar, Banjo, Cornet, Sight Singing, Mandolin or Cello. One lesson weekly. Beginners or advanced pupils. Your only expense is for postage and music, which averages about 2 cents a day. Established 1898. Thousands of pupils all over the world write: "Wish I had known of you before." Leading newspapers praise our pupils' playing. Copy of newspaper notices, Booklet and free tuition offer sent on request. Address

U. S. SCHOOL OF MUSIC
Box 7 B, 225 Fifth Ave., New York City
Instruments supplied when needed. Cash or credit.

"A good pen is a conduit for the flow of thought, but a poor pen is a dam."

SPENCERIAN STEEL PENS

are good pens—always, in all styles, for all purposes.
Sample card of 12 different styles and 2 good penholders sent for 10c.
SPENCERIAN PEN CO.,
349 Broadway, New York

PHILADELPHIA

The St. James
Walnut and 13th Sts.

Ideally located in the center of business and social life.

335 Rooms—275 Baths

Rooms $2.00 per day up
Room and Bath, $2.50 per day up
Suites of 2 to 6 Rooms

Famous for its cuisine

Eugene G. Miller, Mgr.

ORNAMENTAL FENCE
25 Designs—All Steel
Handsome, cost less than wood, more durable. Don't buy a fence until you get our Free Catalogue and Special Prices.
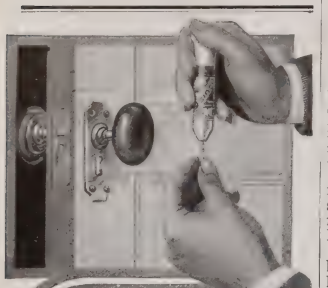
We can save you money.
Kokomo Fence Machine Co.
499 North St., Kokomo, Ind.



AGENTS My Sanitary Coffee Maker produces pure, sweet coffee, needs no settler and never wears out. Saves coffee, money and health. Every wife buys at sight; new invention; exclusive territory. Send 15c. for 50c. size, postpaid.
DR. LYONS, 430 Day St., Pekin, Ill.

Congratulations

I wish to congratulate you on the continued improvement of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, and believe you are occupying a field along the lines of practical Christian endeavor that is unique and peculiarly your own.

Sincerely yours,
Sherman, N. Y. M. L. DORMAN.

A Screw Loose?

Door knob screws will work loose, and keep on getting loose, until you set them once and for all by putting on the thread a little LEPAGE'S Glue.

Metal or wood, it makes no difference—LEPAGE'S Glue holds that screw fast for life.

LEPAGE'S GLUE

in pin-sealing tubes is quick, convenient, economical, no bad smell, no waste. Apply the tiniest drop or spread it over a square foot and what you stick stays stuck.

Get 2 Tubes today
One for your desk
One to carry home

Send for Booklet, "Glueism"
It shows how to save many hundreds of dollars' waste.

Russia Cement Co.
We manufacture Glues (hard or liquid) in bulk for all industrial purposes.

32 Essex Av., Gloucester, Mass.
Also in air-tight bottles with metal spreaders.

Library Slips with every Bottle and Tube.

White Lead on the Farm—Vehicles

You can't afford to neglect painting your farm wagons. A few small cracks will let in the weather, the wood will begin to rot, the timber to weaken, and a break-down will follow. Neglect ruins more wagons than ever-weighing.

Good old-fashioned paint made of

"Dutch Boy Painter"
Pure White Lead

and pure linseed oil is what wagons need. It holds to the wood like a mail and fills every crack and crevice. The surface of the wood is protected against moisture until the paint is actually worn away.

Our Free Painting Helps. We will send you free on request color schemes and miscellaneous painting instructions. Ask for Helps No. 2856.

NATIONAL LEAD COMPANY
New York (Combined) Chicago St. Louis Boston
Buffalo (Original) San Francisco
(John T. Lewis & Bros. Co., Philadelphia)
(National Lead & Oil Co., Pittsburgh)

THE BEST CHAIR

Continued from preceding page

stiff and weary in the cozy sitting-room. She did not sew or read the village paper or even open her Bible. She was debating matters with her conscience.

At last she took up the hand-lamp and went into the parlor. The damp chill of the room but intensified the bleakness of her spirit. For a long time she stood before the mahogany chair. Suddenly, with an air of having reached a decision, she put the lamp on the floor and knelt down with her head on the plush seat.

When she rose from her knees her face bore a look of relief. She had shifted the responsibility. The whole matter was now in the hands of the Lord.

With July came Edith and her husband, Robert, to the bungalow they had rented in the summer colony on the hill. Edith was a fluffy little blonde, warm-hearted and impulsive, a vivid contrast to her big quiet doctor-husband. They had brought with them from the city a new runabout, and rode over to see Aunt Marilla the day after their arrival.

"You see, auntie," cried Edith gaily, "we couldn't afford an auto, that's why we bought one—just to fool the patients. They think Robert has a great practice now. Put on your bonnet and come out and try it. The sooner you get the craze the more time you'll have to enjoy it."

That first automobile ride was a revelation to Marilla Holt. Edith, sitting in the rumble, smiled to see her serious aunt, who at first had clutched the seat as if she expected to be hurled into space, finally settle back with a look of pleasure. The pleasure changed to delight when Robert increased the speed and the car raced over a level stretch. Aunt Marilla was oblivious to the fact that her bonnet was hanging over one ear and her tight front locks were floating in the breeze, though at the back her French twist nobly held its own. The blood of her father had asserted itself. Though a deacon, he would race horses even coming home from church.

On the way back they met a handsome touring-car, in which sat a prosperous-looking elderly man. Marilla caught a glimpse of a shrewd smooth-shaven face which was somehow vaguely familiar.

"That's our neighbor on the hill," said Edith. "We haven't met him yet, but they say he used to live here before he went West and made a fortune. His name is Ellis."

Marilla's decorous heart leaped as though she were but twenty instead of fifty. Could it be possible that Jared had come back? Yet how little did the stout elderly man resemble the boyish Jared with the adoring eyes!

The next day was one of suffocating heat. In the afternoon Marilla Holt sat by her "front room" window, for in summer she used the cool parlor which faced north. Occasionally she looked at the mahogany chair that stood opposite. In these days she never sat on it; she would as soon have used the family Bible for a foot-stool.

As she glanced out of the window, she noticed that the dust was beginning to swirl, and that black clouds were piling up in the sky. Soon she saw a woman with flapping skirts hurrying along the road toward the house.

"Why, there's Sarah Duncan!" she exclaimed out loud. "She must have been all alone, and she's scairt to death in a thundershower."

"O Marilla!" Sarah cried, clutching her neighbor's arm; "you're so religious I thought I'd be safer with you."

Marilla began closing the windows as she said calmly: "You're just as safe here as anywhere, Sarah; but don't call me religious. I'm not deserving of it."

As the storm increased, Mrs. Duncan insisted on sitting in the middle

Continued on next page

TAILORING Salesmen who want to earn up to $200 a month showing our big samples and taking measurements for the finest made-to-order suits and overcoats at the lowest prices. No experience needed. Our new plan gets the money. Big clear profit on every sale. Send today for big outfit and new money getting plan.
WARRINGTON WOOLEN AND WORSTED MILLS
175 W. Adams St., Dept. 475, Chicago.

STUDY LAW at Home
Become a Lawyer — LEGAL DIPLOMA
We make your home a university. Leading Correspondence Law Course in America—recognized by resident colleges. New text, specially prepared by 20 Deans and leading univ. law school teachers. We Guarantee to coach free any graduate failing to pass bar examination. Special Business Law Course. "Legally trained men always succeed." Over 10,000 students enrolled. Begin now. Easy terms. Catalog and Particulars Free.
La Salle Extension University, Box 2496, Chicago, Ill.

WANT THIS SUIT? Show our samples to three friends, take two orders and make enough to get this swell tailored suit free. Simply show our new up-to-date samples. Everybody surprised, prices so low, styles so beautiful, orders come easy. Express prepaid, perfect fit guaranteed. You can make $5.00 a Day Easy. Write quick and get agent's outfit free, everything explained, and special price on a suit for yourself. It's a wonderful chance. BANNER TAILORING CO., Dept. 200, Chicago

Protect

Your Medicine, Bath, and Toilet Accessories—and beautify your bathroom with this snow white enameled All Steel Cabinet at about

One-Half Usual Cost

Enameled inside and out, dust, germ and vermin-proof. Never warps, shrinks nor swells. Bevel-plate mirror door, adjustable shelves. Nickeled bronze hinges and handle. Send postal for circular

HESS MEDICINE STEEL SANITARY CABINET LOCKER

Cheaper than wood, easily cleaned; can be hung or sunk into wall of bathroom or any room in the house. Made in four styles and four sizes. Sent on approval anywhere in United States.

Write for prices and illustrated descriptive folder

HESS, 959 Tacoma Building, Chicago
Makers, also of Steel Clothing Lockers

LADIES Make $3 to $5 Daily Selling Dress Goods, Skirts and Handkerchiefs. Free Outfit. No capital required. Mutual Fabric Co., Dept. 349, Binghamton, N.Y.

LAST CHANCE

Magazine Prices Are Going Up!!

WE shall be able to offer only a few of the magazines named below at the present very low prices after September 30, 1911. You will have to pay considerably more for most of them and as much as double for one or two. Now is the time to take advantage of the lowest possible prices for next year. This offer closes September 30, 1911.

The Christian Herald offers cannot be duplicated anywhere. The special clubs of Magazines offered in this way are controlled by us, and they can be obtained only by ordering from us. These combinations offer discounts of from 30 to 50 per cent. These clubs will enable you to save considerable money on your Magazines for 1912. All orders should be sent to The Christian Herald, Bible House, New York City. You should renew your subscription to the following magazines now, before prices go up.

American Boy,	(Regular Price)	$1.00	Hampton's,	(Regular Price)	$1.50
American Magazine,	" "	$1.50	Little Folks,	" "	$1.00
Cosmopolitan,	" "	$1.00	McClure's,	" "	$1.50
Delineator,	" "	$1.00	Pearson's	" "	$1.50
Good Housekeeping,	" "	$1.25	World Evangel,	" "	$1.00
Harper's Bazar,	" "	$1.25	World To-Day,	" "	$1.50

Woman's Home Companion, (Regular Price) $1.50

Four Genuine Bargains

CHRISTIAN HERALD ($1.50 a Year) AND ANY 1 Magazine above, $2.00
CHRISTIAN HERALD ($1.50 a Year) AND ANY 2 Magazines above, $2.65
CHRISTIAN HERALD ($1.50 a Year) AND ANY 3 Magazines above, $3.30

CHRISTIAN HERALD . ($1.50 a Year)
REVIEW OF REVIEWS . ($3.00 a Year)
ANY ONE OTHER Magazine listed above,
Send Us Only $3.00 For All Three

104 Magazines For Only $3.00

The Christian Herald 52 Issues
The Outlook 52 Issues, Including 12 Double Numbers
$3.00

Regular Subscription Price of the Above is $4.50

For "Modern Priscilla" (Fancywork—Monthly) add 50 cents to any combination
For "Farm Journal" 2 yrs. (General Farm Paper) add 25 cents to any combination
Foreign Postage Extra. Canadian Postage Extra on Magazines

All Subscribers accepting Magazine offers will have full privileges of paid-in-advance subscribers in connection with our own special Book and Premium Offers.

LAST CHANCE

The Christian Herald, Bible House, New York

FOUND RIGHT PATH

After a False Start.

"In 1890 I began to drink coffee.

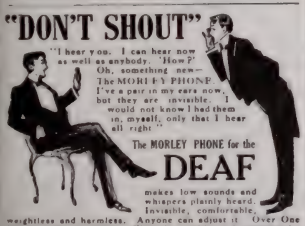
"At that time I was healthy and enjoyed life. At first I noticed no bad effects from the indulgence but in course of time found that various troubles were coming upon me.

"Palpitation of the heart took unto itself sick and nervous headaches, kidney troubles followed and eventually my stomach became so deranged that even a light meal caused me serious distress.

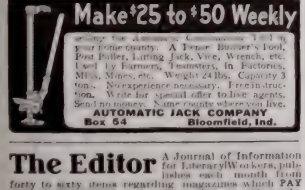
"Our physician's prescriptions failed to help me and then I dosed myself with patent medicines till I was thoroughly disgusted and hopeless.

"Finally I began to suspect that coffee was the cause of my troubles. I experimented by leaving it off, except for one small cup at breakfast. This helped some but did not altogether relieve my distress. It satisfied me, however, that I was on the right track.

"So I gave up coffee altogether and began to use Postum. In ten days I found myself greatly improved, my nerves steady, my head clear, my kidneys working better and better, my heart's action rapidly improving, my appetite improved and the ability to eat a hearty meal without subsequent suffering restored to me. And this conditon remains.



"Leaving off coffee and using Postum did this, with no help from drugs, as I abandoned the use of medicines when I began to use the food drink." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.



"There's a reason," and it is explained in the little book, "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs.

Ever read the above letter? A new one appears from time to time. They are genuine, true, and full of human interest.

ABSOLUTELY THE PUREST AND BEST CANDIES IN THE WORLD

The Editor A Journal of Information for Literary Workers, publishes each month from forty to sixty items regarding magazines which PAY FOR MANUSCRIPTS, and outlines their specific needs. One Dollar a Year. Fifteen Cents a Copy. THE EDITOR, Drawer B, Ridgewood, N.J.

THE BEST CHAIR

Continued from preceding page

of the room and holding her companion tightly by the hand. It became so dark that the two could not see the ancient elms writhing and bending in the gale except by the glare of the lightning. Within, the room was in deepest gloom.

Then there came a blinding glare of lightning simultaneous with an awful crash. A streak of fire zigzagged across the corner of the ceiling, flashed down the wall and disappeared, while the air was filled with smoke and a sulphurous smell. The women, stunned, fell to the floor. When after some moments they revived, Mrs. Duncan began to wail: "I'm killed! I'm killed!" though she was unharmed. Marilla, faint and trembling, felt that the bolt had fallen, and she was spared.

Her eyes fell on the mahogany chair. It lay overturned on the floor under the black streak on the wall. Twisted and broken, it alone had suffered from the lightning's stroke. Awestruck she gazed at the wreck.

As soon as the shower was over, Robert and Edith came flying down to the old house. Impulsive Edith threw her arms about her aunt crying: "O auntie! suppose you had been killed!"

"Through God's mercy my life was spared," said Marilla Holt solemnly; "but look at your chair!"

"My chair!" exclaimed her niece.

"Yes, yours. Sit down on the sofa, Edith. I've got something to tell you."

With her arm still about her aunt, Edith listened to her confession. Occasionally the girl patted Marilla Holt's hand affectionately, but she did not interrupt. When it was all told she smiled, though her eyes were wet.

"Now, auntie, that you've confessed what a dreadful sinner you are, I'll unburden myself. I hope I won't hurt your feelings, dear, if I tell you that the mahogany chair wasn't valuable or even very old. It was just a common parlor chair—late Empire. But the pig-pen chair! Why, my conscience has pricked me ever since I had it restored and found out its value. It ought to be right here where it came from. That chair, auntie, is a museum piece, a collector's article. It's the most perfect kind of a Queen Anne, and I've kept it and gloated over it when by rights it should be yours, for you didn't know its value when you gave it to me."

Long-absent happiness shone in Marilla Holt's face as she exclaimed: "O Edith! I'm glad—so glad that you got the best chair after all!"

Aunt and niece had been so much absorbed in their mutual confessions that they had not noticed that an automobile was stopping at the gate. The jangling of the old-fashioned doorbell startled them. Edith answered the summons and ushered in a middle-aged man. "Auntie," she said, "here's an old friend to see you."

Into Marilla Holt's cheeks surged the lovely color of youth; her eyes grew bright. For a moment the thirty years vanished as Jared Ellis took her hand and held it in his.

"Marilla," he said, "I always meant to come back; now I've come."

Called Higher

Mrs. L. Dearcley (74), of Los Angeles, has been called to the long home.

Rev. A. O. Owen (82), of Pottstown, was recently called to his heavenly home.

Mrs. A. E. Simmons, of Zion City, Ill., has been called to the Father's house.

George Anson Abell, of Madison, Wis., recently passed to join the great majority.

Mrs. C. G. Marshall (70), of Windsor, Vt., has passed to the reward of years of service.

D. F. Gerish (87), of McKinney, Texas, has been called to his reward. He served both his God and his country for many years.

Rev. Dr. P. B. Keskar, superintendent of the Leper Asylum at Vishrantipur, India, has been called to his reward after forty-four years of service as a native medical missionary.

Farms for the "land hungry" on half-crop-payment plan.

Plenty of room in the San Joaquin Valley for ten times as many people as are there now. This wonderful valley is in the heart of rich and fertile California. It is 250 miles long and 100 miles wide. A farm is ten to forty acres of irrigated land. These "little farms" will produce the income for which you would need 80 or 160 acres "back East."

You can buy land cheap. You can live off it from the start. A few chickens, a cow or two, a little garden, pigs and alfalfa, make it a money getting proposition from the start.

It is a hospitable country. Every district welcomes the new settler. There are thousands of eastern people there now. Some of them are, doubtless, your old friends and neighbors.

The Santa Fe has no land to sell. Its only interest is to get more settlers into the territory along its lines. We are careful to tell only the careful, exact truth about our country. We do not want to get settlers there who will not be satisfied after they are located. We are glad to answer all inquiries and to put you in touch with the people who have land to sell.

Won't you fill out the coupon below and learn about the land in this new country? Our San Joaquin Valley book is illustrated. There are letters from farmers telling of the success they have made. Perhaps some of them you know. You can see what they have done. You can see what you can do or what your son can do if you send him out to this new country where it is summer all the year 'round.

The climate is delightful. In June, July and August, of course, the thermometer goes to 100 degrees in the middle of the day. It is a dry, not enervating heat. As summer fruit is getting ripe, thus making money for everybody, and the nights are cool, nobody minds. January is like our June, and so vegetation grows all the time.

Under this all the year 'round growing season you can have something for market every month. Prunes and apricots in June and July. Melons and figs come in July and last until November. Oranges, lemons and grape fruit begin to ripen in November and one fruit follows another until February or later. February is olive time. Small fruits ripen in early spring. Alfalfa cuts four to seven tons per acre and is worth $8.00 to $18.00 per ton.

"A Proposition that will Interest You"

This is the title of a special circular about the wonderful plan whereby half of your crops pay for your farm. It is the most liberal plan one could wish. The initial payment required is not large.

You turn over only one-half of the gross proceeds of the crop from part of land each year till the farm is fully paid for. You pay only five per cent. interest on deferred payments.

It is desirable land and in one of the finest parts of the San Joaquin Valley.

Better get this circular at once, as only a limited number of farms are as yet available and they will be snapped up quickly.

Tear out the coupon now before you forget it. Even if you cannot go for some time, begin to learn about this wonderful valley. Let us also send you, FREE, our monthly immigration journal, "The Earth." It tells of the opportunities afforded by the country along the Santa Fe, as well as the new developments being made every month in the San Joaquin Valley.

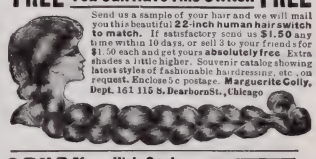
Now is a good time to go to see the land. From September 15 to October 15 the fare is only $33 to California from Chicago, $25 from Kansas City, with proportionate fares from other eastern points. Berths in Santa Fe tourist sleeping cars cost only about half the usual Pullman charge. A trip to California and through this wonderful San Joaquin Valley is well worth while.

Write now. Use this coupon. Ask us any questions you wish, too. We will be glad to answer and help you find just the location for which you are looking.

C. L. SEAGRAVES,
General Colonization Agent, A. T. & S. F. Ry.,
2250 Railway Exchange, Chicago.

Please send me information about San Joaquin Valley and half-crop-payment plan.

Name.....



Address.....

DON'T PAY TWO PRICES
Save $15.00 to $22.00 on
HOOSIER RANGES AND HEATERS

Why not buy the best when you can buy them at such low, unheard-of Factory Prices? THIRTY DAYS FREE TRIAL BEFORE YOU BUY. Our new improvements absolutely surpass anything ever produced. SEND POSTAL TODAY FOR OUR FREE CATALOG AND PRICES.
HOOSIER STOVE FACTORY 164 8t . St. Marion, Ind.

FREE You Can Have This Switch FREE

Send us a sample of your hair and we will mail you this beautiful 22-inch human hair switch to match. If satisfactory send us $1.50 any time within 10 days, or sell 3 to your friends for $1.50 each and get yours absolutely free. Extra shades a little higher. Souvenir catalog showing latest styles of fashionable hairdressing, etc., on request. Enclose 5c postage. Marguerite Colly, Dept. 161 115 S. Dearborn St., Chicago

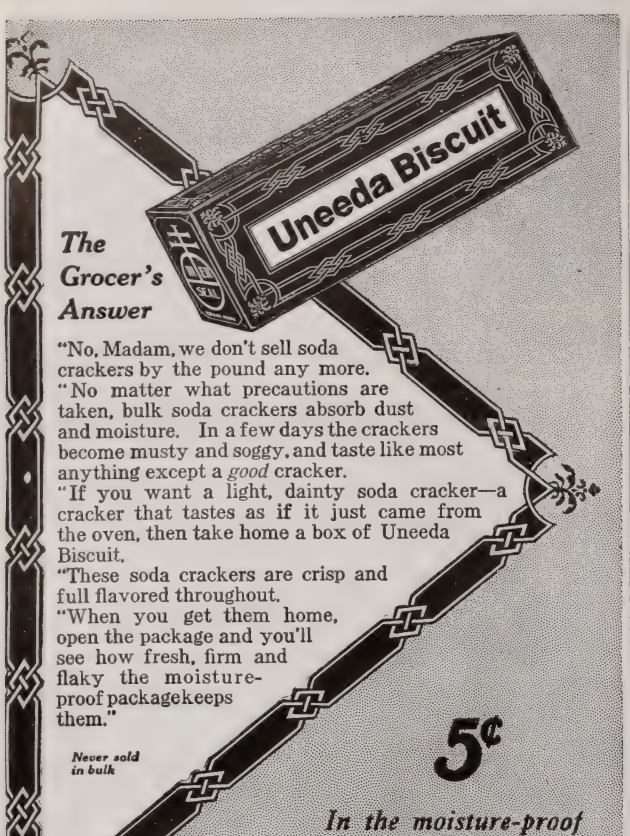
1912 Flowering Bulb Novelties

BEGONIA SOCOTRANA—Newest, winter-blooming, luxuriant, bright red flowers; newly imported.
TULIP, SAXATILIS—Rare, branching, 1 foot stalks, with 2 to 4 bright maroon-rose flowers, golden center.
IRIS SINENSIS, FIMBRIATA—New, distinct, everblooming; flowers sky-blue, spotted yellow and white.
Choice, above bulbs, each 25c doz., $2.50 prepaid.
Send for Fall catalog, showing the new fibre system of bulb growing—it's free. Now is the time to order.
FARMER SEED & NURSERY CO.
420 6th Avenue, Faribault, Minn.

STUDY LAW High-Grade Instruction by Correspondence

Prepares for the bar. Three Courses; College, Post-Graduate and Business Law. Nineteenth year. Classes begin each month. Send for catalog giving rules for admission to the bar of the several states.

Chicago Correspondence School of Law
553 Reaper Block, Chicago



WHEEL CHAIRS A wheel Chair is often an invalid's greatest comfort. We offer over 75 styles of these easy, self-propelling Invalids' Rolling Chairs, with latest improvements. Ship direct from factory to you, freight prepaid, and sell on THIRTY DAYS' TRIAL. Liberal Discounts to all sending for free Catalogue NOW.
GORDON MFG. CO.
478 Madison Ave., TOLEDO, O

UNLESS IT'S Duplex RICHMOND, VA. DE IT'S AN IMITATION

Specify "Duplex-Richmond"
We have made as many permanent customers for the Duplex Envelope System of Church Collections
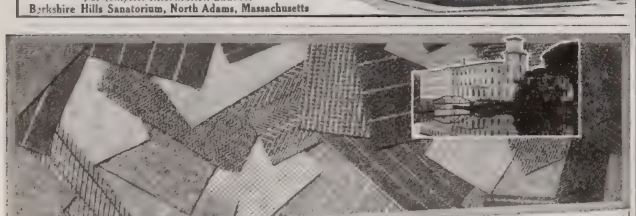
by the excellence of our service as by the excellence of our system.
DUPLEX — Richmond, Va.

BABY LAX THE ONLY LAXATIVE PERFECT FOR BABIES OR CHILDREN
SURE, SAFE, MILD, PLEASANT.
A doctor's formula perfected after years of study of babies needs. Delighted mothers praise it. Try it. Sent postpaid 25c. Address Dept. C
THE BABYLAX CO., Franklin, Pa.

The Grocer's Answer

"No, Madam, we don't sell soda crackers by the pound any more.
"No matter what precautions are taken, bulk soda crackers absorb dust and moisture. In a few days the crackers become musty and soggy, and taste like most anything except a good cracker.
"If you want a light, dainty soda cracker—a cracker that tastes as if it just came from the oven, then take home a box of Uneeda Biscuit.
"These soda crackers are crisp and full flavored throughout.
"When you get them home, open the package and you'll see how fresh, firm and flaky the moisture-proof packagekeeps them."

Never sold in bulk



5¢

In the moisture-proof package

NATIONAL BISCUIT COMPANY

The Berkshire Hills Sanatorium
For the Scientific and Effective Treatment of CANCER
Without Resorting to Surgical Procedure
The only private institution of magnitude in the United States for the exclusive treatment of Cancer and other malignant and benign new growths. Conducted by a physician of standing. Established thirty-two years.
For complete information address
Berkshire Hills Sanatorium, North Adams, Massachusetts

All-Wool Dress Goods Direct from the Mill—Fresh Off the Loom at ⅓ Saving.

Tilton Weaves have been standard for over 60 years. Very likely you have used them and know how thoroughly satisfactory they are. Our line this year shows all the new, fashionable patterns and colors—some of them are the most attractive we have ever produced.

For your new dress, suit, coat or skirt, be sure to see our samples.

Why It Pays To Buy Direct From Us

First, you save at least one-third, because we give you the discount allowed to wholesale and retail merchants. Next, you get absolutely fresh goods, made from virgin wool, no shoddy or "extract." You are sure of reliable goods, and have a wide selection of the latest and best patterns from which you select at ease in your own home. All our grades and weights are plainly marked so that you know exactly what you are getting.

Generous Samples Free Showing standard patterns, and the new Scotch effects, the new Blue Grays, Blueberry Blues, Heathers, Tans and Grays, also silk Pencil Stripes and Hair Lines. All fabrics 55 inches wide.

TILTON WOOLEN MILL (Established 1842) 103 Mill St., Tilton, New Hampshire

Spiritual Ignorance*

ACCORDING as the Bible is open to their people, so are the nations graded. The leading ones are those in which the Bible may be read by any who will. The backward ones are those in which the Bible is not known, or in which its reading is discouraged or forbidden.

It is not by chance that this is so. Light comes in with the reading of God's word. A great deal is said in these days, even by skeptics, of the mental impetus to be gained from studying the Bible; but all this is as nothing to the spiritual uplift which it affords. It gives us wings upon which we can float far above the sordid sin of earth and the time—and yet the vast majority of mankind, even among the nations nominally Christian, prefer to remain in the darkness and filth of ignorance and depravity, rather than to search the Scriptures, and learn from them how to rise nearer to God and to partake of his likeness.

One of our witty preachers has said that our religion is a seven-day religion, and that it is like a seven-day clock, which runs down unless it is wound up once a week at the Sunday services.

"But," says Dr. Farrar, "the mind of the hearer must be prepared for the sermon as much as the sermon must be prepared for the hearer," and we cannot prepare for the sermon by reading a trashy newspaper, or by idle gossip about our neighbors. It is by prayer and Bible-reading that we can best fit ourselves for the minister's message.

Perhaps it would be a juster comparison to say that we are like one-day clocks or watches, which run down unless they are wound every day. Our spiritual natures need food quite as much as do our physical natures. We all recognize more readily the likeness between the physical and the mental than between the physical and the spiritual. We know that a man's mind will grow rusty unless he exercises it and feeds it. We are far slower to see that our spiritual graces and aspirations will faint and die in the same way unless they are constantly and regularly nourished.

It is easy to do this—because no man is so poor that he cannot own a Bible; and the task of spiritual support is constantly becoming easier through the beautiful editions of separate books of the Bible. A man can carry around with him one of the Gospels, bound by itself; or the Psalms, or the epistles of Paul. Thus he can read them whenever his business gives him leisure, and with every reading, no matter how small, comes some ray of light to him—some new strength—some uplift.

"I thank God," said Mr. Moody, "that there is a height in the Bible I do not know anything about, a depth I have never been able to fathom, and it makes the book all the more fascinating. If I could take up that book and read it as I can any other book, and understand it at one reading, I should have lost faith in it years ago. It is one of the strongest proofs that it must have come down from God, that the actutest men who have dug at it for fifty years have laid down their pens and said, 'There is a depth that we know nothing of.'"

"Read the Bible," said Mr. Moody again, "as if you were seeking for something of value. It is a good deal better to take a single chapter and spend a month on it than to read the Bible at random for a month."

Study the Book, and you cannot help but grow like the Christian pictured there. You remember that Tennyson describes certain soldiers as so admiring and striving to resemble their great leader, that when a crisis came, he says:

I beheld
From eye to eye thro' all their order flash
A momentary likeness of their King.

* Topic of the Epworth League for Sunday, September 17. TEXTS: Rom. 10:1-4; II. Peter 3:16.

Touching Your Pocket

If you don't paint you are wasting money. The protection you get, is as necessary as fire insurance.

True, fire consumes quickly, while weather conditions destroy slowly; but weather is a certainty, an ever-present foe, while fire is only a possibility.

The timely use of

Lowe Brothers High Standard Liquid Paint

prevents weather loss, and further saves money by its long wear, extra hiding ability and proved reliability, always uniform—sure to give best results, when applied by a careful painter.

The "Little Blue Flag" on High Standard and other paint products for every purpose, is an emblem that solves all paint problems.

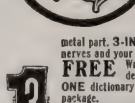
Our agent near you will tell you about "Little Blue Flag" paint products. Or ask us.

FREE:—"Harmony in Color," showing latest preferred color combinations. Also "Common Sense about Interiors," a book of practical suggestions, advice and information. "Portfolio of Good Homes by Good Architects," sent for 25c.

The Lowe Brothers Company
470 E. Third St.
Dayton, Ohio

Boston
New York
Chicago
Kansas City
Lowe Bros. Ltd., Toronto.

Look for the Little Blue Flag—The Trade Mark with the Reputation Behind It.



OLD-MADE NEW

Old sewing machines run like new—new ones STAY new if oiled with 3-IN-ONE. It's the best sewing machine oil on earth—goes right into the mechanism—spreads evenly over all bearings—reduces friction—prevents wear—stops rattle—will not dry out, cake, gum or collect dust, contains no grease or acid—polishes wooden case and prevents rust on every metal part. 3-IN-ONE will save your machine, your nerves and your strength. Try it.

FREE Write us at once. Give name of your dealer. Get sample bottle and 3-IN-ONE dictionary FREE. A Library Slip in every package.

3-IN-ONE OIL COMPANY
42 B S Broadway New York City

Protecto Plate
A Necessity in Every Home

Two iron plates, joined 10-inch diameter. Chutes on under side diffuse heat; intervening air chamber equalizes it. Separating fire from cooking utensil, prevents scorching or burning food. Heats flat-irons uniformly. Inverted pan over plate, bakes potatoes in 20 minutes, biscuits in 6. Makes most brown toast. Saves worry, utensils and 50 per cent. fuel. Prepaid 50c. Agents wanted.
C. H. CONNOLLY MFG. CO., 123 Liberty St., New York

STAMMERING HABIT
permanently corrected. Natural speech taught. Reed Method being introduced into public schools. Department for training teachers. Endorsed by highest authorities. Special summer classes for children. Trial Week Free.
REED SCHOOL 367 Hubbard Ave., Detroit, Mich.

Here They Are!—Varsity Socks College Colors

HERE they are!
Correct Varsity Colors.
Knit in the very latest fashionable stripe.

Harvard Crimson — Yale Blue — Brown Brown—Dartmouth Green—Chicago Red—Northwestern Purple—all these colors striped with white in the nobbiest, catchiest combination you've seen in many a day.

Also "Pennsy" red and blue, Princeton orange and black, Columbia blue and white, Virginia orange and blue, Michigan blue and maize, Purdue black and old gold, Annapolis blue and gold, and West Point black, grey and gold—the true varsity colors knit in the most fashionable stripe effect going.

Have a look at the smartly well-dressed feet shown above.

Get the effect in your mind's eye.

Then send us $3.00 for each six pairs of Shawknit Varsity Socks you wish or—ask your regular dealer for them.

The price is the same whether you buy from us or from your dealer.

Shawknit Varsity Socks are "worth the money." They are knit from finely spun mercerized lisle—sheer, thin and soft but very durable, and they are guaranteed. (See Shawknit Guarantee reproduced below. This guarantee is attached to every pair of Shawknit socks.)

In Shawknit Varsity Socks, you get—not only the true varsity colors, combined in the latest fashionable stripe, but you get the perfect fitting kind of socks that give your feet "the genuinely well-dressed appearance."

True fit also means well balanced wear. All Shawknit socks wear evenly. They are durable. Holes and darns are reduced to a minimum.

The colors of Shawknit Varsity Socks are "fast." They will not fade. They will not "run" in the wash.

Send for a half-dozen pairs of Shawknit Varsity Socks today.

Show your colors during vacation and be ready for the football season.

If you order from us, please be sure to state your size and the colors you wish, sending $3.00 for each six pairs ordered.

Your money back if you are not entirely satisfied.

Send orders for Shawknit Varsity Socks to the Shaw Stocking Co., 902 Shaw Street, Lowell, Mass., or—

Our Unlimited Guarantee on All Shawknit Socks

Look for Stores That Sell—

Shawknit
REG. U. S. PAT. OFF. TRADE MARK.
Socks

HARVARD · DARTMOUTH · COLUMBIA · U. of P. · VIRGINIA · MICHIGAN · CHICAGO · WEST POINT

BROWN · YALE · PRINCETON · CORNELL · ANNAPOLIS · PURDUE · NORTH WESTERN

—"and just look at your kitchen!"

"Yes~ Old Dutch Cleanser keeps my whole house spick and span. It saves time and makes work so much easier."

Contains no caustic or acid.

Christian Herald

COPYRIGHT, 1911, BY THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

SUBSCRIPTION, $1.50 PER ANNUM
PUBLISHED 52 TIMES A YEAR

NEW YORK, SEPTEMBER 13, 1911

VOL. 34—NO. 37. PRICE 5 CENTS
OFFICES: BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK

GOLDEN GLOW

From the Painting by Charles C. Curran

Our Mail-Bag

Questions and Answers

E. R. D., Sandusky, N. Y. 1. How can an appointment to West Point be secured? 2. What is the maximum age at which candidates are accepted? 3. Does the government support the cadets?

1. Through the congressional representative of the district in which you live. 2. Candidates for West Point must be between the ages of 17 and 22. 3. The cadets receive $500 per year and their uniforms.

F. L. R. Why did Garibaldi so suddenly England after the enthusiastic welcome tendered him there in 1864?

England was still then in alliance with "the man of evil" (Louis Napoleon), who was urging the claims of the papal see to the retaining of its temporal power. Garibaldi made a public speech in London in favor of Mazzini (who was against the Pope). Consequently, Garibaldi was at once notified that "his presence in England was an embarrassment to the government," and he left.

L. F. B., Emporia, Kan. 1. Was there ever a formal vote taken which decided the national language of this country? 2. Was tobacco used for smoking by the Indians previous to the coming of white men to America?

1. We know of no record of any such vote. Every man has always been free to use any language he wished, but as English was the native language of the vast majority of the early settlers that became the national language. 2. Yes. The white man learned the habit from the Indian.

O. L. M., Lynchburg, Va. Where is the island which is identified with the story of Robinson Crusoe?

It is believed that Daniel Defoe founded his story of Robinson Crusoe on the adventure of Alexander Selkirk, who lived for four years on the island of Juan Fernandez, which is near the thirty-fourth parallel of South latitude and about 400 miles west of Valparaiso in the Pacific Ocean.

S. M. Bevin, New York City. This is the hour of destiny for all the nations. Many of us have long been praying that peace on earth might dawn. I worked for years with Mrs. Julia Ward Howe and her noble husband, in the great cause. It is especially one for women. If they would be less worldly, they could accomplish wonders for peace. In this crisis it would seem that none of them could remain indifferent. They must take the stand that they will not bear children to fill armies for nations which place their confidence in armaments, and do not hesitate to fill the world with widows and orphans. The rulers of these nations seem to forget that the Prince of Peace has come. They are hindering the chariots of redemption, and postponing the day of the sublimer conflict in which the soul of good is to overcome the soul of evil.

There is much that women can do to promote the cause of world-peace. Let them write to the Secretary of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Peace League and organize Circles in their resp

Continued on last column

Magazine Prices Advanced

PUBLISHERS of most of the general magazines have found it necessary to advance prices. We are unable to renew our contracts for the unusually low rates of last year. Next year's prices will be from 25 to 50% higher than those for the present year. You have only until September 30 to renew your present year's subscriptions on the magazines in our list. It does not matter if your subscription does not expire until after the first of next year. You should renew NOW and save the difference you will have to pay after September 30. We guarantee that the prices of those magazines marked X will be higher in combination with the Christian Herald. If they are not, we will refund you the difference paid. Some of these magazines we will not offer at all. Here are the season's best offers of popular magazines, at prices that cannot be duplicated anywhere. Each combination includes a year's subscription to the Christian Herald, new or renewal. Tell your friends about the Christian Herald's combinations. This is Your Last Chance to Get Magaztnes at Such Bargains!

American Boy	(Regular Price)	$1.00
xAmerican Magazine	" "	1.50
xCosmopolitan	" "	1.00
xDelineator	" "	1.00
xGood Housekeeping	" "	1.25
Harper's Bazar	" "	1.50
Little Folks	" "	1.00
xMcClure's	" "	1.50
xPearson's	" "	1.50
World Evangel	" "	1.00
xWorld To-Day	" "	1.50
xWoman's Home Companion	" "	1.50

ANY ONE MAGAZINE IN THIS LIST, ONE YEAR, AND THE Christian Herald One Year—52 Issues—Regular Rate $1.50 — SEND US ONLY $2.00 FOR THE TWO

ANY TWO MAGAZINES IN THIS LIST, ONE YEAR, AND THE Christian Herald One Year—52 Issues—Regular Rate $1.50 — SEND US ONLY $2.65 FOR THE THREE

ANY THREE MAGAZINES IN THIS LIST, ONE YEAR, AND THE Christian Herald One Year—52 Issues—Regular Rate $1.50 — SEND US ONLY $3.30 FOR THE FOUR

For "Modern Priscilla" (Fancywork—Monthly) add 50 cents to any combination.
For "Farm Journal" 2 yrs. (General Farm Paper) add 25 cents to any combination.
Foreign Postage Extra. Canadian Postage Extra on Magazines.
The magazines above may be sent to one or different addresses, as you prefer.

CHRISTIAN HERALD . ($1.50 a Year)
REVIEW OF REVIEWS ($3.00 a Year)
ANY ONE OTHER Magazine in List Above,
Send Us Only $3.00 For All Three

Christian Herald ONE YEAR 52 ISSUES AND The Outlook ONE YEAR—52 ISSUES—INCLUDING TWELVE ILLUSTRATED DOUBLE NUMBERS — ALL FOR ONLY $3

Both the CHRISTIAN HERALD and the OUTLOOK must be ordered to the same name and address, if desired at this special combination price

FREE Christian Herald Almanac SOMETHING ENTIRELY NEW

The Christian Herald Almanac will be sent Free upon publication November 1, to every subscriber who renews now with the special magazine clubs. This is an entirely new work just compiled by us especially for our subscribers. It contains, besides the regular Almanac features, an extended presentation of all kinds of valuable religious information—statistical and otherwise. It will tell you things about your own church denomination that you will want to know. There is a large department devoted to the United States, made up of general information that we all want to know about, but seldom can find. Here it is, condensed and intensely interesting, as showing our wonderful growth and development. Most valuable of all are the pages given to Agriculture. They have been compiled with great care. It gives the range of prices on all principal products and a wealth of valuable information for agriculturists and city dwellers. All those NOW taking advantage of the above offers will later on have the privilege of securing any of our own premium books at a very special low price, without a subscription.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, NEW YORK

Our Mail-Bag

Continued from first column

neighborhoods in every State. These Circles are increasing with great rapidity. A full working programme is supplied semi-monthly. The Circle movement promises to be a great national social, moral and intellectual influence which will tell mightily for peace in the years to come

J. M., Festus, O. Is there any person or company producing natural gas by other means than boring wells?

No. Natural gas is found in certain parts of the world where the rock formations of the carboniferous era have contained vegetable matter from which it was distilled. Coal and oil are usually closely allied with this produce

L. L., Reynoldsville, Pa. 1. What is meant by watering stock? 2. Are doctrines taught in the Bible, or are they men's opinions from reading the Bible? 3. Is it right to agree or disagree with a Christian brother on doctrines

1. It is where a corporation increases the volume of its stock (or shares) without a proportional increase of the paid-in capital. 2. The doctrines creeds and confessions of faith, as we know them were formulated by bodies of men at different times and represent the beliefs of each different body sect, or denomination. The doctrines of the early Church were drawn direct from the Scriptures as the teachings of Jesus, and were gradually differentiated and added to as time advanced. The essential doctrines of man's primal innocence, his fall, the plan of redemption through Christ Saviour, the advent of Jesus, his teaching, his atoning death, and the promise of his return, were the bases; but these were largely added to afterward

Now there are many conflicting points of doctrine held by the different sects, though nearly all hold the essentials in common. 3. There are many points on which it is difficult to agree, but when the great principles are held in common, Christians may well agree to differ on minor things.

J. J. C., Portland, Ore. Hundreds of books have been written concerning the Bible. Many of these have long since been forgotten. It is impossible to give any accurate estimate of the number.

J. D. J., Allenton, Mo. 1. What are the chief advantages in hearing and reading sermons when both are compared? 2. Why may not justice, courage, fortitude, humility, sincerity and other important virtues also have been mentioned to be added to faith in II. Pet. 1: 5-7

1. In reading sermons one misses much in contrast that is gained in hearing them delivered by an able preacher. Emphasis, point, suggestion, all the various qualities that go to make oratory effective, are largely lost in the reading. Sometimes that are tremendously effective if delivered by reason of the earnestness and intense spiritual force of the speaker, may seem tame and ineffective when read in cold print. 2. These qualities might have been added, but the cardinal grace is faith, which leads all the others, and may be said in a sense to embrace them. We consider the apostle's list a comprehensive one for all purposes.

M. B., Jersey City, N. J. Who wrote the poem which has for its burden, "I will live by the side of the road"?

Sam Walter Foss.

M. L. P., Hempstead, Tex. Who said, "O Liberty, how many crimes are committed in thy name"?

Madame Roland, on the guillotine, in what Macaulay refers to it in his essay upon Mirabeau.

Continued on page 918

NEW YORK, SEPTEMBER 13, 1911

THE · CHRISTIAN · HERALD

A WEEKLY ILLUSTRATED NEWSPAPER FOR THE HOME

Samoan Christians Building a Coral Church

A Group of Native Children

A Samoan House in Course of Construction

IN A PARADISE OF THE PACIFIC

By Rev. WILLIAM DURBAN, D. D.

IN MY London home one of my most valued privileges is the frequent opportunity of conversing with missionaries—some of these heroes and heroines being on furlough in England, others being for a brief interval resting in the British metropolis on their way to or from America. Seldom have I been more deeply interested than in my recent interview with the subject of this article, the Rev. Edward Hawker, an English missionary who has for several years been stationed under the American flag, in the romantic island of Tutuila, the largest member of the portion of the Samoan Archipelago under the rule of the great Republic.

As I requested from Mr. Hawker a little description of the island, he complied in these words:

"The Samoan Islands are all unspeakably lovely. This applies alike to those belonging to Germany and to the five dependent on America. They are for the most part made up of mountains covered with magnificent forest growths, excepting where the numerous and spacious clearings are planted with valuable cocoa-nut palms and other tropical productions. The coast lines are almost everywhere margined with coral reefs of brownish green and slimy rock built up by the marvelous little marine molluscs of which so much has been said and written. These reefs are fine places for fishing and are very profitable to the natives, as the tides leave immense quantities of crabs, shellfish and red and green fishes in great variety. The boys and girls bring home baskets well filled and rich feasts are constantly enjoyed.

"Those beautiful Samoan children when very young become most expert swimmers in the warm ocean. The boys love surf swimming, and perform the most extraordinary antics under water. They go out on boards three feet long, and then by the tremendous rush of the Pacific waves are carried to shore over the reefs at a tremendous pace, steering with almost magical skill. Indeed, the juveniles have delightful times both on shore and in the plantations. The boys climb palms to the height of fifty, sixty, seventy, or eighty feet. There are no branches till the top, where the leaves, from fifteen to eighteen feet in length, form a graceful cluster. The girls never climb; but the boys simply walk up a tree at a great rate. The feat looks easy, but they have no shoes, and are not impeded by much clothing. When a lad reaches the top he tears off the great nuts, which drop with great thuds."

At this point I asked Mr. Hawker if he would describe how the Samoan Islanders had responded to the Gospel.

"Less than two hundred years ago," replied the missionary, "Samoa was unknown. In 1727 the French Government fitted out an expedition under the famous navigator La Perouse. He reached Tutuila and landed at that island for water, but not one of the eleven men whom he sent ashore in boats returned, for the fierce natives clubbed them all to death. The result of that tragedy was that no other ship touched at any Samoan island for many years, and no detailed information was further gained until John Williams, then laboring devotedly at Tahiti, visited the archipelago. He is known as the martyr of Erromanga. He was indeed a great man. In a period of three months he built at Rarotonga a ship for himself, sixty feet long and twelve feet wide, and in it he sailed to the Samoan group and touched first at Savaii, the largest of all, and then went from island to island. He landed at Savaii several of his native teachers.

A Native Belle of American Samoa

Wonderful was the outcome of the visits of John Williams and of the first efforts of the native teachers. He went back two years later and called at Leone Bay in Tutuila. This is the fine harbor for the sake of which the American Government acquired what is now known as American Samoa—the five islands forming the eastern group. The natives of Tutuila came off in canoes to see the strange craft, the missionary ship. The chief rose in his canoe and cried, 'Are you the great white teacher who tells of the true God?' Williams replied that he was. 'Then we are waiting for you,' said the chief. It turned out that one of the Tutuilan islanders had been in Savaii, had heard of Jesus Christ, and had taken home the good news. The people were asking for more light.

"John Williams went to England, secured six fresh missionaries, and two of these were stationed at Tutuila, where a marvelous work commenced. I came across an old diary of a young man named Murray, who in those days went from England to Samoa for his health, and lived there. It is a most wonderful record. The services were crowded all the week. The people were overcome with emotion. Strong men and warlike chiefs fainted under conviction of sin. Till then they had never felt what sin meant. The Gospel was carried from island to island till all became Christian isles, and now there is no heathenism left. All the people can read and write, and a Christian church stands in every village."

I asked the missionary whether the enthusiasm of these Samoans was still sustained. He replied, "The people dearly love their religious services. We never find any of the young folk loitering about in any village during the time of worship. They of course have their faults. There are backsliders, some fall into gross sin, but these are only occasional instances. Their religion is on the whole sound and true. Every Samoan village builds its own church and supports its own teacher. In each plantation are some trees which are tabu, or dedicated to religious purposes. The people sacrifice a large proportion of their profits for both home and mission work. The mission in New Guinea is mainly carried on by Samoans, and we have about seventy of these native Samoans out in various islands, especially the Ellice and Gilbert Isles and New Guinea. They are very heroic, ready for exile for ten years, and even for death.

"The first Christian church in my own island of Tutuila was a truly wonderful one. It had only three members, and these three went off to preach to the cannibals of the South Seas. The churches at home need something of the glow and enthusiasm of these simple islanders."

The American Pulpit

A SERMON BY

Rev. J. Wilbur Chapman, D.D.*

THE ONE WAY OF ESCAPE

TEXT: Heb. 2:3. "How shall we escape if we neglect so great salvation?"

THE plan of salvation is the wonder of wonders of all the ages. It is so marvelous that men with the greatest minds the world has known have never been able to think their way through it. They have set sail with their intellectual craft, and have gone east and west, north and south, but like the apostle of old they have turned back, saying, "It is past finding out." Concerning the plan of salvation wise men have always wondered. All the hosts of God's redeemed will sing of it throughout eternity. Yet, while it is so wonderful, it is so simple that the smallest child in your home, understanding the difference between right and wrong, may know enough about it to be a Christian.

The first chapter of the Epistle to the Hebrews is a wonderful description of Jesus Christ. It is said by some Bible teachers to be the greatest description of him in the Word of God. He is preferred above the angels. His eternity is mentioned in the most striking figures of speech and his greatness wonderfully described, and when the author has reached the climax of his description, he says, "Therefore we ought to give the more earnest heed to the things which we have heard, lest at any time we should let them slip."

Losing the Truth

There are two ways of reading this text. The second reading is: "Therefore, we ought to give the more earnest heed to the things which we have heard, lest they should run away from us as water from a leaking vessel." And if ever you have lived in the country, as I have done, and have gone down to the spring for a drink of water, and the cup which you lifted to your lips has been leaky, you have found that the water has run away almost too rapidly for you to quench your thirst. Evidently the author has this in mind. Men lose the truth in that way.

There was a time in your experience when you believed absolutely in the integrity of the Scriptures, when you believed sincerely in the deity of Jesus; but, somehow, under the influence of the world, under the influence of men who have held contrary views, you have loosened your hold upon those beliefs. They have been slipping away from you. The apostle says you ought to give the more earnest heed. There is still another reading of this passage, which is as follows: "Therefore we ought to give the more earnest heed to the things which we have heard, lest at any time we should drift away from them." Drifting is an unconscious process. You have been on the stream on a summer day. The oars of your boat have been lying by your side. You have drifted so slowly that you never realized that you were moving until you turn your eyes back and see the place where a little while before your boat was anchored. Men drift that way. They become blinded by sin, and sometimes, as they stop and think, they gaze back to the other days, when God was a reality, when Jesus Christ was a personal Saviour, when the Word of God seemed as if it had been written for their hearts alone. So the apostle says: "Therefore we ought to give the more earnest heed."

"Almost Persuaded"

After reading the description of Jesus, and after reading the warning which the apostle sounds out concerning our drifting, we find the text facing us: "How shall we escape if we neglect so great salvation?" It is a possible thing for one to be very near to Christ and not be saved. A great Atlantic steamer was making her way across the Atlantic Ocean when the passengers were startled by the cry, "Man overboard!" There was a scene of great excitement. One man sprang to the rail and shouted out, "I will give £1,000 to the one who saves that man, for he is my brother!" The lifeboat was lowered and the sailors made their way to the sinking man. Presently a cheer sounded out. The sinking man had been reached. When the lifeboat came near to the great steamer, they fastened ropes round the man who had been rescued, and gave the signal to lift. They drew him higher and higher, and just as they were about to lift him over the side of the vessel, the rope slipped and the man bounded away, struck the lifeboat, and sank into the stream. I have seen men as near to Christ as that; swayed by a mighty emotion, stirred by a holy memory, quickened by the minister's preaching, lifted by the power of a mother's love, they have come near to God. But that is not enough. We may be very near and yet be lost.

It will not be difficult to remember what I have to present in this message. It all centres round three words—"Great," "Neglect," "Escape." It is a great salvation because it discloses to us a great Saviour. He is able to save to the uttermost. Literally it reads "Able to save to the furthest throw." That means the man who is deepest in sin, the man who is furthest from God. The man who is most hopeless and helpless can lift his eyes toward Christ, and cry out, saying, "God be merciful to me," and grace can reach him.

Once in a church in New England a distinguished woman told me that she had often been the guest of royalty, and gave the names of kings and queens at whose courts she had been welcome. She told me the names of people in the city of New York to whose homes she had gone again and again as a guest, and I knew that these people represented the highest type of social life. But she told me that in all the round of pleasure she had had an aching heart. When I presented to her as simply as possible the plan of salvation through Jesus Christ, she bowed her head, and I thought I detected traces of tears coursing down her cheeks. When I said, "Will you accept him as your Saviour?" she answered in a whisper, "Yes, I will." Some days after this I had the privilege of meeting her again, and she gave this testimony: She said that all the years which she had devoted simply to pleasure, when put over against the few days that had passed since she had given herself to Jesus Christ, were as nothing. She said, "Peace is mine, pardon is mine, forgiveness is mine."

Unto the Uttermost

I think it is a great salvation that can reach to the lowest and at the same time climb to the highest. "How shall we escape if we neglect so great salvation?" It is a great salvation not only because it discovers to us a great Saviour, but because it suggests a salvation from greatest sin. One of the most distinguished preachers in New York said one day as he stood in a great pulpit and looked down upon the face of a man lying in his casket at the foot of the pulpit, "Of all the men who have worked in our city I think this man was almost the greatest. I pay a tribute to his memory. He has influenced the city profoundly in his mission." When he had finished his tribute many came forward, and as they looked into the upturned face it was with real emotion. Then the poor of New York came to see their friend and they filed past for a considerable time, some of them bending over and baptizing his face with their tears. Finally, there came a great number of men, each with a white rose, which they placed in the casket until it was covered, and then the roses fell from the casket to the floor. It was a monument of flowers reared to the memory of a man who had served three terms in prison. He had been called in the early days a most violent criminal. He had been a man profane and ignorant. It is said that he was seated one night in gloom and misery in an alley-way of a city, when a missionary came along and handed him a little tract. The poor fellow tore it in pieces, and said with an oath, "If you want to help me, give me your coat. You must see that I am freezing." Then the missionary, who was himself thinly clad, took off his own coat, and gave it to him. This act of kindness almost broke the man's heart. Jerry McAuley, then one who was deepest in iniquity, and the farthest from God, was wonderfully saved. It took a great Saviour to save him. "How shall we escape if we neglect so great salvation?"

It is a great salvation in so many ways. Great in its pardon; great in its forgiveness. Can any of you tell me the difference between human pardon and divine pardon? I was once in one of the Southern States when the Governor of the State gave me the opportunity of visiting the prison. He said, "There is a pardon for one of the men. I will send it by your hands." Since that day, I have often imagined that man, on being set free, making his way to his home, and spending the first night with his household. I have thought of him sleeping at home that first night, the first for many months. I have imagined him waking suddenly in the night with a shout of fear and saying, "My sin! My sin!" His wife bends down to comfort him, and says "But, husband, you are a pardoned man." And just to make it sure she brings the Governor's pardon, and shows it to him. But he cries out again, "My sin! My sin!" Do you not see the difficulty? He is a pardoned man, but he is not a justified man. When the Governor pardons, he only pardons; but when God pardons, he justifies. I have many times tried to give a definition of justification. I could give a theological definition, but I am not giving a message to theologians. I have many times tried to imagine what justification really is. I have looked into the face of the baby of my household, unmarked with sin, and have wished that I might be as pure, and as free from sin, as he. And when I have thought of my many failures, I have been all but disheartened. But in the sight of God, my sin is put away, and in God's thought I am freed from its penalty and power, and it is marvelous to be thus justified in God's sight, freely and forever.

Blotted Out Transgressions

It is great also in its forgiveness. And the difference between human forgiveness and divine forgiveness is this: you injure me very much and I forgive you, but every time I see you I remember the injury. God does not do this. I remember, when I was a lad, hurting my mother's feelings very much. She came again and again across the lawn seeking me, but all through the day I eluded her. Then, just as the day was dying out of the sky, and when every boy feels the need of his mother, I felt the need of mine. I stole back to the house; and I can still feel her arms about me as she drew me up against her, and said, "My boy, your mother will forgive you." Then putting her face down close to mine, a thing which she did not realize meant so much, she said: "But it will be hard to forget." That is human forgiveness, but it is very far from being God's method of forgiveness. Some of you know that the sin of past years has been condemning you. In the quiet of the night, conscience has been speaking again and again, and you have said, as a man said to me in Philadelphia, "If God forgives, what about my sin?" It is plainly stated in the Bible that when he forgives he forgets.

A minister was one day preaching a sermon on redemption and forgiveness, when it occurred to him that he might tell his own story. He had been a wanderer. He had almost broken his mother's heart. "But," he said, "Jesus found me." He was preaching to a great crowd of people, and stretching out his arms over that great throng of men and women he said, "Men, a Saviour who can save one such as I, can save you." When the service was over the church officers gathered about him, and said, "You never preached before as you did tonight." When they had passed on, down the aisle there came an old woman. Her hair was gray, but it was like a halo of glory. Her brow was furrowed, but it was as if an angel's fingers had touched it. When she reached the minister, she put up her trembling hands, and clasped them behind his neck, and said, "O Jimmie, what made you tell it? Why did you tell it? You never were bad in all this world." And yet, years before, he had almost broken her heart with his sin, and she with a mother's love had forgotten. That is a suggestion as to God's way of treating us. He will remember your sin against you no more forever. "How shall we escape if we neglect so great salvation?"

The Price

But I hear some of you say, "I know I should be better." Well, what will you do? You say, "I will reform." What does that mean? You say, "From this time on, I will not commit that sin again which has so harmed me. I will turn away from that transgression which has weakened me. From this time on I will be true." That does not meet the case. Let us suppose that I owe you $1,000, and I go into your office to-morrow morning and

Continued on next page

* Dr. Chapman (Presbyterian) is America's leading evangelist.

THE ROCKS OF SAMARANG

'TWAS the English cruiser Bedford,
On Korea's Yellow Sea;
Southwest coast of Quelpart Island,
Where an awful doom must be.

'Twas, no doubt, the guilty speeding,
With a mighty rush and clang;
Heedless of the sullen presence
Of the Rocks of Samarang.

Princess of the British navy,
Notable for speed and size;
There's no chance to save the vessel;
So, a hapless wreck, she lies!

Eighteen lives must pay the forfeit,
Trapped within the stokehold there!
But what of the guilty speeders?
They will live, and never care!

They will not be brought to justice,
Whatsoever tears be shed
By their frightened, mourning loved ones
At the story of the dead!

Bitter is the lot of mortals,
By untoward fate coerced;
E'er to labor for a pittance—
Ever to endure the worst!

They cannot consult their safety,
On the billows or the land;
But where there's the greatest peril,
It must fall on them to stand!

Blow, ye winds, where they are lying,
Victims of a needless ill!
Sigh a requiem above them;
In that stokehold all so still!

Oh, let nevermore such folly,
And such crime, enacted be,
As upon the cruiser Bedford,
On Korea's Yellow Sea!

Be no more such guilty speeding,
With such mighty rush and clang;
Heedless of the sullen presence
Of the Rocks of Samarang!

EDEN REEDER LATTA.

The One Way of Escape

Continued from preceding page

say, "Sir, I was in the church last night and decided to be better. I have made up my mind never again while I live to go in debt." Maybe you would take me by the hand, and say, "That is fine. I congratulate you." But you would not open your private drawer and take out my note for $1,000 and hand it to me, saying, "That settles your account. That pays the note." No, you would say, "See here, sir; your reformation is for the future; your indebtedness is for the past." And you cannot ignore the sin of yesterday.

It is great in its sacrifice. Jesus died that we might live. He paid the debt we owe. I put the last two words together—"Neglect," "Escape." Some seem to have the idea that they are not in danger unless they commit great sin; that they are all right until they are guilty of some great transgression. Just fold your arms and stop sinning to-day, and reformation cannot touch yesterday, and resolution cannot avail for last year. One day, a man started out in a boat on the Niagara River a mile above the falls. He was weary and sought to rest on his oars; but he did not know the current. He sat there with arms folded, and men on the shore who knew the current shouted to him, "The falls are ahead of you!" But he did not move. People ran down the bank waving their hands at him, and shouting, "The falls are ahead of you," but he gave no heed. He just sat with folded arms, and the mighty current of Niagara swept him over. Neglect cost him his life.

I know only one way to be saved. Repent. Repent of that sin that has cursed you. Repent of that sin that has mocked you. Repent of that sin that has undermined your character. Secondly, believe on the Lord Jesus Christ. Third, confess him as your Saviour. Fourth, obey him in your living. Do it now! It is not as if you had to wait till the way grows easier. Come now! Ever since Jesus Christ died upon Calvary, God has been waiting, waiting, waiting, for you to take his forgiveness. "How shall we escape if we neglect so great salvation?"

Caring for Number One

By EUGENE THWING

SELF-RELIANCE is a necessary part of every man's equipment, but if carried too far it will destroy his value as a member of society and shut against him the gate of heaven. The man who takes as his motto, "Look out for number one," not only has chosen a long ago discarded rule of selfishness; he has fixed his own doom. His life is like the wild ass' skin of Balzac's story, which shrank every time a wish was made upon it. Every time such a life spends itself upon itself it grows littler and littler until it vanishes away, and nothing is left richer in heaven or earth because of its passing.

. . .

TAKING care of number one is a practice which does not bother itself with such activities as the Big Brother Association, the Rest Home for Working Girls, the Children's Paradise at Mont-Lawn, the Old Ladies' Home, the Junior Republic, the free hospitals, the slum settlements, and countless other beautiful enterprises where the Master's command, "Feed my lambs, feed my sheep," is being obeyed. "Bear ye one another's burdens," and "Inasmuch" are the mottoes under which the tears of the world are being wiped away, and the greatest achievements of Christian civilization are being recorded.

The world is quick to register its scorn of the man who thinks and acts only for number one. When the steamship Elbe sank in the North Sea there were men of that type on board. It was a dark night and stormy. There was a sudden shock and crash, a panic and wild confusion, a rush for the life-boats. The brave captain, who went down with his vessel, stood on the bridge and commanded the crew to save the helpless first, the women and the children. But the account says the crew were wholly concerned about their own safety. Women and children were left to perish. The captain's own son was dragged from a life-boat, and his place taken by a strong man. Only one woman was saved. The great ship lifted her bows high in the air and slowly but surely sank with her cargo of three hundred and fourteen lives, among them a multitude of helpless women and children. As she went down the men of the crew in the life-boat were moving off to a place of safety. A wave of indignation swept the civilized world as the telegraph announced the conduct of the crew who "looked out for number one."

. . .

THE real, tangible work that is being done by the followers of Him who "pleased not himself" is accomplishing far more in winning other followers than all the preaching by voice or pen.

A chaplain in the army during the war was passing over the battlefield when he saw a wounded soldier lying upon the ground. The chaplain had his Bible under his arm, and he stooped down and said to the man, "Would you like me to read something from the Bible?" The wounded man said, "I'm so thirsty, I would rather have a drink of water."

The chaplain hurried off, and as quickly as possible brought the water. After the man had drunk the water he said, "Could you lift my head and put something under it?" The chaplain removed his light overcoat, rolled it up, and tenderly lifting the head, put it as a pillow for the tired head to rest on.

"Now," said the man, "if only I had something over me! I am so cold!" There was only one thing that the chaplain could do, and that was to take off his coat and cover the man. As he did so, the wounded man looked up in his face and said, "For God's sake, if there is anything in that book that makes a man do for another what you have done for me, let me hear it."

. . .

AT ONE of the sessions of the Parliament of Religions Prince Serge Wolskonsky related a humorous Russian legend which well illustrates the effect of "looking after number one" at the cost of others.

An extremely wicked old woman had died and fallen into grievous torment. One day she saw an angel flying through the blue sky, and she called to the angel and bade him carry a message to God that her torment might be relieved, for she had suffered more than she could endure. Then the angel presented this petition, and God said: "Go and ask her if she has ever done any good to a fellow being." When the angel made this inquiry the old woman pondered and pondered, for she had been very wicked. Finally, she remembered that she had once given a carrot to a beggar. Then God said to the angel: "Find the carrot and stretch it out to the poor sinner." So the angel held the carrot out, and when the old woman grasped it, she began to rise out of the horrible depths. The angel lifted and the old woman felt herself rise higher and higher, but there was a great weight about her feet, and looking down, she saw that another sinner was clinging to her, and as they rose another and another followed, each sustained by the grasp upon the one above; and still the carrot held. In midair the old woman was seized by a horrible fear lest the carrot should break. So she began to remonstrate with the sinner directly below her. "Let go," she said, "you must not cling to me. I am going up higher."

"But," said the man, "I, too, wish to get out of torment."

Then the old woman began to twist violently to rid herself of this incubus, and finally screamed, "You must let go; this is my carrot." Then the carrot broke.

AUGUST THIRD, 1911

HAVE the nations awakened to-day?
Have they seen the vision afar?
Have they seen, with a dire dismay,
The terrible torments of war?

Have they seen with a vision more clear
The beautiful white-winged Peace?
Have they read, in this auspicious year,
The prophetic words—"Wars shall cease!"

Oh, long have the peaceful hearts yearned;
Oh, long have the yearning hearts prayed;
That all lands may be freed from the curse—
From the horrors of war be saved!

War, disgrace of all civilized lands;
War, the bane of a civilized race;
Peace! the high benediction of God,
God's smile on a blessed world's face!

J. D. M.

YOUTH AND AGE

YOUTH hurries on with vision cast
Far down the future's vista fair;
Age sits and muses on the past,
And lives again the days that were.

Youth talks of what new years contain,
And longs their secrets sweet to know;
Age tells it o'er and o'er again—
Dear story of the long-ago.

Youth dreams of joy in coming years,
And slights the sweetness of to-day;
Age views the happy past through tears,
And sighs for life's fair, early way.

How doubly blest the young who know
The blessedness of living now,
And still rejoice, when long years throw
Their threads of silver o'er the brow!

Who early learn the priceless truth
That narrow now is joy's sole range,
And, scant in age or flush in youth,
Rejoice in God through time and change!

Blackstone, Va. B. R. MORSE.

Echoes from Northfield

—MISS HELEN GOULD'S gift to East Northfield Seminary—a new dormitory for girls—will be a noble pile and a fine addition to the plant. It is to accommodate three hundred students, and will cost a quarter of a million. It is to be ready for use during February or March next year.

. . .

—A DESPERATELY hard Denver boy, who had been touched by Judge Lindsey, was asked by his mother: "Why do you never obey me nor your father, but you always do whatever Mr. Lindsey tells you to?" He replied, "You see, it is this way; if I turned out bad, the judge would lose his job." A good illustration of the scope of influence.

. . .

—A SPEAKER urging a choice of high aims for young men, said that when in London he wished to visit the Crystal Palace. At the station he stepped up to what he supposed was the booking office and put down some English coin. The man inside said, "What will you take?" The tourist said, "I don't care to drink." "Never mind that. What 'level' will you have?" The traveler, thinking that the "level" was the name of some new London liquor, replied: "I don't drink. I am a prohibitionist." "Oh," said the ticket-seller, "I see you are an American, so I must explain: There are two ways of getting to the palace; one is by the high grade railroad that takes you right into the palace; the other is by the low grade metals, that leaves you down at the foot of the hill, and you climb a half-mile. Now what level will you take?" "I'll take the high level," was the quick rejoinder. High ideals should be chosen and clung to in the physical, mental and moral life of young men.

W. J. P.

Anvil Sparks

..MAKING up for lost time doesn't restore it.

..THE best time to make amends is before the act.

..ONE large element of meekness is teachableness.

..THE good fight of faith never involves pugilism.

..THE setting sun never tinges wrath with beauty.

..THE pain of weariness is forgotten in the joy of achievement.

..SOME men who are not usually shy, shy at the collection plate.

..TO BE headstrong is a virtue, if you are headed in the right direction.

..THE only use some folks have for a thoughtful sermon is as a soporific.

..NO TASK is insignificant which furnishes exercise to the spiritual fibre.

..IT IS the habit of some folks to shut their eyes while waiting for blessings so as to overlook the opportunities.

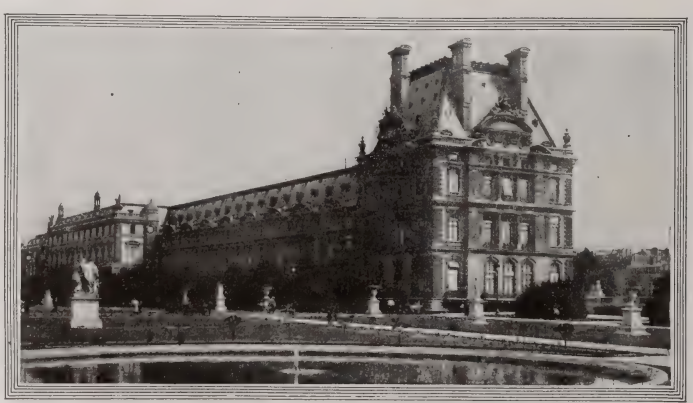
RARE TREASURES OF THE LOUVRE

The Broken Pitcher
(Jean Baptiste Greuze)

The Immaculate Conception
(Murillo)

La Gioconda or Mona Lisa
(Leonardo da Vinci)

Madame Lebrun and Her Daughter
(Madame Lebrun)



THE Louvre Museum, from which the famous "Mona Lisa" has recently been stolen, is one of the four great art treasuries of the world. The Louvre is a world, forty-eight acres of inexhaustible treasure. All ages, all lands, all peoples here come together. The mere arranging of the objects has been the labor and the evolution of years. In the vast hall of sculpture, where one is likely to enter the huge building, everyday life vanishes, and the spirit of an endless antiquity rises up before us, and we feel the high silence of the stars. Here a great Egyptian sphinx bitterly guards the secrets of centuries; here, seated with style and papyrus, is the unique image of the great heathen goddess Sekhet, her panther's head upon a woman's body, rigid and cruel, with arms extended, perhaps to receive some human sacrifice. Here, too, are such endless rows of mummies and great stone sarcophagi. There is something terrible and oppressive about all, though we early learn from some of the less sinister images, that the Egyptians four thousand years ago had a wonderfully developed sense of beauty.

If the Egyptian quarter leaves us in some degree depressed, we will find the Chaldean and Assyrian halls in the vast museum almost suffocating. The bulls with human faces and bird-wings, grinning monsters and strange distorted creatures, brutal and immutable, make the deepest impression. Nowhere here is there an expression of peace or serenity. We delight in the long decorative friezes of soldiers armed with clubs and sticks, archers ambling along in archaic procession with lions and deer, which the Persians have left us, but the pure joy of sculpture we will not find until we enter the Greek Hall. One glance shows us why the world, with one accord, yields the palm for perfect sculpture to Greece. Here everywhere is physical and intellectual beauty for its own sake. We pass many wonderful works that tell of the grandeur that was Athens and the glory that was Greece. Mars, Apollo, Juno, and Polyhymnia leaning gracefully forward, her arm upon a rocky ledge, her delicate chin in her finely limned hand. She is Memory. Love, no less enchanting, leans back against a tree, his arms crossed over his head, a gentle, wistful boy. Fauns and Venuses we pass by innumerable along this gallery, and as we look before us, we see at the farther end "The loved lady of all the world." It is the incomparable Venus of Milo. We look long and silently and the fulness of her perfect beauty overwhelms us. We do not wonder that the world has made a shrine of this perfect fragment. We do not wonder the Parisians buried her beneath the waters of the Seine during the siege of Paris, to prevent her loss to the city. Such joyous beauty, such perfection and grace of form and feature, have not met our eyes before.

Loth to leave, we pass out of the Hall of Sculpture to the great staircase leading to the picture galleries, only to be met by another work of the most glorious period of Greek sculpture—the Winged Victory of Samothrace. If the Venus is the perfection of serene beauty, the Victory is the perfection of beauty in motion. The tremendous energy of her body and splendid activity caught in ponderous marble fairly lift us out of ourselves under the spell of the radiant presence. We too feel the thrill of the mighty victory that she commemorates.

In the Salon Carré for the past five years Leonardo da Vinci's great painting "Mona Lisa," also called "La Gioconda," has dominated the very choicest paintings in the world—wonderful Mona Lisa, whose expression charms and baffles us. Though volumes have been written about this picture, the age-old question is still unanswered. Has ever any one quite fully understood the mystery, the beauty, the marvelous ensemble of this matchless picture? In this gallery we may profitably spend more time than anywhere else in the Louvre, and, student or amateur, Mona Lisa is the centre of it all. Then, see, here are "The Concert" by Giorgione, Titian's "Entombment," "The Man with the Glove," and "The Virgin of the Blue Diadem," "La Belle Jardinière"—which ranks after the Sistine Madonna—Murillo's "Immaculate Conception." Wonderful portraits by Velasquez, the inimitable Spaniard, are here, the most striking among them being that of the little Infanta Marguerite, who was afterward the wife of the German Emperor Leopold. The poor little girl's humanity sinks out of sight in the richness of the decorative effect, which is striking and unforgetable, as is all of this master's work. Correggio, Raphael and Titian are all represented by examples of their best work. Van Dyck is immortalized in the Carré by a portrait of that ill-fated monarch, Charles I. Rubens at his very best is here in the portrait of Helen Fourment, his wife, and two of their children. And the last picture before which we may stop before we leave this wonderful hall is Rembrandt's portrait of Hendrickje Stoffels, the great master's favorite of all his works and unquestionably one of the world's greatest paintings.

Entering the French room we recognize many popular favorites, "The Broken Pitcher" by Greuze, Watteau's "Pierrot Gilles." In the Hall of the Seven Fireplaces hangs "the picture that everybody loves," Madame Lebrun's charming portrait of herself and her daughter. The mother, dressed in white with a red sash and olive drapery, sits leaning forward with her arms thrown about the waist of her young daughter. The daughter, who is dressed in light blue with a slight touch of gold embroidery, reaches her arms about her mother's neck. Without the slightest touch of sentimentality, how full is this picture of the sweet sentiment of motherhood! Yonder hangs "The Gleaners," by Millet, that leader of the French revolutionary school of painters, who saw the beauty of the common day and painted it into his peasant scenes. We would miss much if we did not stop for at least a moment to see the famous French furniture and interior decorations, tapestries, marquetries, bronzes, porcelains, vases, onyx, jade, candelabra, works of rarest beauty, stained glass and terra cottas, musical instruments, the silver and gold ware, enamels, gems, laces, embroideries and alabaster; surely "the world is full of a number of things." The collection of ivory in the Louvre is among its most famous treasures. Specialists come from all over the world to study and to wonder at them. Here is the history of the world told in ivory. Images of rulers, mythological subjects, allegories, saints, medallions portraying the stories of the lives of the saints and the life of Christ, coffers, mirrors, busts, reliefs, tablets, sacred statuettes. It is fairly bewildering to pause even for a moment in front of these ivories. We can only hurry by the collections of sculptured wood, jade, chalcedony, brass, copper and iron, among which American antiquities are not neglected. We halt for a moment before strange figures and heathen images from Mexico, utensils, vases and musical instruments from ancient Peru; but the time is up, and we must leave the Louvre, but perhaps some day you shall return to spend another hour among its endless treasures.

One Wing of the Louvre, as Seen from the Courtyard

Charleston Swept by a Hurricane

THE old Southern city of Charleston, S. C., which has so often suffered from visitations of fire and storm, has again been swept by a terrific hurricane. On August 27 a storm which lasted for nearly forty-eight hours raged along that section of the Atlantic coast, and expended the worst of its fury upon Charleston. Warning of the coming storm was given by the steady falling of the barometer, and shipping men and others made haste to prepare for a bad time. By noon the wind was blowing at the rate of forty-eight miles an hour. At ten o'clock that evening the wind gauge of the government weather observer registered ninety-four miles an hour. A few minutes after that the strain became so great that the gauge was put out of adjustment, so that it was impossible to tell the velocity of the wind while the storm was at its height. By the morning of the 28th all regular means of communication between the city and the outside world had been cut off. Telephone and telegraph wires were down, and railway communication made impossible by the flooding of the tracks to a depth of between three and four feet. A death list of fifteen, and a property loss of about a million dollars in the city alone, constitute the toll of the great storm. The entire Carolina coast has been storm swept, and a great deal of damage has been done to the rice and Sea Island cotton crops.

A View of the Central Part of Charleston, S. C.

All through the city trees were blown down, houses were unroofed, chimneys toppled over, and fences and shrubbery demolished. During the worst part of the storm the streets were unsafe on account of the flying tiles and slates from roofs, and the likelihood of signs and cornices being blown from the nearby buildings at any moment. At high tide, on the night of the heaviest wind, the water reached a level fully eight feet above its ordinary flood mark. Large extents of the lower part of the city were flooded. People were driven from their homes or forced to take refuge in the upper stories. It was impossible, for a considerable time after the storm had abated, to secure any details or estimate of the damage done to the buildings of the city. Along the Battery, Charleston's most elaborate and exclusive residential section, the wind swept bare the gardens and beautiful shrubbery of the square and the private grounds. The old court-house of the city suffered damage from broken windows and demolished sections of the roof. The custom house, the post office, and the historic old St. Michael's Church were also damaged. The Wahoo Fertilizer Mills were practically ruined.

The death list of fifteen was made up from both the white and colored sections of the population. Five persons were killed in the destruction of the mills which were located just across the Ashley River from the city. Many others were drowned, while still others were crushed by the falling of objects which were carried before it by the gale. The loss suffered in connection with the shipping industry will undoubtedly be very large. About ten schooners and small steamboats were wrecked either by being sunk or pounded on the bulkheads. Scores of launches and small boats were broken from their moorings. The storm drove six torpedo boats ashore, and damaged the navy yard.

Manchester's Fatal Railway Wreck

TWENTY-SIX persons killed and seventy-three injured and upwards of $50,000 worth of property destroyed, form the results of the wreck of a Lehigh Valley train which occurred at Manchester, N. Y., on August 25. The accident took place just as the train was approaching a bridge over the Canandaigua Outlet, and was due, it is claimed, to a defective rail which, though it had passed through all the necessary inspections, contained a flaw in its interior, which made it unable to withstand the pressure of an excessively heavy train. This train was known as the New York and Philadelphia Day Express, and consisted of two locomotives and fourteen cars. Though the break in the rail took place some twenty feet before the bridge was reached, the first five cars of the train went over in safety and stopped about 100 yards on the other side. Next came the dining car, which passed over the bridge in safety, but later swerved to the bank and went down the grade, turning completely over. Those who were at luncheon were thrown from their seats into the roof as the car turned over, and were showered with bits of glass and broken dishes. The car behind the diner went off the track just as the bridge was reached. It rolled from right to left, then dropped straight into the ditch below, landing on its side. The wreck of the car was complete, and it was here that the greatest loss of life took place. In its fall this car dragged after it the front end of the one following. The rear trucks of that, however, clung to the rails of the bridge, leaving the car standing almost upon its end. Almost all the people were thrown toward the forward end of the car and massed among broken seats and splintered glass, few escaping severe injury. The persons who had occupied the last three cars, which had been fortunately stopped by the application of the emergency brake, went back to the little station at Manchester, where the women and children remained while the men returned to aid in the work of rescue. The many G. A. R. veterans who were on this train, returning from the encampment at Rochester, were traveling in the last two cars, and so escaped injury. In fact, the lives of the occupants of the last three cars were undoubtedly saved by the presence of mind of one of the veterans, who, as soon as he heard the crash, threw on the emergency brake.

Nurses and doctors were rushed to the scene of the wreck from all the surrounding towns, and first aid to the injured was tendered by all who were able to do so before the arrival of the physicians. Special trains were run by the railroad company to carry the injured to Rochester.

The Scene of the Fatal Railway Wreck at Manchester, N. Y.

The New Fernbank Dam at Cincinnati, Ohio

. . .

Opening the New Deep Waterways Dam

During the week of September 4 the formal dedication of the new Fernbank Dam at Cincinnati, O., took place. This dam presents the accomplishment of a long step in the agitation for deep waterways that is engaging the attention of the Middle West. One of the most interesting incidents of the ceremony of naming the dam was the breaking of six bottles of water which had been brought respectively from the Great Lakes, the Atlantic Ocean, the Gulf of Mexico, the Panama Canal, the Pacific Ocean and the Mississippi River. This ceremony was designed to symbolize the merging of these great commercial waters with those of the Ohio River. The Fernbank Dam was constructed by the government at a cost of slightly more than $1,000,000.

OUR EDITORIAL FORUM

OTTO KOENIG, President — GEO. H. SANDISON, Managing Editor — THEODORE WATERS, Secretary

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is published weekly by "The Christian Herald," at the Bible House, Fourth Avenue, 8th and 9th Sts., New York City. The officers are: Otto Koenig, President and Treasurer, Bible House, N.Y.City; Geo. H. Sandison, Vice-President, Bible House, N. Y. City; Theodore Waters, Secretary, Bible House, N. Y. City.

Subscription Price, $1.50 a year, in advance.
Remittances should always be made in the safest manner available to the remitter. Register cash remittances.
Foreign Postage.—For each copy to be mailed outside the United States, Canada, and Mexico, add one dollar a year.

Change of Date.—It takes at least two weeks to change the date, after your subscription is renewed.
Expiration of Subscription.—The date on the wrapper indicates when your subscription ends.
Change of Address.—It requires three weeks' time to make the change. Give both old and new address.

Subscriptions may commence with any issue.
Letters should be addressed, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, New York.

Entered at Post Office, New York, as Second-class Matter
Entered as Second-class Matter at the Post Office Department, Ottawa

The Churches and Peace

THAT the Church has an important part to play in the great movement for promoting international peace and arbitration is the main theme of the second instalment of our Peace Symposium, which appears in this issue. While opinions may differ as to whether the era of world-peace be at hand or still remote, it is clearly the duty of all good Christians to work for peace. To the Church, more than to any other agency, this question is a vital one. It should be a leader, not a follower. Even the most doubting Thomas must feel within him the growing conviction that the miracle has already happened—that the great transformation is already under way and that the civilized peoples are uniting for peace. Everywhere they are looking to the Church to use its largest influence, its utmost persuasion, to help in bringing to pass the desire of the nations. If the Church would retain its power with the people, it must seize the opportunity. Past forever is the day when bishops and prelates could bless the weapons of battle and send forth armies after invoking heaven's blessing on their mission of human slaughter. Our God is not a Moloch, delighting in blood and destruction. The Church henceforth must be more and more of an evangel of Christian brotherhood and peaceful relations among the nations of the earth. Even taking the view that universal peace cannot be achieved in this age, it still remains as the church's duty to prepare the way for His coming who is to give enduring peace to the world.

But the era of world-peace is no longer to be regarded as remote; some of our preacher contributors to this discussion boldly declare that it has already begun. All the signs of the times point to the conclusion that the day is hastening when the Prince of Peace will come as he has promised. This is a glorious hope for the Church and one which should be proclaimed from every Christian pulpit. Let our ministers set it before the people in language that cannot be mistaken, and they will do more to advance the cause of righteousness than could be accomplished by a thousand doctrinal sermons.

Why Some Fail to "Make Good"

THERE is probably no big city without its gloomy budget of tragedies. Wherever multitudes huddle together there will be the apparently inevitable extremes of riches and poverty, comfort and suffering. In seaport cities it would seem that such conditions are intensified. A Chicago contemporary speaks of the docks of that city as "the port of missing men"—that dreary, hopeless place whither drift many of those who have not "made good" in life, to drag out their remaining years in precarious occasional jobs, sleeping on the piers on "the soft side of a plank" and continually tormented by the recollection of other and happier days and of their misspent and undervalued opportunities. This illustration might be duplicated in a hundred other places, where the wrecks of society, the inefficient, the failures, the untrained, all come to their hour of hard realization. Many of these poor fellows were well educated, and had other advantages at the outset that should have helped rather than hindered them; but in the majority of cases, the real cause of their moral and material shipwreck may be found first in the lack of early home religious training to give fixed principles to the adult life, and second, in the neglect of the parents to have their boy taught some decent trade or calling by which he might become self-supporting.

That mistaken parental kindness which strives to make the early years of a young man's life easy by lightening his labor and carrying his burdens for him is the first step toward the downfall of many a promising career. Train your sons to some useful work, no matter how humble the occupation may be; teach them habits of industry and thrift; encourage them to do their share of burden-bearing early; and teach them not to neglect their religious duties, their Bible-reading and their prayers, and you need have little apprehension that they will ever drift to the ghastly "port of missing men" or the still ghastlier "bread-line." The hand of the diligent is not an empty hand, and good principles and proper habits acquired in youth are strong guards for a vigorous, honorable and useful manhood.

France's War on High Prices

FRANCE is undergoing an experience like that which happened here two years ago when foodstuffs of all kinds rose to famine prices, but the French consumer does not accept the situation as quietly as the American. Processions of thousands of women and girls are marching through the Northern French cities and towns, protesting against the rise in provisions. They are trampling down field crops and gardens and even wreaking their revenge upon dairies. Farmers are opposing the processionists with hayforks, but the ranks of the marauders are being constantly augmented and the police are apparently unable or unwilling to check them. It would not be surprising if this strange uprising led to serious results, if the farmers and truckers do not give way meanwhile. Some legislative or governmental action to compel the reduction of food prices may be expected. For over a year, the cost of living has been mounting higher and higher in France until it has now reached a point which makes the struggle an exceptionally hard one for the industrial classes.

Romance by the Cable

NOT everything that we read in the cables to the daily press is "so." Precise accuracy or even moderation is an art so little cultivated that one naturally hesitates to accept any statement of a significant or serious nature without due investigation. That Japan was preparing for war, that the lost Ark had been found and mysteriously spirited away, that a new Gospel had been discovered in Egypt were instances of this class. Several times of late the imaginative correspondents have represented France, Germany and Great Britain as almost on the verge of war over the Moroccan question. And now comes the bald assertion by the cable that Emperor William, on some recent occasion—time and place not stated—gave utterance to the amazingly frank expression that Germany "needed a war to check the growth of Socialism" in his empire. We may set it down safely as the language of an imaginative correspondent, who was interpreting for himself the German situation. Up to the present time, even keeping in view his well known policy of pushing German interests to the front, the Kaiser's rule has been marked by continued peace with his European neighbors. If we except a few colonial skirmishes, he has never engaged his forces with an enemy. He is no doubt a keen diplomat and possibly even a "live wire" when that role suits the occasion; but to imply that he has a deliberate purpose to break down the growing spirit of freedom and democracy among his own subjects by forcing a war, is to picture him as a despot, and a foolish one, for making such a statement. With all due respect for the enterprise of the gentlemen who keep the cable hot with "important" news, we refuse to believe it.

The Coming Air Liner

AVIATOR ATWOOD'S flight from St. Louis to New York, a distance, following the route he traveled via Chicago, Toledo, Cleveland, Buffalo, Syracuse and thence across New York and down the Hudson Valley, of 1,275 miles, not only gives America the world record in long distance flight, but brings measurably nearer man's complete triumph in aerial navigation. That triumph was definitely predicted as long ago as 1876 by Nietzsche, and to-day it may be said the prediction is realized. The problem of flight through the air has been solved and the future will be occupied chiefly in improving the new ships of the air, just as steamship navigation was improved in the hundred years that separate Fulton's tiny and now archaic Clermont from the majestic liner which can carry the population of a small city in comfort across the Atlantic in less than a week. The world-old dream of man—that of fitting to himself in some way the means of flight through the air—having been at last accomplished the rest is comparatively easy. It is even probable that with the greater mechanical ingenuity and invention of to-day there will not be a very long interval between the monoplane or biplane carrying one or two persons, and the transatlantic air-liner which Grahame-White, the English aviator, predicted the other day—an airship that will be driven by electricity, and will be able to carry 4,000 passengers with all the comfort of a great ocean-going liner.

General Notes

—OUR AMERICAN farmers, foreseeing a rise in food prices in the near future, are organizing with a view to opening farmers' markets to deal with the consumer direct, eliminating the middlemen altogether. This, it is estimated, will effect a saving of forty per cent. to the consumers. Over 600,000 farmers are enrolled in the new movement and $4,000,000 capital is available to begin operations. At the outset, the movement would be chiefly confined to New York and Pennsylvania, but if successful, it may soon be expected to spread to other States.

—ALL EUROPE AND a large part of the rest of the world is still speculating as to the whereabouts of Leonardo da Vinci's famous painting, "Mona Lisa." The investigations of the French Government seem to indicate that the picture was taken to Bordeaux either for shipment to Spain or South America. It has also been stated that a well-known American art dealer, who is now in Paris, is being closely watched. Ships bound for South America and the United States have been searched, but as yet without finding the stolen panel. Further interest has been added to the mystery by the disappearance from the Villa Carlotta on Lake Como of a fine copy of the painting which was executed during the lifetime of the painter of the original.

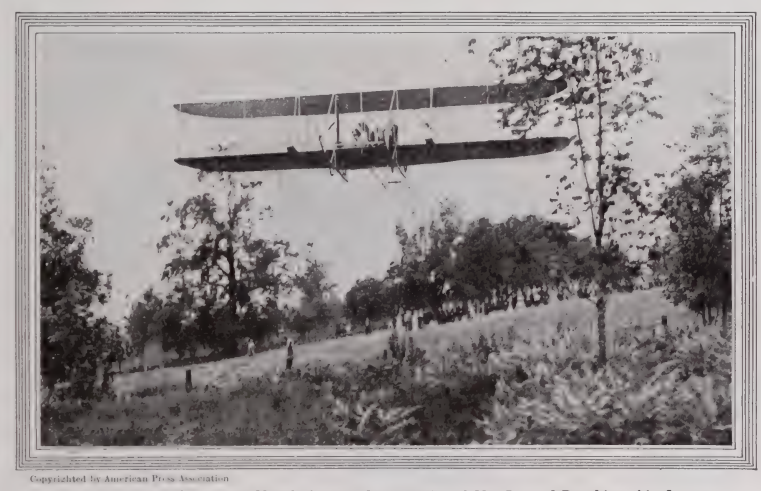
—THE RELATIONS between France and Germany, which have been brought about by the Moroccan entanglement, continue the focus of the diplomatic eyes of the world. The press of Germany is full of war talk and seems inclined to arouse the greatest possible amount of anti-British sentiment by blaming France's obdurate attitude on her assurance of British support. The negotiations for a settlement are to be resumed within a few days, and there is small doubt that France will deliver her ultimatum in the matter at the very outset. That Spain has not reliquished her hopes of aggrandizement is evinced by her recent movement of a large body of troops from the Canary Islands to a port on the Moroccan coast. Though there is every probability that a peaceful settlement will eventually be reached, the present state of European international politics is such that a comparatively small incident might precipitate a combat in which three great powers and probably two or three lesser ones would be embroiled.

—AMONG the bills which became law in New York State on September 1, there was one, the Sullivan law, which promises to provide a lot of confusion before a satisfactory interpretation is reached. This law makes it a misdemeanor for any person to have in his possession a revolver or firearm of any sort which is small enough to be concealed in his wearing apparel. This calls into question the status of those who already own pistols which are kept in their residences for purposes of defense in emergency. Police Commissioner Waldo of New York City believes that any one who thus keeps a revolver without a permit is as guilty under the law as the man who "totes" a gun in his pocket. District-Attorney Whitman, though willing to admit that the wording of the law is confusing, is inclined to believe that a man has a right to protect his home as he sees fit. As the State Legislature will again be in session within a week, it is more than probable that amendments will be made in such fashion as to clear up these differences of interpretation.

Contents of this Number

Wednesday, September 13, 1911

	PAGE
Our Mail-Bag	894, 919
In a Paradise of the Pacific (Illustrated) By Rev. William Durban, D.D.	895
The One Way of Escape. Sermon By Rev. J. Wilbur Chapman, D.D.	896, 897
Caring for Number One. By Eugene Thwing	897
Rare Treasures of the Louvre (Illustrated)	898
Charleston Swept by a Hurricane (Illustrated)	899
Manchester's Fatal Railway Wreck (Illustrated)	899
The New Deep Waterways Dam (Illustrated)	899
OUR EDITORIAL FORUM	900
THE BIBLE AND NEWSPAPER (Illustrated)	901
Patriotic Week at Ocean Grove (Illustrated)	902
Is World-Peace Near at Hand? (Portraits)	903, 910
Chats in My Veranda Nook (Illustrated) By Margaret E. Sangster	906
The Cozy Corner (Illustrated) By Miss Janet Porter	907
Three Hundred Years and the Bible	908, 918
A Plea for the Children (Portrait)	909
Death of Bishop Fitzgerald (Portrait)	912
The Spirit of Thrift	913
A Nest-Egg. Story by Arthur Chamberlain	914, 915
Young People's Societies	916
The Hero of Faith	917, 918
Sunday School Lesson, by Dr. and Mrs. W. F. Crafts



THE BIBLE AND NEWSPAPER

Conducted by FERDINAND C. IGLEHART, D.D.

Atwood Lands Near Mont-Lawn

HARRY N. ATWOOD, the twenty-seven-year-old Boston aviator, left St. Louis at 8.05 A.M., August 14, in his aeroplane, finishing his journey at Governor's Island, New York, at 7.38 P.M., August 25. The distance he covered in the air line was 1,265 miles in a flying time of 28 hours and 31 minutes. This exceeds the previous world's record by 101 miles, not counting an extra one hundred miles for detours. The last stop he made before reaching his destination was at Nyack, on the Hudson. An accident to his motor made it necessary for him to stop at Nyack. Three or four hundred children from THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Children's Home were intensely excited to see Atwood in his aeroplane rounding the Hook Mountain from the northeast, and to their astonishment they noticed the aviator hesitate and drop to a landing between the Hook Mountain and the Children's Home, within easy reach of the latter. Matron Goering and her staff immediately formed the children into line, and after a twelve-minute walk brought them to the spot where Atwood had landed. A crowd had begun to gather from all directions on foot, in carriages and automobiles, and through the kindness of Mr. Atwood the children were permitted to march around between the crowd and the machine to inspect the aeroplane. One of the managers said to the little folks: "Walk around the aeroplane, but do not touch it. Look at it carefully, for it is one of the most wonderful things you ever saw." And so the children thought, for the eyes of the dear little ones flashed with the fires of satisfaction and enjoyment, and the scene will furnish food for endless talk for a year to come. To the many good things provided for the children of Mont-Lawn, there was added the especial treat of seeing Atwood, the great record-breaker, and the machine that had carried him so beautifully on his journey. Atwood not only broke the world's record in a cross-country flight, but by his practical and sane methods he has set a splendid example of good common sense to the other aeronauts of the world. During his entire flight he has cut no capers in the air and performed no evolutions to make a gaping crowd hold its breath; he only set himself down in dogged persistency to fly to his goal. This man has made an important contribution to the commercial development of the aeroplane. He has hastened the day when the aeroplane will be regarded as an ordinary vehicle of transportation. His name will probably be recorded in the history of invention as one of the pioneers in the discovery and possession of the wilderness of the air. The beautiful imagery of the Old Testament Scriptures comes to mind as we think of our modern mastery of the upper air.

And he rode upon a cherub, and did fly; and he was seen upon the wings of the wind. (II. Sam. 22:11.)

Copyrighted by American Press Association

Harry N. Atwood Leaving Nyack for the Last Flight of His Record-Breaking Air Journey

Minister and Editor Gone

The Rev. Dr. John Bancroft Devins, preacher, editor, poet, philanthropist and friend of children, was gathered to his fathers, and funeral services in memory of him were held on August 28 at the Central Presbyterian Church of Brooklyn under the directions of Dr. John F. Carson, the pastor. Dr. Charles Augustus Stoddard, Rev. Charles Stelzle, and Rev. Dr. Calvin H. French assisted in the services. For many years Dr. Devins has been one of the most widely known and greatly beloved men as a pastor, editor and Christian gentleman. He had intellectual ability, was a man of splendid judgment, an enormous worker, Christlike in spirit, and loyalty itself to every interest committed to his care, to his friends, his fellow-men and to his God. He was a long-time friend and a frequent contributor to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. At the time of his death he was the proprietor and managing editor of the New York Observer. He was sick only two days, and his sudden removal shocked the people of the Presbyterian Church not only, but those of other denominations in the country. Dr. Devins in his beautiful spirit, his unfaltering faith in the integrity of the Bible and the divinity of Christ, his deep patriotism, his broad philanthropy, his sweet ministry to the lowly and the children of God's poor, reminds us of the first deacon selected for leadership in the early church:

And they chose Stephen, a man full of faith and of the Holy Ghost. And Stephen, full of faith and power, did great wonders and miracles among the people. (Acts 6: 5, 8.)

Wife's Devotion to Husband

Captain William Van Schaick, who was in charge of the unfortunate General Slocum when she burned, destroying more than a thousand precious lives, has just been pardoned after having spent three years in the prison at Sing Sing, N. Y. For the overloading and improper equipment of his boat and the fearful disaster following he was sent to the penitentiary for ten years, but for conspicuous good behavior he was pardoned after three years' incarceration. He is an old man of seventy-five, broken in health and in spirit by the tragedy and the disgrace, and against the dark background of his sorrow and wreckage is the beautiful picture of the love and devotion of his young wife for him. She said: "He comes back to me an old man. But he is my husband. I will never leave him. He has nothing, but he has me. He is not able to work, and he shall not work. I can work, and he shall never suffer. I love him and will care for him." In these days, when there are so many separations and divorces and loose and false notions of matrimony, it is a refreshing thing to see this young wife, with the tide of life beating high, clinging to the man to whom she gave herself in marriage, and counting the marital contract a solemn engagement for life. In these days, when so many, including some of the leaders in society, by their actions count marriage as a cold business engagement for money, or a matter of economy, or a temporary alliance, or a fickle enchantment, this wife of the steamboat captain emphasizes the good oldfashioned idea of the undying devotion which husbands and wives should have for each other. The false notion of marriage claims a larger space in the newspapers and acts most brazenly before the footlights, but, fortunately for American institutions and for the church of Christ, the people of the country, rich and poor, high and low, believe in and are loyal to Christ's idea of the marital relation, when he said:

Wherefore they are no more twain, but one flesh. What therefore God hath joined together, let not man put asunder. (Matt. 19:6.)

Many Pearls

W. H. Toms, of Palmyra, Mich., was opening a Raisin River clam when he found in a single shell 912 pearls. He took his precious treasures to Adrian, and found that a hundred of the stones had an important market value, fifty of them were perfect specimens of river pearl. Precious stones were used as illustration of graces, virtues, and of Christian truth in the Scriptures. This remarkable find of pearls by Mr. Toms suggests spiritual treasures, and reminds us of one of Christ's parables, which says:

The kingdom of heaven is like unto a merchantman, seeking goodly pearls: who, when he had found one pearl of great price, went and sold all that he had, and bought it. (Matt. 13:45, 46.)

Spade Uncovers Model Pastor

There have been many important things recently dug out of the rubbish heap of the ancient city of Oxyrhynchus, 160 miles south of Cairo, by the Egyptian Exploration Fund Society. Dr. Arthur S. Hunt has just edited an account of some of the singular and important discoveries. An account is given of a letter of dismissal of a Christian by a pastor to another congregation at a distance. The letter of dismissal commends the parishioner to the membership and affection of the congregation. This is the translation: "Leon the presbyter to the presbyters and deacons who aid in the local ministry, warm greeting. When our brother Ammonius reaches you, welcome him in peace; through whom I and those that are with me gladly salute you and those that are with you in the Lord. I wish you farewell in the Lord God. Emmanuel is witness. Amen." This pastor was not an educated man. His penmanship was poor, his spelling is bad, his papyrus is disfigured by one blot and several corrections; and yet he was a true pastor and a wise one. That the soul of his church member might not be lost he sent by him a letter to the pastor of the congregation whither he was going, and the man felt it an honor to be thus introduced and recommended. The city churches get their best brain and warmest love from the country districts, and yet what multitudes of the people going to the cities lose their church membership and religion because the pastor dismissing them does not follow them with his affection and direction like the pastor of the fourth century did, and because the pastors of the cities, needing new members badly enough, have not this kind of help in the search for new sheep for their fold! How sweet this church letter is, with its closing words "Emmanuel is witness." God is with us! Leon did not feel that he was only interested in the little corner of the pasture where his sheep fed, but that he was vitally interested in God's flock everywhere. There have been very many ideal shepherds like him since his day, and there are many now. Their number ought to be greatly multiplied. The beautiful pastor whom the spade has revealed caught the spirit and imitated the example of the Great Shepherd who said:

I am a good shepherd, and know my sheep, and am known of mine. (John 10:14.)

White Doves Flew Out

The American Consul-General at Yokohama, Mr. Thomas Sammons, gave a farewell dinner to Mr. Thomas J. O'Brien, the American Ambassador to Japan, just before his departure to his new post at Rome. Among other guests was Dr. David Starr Jordan, president of Leland Stanford University. Dr. Jordan made this the occasion of his first address in Japan on the peace movement. He introduced his speech by lifting the cover from a special dish, whereupon six snow-white doves, emblematic of peace, flew out. The incident was eloquent beyond all description, and will thrill the heart of the civilized world, as it so fittingly describes the beautiful spirit of fraternity existing between the United States and Japan, and that universal peace toward which all good people are looking and for which they are praying. A long time ago the dove was selected to bear a message of good news and preach a sermon of love.

And the dove came in to him in the evening; and, lo, in her mouth was an olive leaf plucked off; so Noah knew that the waters were abated from off the earth. (Gen. 8:11.)

Patriotic Week at Ocean Grove

A PART OF PROFESSOR MORGAN'S CHORUS OF SIX HUNDRED CHILDREN AT OCEAN GROVE

THE great event of the Patriotic Week celebration at Ocean Grove was the visit of President Taft on August 15. Around this all the others of the special programme seemed to centre. In spite of a pouring rain on the evening of the President's visit, twelve thousand people filled the great Ocean Grove Auditorium by 6.30 o'clock. As Mr. Taft was not expected until 8.15 P.M., Professor Tali Esen Morgan had provided a musical programme to fill in the intervening time. The Aida Quartette of Trumpeters, each draped in an American flag, heralded the coming of the President, who was received by a great waving of handkerchiefs by the standing audience. Mr. Taft seemed astonished at the sight presented by this throng, gathered in the world's largest auditorium upon one of the stormiest nights of the season. The octogenarian president of the Ocean Grove Association, A. E. Ballard, D.D., and Governor Wilson of New Jersey sat upon either side of the President. Treasurer John E. Andrews of the Association made the opening address, welcoming the President, and alluding to the growth of Ocean Grove and the ideas of God and holiness for which it stands. The President, in his reply, made a grateful allusion to the presence of Governor Wilson, which brought a storm of applause. He spoke of the pressure of national affairs at Washington, and announced his regret that he had not had time to prepare his speech until late that afternoon; in fact, most of it was dictated to his secretary, Charles Dwight Hillis, on the train while coming from Washington, where, as the President facetiously said, they never wish to mislead; so he would read the address from his manuscript, and avoid errors of statement. He then spoke for twenty-five minutes in a clear, powerful voice, which could be heard in all parts of the auditorium. He made a strong plea for International Peace, and declared that the pending peace treaties should be passed by the Senate without amendment.

After the President had finished his address Mr. Donald Chalmers sang the late Mrs. Julia Ward Howe's "Battle Hymn of the Republic," and the President and Governor Wilson joined heartily with the vast audience in singing the chorus.

An amusing incident of the occasion took place when President Taft saw a photographer waiting in the distance to take his picture. He laughed, and turning to the Governor, said: "Stand up, Wilson." "I will if you do," said the Governor. So Taft, Wilson, and Ballard, these three great leaders, made the group. As all were leaving the people sang "The Star-Spangled Banner," and a great cross of electric lights burst forth on the platform, while a huge American flag was lowered from the ceiling just over the heads of the President and his party.

On the day previous to the President's visit the United States Marine Band from Washington drew immense audiences to the Auditorium to hear their splendid rendering of programmes of classical and operatic music. This band is one of the finest in the world, being composed entirely of picked musicians. For all the festivities of the week the Auditorium was decorated with white snowballs and American flags.

The Young People's Meeting of Tuesday morning under the leadership of Rev. W. H. Morgan, D.D., took the unique form of a meeting of the States. The crowd filled every available space in the Temple, and after the opening hymn, Dr. Morgan called for representatives from every State in the Union, and for one member from each State representation, to speak a few appropriate words. All this called forth much originality of expression and sentiment. Nothing has ever shown more plainly the cosmopolitan character and nation-wide recognition of Ocean Grove, for nearly every State had at least one representative. The programme of this meeting also contained a number of selections rendered by the Criterion Male Quartette of New York, and a demonstration by the Juniors.

The crowning point of this wonderful week was the Patriotic and Musical Festival given by the children, who have been under the training of Professor Morgan since the first of July. This entertainment was so popular that every seat was sold long in advance, and even standing room was at a premium. An audience of over ten thousand people crowded the auditorium. It is doubtful if a chorus similar to this one of six hundred children has ever been seen in America. The evidences of their response to even these few weeks of training were apparent to all, not only in their singing, but in the perfection of their marching and drill movements. At 8.15 o'clock the long columns made their way from the side doors. Some divisions were dressed to represent gipsies, some fairies, some Japanese soldiers. All the girls carried American flags. The boys who formed the divisions of Indians and of Rough Riders, led by Captains McNair and Bromley, looked very fantastic in their brilliant dress, and very businesslike in their khaki uniforms.

After all but these last two divisions had taken their places in the choir-loft, the Rough Riders went through a drill, and fired a salute over the heads of the audience, while the Indians squatted on the floor before the stage. The children sang a number of selections, the most popular of which were "The Japanese Love Song," during which each of the singers held an outspread Japanese fan, and as they sang performed a series of beautiful evolutions in unison, and the old college song "Kentucky Babe." In the latter the effect of the banjo accompaniment carried by the voices was very effective. For this selection a series of bells had been fixed about the auditorium and connected with the organ, so that Clarence Reynolds, the organist, could manipulate them from the keyboard. Mrs. Hardin Burney, the impersonator of children, who has won such renown that her child songs have been adopted by Madame Lehmann, the famous European composer, gave a number of selections which were enthusiastically received. The programme was filled out by the Kahn Trio of instrumentalists—Edith Mae Connor, a ten-year-old harpist, Wilfred Morrison, the famous Canadian boy soprano, and Conrad Svasoner, a violinist. The final spectacle, which had been arranged by Professor Morgan, was the triumph of the evening. The auditorium was darkened to heighten the effect, and in the distance was heard the singing of the soldiers—"My Dream of the U. S. Army." Then slowly dawn came and the soldiers marched across the stage, accompanied by the music of their bugles blowing "reveillé." Then Uncle Sam, with outstretched arms, received the crossed swords of the North and South, to be laid away forever. This tableau, above which shone a reproduction of the Statue of Liberty, was the patriotic tribute to Peace. The tableaux closed with one entitled, "The Stars and Stripes Forever" —Columbia surrounded by her maids in red, white and blue. The fullest credit is due to Professor Tali Esen Morgan, who has this year added to his laurels as a producer of children's choruses.

MARY BARTON COOKMAN.

TOPICS OF INTEREST THROUGHOUT THE WORLD

—GERMANY, TOO, LIKE Great Britain and America, recognizes the justice of suspending pastors who have adopted the "radical views of liberal theology." Pastor Jatho of Cologne, a pronounced exponent of the new theology, has by the Spruchkollegium of Prussia, the highest court in matters of faith, of which Harnack is a member—been deprived of his office, as his teachings are inconsistent with the confessions of the church.

—SOME TIME AGO, an English publication announced that among the scientists who had abandoned the belief in evolution were Professor Haeckel and St. George Mivart. That statement was reproduced in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. A reader of this journal in Pennsylvania informs us that Professor Haeckel lately wrote to him from Jena, absolutely denying that he had given up his belief in evolution. The same writer calls attention to the fact that Mivart was excommunicated by Cardinal Vaughan on account of his evolutionary views, and affirms that he continued to hold these views while he lived. We give these statements equal publicity with those originally published in this paper, having had no opportunity for their personal verification either way.

—PRESIDENT TAFT SIGNED the joint resolution for the admission of New Mexico and Arizona into the Union on August 21. Senator Penrose, Representatives Weeks of Massachusetts and Barchfeld of Pennsylvania, the Delegates of the two Territories, and citizens from New Mexico and Arizona witnessed the signing. There was only one resolution, but the President used three different pens in order that some of the relic hunters might be satisfied. "Well, gentlemen, it's done," he said as he put the last stroke on the parchment.

—MANOEL DE ARRIAGA, a lawyer and Procurator General in the Provisional Government, has been elected the first constitutional President of the Republic of Portugal. Arriaga was chosen by the Constituent Assembly which was elected by the people last May. The term of office is four years, and re-election is prohibited. The yearly salary is $20,000, in addition to $6,000 for official expenses. President Arriaga was for years a professor at Coimbra University. He was also for a considerable time instructor of English to the late King Carlos and the Duke of Oporto, eventually retiring from this position on account of his Republican opinions. A man of distinguished personality, he possesses great influence among all sections of the Republican party, but belongs to no special group. He was chosen by the Assembly in an endeavor to conciliate all parties.

Is World-Peace Near at Hand?

The Second Instalment of the Christian Herald's National Symposium

Rev. Charles A. Eaton | Bishop J. H. Vincent | Mrs. Diana Belais | Bishop Henry W. Warren | Rev. Charles M. Sheldon

IN LAST week's issue of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD there was printed the first instalment of a series of letters from leading Americans on the great question of international peace and arbitration. Appearing at this time, when the subject is everywhere uppermost in the public mind, the importance of this frank expression of opinion from our very foremost citizens, including the President, governors, senators, representatives, army and navy officers, college presidents and other persons of influence, cannot be overestimated. To-day we present another instalment of letters, this time representing the leaders in religious circles, who show how the Church can co-operate with the State and other agencies in advancing the cause of world-peace. It is unnecessary to discuss the letters, as they speak eloquently for themselves.

. . .

Physical War Is Heathenism, Writes Rev. Dr. Sheldon, Author of "In His Steps"

Teach the children in the Sunday Schools of the horrors of war and the real meaning of brotherhood. Stop buying guns for our boys as Christmas gifts. Stop buying powder for Fourth of July. Refuse to let our boys enlist for the army and navy.

The public schools should be influenced to teach brotherhood. Parents should co-operate with peace organizations to teach their children real patriotism and protest against war histories in the schools.

I believe we are near a great change in the attitude of the nations towards the whole subject of war. The people are going to refuse to serve war interests. Armies and navies will soon be made obsolete because they cannot be recruited.

The true basis of patriotism is love of humanity. No one loves his own country fully until he loves all countries. The martial spirit for purposes of courage and heroism can be maintained by teaching our children service in hard places. Physical courage is not half so essential for a nation as moral courage. Physical war is heathenism.

Charles M. Sheldon

Topeka, Kan.

. . .

No Real Christian Can Believe in War, Writes Rev. R. A. Torrey, the Famous Evangelist

The churches may best use their influence in behalf of the Peace Movement by persistently teaching the truth that Jesus Christ taught, and by getting individuals to really accept Christ, and thus be born again by the power of the Holy Spirit. No real Christian can believe in war. Every true Christian will do whatever he can to promote peace. We shall have an abiding peace only when all men are born again and thus become true followers of Jesus Christ. The organizations allied with the churches can work to the best advantage for peace by standing absolutely on the teachings of Jesus Christ, and by putting forth every effort to get individuals to accept Christ. No merely outward organizations will ever secure permanent peace.

I do not believe that we are now in the beginning of an era of permanent world-peace. We may have a temporary world-peace, but there is to be an awful crash before we shall have permanent peace—the most awful crash in the world's history. Nevertheless, I do not regard the era of world-peace to be very remote. I think the time is fast hastening on when Jesus Christ shall come again and bring order and peace out of disorder and chaos.

The Christian attitude is diametrically opposed to a martial spirit. Those who, for political aggrandizement, are untiring in their efforts to create suspicions and jealousies among nations, are the worst enemies that the nation has. To be more specific, some of our Congressmen, by their mad attempts to make the people of this country feel that Japan is plotting against us, are sowing the seeds of a frightful harvest. Theoretically, I believe in universal disarmament, but I do not expect to live to see it unless the Lord comes again.

R. A. Torrey

Montrose, Pa.

Copyright Pach Brothers, N. Y.

Hon. John A. Dix
Governor of the State of New York

Arbitration Is the Righteousness of Peace, Writes Governor Dix of New York

Arbitration is the righteousness of peace; peace is the leaven of progress and human welfare.

Enlightenment and industrial development depend upon the stability which results only from peace.

John A. Dix

Lake George, N. Y.

. . .

No Enduring Peace on Earth Until Jesus Comes, Writes Rev. Dr. Simpson, Founder of the Christian Alliance

I have rejoiced along with so many others in Great Britain and America at the response which has been so widely expressed to the initiative of our President. At the same time I am one of those—perhaps a minority—Christian teachers and students of the Scriptures who do not believe that we are ever going to have any golden age of universal peace and righteousness in the present dispensation, or before the personal return and reign of our Lord Jesus Christ, the Prince of Peace. He himself has told us that "There shall be wars and rumors of wars" preceding his second coming. The distinct check given to international arbitration recently by the greatest military power of Europe is but one of many evidences that human nature is not yet essentially changed, and so long as selfishness rules the hearts of men it will not be difficult for any ambitious and powerful State to find a pretext for laughing at Hague Tribunals and arbitration treaties, and making the law of right subordinate to the law of might.

A few of us are looking for something better than the golden age of the politician and the socialist, namely, that bright prophetic day when "A King shall reign in righteousness, and princes shall rule in judgment," and "The work of righteousness shall be peace, and the effect of righteousness quietness and assurance forever."

A. B. Simpson

New York City.

. . .

We Are at the Beginning of World-Peace, Writes Mrs. Diana Belais, the Well-Known Humanitarian

Unquestionably the peace idea is fixed. We realize the insane cost of war both in blood and treasure, and this practical thought coupled with the more broadly enlightened and humane views of our times makes world-peace a certainty.

The organization of this gigantic step forward would necessarily be entrusted to dispassionate statesmen and thinkers, who would conceive some working plan satisfactory to all. Its effect, on the whole, would be, by the moral pressure of peoples acting upon their governments, to hold the signatories in line. It is true, there might be instances of repudiation of arbitraments; but even so, and after that, concessions might still be made, thus averting war. Or, in case of the actual event, the pressure of unanimous, condemnatory public sentiment would necessarily limit its duration; and financiers would consciously and unconsciously act in accordance with the will of the world.

I think we are at the beginning of world-peace. It will now come slowly but steadily.

Diana Belais

New York City.

. . .

The Christian Attitude Favors World-Peace, Writes President Mary Woolley of Mt. Holyoke College

I consider the present agitation for international arbitration and world-peace deep-seated and permanent. International Congresses, arbitration treaties and courts are working to this end. An international court, with its judgments guaranteed by the signatory powers to an international arbitration treaty, would greatly aid the general status of the peace question.

I believe we are in the beginning of an era of world-peace. The Christian attitude is decidedly on the side of peace.

Mary E. Woolley

South Hadley, Mass.

Continued on page 910

Contributions in Aid of Our Children's Home

A Lover of Children 5 00
New York City
Fersing, Mrs. L. O 1 00
Fest, E A 3 00
Fox, Mary M 5 00
Hansen, C A 1 50
Hansen, Nic 2 00
Hansens, Nic 2 00
Hofmann, Sara A J 2 00
Hunt, Frances 25 00
Ironmonger, A W 1 00
Leech, Mrs Minnie 1 00
Leonard, Mrs S L 1 00
Powell, James L 5 00
Prescott, D A 21 00
Pudney, P P 1 00
Pride, Emeline 3 00
Quick, Hannah 1 00
Race, Nancy 1 00
Rehmgrow, Mr & 1 00
Rand, Mrs H H 5 00
Rankin, Mrs A 6 00
Ratcliffe, Olive 1 00
Rauseter, Mrs J H 1 00
Read, M M 15 00
Rear, Edwin J 3 00
Reber, Annie R 6 00
Reber, C E 3 00
Reber, Wm H 3 00
Reed, Mrs R W 3 00
Reed, Ward E 3 00
Reeder, Margt L 1 00
Reeverts, Frank 3 00
Reid, Francella 3 00
Reid, Samuel N 10 00
Reifsnyder, J M 5 00
Reineke, Mrs E 1 00
Reitz, ... 5 00
Renting, Mrs MA 3 00
Renting, Paul D 3 00
Reynolds, Mrs P 3 00
Rhode, Mrs F W 1 00
Rice, Abbie 3 00
Rice, Flora S 3 00
Richards, Dwight & Stephen 2 00
Richards, R E 3 00
Richardson, Jr, N I 1 00
Richardson, Mr&Mrs S S. & Ruth .. 5 00
Richey, Mrs A 1 00
Richmond, Mrs Ed 2 00
Ricketts, W P 5 00
Riley, Thos J 1 00
Ritzman, A S 5 00
Robbins, Mary E 3 00
Roberts, Alice A 3 00
Roberts, Miss BV 3 00
Roberts, Mrs J M 3 00
Robertson, Mrs AS 5 00
Robertson, Mollie 3 00
Robinson, Ada L 3 00
Robinson, Mrs GH 1 00
Robinson, Hart'l 3 00
Robinson, Ruth 3 00
Rockford, A M. in the name of Esther C Rockford 22 72
Rockefeller, E N 2 00
Rocheleh, F 3 00
Roethlisberger, C 3 00
Rogers, Miss M V 6 00
Rood, E M 1 00
Root, E H 1 00
Rothacker, W A 3 00
Ruegg, Alle 3 00
Ruhlson, Mrs W 1 00
Rupley, Rev H & Mrs L 3 00
Rushmore, Mrs 10 00
Russell, E A 2 00
Russell, Mrs Julia & Children 1 50
Russell, Mrs W S 5 00
Rust, C H 6 00
Sadler, Mrs Capt 3 00
Safford, Mrs D H 3 00
Salfuss, Mrs J 10 00
Sandefur, H L 1 00
Sanderson, Mrs J 3 00
Sankerson, Miss E 1 00
Sawin, Mrs C 3 00
Sawtelle, H L 3 00
Sawyer, C J 1 00
Saxton, A B 3 00
Sayres, Abby K 1 00
Scadin, Mrs R H 3 00
Schaeffer, W B 3 00
Schantz, Mrs C 1 25
Schantz, Mrs Jos 5 00
Schermerhorn, ME 5 00
Schilling, Maria & Schimmelpfennig, Mrs Mary 3 00
Schmitt, Amelia 1 00
Schnell, L T 2 00
Schoffstall, Wm 1 00
Schoonmaker, Mrs A 3 00
Schramm, Mrs G 6 00
Schrupe, Mrs 1 00
Schuck, Mrs E 6 00
Schultz, G 1 00
Schuyler, Mrs A 2 00
Schwenk, Eliza A 3 00
Schwenk, Mrs E H 3 00
Scott, Mrs A J 3 00
Scott, Mr & Mrs Turner 2 00
H C 22 00
Scott, Miss I E 2 00
Scott, Mrs Wm 3 00
Seeley, Mrs Alex 3 00
Seavey, Edna 3 00
Seidinger, Wm 3 00
Seeley, Mrs L 1 00
Seely, Mrs H 3 00
Seibert, Miss E J 3 00
Seibert, Mrs H J 3 00
Semple, Mrs R 3 00
Senter, Rev G A 5 00
Shaller, M M 5 00
Shanklin, Sophia 2 00
Shaw, Mrs H E 1 00
Sheldon, Jr, C J 3 00
Sherman, Geo A 1 50
Sherriff, Mrs H 3 00
Sherritt, Margt E 3 00
Shirley, Wm 1 00
Shoop, D W 1 00
Shoop, Julia R 2 00
Shroyer, Lenh 1 00
Shumaker, W W 4 00
Shuman, Mrs S G 3 00
In memory of J M Shuman 9 00
Shutt, Catherine 1 00
Simonds, Mrs S A 1 00
Simons, Miss E H 5 00
Simpler, Mrs C E 3 00
Simpson, Mrs 2 00
Sims, Mrs R 3 00
Sisson, M A 2 00
Sisson, Mrs M B 3 00
Skelton, Mrs E P 1 00
Skinner, A H 5 00
Skinner, Mrs E 3 00
Slack, Mrs H B 1 00
Smith, Louise 3 00
Sloat, S F 1 00
Smith, ... 2 00
Smith, Alida 1 00
Smith, B H 2 50
Smith, Mrs GW 1 00
Smith, E R 5 00
Smith, Harrison 1 50
Smith, J P 1 00
Smith, Jesse A 1 00
Smith, Mrs J T 1 00
Smith, Kath M 3 00
Smith, Mary, Kan 3 00
Smith, Mrs C M 5 00
Smith, Mrs N W 6 00
Smurr, L J 2 00
Snow, Lilla E 1 00
Snyder, Mrs B F 5 00
Snyder, E E 5 00
Snyder, Mrs H A 3 00
Soesbe, C W 1 00
Soesbe, Mrs F 1 00
Sommer, Mrs J 3 00
Sparks, Mrs R F 3 00
Spencer, Mrs 3 00
Spencer, Mrs Ida 1 75
Spicer, Mrs E E 2 00
Spies, Mr 1 00
Sprague, Mrs A 1 00
Sprague, Miss F 2 00
Wemple, Mrs D H 2 00
Kane, Hl 3 50
Springer, E B 10 00
Spunk, John 5 00
Stahl, Adolph 5 00
Stanley, Mrs L C 2 00
Stanley, M E 1 50
Stead, Mrs M 3 00
& Family 3 00
Steadman, Mrs 4 00
Stedman, Mrs F C 6 00
Steensland, T & O 3 00
Steere, Emily J 3 00
Steffee, Mrs 3 00
Sterling, F G 3 00
Sterling, Mrs M 1 00
Stevens, Mrs F A 5 00
Stevenson, Jessie 3 00
Stewart, G F 3 00
Stickney, Mrs S 3 00
Stiles, M M 3 00
Stiles, Miss Mary 3 00
Stiles, Martha B 1 00
Whitney, Mrs GB 3 00
Whitney, H H 3 00
Wible, Mrs F 1 00
Wicker, Mrs Geo 2 00
Wilbur, Mrs O K 2 00
Wilcox, H P 3 00
Wilder, Fannie 1 00
Wilkins, Mrs A 3 00
Willabun, Lyda J 3 00
Williams, L T 3 00
Williams Mrs M 3 00
Williams, Mrs Sarah 2 00
Williamson, L 5 00
Williamson, M 1 50
Willis, Miss L C 3 00
Willis, Mrs 3 00
Wilmot, Mrs C E 9 00
Wilson, Mrs C W 3 00
Wilson, Mrs M A 5 00
Wilson, Mrs Mary 3 00
Wilson, Mrs T D 5 00
Wilt, Harry H 1 00
Wingus, I S 5 00
Winchell, Mrs 3 00
Winnford, T W 3 00
Winslow, Mrs I C 3 00
Wise, Mrs Maggie 3 00
Wisse, Esse 3 00
Wiss, Mrs 3 00
Wolfenden, A R 12 00
Wolff, Jacob 1 00
Wollam, Margt & Mary 3 00
Wood, R G 6 10
Woonacott, Mrs Z 1 00
Wood, Mrs Alice 1 00
Wood, Mr & Mrs J T 3 00
Baltimore, Md 3 00
Woodbury, Mrs 2 00
Woodward, Mrs SE 2 00
Wright, C A 3 00
Wright, Mrs J W 5 00
Wright, Mrs O S 3 00
Wurts, George H 3 00
Wyman, Mrs W B 3 00
& Sister 3 00
Wyncoop, Mrs A & Helen E 6 00
Yarnall, Mrs J E 3 00
Yeager, T & H 3 00
Yates, Charles 1 00
Young, Miss M A 1 00
Young, Mrs M E 1 00
Youngman, Mrs C D 1 00
Youngs, Alice E 1 00
Youngs, Henry 3 00
Yust, C C 1 00
Zaisser, Walter G 3 00
Zimmerman, GH 10 00
A Friend, Selma 1 00
Allen, Plumb 3 00
A Friend, Los Angeles, Cal 6 00
In His Name, Los Angeles, Cal 3 00
A Friend, Oakland, Cal 3 00
A Friend, Orange 1 00
Princeton, Cal 1 50
An earnest reader, Riverside, Cal 3 00
A Friend, San Diego, Cal 3 00
Dinuba, Cal 3 00
Sandose, Cal 9 00
Stockton, Cal 3 00
H N. Upland, Cal 9 09
Union M E S S, Coresco, Mich .. 4 00
Chesaning, Mich 2 00
C E Soc, Battavia, Mich 3 00
Battle Creek, Mich 1 00
Lowell, Mich 3 00
Mother & Son, Mc-Brides, Mich 2 00
Ryne Ladies Aid Soc, Mic. Mich 9 00
Jr C E Soc, Olsted, Mich 2 25
Mrs L W Fisher & S S Cl of 1st Baptist Ch, Pontiac Mich 3 00
Vickeryville, Mich 6 00
Friends, Mt Carmel, Conn 5 20
Conn 1 00
Miss Jessie M Gilbert's S S Cl, M E Church, Danbury, Conn 5 00
Conn 3 00
Friends, Eastford, Conn 3 00
Conn 2 00
Friends, Mt Carmel, Conn 5 20
Waldo, Mrs E .. 1 00
Walker, Mrs A .. 3 00
Walker, Ellen C .. 1 00
Walker, John .. 3 00
Wallace, Mrs E J .. 3 00
Wallace, Hannah .. 1 00
Wallace, Mrs L .. 6 00
Walter, Edw C .. 2 00
Walter, Mrs J W .. 3 00
Walter, Rich .. 2 50
Wandmacher, Mrs GW .. 1 00
Walters, Minnie .. 3 00
Ward, Agnes .. 21 00
Ward, Edna, Beatrice, Conn 5 00
Ward, James H .. 10 00
Ward, Mrs Robt .. 1 00
Wardell, Frank .. 3 00
Ware, Mrs C M .. 5 00
Ware, Wm F .. 3 00
Warner, Mrs A P & Son 3 00
Warren, Mrs L .. 3 00
Washington, Mrs Ida .. 1 75
Weeks, J .. 1 00
Wehrman, MrsHJ .. 2 00
Weitknecht, C H .. 3 00
Wemple, Mrs S H .. 2 00
Wemple, Mrs D H .. 2 00
Kane, Hl .. 3 50
Wendt, Mrs B .. 1 00
Wescott, S B .. 3 00
Westbrook, W .. 2 00
West, Mrs M E .. 1 00
West, Mrs S R .. 3 00
West, M .. 3 00
Wheatley, MrsWL .. 3 00
Wheaton, Mrs E .. 1 00
Wheeler, Mrs L F .. 1 00
Wheeler, Mrs S J .. 3 00
Wheeler, Mrs Carl E .. 5 00
Wheeler, Zela .. 3 00
Whetley, Saml H .. 1 00
White, Mrs J .. 3 00
Whited, Mrs Geo .. 2 00
Whitehouse, Miss Lily A 1 00
Whitford, Mrs S .. 5 00
Whitlock, MrthaB .. 1 00
Whitney, Mrs GB .. 3 00
Whitney, H H .. 3 00
Wible, Mrs F .. 1 00
Wicker, Mrs Geo .. 2 00
Wilbur, Mrs O K .. 2 00
Wilcox, H P .. 3 00
Wilder, Fannie .. 1 00
Wilkins, Mrs A .. 3 00
Willabun, Lyda J .. 3 00
Williams, L T .. 3 00
Williams Mrs M .. 3 00
Williams, Mrs Sarah .. 2 00
Williamson, L .. 5 00
Williamson, M .. 1 50
Willis, Miss L C .. 3 00
Willis, Mrs .. 3 00
Wilmot, Mrs C E .. 9 00
Wilson, Mrs C W .. 3 00
Wilson, Mrs M A .. 5 00
Wilson, Mrs Mary .. 3 00
Wilson, Mrs T D .. 5 00
Wilt, Harry H .. 1 00
Wingus, I S .. 5 00
Winchell, Mrs .. 3 00
Winnford, T W .. 3 00
Winslow, Mrs I C .. 3 00
Wise, Mrs Maggie .. 3 00
Wisse, Esse .. 3 00
Wiss, Mrs .. 3 00
Wolfenden, A R .. 12 00
Wolff, Jacob .. 1 00
Wollam, Margt & Mary .. 3 00
Wood, R G .. 6 10
Woonacott, Mrs Z .. 1 00
A .. 1 00
Wood, Mrs Alice .. 1 00
Wood, Mr & Mrs J T .. 3 00
Baltimore, Md .. 3 00
A Friend, Boonsboro, Md 3 00
Troy Friends, Cattonfield, Md .. 8 00
A Beverly Subs, Beverly, Mass .. 2 00
A Friend, Boston, Mass 1 00
Children, Boston, Mass 1 00
Enfield, Mass .. 1 00
Ward, Mrs J E .. 1 00
S S of Young Ladies, Cong Ch, Florence, Mass .. 6 00
A Friend, Lenox Mass 5 00
Leominster, Mass 3 00
G G F & W G Catskill, N Y .. 9 00
Mrs Attwell's S S Cl Bapt Ch, Cazenovia, N Y .. 3 00
The Kings Daus, Chamberlain, N Y .. 3 00
Clyde, N Y .. 1 00
One who loves the cause, Colla, N Y .. 4 85
C Conklingville, N Y 1 00
Cowlesville, N Y 1 00
Bapt S S, Dansville, N Y .. 3 50
Dolgeville, N Y 3 00
C E Soc of East Fiskhill, N Y .. 3 50
East Nassau, N Y 3 00
E Rockaway, N Y 1 00
A Friend, Eaton, N Y 5 00
Elmira, N Y .. 9 00
A Friend, Falconer, N Y 3 00
Young Mens Bible Cl, Ref Ch, Fishkill Landing, N Y .. 3 00
S S of the Ref Ch, Fiskhill on Hudson, N Y 8 00
Fort Chanel S S, Flushing, N Y .. 6 00
R E B, Fort Plain, N Y 1 00
The Baraca Cl of the M E S S of Fort Plain, N Y .. 2 50
A Few Friends, Fredonia, N Y 3 00
A Friend, Soudan, Minn 10 00
A Summer S S of White Bear Lake, Minn 2 00
Mrs Herman & Daughter & Miss Margran 5 00
A Friend, Glasgow Mont 3 00
S S, Pryor, Mont .. 6 00
A few country children of Oregon, Mo 3 00
Elsie, Neb .. 6 00
A follower of the lowly Saviour, Omaha, Neb .. 1 00
Eight old ladies, I H N, Burlington, N J 1 25
Epworth League, Caldwell, N J .. 3 00
In His Name, Chester, N J 21 00
E E F, Columbus, N J 1 00
Friends, Elizabeth, N J 3 00
A friend of the Children, Glassboro, N J 3 00
Intermediate Soc of Ref Ch, Hasbrouck Hts, NJ .. 10 00
, Jersey City N J 2 00
A Friend, Jersey City, N J 1 00
New Durham C E at Metuchen, NJ .. 3 00
C S H, Montclair, N J 3 00
Redected Lights Circle of Kings Daus, Lebanon Spgs, N Y .. 9 00
Bapt S S, Lima, N Y 7 00
Little Falls, N Y 1 00
Little Falls, N Y 5 00
C E Soc, Le Moyne, Ohio 2 00
Middletown, Ohio 3 00
Salem, Ohio .. 2 00
A Friend, New Concord, Ohio 4 50
S J, Ney, Ohio .. 1 00
For Mothers Sake, Norwich, Ohio .. 1 00
Pres S S Primary Dept, Paulding, Ohio 3 00
Salem, Ohio .. 2 00
A Friend, Springfield, Ohio 3 00
A Friend, Springfield, Ohio 5 00
Nabonsock, N Y .. 1 00
A Friend, Newburgh, N Y 1 00
Mrs J S C, Newpaltz, N Y 2 00
, New Paltz, N Y 1 00
Kings Daus, Tuckerton, N J 3 00
A Friend, Wildwood, N J 3 00
Home Dept, Yardville, N J 2 00
A Friend, Afton, N Y 1 00
, Albany, N Y .. 6 00
, Albany, N Y .. 5 00
H, Atamont, NY .. 10 00
A Friend, Amsterdam, N Y 5 00
A Friend, Amsterdam, N Y .. 6 00
The Pres Jr Soc C E, Attica, N Y .. 5 00
Wide Awake S S Cl 1st Pres Ch, Auburn, N Y 3 00
Widows Mite, Bellport, L I, N Y .. 2 00
A reader of the C H, Brasie Corners, N Y 1 00
A Well Wisher, Brooklyn, N Y .. 1 00
Little Bee Hive Circle of Riverside S S, Buffalo, N Y 6 00
G G F & W G Catskill, N Y .. 9 00
Mrs Attwell's S S Cl Bapt Ch, Cazenovia, N Y .. 3 00
J F, Rochester, N Y 1 00
Sebbarth Sch, Roseboom, N Y .. 1 71
A S Sch of Rotterdam Spgs, N Y .. 3 02
Children's Day, Sag Harbor, N Y .. 1 00
A Friend, Schenectady, N Y 6 00
T C, Schenectady, N Y 3 00
Primary Dept of the Bethlehem Ref S S, Selkirk, N Y 3 50
Mrs D B J & Mrs M B L, Seneca Falls, N Y 3 00
ME Epworth League, Sheepshead Bay, N Y 5 00
In memory of Master Schuyler Island, N Y 7 00
B W W, Sinclairville, N Y 3 00
Sterling, N Y .. 6 00
Bear Lake S S, Stockton, N Y .. 1 00
A Friend, Troy, N Y 6 00
Subscriber, Trumansburg, N Y .. 1 00
Utica, N Y .. 7 00
A Friend to the Cause, Utica, NY .. 5 00
C E Soc of the 1st Bapt Ch, White Plains, N Y 6 00
Jr En Soc, Ghent, N Y 1 75
E N J, Glens Falls, N Y 8 00
Union S S, Watkins Glen, N Y 2 00
Faith, Hope & Charity Cl of the Bapt S S, Gouverneur, N Y 4 00
Friends, Guilford, N Y 3 25
Helping Hand Soc Pres Ch, Wil Ramson, N Y .. 3 00
Kings Daus Cl of Pres Ch, Williamson, N Y .. 2 00
A Friend, Windham, N Y 2 00
A Friend, Belfield, N Dak .. 10 00
In His Name, Maza, N Dak .. 2 00
A Friend, Stanton, N Dak .. 1 00
Sunshine Soc, Williams, N Dak .. 3 00
, Bartlett, Ohio 3 00
, Canfield, Ohio 5 00
, Cleveland, Ohio 1 00
Jr C E Union Luth Ch, York, Pa 1 00
A Friend, Coshocton, Ohio 2 00
A Friend, Coshocton, Ohio 1 00
A Friend, Cuyahoga Falls, Ohio. 2 00
Class of Gilson Liverpool, Ohio 3 00
Primary Dept of the Bethel S S, Frazeysburg, O 3 00
, Hicksville, O 3 00
Widows Mite, Jeromesville, Ohio 1 00
Womans Missn Soc, Kelleys Island, Ohio 7 00
Primary Cl of the C & E Soc, Kinsman, Ohio 3 00
, La Rue, Ohio 3 30
Class of Cliff House, Minnewaska, N Y .. 11 00
, Moody, N Y 1 00
E G, Mt Vernon, N Y 1 00
A Friend, Newburgh, N Y 1 00
Three Sis, Wellsville, Ohio 3 00
Wellsville Chap of the H. Carmen, Ohio 40 00
Jr League, Westville, Okla 3 00
Primary Cl of the Fairmount Pres S S of Eugene, Oreg 1 10
, McMinnville, Oreg 3 00
Mrs R T King & her S S Cl of boys, Medford, Oreg 3 00
Unknown, Thorp, Wash 1 00
S F, —, Pa 1 00
Friend, Altoona, Pa 6 00
Un Y P C E of Bath, Pa 2 00
, Beach Haven, Pa 6 00
A Reader of the C H, Bend Dulac, Wis 2 00
A Friend, Green Bay, Wis 1 00
Royal Workers, Palmyra, Wis. 3 25
, Readstown, Wis 3 00
, Olive, Alto, Can 3 60
H—, John W 1 00
S H & E C 3 00
L C N, ... 1 00
Mrs J O, —.... 1 00
C C S S 2 00
Friend, C C H 1 00
& two daus 1 00
M P C, —, Bala 1 00
—, Groveland 3 00
F P E, Hampton 1 00
C M E, Rockland 6 00
, Roslindale 6 00
A Friend & Subs to the 1 00
A Friend from Saugquit, —.... 3 00
Bible Cl of the Pleasant Hill S S, School 17 00
Bluggs Cove S S 28
Childrens Friend. 1
Collected by Gertrude Sherlin 3 00
Estate of Fred'k W Looe 25 00
From Friends, ... 2 00
From Pleasant Ridge, ... 2 00
From the S Sch & Friends of Russia Church, ... 3 00
Jr Miss Soc of Christ Ch Hollow 9 00
Livensberger, Mrs M P & S S Cl 3 00
Many Corners W C T U 12 00
Merrihew, Earle, coll by Stamford-ville Sch 7 30
Miriam & Harry of Middle Spg. 3 00
Missy Soc of the Memphis Bapt Church 3 00
Prim Cl of Middle Smithfield Soc 3 00
E F G, Phila, Pa 1 00
G G H, Phila, Pa 3 00
Pine Run S S of the United Evangel Ch of the Central Pa Conference. 3 50
A friend of Children, Pocono Pines, Pa 3 00
One who loves Gods little ones, Quakertown, Pa 6 00
A Friend & Reader of the H, Rochester Mills, Pa 1 00
Sewing Room, Sewickley Haven, Pa 3 00
W Franklin C E Soc 18 00
, Stroudsburg, Pa 2 00
In memory of my dear parents Adam & Christina Baumbardt 3 00
In memory of H H Creeger 20 00
In loving memory of little Erving Jay Fadding 3 00
In memory of Nellie 6 00
In the name of Mrs M Stewart 3 00
Eleanor, Genevieve & Frances 9 00
Abelien, Anna & Elsie Baillie 3 00
Beam, Georgia M &Mr Johnson 6 00
Bertleson, Mrs L & Mrs Webber. 1 00
Chandler, Mrs J F & Mrs J Morton 2 00
Christopher, Mrs & Laura Holden. 10 00
The Misses Convess & Miss C B Woolsey 5 00
Corliss, Amelia & Mrs W Booth 3 00
Dakin, 2d, Dr & Mrs Burnham. 2 00
Howard, Mrs A C & others who love the work. 4 00
King, Mrs M & Mrs Beebe 3 00
Saxon, Gert'de & Mrs H G & Mrs Geo Hexton 3 00
Smith, Mrs L L & Miss M J Hunt 6 00
Thorn, Pauline, Robinson, Alfred, Turner, Wallace, Bell, George 1 00
Cohen, Joseph, Stett, Dora, Gayloid, Maxwell Arters, Charles Lambert, Chas. Reynolds, S Souders, L 3 00
VanValkenburgh, Mrs Neil & Mrs C M Bosworth. 3 00
Whitman, Mrs C & A Fisher 6 00
Adams, Mrs C 1 00
Ashton, J M 2 00
Atwell, E A 1 00
Ballou, C P 3 00
Ballou, Martha 1 00
Beckwith, O A Jr 10 00
Bergman, Mrs Aug. 1 00
Betz, P G 3 00
Bingham, Helen 1 00
Boyle, James 1 00
Bradford, John J 1 00
Burlingame, F M 1 00
Caskey, Mrs R J 3 00
Clothier, A A 1 00
Crafts, Wilbur F 3 00
Day, Edward G 2 00
Derby, Mrs M E 2 00
Diel, Mrs C J. 5 00
Dier, David 6 00
Downs, Isaac 1 00
Dubois, Mrs A P 1 00
Dunbar, Samuel 2 50
Eckles, Wm 1 00
Ferguson, Mrs J S 1 00
Ferris, Mrs M 1 00
Fritz, Wm J 1 00
Gardner, Mrs John 1 00
Gardner, Mrs M 3 00
Geer, Helen 2 00
Gordon, Mrs Hattie 3 00
Gormly, Wm M 1 00
Groves, Mrs Wm R 3 00
Grice, Mrs Bertie 1 00
Grimes, M J 5 00
Grosvenor, Miss RP 5 00
Hagan, Margaret 5 00
Hanley, Rev 5 00
Hartsough, Mrs F W 1 00
Hastetter, Jacob Sr 2 00
Hemphill, Jos 1 00
Hempel, H C 2 00
Hill, Julia A 5 00
Hillhouse, Mrs J W 1 00
Hoffman, Mrs E 1 00
Holme, Eleanor 1 00
Hopkins, Annette 3 00
Howard, Geo H 2 00
Howell, Mrs Jos 1 00
Jones, Mrs Edna A 3 00
Amounts less than $1 00
5 ea $0 05
15 ea 15
1 ea 15
1 at 19
1 at 20
1 at 25
1 at 26
3 at 30
2 at 35
1 at 40
113 at 50
1 at 52
1 at 55
1 at 74
7 at 75

And a number of others to be acknowledged hereafter.

Contributions in Aid of the Bowery Mission

Contribution less than one dollar.
1 at $0 05
1 at 08
2 at 10
1 at 15
1 at 16
5 at 20
9 at 25
3 at 30
2 at 35
1 at 43
1 at 48
1 at 50
1 at 51
1 at 60
1 at 67
4 at 70
7 at 75
1 at 87
1 at 88
Werner, Jane A. 1 00
Wertz, R L.... 5 00
Wessels, Mrs J.. 1 00
Wessner, R 1 00
Westerman, Juab 1 00
Westlake, Rev & Mrs H 1 35
Westlund, J N... 2 00
Wheeler, Julia...10 00
Wheeler, Mrs LH 1 00
Wheeler, Lydia E 1 00
Whitcher, C..... 1 00
White, A R..... 1 00
White, Augustus. 5 00
White, C H..... 1 00
White, Janette & Sister 2 00
White, Mrs W P 1 00
Whitefield, G L.. 5 00
Whitehouse, W ..10 00
Whiting, MrsFE& Lawrence, MissJ 1 50
Whitman, A Y... 1 00
Whitman, B T... 1 00
Whitman, Mr N..20 00
Whitmore, S M.. 1 00
Whitney, M A C. 1 00
Whitney, Mrs FW 2 00
Whitney, Mrs J L 1 00
Whyman, C...... 1 00
Wichers, H 5 00
Wicke, William..10 00
Wickwire, Theo C 1 00
Wigney, Wm 2 00
Wilbur, Mrs M A Scott & Wilbur, V A Scott...... 1 50
Wilcox, Mrs H.. 1 00
Wilcox, Z 2 00
Wilderson, B ... 1 00
Wildman, R B... 5 00
Wiley, H B..... 5 00
Wiley, M 1 00
Wiley, Mrs W D. 6 00
Wiley, W W..... 1 00
Wilkinson, James 5 00
Willard, W 1 00
Willerton, Chas.. 2 00
Willet, Miss E L. 1 00
Williams, A L... 3 00
Williams, Mr&Mrs C B 7 00
Williams, C S... 3 00
Williams, G 1 00
Williams, Mrs J C 1 00
Williams, Mrs JD 1 00
Williams, Miss J. 5 00
Williams, M F...... 5 00
Williamson, Geo. 2 00
Williamson, L N. 5 00
Willis, Mrs E.... 1 00
Willis, Miss L... 1 00
Willman, Dr A C 5 00
Willsher, Mrs G. 1 00
Wilmer, Mrs J R. 2 00
Wilson, Emma S 2 00
Wilson, Mrs F M. 1 00
Wilson, G H..... 2 00
Wilson, Ira 1 00
Wilson, J 1 00
Wilson, J L..... 2 00
Winchester & Co. 2 00
Wood, Mrs C W. 1 00
Wood, Eleanor .. 5 00
Wood, Mr & Mrs F W 2 00
Wood, R W..... 1 00
Wood, Sarah J... 5 00
Woodhull, MrsWC 2 00
Woodruff, J G... 1 00
Woods, Mrs Kate 1 00
Woodworth, MrsB F and Ada 2 50
Woolf, Mrs M L.. 3 00
Woolley, J V T .10 00
Woolworth, F W100 00
Wonnacott, Z A.. 1 00
Work, J Henry.. 5 00
Wortall, G R.... 1 00
Worrall, Mrs P B 1 00
Wortendyke, MrsA C 10 00
Worth, C 2 00
Wright, A 1 50
Wright, J I...... 5 00
Wright, Leo S... 1 50
Wright, Mary .. 3 00
Wright, Thos N.. 5 00
Wyant, W W ... 1 00
Wyman, Mrs L A 1 00
Wymon, L S 2 00
Yale, J M & Fds. 2 00
Yungblut, I .. 2 00
Yard W C 1 00
Yeager, M B ... 2 00
Yoder, Mrs B D.. 2 00
Yoder, Mrs M .. 5 00
Young, Mrs C R.. 1 00
Young, M 3 00
Young, M L .. 2 00
Zabriskie, MrsMC 1 00
Zeigler, Mrs W S. 1 00
Zipp, Mrs P..... 1 00
Zummerman, DrH S 2 00
Zimmermann, E E 2 00
Zoll, Bessie ... 2 00
Zollinger, Wm A. 5 00
Zumdahl A H ..10 00
Abbey, Mrs A S 1 00
Abbey, Mrs L D 1 00
Abbos, John E 5 00
Abbott, Anna C 1 00
Abbott, C W 1 00
Abbott, F C ..10 00
Abbott, Mr A . 1 00
Abbott, Robt ..10 00
Abendroth, Laura 1 00
Abney, Mrs H J 1 00
Abrahams, Mrs S M 1 00
Acker, Susan M 5 00
Ackerson Mrs CA 1 00
Ackley, Calvin . 5 00
Adams, Mrs ... 5 00
Adams, A Ripley 1 00
Adams, C J 5 00
Adams, Mrs C Thayer 3 00
Adams, E A.... 1 00
Adams, G A.... 3 00
Adams, John A. 5 00
Adams, John W 1 00
Adams, L K.... 1 00
Adams, Mrs M 1 00
Adams, Mrs N T 2 00
Adams, Mrs Stewart & a friend 3 00
Adamson, Mrs Jas 1 00
Adamson, K ... 1 00
Addis, Sarah ... 1 00
Aebi, L 5 00
Affolter, Mrs GW 2 00
Aga, O L...... 3 00
Agnew, C E.... 5 00
Ahrens, Miss E 2 00
Aiken, E 2 00
Ailes, Mrs M A 1 00
Aitchison, Mrs.. 1 00
Aitken, Mrs A.. 2 00
Aitken, Miss LA 5 00
Acker, John 2 00
Akin, Anabella. 2 00
Alandee, Mrs .. 2 00
Albert, Mrs A.. 1 00
Albert, J B.... 3 00
Alright, A and children 2 00
Alcott, Isabella. 1 00
Alden, A J..... 1 00
Alden, M A.... 1 00
Alden, Mrs J.. 1 00
Alderman, B.... 4 00
Alexander, E E 5 00
Alexander, Hugo 1 00
Alexander, N... 1 00
Alford, Mrs K. 1 00
Allen, Mr A R.. 2 00
Allen, Mrs B F 5 00
Allen, C 5 00
Allen, C E..... 5 00
Allen, Chas H.. 2 00
Allen, Clara E. 1 00
Allen, Esther E 1 00
Allen, G K.... 1 00
Allen, Geo R... 1 00
Allen, J M.... 1 00
Allen, Jno L.... 1 00
Allen, Lydia A. 2 00
Allen, P....... 5 00
Allen, Mrs S... 1 00
Allen, Mrs T A 5 00
Allen, Mr & Mrs W G 1 00
Aller, Geo H... 5 00
Allingham, Mrs J 1 00
Allyn, Mrs S H and friends .. 3 50
Almard, Mrs....10 00
Almeida, Mr and Mrs P 2 00
Almond, Mrs .. 5 00
Almsted, Mary B 5 00
Almy, Mrs J.... 2 00
Abrick, Samuel.. 5 00
Altorfer, Henry. 1 00
Alvord, Mrs A. 1 00
Amerman, J C L 1 00
Amberman J T. 1 00
Ames, Eliza M..10 00
Ames, W A..... 2 00
Ammon, Low ... 1 00
Amos, Mrs E... 1 00
Anderson, A ... 1 00
Anderson, Mrs A 1 00
Anderson, A F.. 5 00
Anderson, Annie. 1 00
Anderson, Edw U 5 00
Anderson, H S.. 1 00
Anderson, Ida F 1 00
Anderson, J G.. 1 75
Anderson, Mrs L 3 00
Anderson, Janet. 2 00
Anderson, John 1 00
Anderson, Mrs J. 1 00
Anderson, Marg't 1 00
Anderson, Mrs P 2 50
Anderson, MrsPh 1 00
Anderson, Ruben 1 00
Anderson, Mrs R A 2 00
Anderson, Mrs W 1 00
Anderson, W J.. 1 00
Anderzen, J A.. 1 00
Andres, A C... 1 00
Andrews, Mrs A 1 00
Andrews, A H. 2 00
Andrews, Mrs JD 1 00
Andrews, John.. 1 50
Andrews, L H.. 5 00
Andrews, M A. 5 00
Andrews, Mrs M. 1 00
Andrews, N ... 1 00
Andrews, Mrs SM 1 00
Angell, Mr & Mrs M H 4 00
Angor, W A... 5 00
Ankeny, Mrs S 5 00
Anmiller, Miss J 1 00
Ansok, Chas O. 1 00
Anthony, Rev JP 1 00
Anthony, M C.. 2 00
Anthony, Mr and Mrs Wm G... 2 00
Antonides, Jr Ira 1 00
Apdegroff, M E 1 00
App, Joseph ... 1 00
Appley, L V.... 1 00
Archard, E 1 00
Arford, Mrs S L 5 00
Argue, F A ... 1 00
Arjes, Mr tand Mrs J H 1 00
Arm, Henry ... 1 00
Arman, Miss Jennie and Armtan, Mrs S I 2 00
Arment, W A... 1 00
Armistead, Mr & Mrs D F 2 00
Armstrong, Adam 5 00
Armstrong, Ch . 2 00
Armstrong, and sister E T 8 00
Armstrong, F E 2 00
Arner, Mr & Mrs M D 1 00
Arnold, A 1 00
Arnold, E W C20 00
Arnold, F W ... 5 00
Arnold, Mrs H M 2 50
Arnold, Mrs WW 1 00
Ash, S P 1 00
Ashcroft, J W 2 00
Ashdown D W 1 00
Ashley, Miss L M 2 00
Ashley, Mrs M J 1 50
Ashton, L S.. 1 00
Assmann, Mrs . 1 00
Asmus, Mrs F W 1 00
Asper, J H..... 1 50
Aston, Mrs A.. 1 00
Atchinson, W .. 2 00
Aten, Mrs S.... 1 00
Atkins, Mrs C C 1 00
Atkins, D K.... 1 50
Atkins, Mrs E D 1 00
Atkins, Mrs F. 2 00
Atkins, S S... 5 00
Atkinson, A C. 1 00
Atkinson, F S.. 1 00
Atkinson, John..10 00
Atkinson, R E. 2 00
Atkinson, Sarah 1 00
Atwater, P B.. 1 00
Atwood, J A... 5 00
Augsburger, D .. 3 00
Aurand, Mrs HK 1 00
Auranett, Miss M R 1 00
Aus, S C 1 00
Austin, E F... 1 00
Austin, O D.... 2 00
Averill, Ed ... 2 00
Averill, W 1 00
Avery, Mrs G.. 1 00
Avery, M Y.... 2 00
Avery, O W ... 8 00
Axtell, E M ... 1 00
Ayres, M B 1 00
Ayres, Mrs T E 1 00
Aysene, Miss I C 1 00
Baas, Mr 1 00
Babbitt, C R .. 3 00
Bachman, Ruth. 1 00
Bacon, F 1 00
Bacon, Mrs R.. 1 00
Bacon, Wash'n.. 5 00
Baehr, Mrs 1 00
Baer, Emma K 1 00
Baggs, Mrs E B 5 00
Baggs, Mrs E B 2 50
Bagwell, Mrs Ch T 1 00
Bahrenburg, L .. 1 00
Baidsley, Mrs J 5 00
Bailey, Mrs C J 1 00
Bailey, Eliz .. 2 00
Bailey, E B ... 1 00
Bailey, Mrs F O 1 00
Bailey, H R . 1 00
Bailey, Mrs Ira 1 00
Bailey, Jane ... 1 00
Bailey, Mrs L H 5 00
Bailey, Myrtle..10 00
Bailey, Mrs T H 1 00
Bailey, W J..10 00
Baily, E G .. 7 50
Baird, Henny . 2 00
Baker, C Eva... 5 00
Baker, Chas A.. 1 00
Barker, C L... 2 00
Baker, C W .. 5 00
Baker, Mrs E.. 1 00
Baker, F A.... 1 00
Baker, Mrs F.. 1 00
Baker, Mrs J A 1 00
Baker, M G.... 2 00
Baker, Mrs M.. 5 50
Baker, Susan .. 50
Baker, Mrs Wm 1 00
Baker, Wm H.. 1 00
Bakewell, G C. 5 00
Bakker, E H.. 1 00
Balcke, Anna... 1 00
Baldwin, Mrs AL 2 35
Baldwin, C E... 2 00
Baldwin, Mrs D 1 00
Baldwin, Mrs E S and Florence 1 50
Baldwin, F..... 2 00
Baldwin, M ... 1 00
Baldwin, M and K & Mrs H Southard 3 00
Baldwin, Mrs M M 1 00
Baldwin, Theo 1 00
Ballard, Mrs I. 5 00
Ballard, Mrs S. 1 00
Stephen - Ballard Rubber Co, New York City ... 2 00
Baller, J M.... 1 00
Ballheim, W .. 5 00
Balling, J 1 00
Ballon, C F... 4 00
Bamborough, C E 1 00
Bancroft, Mrs L 1 00
Bank's Mrs I... 2 00
Banninger, H .. 1 00
Bansen, Eva .. 1 25
Banta, Mr and Mrs Wm 2 00
Baptie, A M.. 2 00
Barber, I 1 00
Barber, J 5 00
Barber, Mrs J H 1 00
Barber, Mrs Jas 2 00
Barber, Mr and Mrs J W 10 00
Barber, Mrs T P 2 00
Barbour, Miss N 5 00
Bare, Mary L.. 2 00
Barkemeyer, WJ 5 00
Barken, J A.... 2 00
Barker, Mrs A L 1 00
Barker, C E... 2 00
Barker, E D.... 1 00
Barker, F L.... 1 00
Barker, H A.... 1 50
Barkman, Mrs D 2 00
Barlow, Mrs H H 1 00
Barnard, C L.... 1 00
Barnard, H R... 2 00
Barnard, Mrs ME 1 00
Barnes, C E.... 1 00
Barnes, E....... 1 00
Barnes, Mrs E... 1 00
Barnes, F E... 5 00
Barnes, J F.... 1 00
Barnes, J M..... 5 00
Barnes, W F and family 5 00
Barnett, Mrs C.. 1 00
Barnet, R S .. 5 00
Barnett, Mrs HK 1 00
Barnett, S A... 2 00
Barnhart, A C & Grace L....... 2 00
Barnhart, Miss K A 2 00
Barnhouse, Mrs J J 1 00
Barr, J N..... 1 00
Barr, Miss M A 5 00
Barr, Miss M A 5 00
Barr, Mrs M A.. 2 00
Barr, W U 2 50
Barrick, S M .. 1 00
Barrow, Mrs .. 1 00
Barry, M 1 00
Bartins and family S W..... 5 00
Barrows, S A.. 2 00
Bartle, Mrs J... 1 00
Bartles, H S... 1 00
Bartlett, Mrs E. 1 00
Bartlett, H M.. 1 00
Bartlett, J 1 00
Bartlett, Mrs R.. 1 00
Barton, Anna .. 2 00
Bartow, C L ... 1 00
Bartow, Miss E. 2 00
Bartter, A 5 00
Baskerville, J .. 1 00
Bastress, A L.. 2 00
Bates, A J..... 5 00
Bates, Mrs E... 1 00
Bates, Mrs A N 2 00
Bates, Mrs E P. 1 00
Bateson, Mrs I. 5 05
Batjer, Henry .. 5 00
Batt, Samuel... 1 00
Battenberg, E.. 3 00
Battin, A M... 1 00
Baudouine, A .. 5 00
Bauer, Mrs C.. 2 00
Bauer, Chas.... 2 00
Baum, A 1 00
Bauman, Mrs M 2 50
Baumgardner, M J 1 00
Baumgartner, Miss C; Tschantz, Mr and Mrs C C.. 2 00
Baur, Mrs F.... 1 20
Baxter, Mrs G.. 1 50
Bayer, M J.... 3 15
Bayire, Mrs H.. 1 00
Bayless, D 1 00
Baylis, J M.... 1 00
Baylor, Mr and Mrs J F..... 5 00
Baysinger, Mrs R 1 00
Beach, D S 1 00
Beach, Mrs E M 2 00
Beach, N 1 00
Beach, Mrs R C 1 00
Beadle, M J.... 1 00
Beakes, C H C 5 00
Beall, Mrs T A 5 00
Beals, J H...... 5 00
Beam, F B..... 1 00
Bean, Mrs J N C 1 00
Beard, Mrs E... 1 00
Beard, J Q..... 1 00
Beardslee, E E.. 5 00
Beardsley, T.... 2 00
Beatty, Miles... 1 00
Beaver, S J..... 1 00
Bechtel, Mrs J Y 1 00
Bechtel, M 3 00
Beck, A 1 00
Beck, E C and M F 3 00
Beck, J G......10 00
Beck, Mrs J R... 1 00
Becker, Mrs..... 1 00
Becker, A 1 00
Becker, A E... 1 00
Becker, Miss C. 1 00
Becker, Mr & Mrs L T 1 00
Beckler, F W.. 1 00
Beckman, W....10 00
Beckwith Mrs J B 1 00
Bedell, M L.... 2 00
Beebe, Mrs J M 1 00
Beebe, Mrs M A 2 00
Beebe, Mrs S S 5 00
Beebe, W 2 00
Beckman, J B.. 5 00
Beel, Wm 1 00
Beeson, Sara ... 1 00
Behmer, E H.. 4 00
Beidler, C E... 1 50
Beiler, B S 2 00
Beilstein, Mrs E 5 00
Beinhauer, F ... 5 00
Beiser, C B ... 1 00
Belden, A 1 00
Belden, A 1 00
Belden, Mrs E.. 2 00
Belden, M A .. 1 01
Bell, Mrs A.... 5 00
Bell, Mrs A.... 1 00
Bell, Eliza...... 1 00
Bell, Mrs J S.. 1 00
Bell, Mrs M... 1 00
Bell, Mrs P B.. 2 00
Bell, R M 4 00
Bellinger, MissM 5 00
Bellinger, M E 1 00
Belts, Mrs E ... 2 00
Benchley, M R.. 1 00
Benden, Mrs EL 1 00
Bender, H 1 00
Bender, W W.. 1 00
Bendheim, A D. 5 00
Benedict, MissES 2 00
Benedict, Miss M P 5 00
Bengtson, S T.. 2 00
Benham, T M.. 5 00
Benjamin, H ... 2 25
Benjamin, Miss T 1 00
Benjamin, W T 2 00
Benjamin, Mrs W & Loomer, Mrs T 2 00
Bennallack, W .. 1 00
Bennett, C W... 5 00
Bennett, E E.. 1 00
Bennett, J 1 00
Bennett, N 1 00
Bennett, Mrs OM 2 00
Bennett, Mrs OM 1 00
Benning, F L.. 2 00
Bennington, N.. 3 00
Benson, A J... 1 00
Benson, L 2 00
Benson, N A... 2 00
Bentler, I & A 4 00
Bentman, W ...20 00
Bentzel, J E... 2 00
Benz, Dr H.... 1 01
The Berdan Furniture Co, Passaic 2 00
Berdell, J C... 5 00
Berg, J C 1 00
Berg, Julius ... 1 50
Berge, Mrs . 5 00
Berger, C H ... 2 00
Berheuke, C W. 1 00
Berkeybiel, C .. 1 00
Berkheimer, E J 5 00
Berlin, Aniline Works, N Y C 2 00
Bernagozzi, W P 5 00
Berry, A H ... 2 00
Berry, I A ... 5 00
Berry, J M.....15 00
Berry, Mrs M A 1 00
Berry, Mrs M C 1 00
Bernhardt, Mrs J 1 00
Bersinger, R ... 1 00
Best, E M 1 00
Bethany, S S, Pt Blakeley 10 00
Bethune, Geo.... 1 00
Betterley, C K.. 1 00
Bettys, J Y 10 00
Bevis, Mrs E M 2 00
Bice, E S 1 00
Beyer, Miss L.. 1 00
Bickley, Mrs D S 2 00
Bickley, F 3 00
Biedenwolf, Miss Loy 1 00
Biederwolf, M... 2 00
Bignall, J 5 00
Biggs, Mrs G D 2 00
Bigham, M 2 50
Billings, Mr and Mrs J W... ...... 2 00
Billings, Miss M H 5 00
Billings, M M.. 1 00
Binder, C K .. 6 00
Binder, J K .. 2 00
Binzear, F W.. 1 00
Bird, Mrs J R.. 1 00
Bird, Mrs M ... 1 00
Birdsall, Dr and Mrs S 1 00
Birk, C W..... 1 00
Birky, P 3 00
Bisbee, H D.... 2 00
Bissell, Mrs C L 2 00
Bissell, E 3 00
Bissell, J N.... 3 00
Bissell, Mrs J S 2 00
Bivens, Miss S.. 1 00
Black, Mrs A.... 2 00
Black, S R 2 00
Blackwood, S A 1 00
Blair, Miss 1 00
Blair, Mrs A.... 7 50
Blair, E 1 00
Blair, H A...... 1 00
Blair, S H..... 1 70
Blake, F G.... 3 00
Blakely, M H.. 3 00
Blakeney, Mrs W 1 00
Blakeslee, Mrs A B 1 00
Blakeslee, Mrs I 2 00
Blakey, Jas .. 2 50
Blanchard, MrsA 2 00
Blanchard, Mrs M M 2 00
Blanton, T A... 2 00
Blatchley, J ... 1 00
Blauvelt, D ...15 00
Blauvelt, J C.. 3 00
Bleifuss, E 1 00
Blish, E A.... 1 55
Bliss, E C.....25 00
Bliss, E E 5 00
Bliss, Mrs H P 2 00
Bliss, R 2 00
Bliss, Wm 3 00
Blivon, Mrs C S 1 00
Blocher, J W .. 5 00
Blom, J A...... 1 00
Blood, E J.... 3 00
Bloomingdale Reformed Church, N Y City 22 10
Blue, Mary A.. 3 00
Bluh, Clara ... 2 00
Blume, H W... 1 00
Blume, L C 5 00
Blunt, I A ... 2 00
Bly, Mrs H A.. 1 00
Bly, H A 1 00
Blymyer, MrsCW 2 00
Blynn, Mrs H G 1 00
Bobb, Mrs F P 1 00
Bock, N J 2 00
Boddy, F R ... 1 00
Bodine, Mrs J P 1 00
Bodley, Mrs L N 1 00
Boenigh, C 4 00
Bogardus, I 1 00
Bogert, Miss B J 2 50
Bogert, Mrs H C 1 00
Bogert, Miss L M 1 00
Bogle, F G.... 150 00
Bogle, H A.... 15 00
Bohatec, C.... 2 00
Bohoman, Miss H A 1 00
Boland, Mrs J... 5 00
Bolender, M E.. 3 00
Bolitke, W R.. 2 00
Bolles, Mr & Mrs E W and Bolles, L R...... 2 00
Bollinger, K E. 1 00
Bollman, G 1 00
Bonnet, Mrs M.. 5 00
Boog, J H 2 00
Boon, J P 1 00
Boon, J O..... 1 00
Boone, M G C.. 2 00
Boone, Mrs S.. 1 00
Booth, A M E.. 1 00
Booth, C R..... 1 00
Booth, H G 3 00
Booth, S H & Sons 5 00
Booth, Mrs T... 1 00
Booth, W F... 5 00
Booton, Rose E. 1 00
Booz, Mrs C M and Cassel, Mr & Mrs Y R.. 3 00
Borah, Mrs A... 1 00
Borden, Mrs A. 1 00
Borker, W E... 1 00
Borland, Mrs A C 2 00
Bosley, J 3 00
Boswell, Miss M 3 00
Bosworth, L P. 2 00
Botdorf, J H.. 2 00
Both, Mrs C.... 2 00
Boudinot, Mr & Mrs F E 10 00
Boulter, S I... 1 03
Boun, Mrs M... 2 00
Bounds, Mrs FJ 1 00
Bouquet, H 3 00
Bourne, Mrs N. 1 00
Bourquin, A L.. 1 00
Bousan, C W... 1 00
Boutwell, W I.. 1 00
Bovee, A 1 00
Bowen, A 1 00
Bowen, W M P.. 1 00
Bower, L 2 00
Bowers, Mrs WR 2 00
Bowker, Mrs 5 00
Bowman, Mrs FG 1 00
Bowman, Mrs HR 2 00
Bowman, J J... 1 00
Bowman, R S... 1 00
Bowman, Mrs S J 2 00
Boyce, E 2 00
Boyd, F V...... 1 00
Boyd, S L..... 5 00
Boyd, Mrs V... 2 00
Boydston, J and family 7 50
Boyer, M H.....10 00
Boyes, Mrs A.... 1 00
Boyle, Mrs A... 1 00
Boyle, Mrs A... 1 00
Boyle, Jas 1 00
Boyle, Mr & Mrs T B 1 00
Boynton, D M .. 2 00
Brackemyer, Mrs A E 1 00
Bracken, Mrs .. 1 00
Bracy, H E.... 1 00
Bradbury, M .. 1 00
Braden, Mrs WH 1 00
Bradford, A N.. 1 00
Bradford, MrsAN 1 00
Bradford, MrsEC 1 00
Bradford, J J.. 1 00
Bradley, A T.. 5 00
Bradley, C W.. 1 00
Bradley, J C... 5 00
Bradly, A D... 1 00
Brain, G N.... 2 00
Braine, Mrs ...10 00
Braithwaite, MI 5 00
Braly, T 2 00
Braman, F T.... 2 00
Branch, C 1 00
Branch, C 1 00
Brand, J 1 00
Brand, S 10 00
Brandan, J W... 1 00
Brandes, S A.. 2 00
Brandley, F..... 3 00
Brandow, Miss M 1 00
Brandt, Mrs ... 2 00
Brandt, A M... 5 00
Brandt, E S.... 1 00
Braun, Mrs A... 1 00
Bray, E T..... 2 00
Brazel, J L.... 2 00
Breakiron, G M 5 00
Breckenridge, ME 1 00
Breden, H J.... 1 00
Brendlinger, A V 2 00
Brenner, Mrs EC 1 00
Brenton, A S V 1 00
Brenton, Mrs E.. 1 00
Brett, E & family 1 00
Breunich, H 5 00
Brewer, S 1 00
Brewer, Mrs S.. 1 00
Brewington, MV 5 00
Brewster, Mrs JE 5 00
Breyn, L J 1 00
Bricker, S & E 5 00
Brickham, R T and wife 2 00
Bridges, B W.. 1 00
Bridgman, MrsME 1 00
Briggs, F H 5 00
Briggs, Mrs L C 1 00
Briggs, M E.... 1 00
Brigham, Mrs M 2 00
Bright, E A.... 1 00
Brightman, C A 1 00
Brimmer, Mrs S R 1 50
Bring, Miss I... 5 00
Brink, Mrs A.. 2 00
Brinkmeyer, H.. 5 00
Briston, F A.. 1 00
Britton, Mrs BH 1 00
Broadbent, J F 1 00
Broadhead, J W 5 00
Broadwater, E A 1 00
Brobert, Mrs S.. 1 00
Broadhead, Misses M G and F C 1 00
Broadhead, Mr & Mrs T W 2 00
Brodie, J R... 2 00
Broga, F W... 5 00
Brokaw, A L.. 3 00
Brokaw, A T... 5 00
Bronson, E A.. 1 00
Bronson, W H.. 1 00
Brookins, Mrs J 10 00
Brooks, Miss B G 2 00
Brooks, Mrs E F 3 50
Brooks, Mrs E M 1 00
Brooks, E S.... 2 00
Brooks, M C... 2 00
Brooksher, Mrs V 1 05
Bross, P J..... 1 00
Broudwater, Mr & Mrs J T..... 5 00
Brouse, W A.. 1 00
Brown, A C....10 00
Brown, Mrs A J 1 00
Brown, A 1 00
Brown, B F.... 1 00
Brown, C A.... 1 00
Brown, Mrs C M 2 00
Brown, D L..... 2 00
Brown, Mrs E.. 1 00
Brown, F H.... 5 00
Brown, F H.... 2 00
Brown, G C.... 5 00
Brown, G A.. [illegible] 00
Browne, Miss G M 3 00
Brown, Mrs H S 2 00
Brown, Miss I M 2 00
Brown, Mrs J E and daughter.. 4 00
Brown, Mr J L 5 00
Brown, J W.... 2 00
Brown, Mrs J.. 1 00
Brown, Mrs J.. 2 00
Brown, J . .. 5 00
Brown, J 5 00
Brown, J 1 00
Brown, Mrs L A 1 00
Brown, L G.... 1 00
Brown, M A.... 2 00
Brown, M C.... 1 00
Brown, Mrs M.. 2 00
Brown, M 1 00
Brown, Mrs R E 1 00
Brown, R I ... 5 00
Brown, Mrs S H 1 00
Brown, Mrs S W 10 00
Brown, T M.... 1 00
Brown, T M.... 2 00
Brown, V L.... 2 00
Brown, Mrs Z D 1 00
Browning, Mrs B 1 00
Browne, Jas E. 1 00
Brownell, G C.. 1 00
Brownell, T K.. 2 00
Brownold, C 2 00
Brubaker, D M. 1 00
Brubacher, E ... 1 00
Brubaker, Mr and Mrs F 1 00
Bruce, E J 1 00
Bruce, Mrs L A 5 00
Bruce, M 2 00
Bruce, Sara ... 2 00
Bruehl, M 5 00
Bruing, A 2 00
Brummer, L ... 2 00
Brundige, T W. 5 00
Brundrett, Anchor 3 00
Brune, Mrs S D 1 00
Bruner, Mrs M G 1 00
Brunger, Mrs .. 1 00
Brunner, C 1 00
Bruno, C 20 00
Brusch, J 2 00
Brush, G L.... 1 50
Brush, Mrs I... 2 00
Bruvold, N 5 00
Bryan, A B.... 1 00
Bryant, S 10 00
Bryce, Mrs S W 2 00
Buchanan, M A. 1 00
Buchanan, W H 1 00
Buchanon, Mrs E O 1 00
Bucher, G S.... 2 00
Buck, N 1 00
Buckbee, Mrs .. 5 00
Buckbee, C 5 00
Buckbee, M A.. 5 00
Buckelen, K M.. 1 00
Buckelew, M .. 1 00
Bucknall, A ... 3 00
Bucroft, Mrs .. 1 50
Budlong, Miss B 10 00
Buduman, J ... 5 00
Buechner, R ... 1 00
Bugbee, A W... 2 00
Buhlor, J 1 00
Buhrman, H C.. 1 00
Bulkley, E M...10 00
Bulkley, L K....10 00
Bullard, Mrs J O 3 00
Bullard, Mrs N M 1 00
Bumfield, Mrs S 1 00
Bunce, Mrs C... 1 00
Bunney, Jr, A. 2 00
Burbank, Mrs MF 2 00
Burdett, Mrs S F 2 00
Burdick, Mrs J J 1 00
Burdick, L 1 00
Burgan, A L... 5 00
Burgan, Mrs S. 2 00
Burger, Mrs M A 5 00
Burgess, Mrs E D 2 00
Burhaus, W V.. 2 00
Burk, A M..... 1 00
Burke, Mrs M. 1 00
Burkholde, D S. 1 00
Burlee, A H... 5 00
Burner, E 1 00
Burner, H 2 00
Burnett, Mrs F J 1 00
Burnham, S C.. 5 00
Burnham, W H..10 00
Burns, T S..... 5 00
Burns, W S.... 1 00
Burnside, W A 2 00
Burrell, Mrs Wm & A 2 00
Burridge, A M.. 1 00
Burrows, Mrs J. 1 00
Burtch, Mrs B J 1 00
Burtis, M P... 2 00
Burton, A J.... 1 00
Burton, Mrs G S 1 00
Burton, Mrs M M 2 00
Bury, Phillip... 2 00
Busch, E 1 00
Busch, Homer... 10
Bush, Mrs T B. 1 00
Bush, W C.... 5 00
Bushnell, Mrs W H 1 00
Bushnell, H M. 1 00
Busker, J P.... 1 00
Butcher, Mrs E.. 2 00
Butler, C E..... 5 00
Butler, Mrs D W 2 00
Butler, E S.... 2 00
Butler, Mrs H N 1 00
Butler, H V.... 2 00
Butler, Mrs J W 1 00
Butler, V 1 00
Butler, V 2 00
Butler, W N.... 2 35
Buttelman, MrsW 1 00
Butterfield, S.... 1 00
Butterfild, J 3 00
Butterworth, MA 1 00
Buttler, D 2 00
Butts, B 1 00
Butts, M S..... 1 00
Byers, L and Deeds, G W..10 00
Cade, A J..... 2 00
Cadmus, P H... 1 00
Cady, Mrs F A.. 5 00
Cady, Mrs H R.. 2 00
Cain, E L...... 1 00
Cain, O B...... 1 00
Cain, Ralph H.20 00
Cairns, John.... 1 00
Calder, J 1 00
Calderwood, J C 1 00
Caldwell, Mrs AF 1 00
Caldwell, Mrs F 1 00
Caldwell, J B..10 00
Caldwell, J P.. 4 00
Caldwell, N H.. 1 00
Caley, J W..... 1 00
Calhoun, Mrs A. 1 00
Calkins, E S.... 1 00
Callahan, Mrs JB 2 00
Calvert, J P... 1 00
Camblin, Mrs S. 1 00
Camerer, V 1 00
Cameron, MrsFB 5 00
Cameron, J 5 00
Camp, Mrs...... 2 00
Camp, E K.... 1 00
Campbell, C M.. 5 00
Campbell, MrsEF 1 00
Campbell, E.... 1 00
Campbell, G S. 5 00
Campbell, J G.. 2 00
Campbell, J ... 2 00
Campbell, MD, M B 2 00
Campbell, Mrs R 1 00
Campbell, R ... 1 00
Camper, J F.... 2 50
Canfield, W H.. 3 00
Cannon, W J.. 5 00
Canty, D 10 00
Caps, G L...... 1 00
Carder, R G .. 1 00
Carey, Mrs E... 1 00
Carey, G G.... 2 00
Carey, H 1 00
Carlile G 5 00
Carls, H 2 00
Carlson, G E.... 1 00
Carleton, Mrs OL 2 00
Carlton, G H ... 1 00
Carlton, Mrs ... 2 00
Carlson, A S... 1 00
Carlson, H 1 00
Carlson, M J.... 1 00
Carlson, Mrs NH 2 00
Carlyle, G 1 00
Carmean, C 10 00
Carmichael, Mrs W R 1 00
Carpenter, Mrs F C 1 00
Carpenter, H K. 1 00
Carpenter, MrsJE 2 00
Carpenter, L C.. 1 00
Carpenter, Mrs L 1 00
Carpenter, M E.. 1 00
Carpenter, O A. 1 50
Carpenter, W H 1 00
Carr, A 2 00
Carr, F P..... 5 00
Carr, J F..... 1 00
Carr, J P 5 00
Carrels, H...... 4 00
Carrington, E C. 5 00
Carroll, Mrs ... 1 00
Carroll, Mrs R.. 5 00
Carson, M 1 00
Carson, Mrs S T 1 00
Carter, A G.... 2 00
Carter, Miss E L 1 00
Carter, J F 1 00
Carter, Mrs J R 2 00
Carter, Mrs J R 1 00
Carter, Mrs J R & children ... 1 10
Carter, R A...10 00
Carter, Dr R K 3 00
Carter, S A and G W 2 00
Carter, Mrs S E. 2 00
Cartmell, S 2 00
Carus, Mrs E M 1 00
Cary, E M...... 1 00
Case, Mrs EDM 1 00
Case, J L..... 5 00
Case, L S..... 1 00
Casey, W 1 00
Cashart, C A.. 1 00
Cashell, Mrs HA 1 00
Cask, Mr & Mrs S C 1 00
Caspen, J L ... 1 00
Caskey, Mrs R J 3 00
Cass, M A...... 1 00
Cassell, A R.... 1 00
Cassy, T E.... 1 00
Castle, Mrs W B 1 00
Castret, J 2 00
Caswell, M 3 00
Caswell, W 2 50
Catherwood, MrsL 2 50
Cation, D C..... 2 00
Caughey, W C..10 00
Cavarly, M B... 1 00
Cecil, Mrs M... 1 00
Ceder, I 1 50
Cederholm, O.... 1 00
Celley, Mrs A L 1 00
Cerf, Mrs L A.. 5 00
Chamberlin, M H 5 00
Chadeayne, MissL 1 00
Chadwick, Mrs A 2 00
Chaeffer, W B.. 2 00
Chaffer, R A....10 00
Chamberlaine, AL 3 00
Chambers, Mrs M W 5 00
Chambers, Mr & Mrs R N 1 00
Chandler, G P. 3 00
Chandler, L B. 1 00
Chapin, E M ... 1 00
Chapin, J S 1 00
Chaplin, W 1 00
Chapman, Mrs E 2 00
Chapman, E ... 1 00
Chapman, Mrs J & son C 2 00
Chapman, Mrs JC 1 00
Chapman, J L. 2 50
Chapman, J R. 4 05
Chapman, J R.. 5 00
Chapman, M .. 1 50
Charles, C W.. 2 00
Charles, C 1 00
Charlesworth, FC 1 00
Chase & Co, J S 1 50
Chase, Mrs J W 2 00
Chase, W F... 1 00
Chase, W R.... 2 00
Chau Wah Shee 1 00
Cheever, B S & A B 2 00
Cheney, M G... 2 00
Cherry, Mrs J R. 50
Chesebro, J R.. 2 00
Cheshire, M E.. 5 00
Chester, Mrs S C 2 00
Chester, Mrs S C 2 00
Childs, M E.... 1 00
Childs, H 1 00
Childs, M N.... 1 00
Chilson, Mrs J C 1 00
Chippendale, J.. 1 00
Chisholm, A ... 5 00
Chittenden, Mrs M F 5 00
Choate, R 1 00
Christensen, Mr & Mrs N P.... 1 00
Christenson, E A 1 00
Christian, E ... 1 00
Christiansen, R. 1 00
Christianson, A . 2 00
Christman, Mrs C & daughter ... 2 00
Christman, Mrs I V 1 00
Christmas, Mrs C 1 00
Chronister, E E. 5 00
Church, A B.. 2 00
Churchill, C ... 1 00
Ciswell, M A.. 50
Clapp, G S.....10 00
Clark, A 2 50
Clark, A H..... 2 00
Clark, Mrs A.... 2 00
Clark, A 2 00
Clark, A G.... 50
Clark, Mrs A... 2 00
Clark, A 1 00
Clark, B 5 00
Clark, Mrs D M 1 00
Clark, E 1 00
Clark, E A..... 2 00
Clark, Mrs E L 1 00
Clark, F R and Lewis, Mrs G. 2 00
Clark, Mrs G G 1 00
Clark, Mrs G G 1 00
Clark, G L and Ernest C...... 2 00
Clark, H H 5 00
Clark, Mrs J O 10 00
Clark, J T, Jr.. 1 00
Clark, J A... 5 00
Clark, Mrs M A 5 04
Clark, R M..... 2 00
Clark, R 1 00
Clark, T 1 00
Clark, Mrs W B 3 00
Clark, W S 3 00
Clake, Mrs J T.. 1 00
Clarke, Miss MS 10 00
Clarke, Mrs M M 1 50
Clarke, M E.... 2 00
Clarke, S 2 00
Clarkson, Mrs JC 2 00
Clarkson, MrsJW 1 00
Clausewitz, Mr & Mrs F 5 00
Claveans, T W.. 1 00
Claxton, H H... 5 00
Clay, A E 3 00
Clay, Mrs L 1 00
Claypool, MrsMG 2 00
Clayton, L 1 00
Cleary, L J.... 2 00
Cleator, N 3 00
Cleaver, P M... 1 00
Cleaves, N & C. 2 00
Clegg, A 2 00
Clegg, M A ... 2 00
Clelland, J S... 3 00
Clelland, S and wife 5 00
Clelland, Jas.... 5 00
Clements, J H.. 5 00
Clements, Mrs M 2 00
Clements, Mr and Mrs Robert .. 2 00
Clemmer, L..... 1 00
Clemons, Mrs LA 1 00
Clemons, M T..10 00
Clemons, M T..10 00
Clendenen, J R. 1 00
Cleveland, G H.. 1 00
Cleveland, Mrs G 1 00
Clever, A J and family 2 00
Click, M J..... 1 00
Clifford, C J... 1 00
Clifford, S J... 2 00
Clift, H R..... 2 00
Clift, Mrs S.... 5 00
Collins, E 9 00
Cloake, A 5 00
Close, E M..... 1 00
Close, Mrs W J 5 00
Clotzbah, J G... 1 00
Cloudman, N ... 2 00
Clough, Mrs L... 1 00
Clough, M E J 2 00
Clover, Omar & Wince, S R... 1 00
Clovis, W R...10 00
Clowes, Mrs FV 10 00
Clunn, A L B.. 1 00
Clymer, Mrs CR 10 00
Cochran, J Y...10 00
Cochran, Mrs M. 1 00
Cockeram, E ... 2 00
Cockey, Mrs ... 1 00
Codding, J H.. 5 00
Coe, Mrs C.... 1 00
Coe, Mrs D L.. 2 00
Coe, Mrs S C.. 1 00
Coehmer, A 3 00
Coffin, Mrs G F.. 1 00
Cogarvell, Mrs C 2 00
Coggill, Mrs F W 3 00
Coggins, Mrs L Y 5 00
Cohn, Mrs A.... 1 00
Cole, Mrs C L.. 2 00
Cole, G C...... 1 00
Cole, Mrs G B. 1 00
Cole, Mrs I.... 1 00
Cole, Mrs S L.. 1 02
Cole, Mr & Mrs Thomas 1 00
Cole, Wolcott ... 2 00
Coles, Mrs 5 00
Coles, Mrs E E 2 35
Coles, F M 5 00
Coles, L B 5 00
Coleman, MissEM 2 00
Coleman, W L... 1 00
Colgate, C H, Jr 1 00
Collins, C 5 00
Collins, M W... 3 00
Collins, S 2 00
Collins, S S.... 1 00
Collins, W C... 1 00
Collisson, H R. 5 00
Colman, D 2 00
Cloud, M & V.. 1 00
Collins, C P.... 1 00
Collins, H S....22 00
Collum, A C... 1 00
Colt, Mrs S B.. 1 00
Colver, W S... 2 00
Coman, C B..... 1 00
Combes, Miss .. 1 00
Combs, Mrs L J 1 00
Compton, B 2 75
Compton, D ... 2 00
Compton, D 3 00
Comstock, Mrs R W 1 00
Comstock, W J. 5 00
Conant, S S.... 1 00
Condict, G H... 5 00
Condit, Miss S E 6 00
Conger, Mrs A L 1 00
Coughlin, Mrs JA 1 00
Conklin, F J... 3 00
Conklin, Miss P 5 00
Connell, Mrs C D 1 00
Conner, E M.... 1 00
Connet, A T... 2 00
Connor, Mrs T.. 1 00
Conover, M S.. 1 00
Conover, T 3 00
Conrad, Mrs J W 1 00
Constable, Dr RV 5 00
Constantine, Mrs Fred 1 00
Converse, Misses 5 00
Conquest, MrsEH 1 00
Conway, Alice.. 2 00
Coodwin, E A.. 1 00
Cook, A H..... 1 00
Cook, E A...... 1 00
Cook, Miss E... 1 00
Cook, Mr & Mrs G L 2 00
Cook, G W.... 2 00
Cook, Mrs I.... 1 00
Cook, Mrs I R.. 50
Cook, Mrs J H 1 00
Cook, S A..... 1 00
Cooke, Mrs E.. 2 00
Cooke, G B.... 1 00
Cooke, L 2 00
Cooke, L 2 00
Cooke, M A.... 5 00
Cooke, S C..... 2 00
Cooley, Mrs M J 1 00
Coon, Mrs W J 1 00
Coons, A E.... 1 00

And several hundred others to be acknowl'g'd later.

CHATS IN MY VERANDA NOOK

Women in Council

By MARGARET E. SANGSTER

THE letter which opens our Council this week narrates the experience of a mother in teaching her daughter the use of money. If more of us would adopt a method similar to that recommended here, the systematic benevolence of the church would be greatly increased.

How We Trained Our Daughter

"When my daughter was old enough to dust and do various little things to help I paid her, beginning with five cents per week. She was taught to tithe her money, and kept that by itself for church. As she grew older and more helpful the amount was increased to fifty cents per week. Five was taken out for benevolences, twenty-five was placed in her little bank, and with the remaining twenty she had to purchase her pencils, pads, etc., and of course her small luxuries. To encourage her love to save, once in six months when her money was taken from the little bank to deposit in the savings bank, her father doubled what she had saved. This we kept up until she went in training to be a nurse. Then, although the amount she received was small, she always took out the tithe and enjoyed spending some of it for flowers for those who had none or for those who seemed to have few friends. She is now out in the work-a-day world, a trained nurse. When she comes off a case, her money is conscientiously tithed, a certain amount is placed in the savings bank, another amount is deposited in another bank to be checked out for clothing, etc., a little money is kept in her purse, and, if it is possible, more is added to the savings fund, for that will be left to accumulate. I think if I were to bring up a family again I would not pay the children for service. I would give them the same amount, but teach them to do what they could for father and mother because they ought in return for the love of their parents.

" B. M. M."

. . .

An Inquiry

ONE of our correspondents is anxious to receive a copy of an amended version of the hymn we so dearly love, "Nearer, My God, to Thee." The hymn in its original form is exquisite, but there are those who would like a fuller acknowledgment in it of Christ as the Atoning Saviour. While usually the editor of this page does not approve of making changes in hymns or adding to them or taking from them, she judges from the stanza sent that the hymn which is a variation on "Nearer, My God, to Thee" may be acceptable to many readers. If the complete copy can be sent it will be published on this page. This is the stanza referred to:

Nearer, O Comforter,
Nearer to Thee,
Who for my absent Lord
Dwellest with me.
Grant me thy fellowship,
Help me each day to keep Nearer, my Guide, to Thee,
Nearer to Thee.

. . .

Why Should Not the Boys Help?

AS AN introduction to the next letter a little incident rises in memory. A bright little fellow was much annoyed because he was required to make his own bed. He objected that it was woman's work and that he did not wish to be treated like a girl. He was told that the cadets at West Point and Uncle Sam's soldiers in camp made their own beds, that the boys at Annapolis did the same, and that the finest house-work in the world could be seen on a United States battleship. He was also told that the most highly paid cooks were men, that a chef in a hotel was as much an autocrat as, for instance, the principal of his own school, and that the finest sewing was often done not by dressmakers, but by tailors. The argument made its impression, and the small lad cheerfully assisted thereafter in the work of the house.

"I have a boy of fourteen years who helps me with all my housework when I have no outside help. He can do sweeping, dusting, and some of the finer cooking, as he has had the advantage of a partial training in domestic science. Mothers who have only boys and no daughters to relieve them of home cares may perhaps profit by our experience, his and mine.

D. C. N."

. . .

The Love That Lasts

AGAINST the background of faithful love so often shown us in the frequent records of golden weddings sent to this page we dare the pessimist to lift his voice. Whatever may be the regret we feel when we hear of wrecks in domestic life, every fair-minded person must acknowledge that these are few when compared with the sum total of happiness shown in millions of homes where love and faith abide from youth to age.

From the painting by Lady Stanley in the Tate Gallery, London

THE FIRST OFFENSE

THERE is wistful appeal, regret, bewilderment, and entreaty for pardon in the sorrowful face of the young delinquent. Not through love of wrong-doing, but through inexperience and unhappy environment, the boy has blundered, until he is a culprit at the bar. Justice will blunder too, and blindly, if the lad is not given another chance and his feet set in the path of redemption. Judge Ben Lindsey has shown us that there is good stuff for the future in many a young offender. This picture appeals to every father and mother, for this is somebody's son, though not yours, dear friends.

. . .

The Ethics of Shopping

WHEN one hears women complain that they are treated discourteously in the shops, that they are compelled to wait a long time before being served and that mistakes are made in sending home their goods, one wonders whether the aggrieved contingent have ever thoroughly learned that shopping is a fine art. More than this, the everyday act of shopping affords an opportunity for the exercise of the higher morality. A woman who is invariably polite and considerate when she is making purchases seldom receives any treatment from the sales women that is other than polite. Why should there be arrogance and incivility on the part of the buyer, or, what is still worse, an air of patronage, as if socially the woman who buys were superior in rank to the woman who is waiting upon her? It is easy to say "good-morning" pleasantly to the young girl who shows one ribbons and laces, and to thank her when she has taken pains to please one.

Two years ago, a beautiful woman who had thrown her talents, wealth and charming personality into the service of Jesus Christ as one of old broke the alabaster box and poured its perfume over his weary feet, was suddenly called to the rest above. Her friends remembered many gentle deeds and words of hers, and none of these had made a more profound impression than the fact that whenever she entered a department store she had friends in every aisle, and was greeted with a smile as she passed along—messengers, floor-walkers and salespeople all in agreement and anxious to show her attention. When somebody once said to Janet McCook Whitman that she found rudeness and boorishness and ill-temper in women behind the counter, the reply was: "How strange! My experience has been the precise reverse." The explanation was that Mrs. Whitman carried into every business relation a spirit of justice and friendliness. This belongs to what may be called the ethical side of shopping.

Again, no one should expect to be waited upon out of her turn in a thronged store. Neither should one who can help herself postpone her errands to the noon-day hour when necessarily some of the attendants must be absent at luncheon, nor leave it to be done in the hurried moments before the shops close. So far as possible during the summer, it is well for all who are able to order their own time, to do no shopping on Saturday morning. The claims of the Saturday half-holiday, which we hope may become universal the year round, will be better conserved by the limitation of shopping to the other days of the week.

If definite addresses and directions are given and one is explicit and positive as to the article purchased, mistakes in the transmission of goods will seldom occur.

. . .

I Wouldn't Be Cross

I wouldn't be cross, dear, it's never worth while;
Disarm the vexation by wearing a smile.
Let hap a disaster, a trouble, a loss,
Just meet the thing boldly, and never be cross.

. . .

The Good Listener

"IF I COULD only hold my own in conversation!" exclaimed one of the tongue-tied sisterhood when she came home from an afternoon tea, where, as usual, she had been somewhat silent. "Although I have ideas," she went on, "they forsake me in company, and the thing I dread so that I have a creepy sensation all the way down my spine and do not know what to do with my hands and wish the floor would open and swallow me, is being introduced to a stranger and finding myself embarrassed because all I can manage to murmur is 'yes' or 'no.'"

The diffident and quiet woman who bewails the slowness of her utterance would be consoled if she knew that no one is so sure to be a wet blanket, socially, as the one of either sex who advances to the centre of the stage and monopolizes the talk. The bright and clever talker is always in peril of becoming unpopular, while the good listener is sure of being a welcome guest on every occasion. Lord Macaulay was much given to brilliant monologue, and in consequence his fellow guests were greatly delighted when now and then he gave them an opportunity to speak and himself had what Sidney Smith called "flashes of silence." In one of Anthony Trollope's novels there is a charming heroine, one Lady Glencora. She seldom condescends to express an opinion, but she looks sympathetic, listens as if there were no one in the world except the person addressing her, and has the effect of conversing delightfully. Cultivate the art of listening. It is a better social gift than the art of talking.

Our Boys and Girls
The Cozy Corner

INTERESTING EXPERIMENTS, Try Them

DRAW a small circle, about the size of a half dollar, on some level surface, and place a marble in the centre. Now balance a cent on top of the ball, and roll a similar-sized ball against ball No. 1. No matter how hard you roll your second ball against the first, the coin will always land in the circle. You may find that you will have to try this experiment on a tablecloth, because the coin sometimes bounces up and out of the circle. The reason that the coin falls straight down to the table is that all things tend to stay where they are until some force acts on them, and in this case the ball rolled out from under the coin before it had time to overcome the inertia of the coin.

Very few of us know how keenly developed is our sense of touch. When we feel an object with one finger we get an idea of its shape, which is immediately confirmed by the next finger in order touching it.

But if the order of the fingers is changed from the normal one, what then? Let us see.

Blindfold one of your friends and then place his index or "pointer" finger on a small ball, such as a large marble or a billiard ball. He will say: "I feel one smooth ball." Now cross his fingers again, index under the second finger, and place them on the same ball. Roll the ball slightly, so that first one, then the other, and then both fingers touch. Ask, "What do you feel now?" "Two balls," will always be the answer.

II. Secure four big glass alleys of the same size and material, and quite smooth, or very large marbles. The harder the balls are the better.

Place three of these balls on some smooth level surface in such a way that each one touches the other two. Now stand a match up in the little triangular space between them. The match may be made to stand nicely by slightly moistening the sulphur end.

See that the match is fairly in the middle of the space and be very sure the balls actually touch each other.

Now you may roll the fourth ball against the three from any angle, and you will find that the balls will all roll away, leaving the match standing alone.

The harder you roll the striking ball, so long as it is not bounced, the more marked will be the effect.

If you should fail you may be sure that it was because the balls were not touching each other, or the striking ball was bouncing.

The reason that the match remains untouched is that the whole force of the striking ball is divided up among all four, and they simply bounce away from each other.

Special Prize Notice

TO MY older boys and and girls:

I want to publish very soon in the Cozy Corner some practical articles under the head "I Made It Myself." I am going to give you older boys and girls a chance to do them. I will pay for them at regular rates. The articles should not run longer than 400 words, and should be accompanied by at least one photograph or diagram. Now I can easily order these articles, and have them done in a regular editorial way, but I would much rather give you boys and girls a chance of making some pin-money. This is an opportunity for those who will recognize it. Go into the competition to win, and remember it is the going in to win that counts. The boys and girls who try it are far ahead of the boys and girls who do not care to try. It is the trying that counts, and I shall expect to hear from you all.

May We Send You a Book About the Care of Children?

It is called "How to Bring Up a Baby."

It contains 40 pages of valuable information—just the kind of information every mother should have.

Among other things, it tells:

What kind of food a child should eat. How long it should sleep. When and how it should be bathed; and why Ivory Soap is best for bath and nursery use. How to care for baby's eyes, ears, nose, teeth, hair and nails. How to treat the minor ailments of childhood; and when to send for a physician.

The illustrations—which are in color—are charming.

The text is by Miss Elizabeth R. Scovil, graduate of the Massachusetts General Hospital Training School for Nurses, and the author of several books on the care of children.

"How to Bring Up a Baby" is so helpful, the information it contains is so sensible that many physicians have asked us to furnish them with copies of the book for the guidance of patients.

If you would like a copy, address a letter or postal card to The Procter & Gamble Co., Cincinnati; say that you want a copy of the "Baby Book," give your name, street number, town or city and state, and you will receive one in the course of a very few days.

Ivory Soap . . . 99 44/100 Per Cent. Pure

THE HIGHEST HILL IN HAPPYTOWN—By Miriam C. Potter

THE highest hill in Happytown—I climbed it just to-day,
A little wind went with me, like a comrade, all the way.

I'd longed to journey to the place, and when the glad day came,
I told myself that Happytown should be the village name.

We chose the pleasant river-road that leads along the fields,
And what a wealth of clover sweet the wind across it yields!
We drove through little singing woods, we passed another place,
But all the time 'twas Happytown toward which I turned my face.

"O horses, hurry on," I sang, "and do not wait to drink,
How glad you are to stop a while at shady River Brink!"
And when we reached the little town, I flew with glad swift feet,

"To what I knew was waiting me at end of Sunlight Street"

To what I knew was waiting me at end of Sunlight Street.

The little road is brown and steep, and wriggles up the hill,
But all the way the drooping trees stand shady, cool and still;
I climbed and looked about me, and there before me lay

The great wide world I'd heard about, all shining in the day.

Close down below was Happytown, its red roofs painted new,
And all the little chimney-pots were filled with misty blue;
The children's voices rose to me; I watched the wagons go
Along the crooked streets, in sunshine there below.

And out upon the valley where the greenest meadows lay
I saw the tiny reaper folk go piling up the hay;
Then far, far out and wide I looked; and wonderful to me,
On distant shores I'd never seen, spread out the wide blue sea.

I saw it shining in the light, all misty blue and gray,
The little soft-winged wander boats were resting on the bay;
I stood and looked and wondered, and wished some day to go Far over there to hear its voice, and feel the salt wind blow.

And have you heard of Happytown? And do you know its hill?
Such wonders can it show you when the air is clear and still:
The highest in the countryside, for when you climb and look
The world is spread before you, like a wide and open book.

Courtesy of Youth's Companion.

Good-Night Verse

Father, who keepest
The stars in Thy care,
Me, too, Thy little one,
Childish in prayer,
Keep, as Thou keepest
The soft night through Thy long, white lilies
Asleep in Thy dew.

P. S.—If you have not as yet written to the Cozy Corner, write to-day without fail. So many nice things are happening among us all the time, besides the charming souvenirs and we do not want any one to be missing anything. Lovingly and faithfully,

Aunt The Cozy Corner

Bible House, New York.

White Lead on the Farm

Barns and Silos Paint the barns and other buildings near the farm house so attractively that they will add to the appearance and value of your place. It is worth while to use one color scheme for the whole group.

"Dutch Boy Painter"
Pure White Lead

and pure linseed oil mixed "on the job" make the most reliable paint you can buy. Give the metal parts of your silo two coats of pure red lead first, and then cover with white lead and oil, tinted as desired.

Our Free Painting Helps. We will send you free on request color schemes and miscellaneous painting instructions that you will find of real practical value. Ask for Helps 2956

National Lead Company
New York Cleveland Chicago
St. Louis Boston
Buffalo Cincinnati
San Francisco
(John T. Lewis & Bros. Co., Philadelphia)
(National Lead & Oil Company Pittsburgh)

300 Years and the Bible

ANNIVERSARIES are significant only as they contain real meaning, and only when that meaning is clearly grasped by the persons who observe them. The present year marks the tercentenary of the publication of the Authorized Version of the English Bible. This event is being celebrated by people of all nationalities, languages and creeds throughout the civilized world. Persons who never before discovered the Bible will open it this year for the first time possibly, and really find out the reason for this international commemoration. Indeed, perhaps the best way by which any man or woman can appreciate the reason for this universal literature, is to sit down with the Bible itself and read it thoughtfully. For in the last analysis, the Bible is a personal book, and no one can really appreciate it second-hand.

Curiously enough, the King James Version of the Scriptures originated in almost an incidental occurrence, like many other great historical events, whose later valuation by the world has taught men to treat no occasion, however trivial, as unimportant. James Stuart, King of Scotland and Great Britain, has been immortalized in connection with the Authorized Version of the Scriptures. That no special credit was due to the King, however, is apparent in the vivid account by John Vaughan of the Hampton Court Conference, held soon after the accession of James I. This conference was designed to consider, among other matters, "things pretended to be amiss in the Church. On the second day of the Conference—Monday, January 16, 1604—Dr. Reynolds, the Puritan leader, the learned president of Corpus Christi College, Oxford, suggested: 'May your Majesty be pleased that the Bible be new translated, such as are extant not answering to the original'; and he instanced two or three particulars. The Bishop of London broke in with the remark that 'if every man's humor be followed there would be no end of translating'; but the suggestion commended itself to the King. 'I wish,' he said, 'some special pains were taken for an uniform translation, which should be done by the best learned in both Universities, then reviewed by the Bishops, presented to the Privy Council, lastly ratified by the royal authority, to be read in the whole Church, and no other.' He further added that no marginal notes should be added thereto; for, he said, 'in the Geneva translation some notes are partial, untrue, seditious, and savoring of traitorous conceits.' The practical outcome of this debate was the appointment in 1607 of a body of revisers, some forty-seven in number, which was divided into six companies, of which two were to sit at Cambridge, two at Oxford, and two at Westminster."

The history of these far-reaching days of revision has not been written. The names of the revisers themselves are little known, being among those people who are willing to do a lot of work, and not talk much about it, for the sake of the deeper life of the world. We only know that in two years and nine months after this conference, some time in the year 1611, "after long expectation and desire," the English Version which has come down to the present day as the undisputed standard in English was sent out to the people.

In order to get the further seventeenth century atmosphere of this wonderful event I would suggest that the reader turn again to the Preface of one of the old family Bibles, and note the dedication to King James, with its other-century language. The aim of the revision, as we shall see, is expressed briefly as follows:

"Truly, good Christian reader, we never thought, from the beginning, that we should need to make a new translation, nor yet to make of a bad one a good one—but to make a good one better, or out of many good ones one principal good one, not justly to be excepted against—that hath been our endeavor, that our mark."

Trench has called the Authorized Version "a costly mosaic," in that it contains the best of all the work of previous translators, including especially Tyndale's Bible of 1526, and those that followed it for the succeeding eighty-five years.

And why has this great work become a national possession? Why are fifty millions of the inhabitants of the earth so interested each year in this Book that each should purchase a Bible? Why has this people's Book, which Goethe called the "Book of the Nations," justly claimed the attention of every thoughtful person to-day?

Immortal in Literature

The English Bible, especially in this Authorized Revision, is the embodiment of the world's best classic English. While visiting in India not long ago a Brahman professor of high caste in one of the colleges told me that Indian students know the English Bible better than they know any sacred book of Hinduism. Many students, he declared, began the study of the Bible because it afforded them the chief and best means of becoming familiar with good English. They continued to study it, however, because they found that these wonderfully choice phrases expressed the deepest ideas and emotions of their minds and hearts.

John Richard Green, the historian, points out the unique place this early version had in literature, for he tells us that when the first copies of the Great Bible were set up in St. Paul's Cathedral, "many well-disposed people used much to resort to the hearing thereof, especially when they could get any that had an audible voice to read to them. One John Porter used sometimes to be occupied in that godly exercise, to the edifying of himself as well as others. This Porter was a fresh young man and of a big stature, and great multitudes would resort thither to hear him, because he could read well and had an audible voice."

Who can fully estimate the influence of this version upon the common language of the English world? Professor Cooke has discovered some of the phrases of the Bible which have become a part of the daily intercourse of men, who in many cases have no knowledge whence their speech was derived. It will be sufficient by way of illustration to note the following Biblical phrases current in modern conversation: "Highways and hedges," "clear as crystal," "still small voice," "hip and thigh," "lick the dust," "broken reed," "sweat of his brow," "root of all evil," "the fat of the land," "dark sayings," "a soft answer," "moth and rust," "weighed in the balance and found wanting."

A few years before the death of Grover Cleveland I heard him speak in Carnegie Hall. I was much impressed with his vivid and forceful English. In a newspaper notice of his address the next morning I counted seven distinct quotations from the Bible and eleven other allusions which were reflections of his acquaintance with this Book.

It is related that one of the Canadian senators asked Premier Laurier where he secured the style for one of his very powerful and successful addresses. For reply he asked the senator to go with him to his office and opening his desk he took up a little Bible which opened of itself at St. Paul's speech on Mars Hill. "Upon the style of that speech," said Premier Laurier, "I have constructed every

Continued on page 918

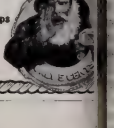
Whittemore's Shoe Polishes
Finest in Quality. Largest in Variety
They meet every requirement for cleaning and polishing shoes of all kinds and colors.

GILT EDGE the only ladies' shoe dressing positively contains OIL. Blacks and Polishes la and children's boots and shoes, shines with rubbing, 25c. "French Gloss," 10c.

DANDY combination for cleaning and polishing kinds of russet or tan shoes, 25c. "Star" size, 10c.

QUICK WHITE makes dirty canvas shoes cl and white. In liquid form so it can be quic and easily applied. A sponge in every package always ready for use. Two sizes, 10 and 25 cents.

If your dealer does not keep the kind you want, send u address and the price in stamps for a full size package.



WHITTEMORE BROS. & CO.,
20-26 Albany St., Cambridge, Mass.
The Oldest and Largest Manufacturers of S Polishes in the World

Teach the Children to Use
LIFEBUOY SOAP

"THAT BOY," who has been taught to d things for himself, enjoys a Lifebuoy Shampoo, because it makes his hea "feel good."
He knows how to keep his scalp free from dandruff, or itching, and his hair clean healthy and glossy.
"HIS FOLKS" know that the regular use of Lifebuoy for the Bath and all toilet pur poses, protects the family from chance in fections, by destroying the unseen disease-germs.

5c at all Druggists and Grocers
If not at your dealers send 5c stamps or coin for full-size cake, to LEVER BROS. CO.
Dept. S
Cambridge, Mass.

YOUR PHYSICIAN will tell you that Sani-Tissue

¶ It is the Best Toilet Paper because it is Soothing and Healing.
¶ It is composed of long vegetable fibre which gives it a cloth-like texture and its treatment with Canada balsam and other emollients makes it the only strictly sanitary, hygienic and soft paper.
¶ Each roll is carefully wrapped in parchment excluding germs and gritty dust.

3 Rolls in a Carton for 25c.

at your Dealer's, or if he does not have it, send us his name, and we will send you a sample pocket packet FREE.

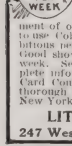
SCOTT PAPER COMPANY
662 Glenwood Ave., Philadelphia
Makers of "Scot-Tissue" Towels, Sc Waldorf Toilet Paper, and other Hygienic Paper products.

The Greatest Beautifier of Them All

Producing a smooth, velvety complexion, bringing out the natural tones of the skin. Its absolute beauty, almost impalpable fineness and softness makes Pozzoni's Complexion Powder cooling, refreshing and beautifying to the most delicate skin without injury. It is the only complexion powder that really clings—the only one put up in a wooden box, which retains all its delicate perfume until entirely used up.

5 Colors—Flesh, Special Pink, Cream, White, Brunette.

50c—EVERYWHERE—50c



EARN FROM $21 TO $50 PER WEEK

LEARN ABOUT OUR FREE COURSE IN SHOW CARD AND SIGN WRITING

A Great Opportunity!

We are offering, for a limited time only, a complete learn at home course in show card and sign writing to those purchasing a trial assortment of our new and excellent "Litholia" ready to use Colors. This is a great opportunity for ambitious persons to increase their earning capacity. Good show card writers earn from $21 to $50 per week. Send 4c in stamps for booklets and complete information. Please note that the Show Card Course is not a book of alphabets, but a thorough course in lettering compiled by an expert New York Show Card artist especially for us.

LITHOLIA CO. COLOR CO.
247 West 125th Street, New York

Seldom See a big knee like this, but your horse may have a bunch or bruise on his Ankle, Hock, Stifle, Knee or Throat.

ABSORBINE

Before After will clean them off without laying the horse up. No blister, no hair gone. $2.00 per bottle delivered. Describe your case for special instructions and Book 8 E free.

ABSORBINE, JR., liniment for mankind. Removes Painful Swellings, Enlarged Glands, Goitre, Weak, Bruises, Varicose Veins, Varicosities, Old Sores. Allays Pain. Price $1 and $2 a bottle at druggists or delivered. Manufactured only by W. F. YOUNG, P.D.F., 5 Temple St., Springfield, Mass.

These trade-mark cross-lines on every package

GLUTEN FLOUR DIET FOR DIABETICS

Kidney and Liver Troubles, Rheumatism, Obesity and ills arising from excess of Uric Acid

Rich in Protein. Ask your Physician. Leading grocers. For pocket or sample, write FARWELL & RHINES, Watertown, N.Y., U.S.A.

OXALBITOL

AN ANTISEPTIC DRESSING that is better than any other preparation for healing cuts, ulcers or wounds of any sort.

Get it from your druggist, or a bottle will be sent by mail for 35 Cents.

OXALBITOL CO., Honesdale, Pa.

AGENTS—$45.00 A WEEK
MENDETS

Don't Throw It Away!

Mend all leaks instantly in pots, pans, hot water bags, etc., utensils, etc. No heat, solder, cement or rivet. Any one can use them. Frame surfaces. Smooth. Nickel-silver. Fit. Prevent rust. Wonderful invention. Big profits. Sample 25c. Collette Mfg. Co., Box 122, Amsterdam, N. Y.

A Plea for the Children

OME one has been unflattering enough to our national Congress to dine it as "a body of highly paid blic servants who yearly reject more ad bills than they pass of bad ones." hile this may not be entirely true, it indoubtedly true that Congress does ect some bills that would add much the general good of our country. e body of men comprising our national Congress will surely reject an mirable bill if it ects the one perning to the welre of our children esented by Congressman Peters and sured of the supt of some of our er Congressmen. e purpose of this l is "to establish the Department of mmerce and Lar a bureau to be own as the Children's Bureau." The ty of the bureau uld be "to investite and report upon matters pertainto the welfare of ildren and child e."

It is easy to see at this covers a de range of investation. It would quire inquiry into e birth rate, int mortality, juile courts, institions for children, ild labor, dises of children, and many other ings affecting the general welfare of r boys and girls. We have national reaus of investigation of many nds. Why not a Children's Bureau, hen a bureau of that kind could be ade of so much value to the children the country, the children upon whom e future weal or woe of the nation pends?

Congressman Peters is not the first have the happy thought of a bureau child-investigation. As long ago as 05 the National Child Labor Committee made an effort to have the Fedal Children's Bill presented in Conress. It was presented and had the ll indorsement of President Roosevelt, but it did not come to a vote. The ll appeared again in the Sixtieth ongress, and this time it was referred the House Committee on Expenditres in the Department of the Interior, and also to the Senate Committee on Education and Labor. Both mmittees reported favorably on what as obviously an excellent bill. The resident took the trouble to send a pecial message to Congress urging e passage of the bill, but again the ill did not come to a vote. The friends f the measure did not give up. They new that persistency was back of the assage of many a bill in Congress, and they determined to keep the bill, or one like it with some amendments, before Congress, and a great effort will be made to have the Peters bill passed.

When it was suggested that the Bureau of Labor might do the work the friends of the Children's Bureau want done the Commissioner of the Bureau of Labor said: "We cannot deal properly with the large questions of the education of children without a more detailed and accurate knowledge than we now possess as to the actual conditions surrounding the child life of the country, such conditions as are referred to in this bill."

Representative Andrew Peters
Of Massachusetts

Intelligent as the public has become regarding the general condition of childhood in our country, we are still in the dark regarding many very important facts having to do with the welfare of our children. Other nations are doing more along the line of national child welfare than is being done in our country. We are told that France has put "child culture" into the hands of experts. In England there is now a law "covering practically every incident in a child's life that might come within the concern of the government. Its ninety folio pages constitute a complete code, and reflect not only the wide range of the government's information, but cover every interesting phase of the development of this vital social and economic matter. A 'veritable children's charter' it has been called."

Germany has long been ahead of our country in its investigations and laws regarding the welfare of children, and we need to have a vast amount of work done that has never yet been done. The bill Congressman Peters and his friends are trying to get through Congress is one that should engage the attention and the support of the mothers of the land. They have clubs and other organizations that could do something to help along a bill like this.

When one knows the full import of the bill prepared by Congressman Peters one feels that if the bill is finally passed and all of its provisions are at last carried out the gain to our children and to our government will be so great that Congressman Andrew James Peters will be one of the public benefactors of his day.

J. L. HARBOUR.

What Haiti Needs

A HAITIAN reader of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, writing before the ownfall of the Simon government and he triumph of the revolution, discusses he needs of the "Black Republic" in hese words: "First, the establishment of industrial schools, such as Rev. C. Jean Jacques is now trying to stablish, that would teach the people n a systematic way the dignity of anual industry, and at the same time elp to make them self-supporting. ers.rd Ulhorn, in his Planting of hristianity, says, 'No nation can atain to any lasting prosperity where anual labor is not held in honor.' he question of 'bread and butter' is a vital one in the life of any nation, and it can be properly settled in Haiti only by the establishment of such industrial training institutions as are proposed. Now, if ever, all true lovers of humanity should help in creating and maintaining such schools throughout the island. Haiti appeals to those whom God has appointed his stewards and cries for help to those whose hearts are capable of being touched by a nation's misfortunes.

"With this should be coupled the natural ally, i. e., religious training. When hand and heart shall be filled, there will be no place for revolutionary desire."

Mellin's Food has raised so many sturdy, happy babies that it seems a pity that any baby should worry along on a food not suited to him.

If your baby cannot be nursed, or if he is not thriving as you know he should, put him on

Mellin's Food

Mellin's Food agrees with babies from the very start. It keeps them healthy and happy while they are growing up, and all the time it is nourishing them and building firm flesh, strong bones, and robust health that will stand them in good stead in after life.

You cannot afford to lose a single day in starting your baby on Mellin's Food. Send to your Druggist's for a bottle today.

Our helpful book, "The Care and Feeding of Infants," will be sent to you, free, upon request.

MELLIN'S FOOD CO.
BOSTON, MASS.

"We are Advertised by Our Loving Friends"

Don't Abuse Your Sewing Machine or Yourself

Be fair. A sewing machine is a very delicate mechanism. It can be abused by improper oiling or insufficient lubrication. It needs cleaning, too.

3 in One is the one great preventative of sewing machine troubles. The oil flows right down into every action point, making treadle, hand-wheel and shuttle work smoothly, surely and about 100 times easier. Those thick, greasy, "smelly" oils gum, clog and cause repair bills—shun them! 3 in One is so clear and light that the finest watchmakers use it.

To clean a sewing machine, oil all parts very liberally. Then run at high rate of speed. The oil cuts loose all dirt, gum, grease and clogging residues and works it all right out of the bearings. Then oil all parts again and any machine will run like magic. No back-breaking, leg-tiring "pumping." Be fair to yourself and try this easy sewing oil.

3 in One also absolutely prevents rust or tarnish on the metal parts of your machine. And a few drops of 3 in One on a soft cloth, rubbed with the grain of the wood, will make the wooden case shine like new.

Trial size, 10c. Household size, 50c (½ pint). Buy the Household size and get eight times as much oil.

FREE 3 IN ONE FOR YOU

A postal brings you a generous free sample. Also the 3 in One Dictionary which will show you scores of ways this good oil will help you keep house. Write today to the THREE IN ONE OIL CO.

53 Broadway :: New York

MAGAZINES & BOOKS FOR LIBRARY SLIPS ONE IN EVERY PACKAGE

Special Note—Never mix 3 in One with other oil. Never put 3 in One in a dirty oil can.

Wealthy Women of Fashion Use Diamond Dyes—Why?

Certainly it isn't economy that prompts the use of Diamond Dyes in the homes of the wealthy—yet here they're as commonly used as in the most modest households, and for largely the same reason, viz.:

Aside from the saving they represent, Diamond Dyes make possible constant freshness and beauty of coloring—in the wardrobe as well as in the furnishings of the home.

With Diamond Dyes, the most expensive gown can be as easily and as profitably recolored as the simplest summer dress. And, similarly, can the most elaborate or the most inexpensive hangings and draperies be virtually made new again.

A Clever Washington Woman Writes:

"Diamond Dyes are certainly good friends of mine. It would be impossible to tell how many times I have used them, and I have never had a failure. Everything, from dyeing laces to match a dress, to sweaters and stockings, has been done by Diamond Dyes, and with perfect satisfaction. I surely do depend a great deal upon them, and do not hesitate to try them on the most expensive materials, as I know if I follow the directions they will always come out right."—Mrs. C. A. N., 118 Bryant St., N. W., Washington, D. C.

Diamond Dyes

There are two kinds of Diamond Dyes—one for Wool or Silk, the other for Cotton, Linen or Mixed Goods. Diamond Dyes for Wool or Silk now come in Blue envelopes. And, as heretofore, those for Cotton, Linen or Mixed Goods are in White envelopes.

Here's the Truth About Dyes for Home Use:

Our experience of over thirty years has proven that no one dye will successfully color every fabric.

There are two classes of fabrics—animal fibre fabrics and vegetable fibre fabrics.

Wool and Silk are animal fibre fabrics. Cotton and Linen are vegetable fibre fabrics. "Union," or "Mixed", goods are 60% to 80% Cotton—so must be treated as vegetable fibre fabrics.

Vegetable fibres require one class of dye, and animal fibres another and radically different class of dye. As proof—we call attention to the fact that manufacturers of woolen goods use one class of dye, while manufacturers of cotton goods use an entirely different class of dye.

For these reasons we manufacture one class of Diamond Dyes for coloring Cotton, Linen, or Mixed Goods, and another class of Diamond Dyes for coloring Wool or Silk, so that you may obtain the very best results on EVERY fabric.

REMEMBER: To get the best possible results in coloring Cotton, Linen, or Mixed Goods, use the Diamond Dyes manufactured especially for Cotton, Linen or Mixed Goods.

AND REMEMBER: To get the best possible results in coloring Wool or Silk, use the Diamond Dyes manufactured especially for Wool or Silk.

Diamond Dyes are sold at the uniform price of 10c per package.

Valuable Books and Samples FREE

Send us your dealer's name and address—tell us whether or not he sells Diamond Dyes. We will then send you that famous book of helps, the Diamond Dye Annual, a copy of the Direction Book, and 36 samples of Dyed Cloth—Free.

Wells & Richardson Co, Burlington, Vermont

The Churches and World-Peace

Continued from page 903

Appoint a Peace Day for Churches to Celebrate, Writes Bishop Warren

Our churches should present Christ as the Prince of Peace, and preach on the fundamental law of best life, viz.: Love God with every faculty of one's being and the neighbor as one's self. Gravitation was the only operative law when this world was only a cloud mass, and this law is equally fundamental to bring human chaos to perfect cosmos.

Appoint a Peace Day, when every subject in the land shall sing over again the song of Christ's coming, "Peace on earth, good will to men."

From the trend of history and my trust in the power of Christianity, I believe in the near approach of a well-nigh universal peace.

HENRY W. WARREN.

Denver, Colo.

. . .

The Desire of War an Inheritance from Savage Days, Writes Chancellor Avery, University of Nebraska

I do not regard the present agitation for International Arbitration and World-Peace as either ephemeral or "a fixed and natural desire of the human heart." A desire for war for its own sake, or for conquest, is an inheritance of the race from its brute period. The race has at last progressed sufficiently so that the wisest and best of mankind are beginning to realize that the same ethical principles should govern nations as individuals.

The establishment of an International Court would work profoundly for the advancement of general peace. I see no reason why wars should not gradually cease to recur, just as mutilation, infanticide, and slavery have largely ceased to exist in the civilized nations.

The truest patriots are those who have caught the world vision. There is no more reason for a nation to cultivate a martial attitude towards another nation, than for one family to cultivate a martial attitude towards another family. While I would not neglect a reasonable preparation for defense against unjust attacks, we should remember that in the case of nations, as of individuals, "they that draw the sword shall perish by the sword." S. AVERY, Chancellor.

. . .

The Duty of Church and School to Inculcate Peace, Urges Bishop Darlington

Pulpit and Sunday School should teach the benefits and obligations of peace, and circulate literature, giving reasons why war should cease. The organizations allied with the Church and springing from it can be made assistants in this work, to spread and teach everywhere, that Christ is the Prince of Peace and not the Prince of War.

We are at the dawning of the great day of World-Peace. To be patriotic is not to love your country and approve of her doings, whether right or wrong, but to be careful to see that she is always in the right, so that she can be supported with all our conscience as well as all our heart. The Church, the schools, the press, and our banks and boards of trade, must all be led to see and teach that a war is a moral, a mental, and a business mistake, and that the higher a nation takes its stand on this subject the more it will command respect at home and abroad.

DARLINGTON.

Harrisburg, Pa.

. . .

War Has Become Abhorrent to Man's Conscience, Writes Dr. Charles A. Eaton (Bapt.), N. Y.

The churches can best use their influence in behalf of the peace movement by an intelligent and consistent emphasis upon the universal ideas of Jesus Christ. This emphasis can best be exemplified in the membership of our churches becoming more humane in their sympathies, more Christlike in their spirit, and therefore more completely citizens of the universal kingdom.

The various organizations allied to the church can help the Peace Movement by the steady dissemination of peace literature; by allying themselves with peace societies; by advancing the interests of missionary enterprise; by recognizing that mankind, in its problems, redemption and destiny, is one.

I consider that we are now in the beginning of the era of world-peace. We may expect some wars; but the conscience of mankind has reached a sufficient illumination to render war increasingly difficult, and to bring universal peace within the realm of practical politics.

We are coming to see that it is far more patriotic to live gloriously than it is to die gloriously for one's country. When our Christian principles have penetrated far enough into our social conscience to affect our relationships, the best patriot will be the man who tries to make his country the servant of mankind. Instead of there being danger of nations losing their place who practise such a view, it will be as true of them as it is of the individual —"He who loses his life shall find it."

CHARLES A. EATON.

New York City.

. . .

The International Peace Movement Is of God, Writes Rev. Dr. Shannon (Meth.), Brooklyn

To make the peace movement feel the power of their influence, the churches must take a firm and unequivocal stand on its behalf. That is, both ministers and church members must throw themselves enthusiastically into the movement, agitating and supporting it in every possible and legitimate way.

I believe this international peace movement is of God, that it was inaugurated twenty centuries ago by the Prince of Peace, and that nothing will be able to long retard its universal realization.

The true basis of patriotism, in the last analysis, is in the Golden Rule. The only patriotism worth while is a part of the everlasting reality of religion, involving both a national and individual righteousness toward God and humanity. Consequently, the higher patriotism does not require the cultivation of what is popularly called a martial spirit in a people.

FREDERICK F. SHANNON.

Brooklyn, N. Y.

. . .

The Church Can Greatly Help Peace, Writes Rev. R. W. Jungfer (Luth.)

Our Master is a Prince of Peace. He would be in the front rank of those who are for international peace. Duelists are looked upon as ruffians. The days are past when princes went to war for personal revenge. Wars of succession are no more. The club law has long ceased to exist. A Napoleon would be impossible to-day. All this is due to the Church. Let the good work go on. A treaty of arbitration exists between this country and England. One is pending with us and Germany. Other nations will follow. Sherman said: "War is hell." It is more than this to-day, with our modern machines of destruction. The so-called martial spirit is a remnant of barbarism. Instead of cultivating this spirit, let us do what Solomon says in Prov. 15: 1.

I do not believe, however, that war will be altogether abolished. Sin and passion have too strong a hold on man. Speaking of the end of the world Christ prophesies this (Matt. 24: 6-12). But the Church can and must use her influence to lesson the horrors, frequency and burdens of war. She has already done a wonderful work.

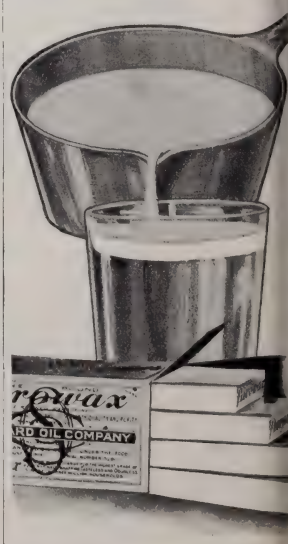
RICHARD W. JUNGFER.

Sharpsburg, Pa.

Parowax
(pure refined paraffine)

Seal your preserv with Parowax. It keeps the air out, the flavor all i

AFTER your jelly has cooled in glass—pour on a little me Parowax. No papers—no tin to no bother.



For screw top jars—dip the co in the Parowax after closing.

No spoiling from mold or air if use Parowax.

Get a box of Parowax from y grocer today. It costs very little.

Send to 56 New Street, New York, for free book of receipts No. 25 and printed labels for a hundred jars of preserves.

Standard Oil Compa
(Incorporated)

Dame Fashion is "Calling"—

May We Send Her to Pay You a Visit?

May we send Dame Fashion to pay you a visit?

Personally? No, we don't mean just that--but may we send her representative?

This representative, her very own, is the magnificent, new "NATIONAL" Style Book. It will be a visit of Dame Fashion indeed---a visit to you in your own home of the styles of New York and Paris---of every desirable new fashion in every kind of apparel.

We Present a Card of Fashion

Dame Fashion presents you her own visiting card, printed below.

"May I send my representative?" she asks.

Your reply is but to be a return of the coupon filled in with your name and address, and by return mail the wonderful, new "NATIONAL" Style Book, Fashion's own representative, will go to you Free.

It will show you "NATIONAL" apparel and "NATIONAL" garments are the free and unsolicited choice of one million American women.

Let us repeat—One Million American Women wear "NATIONAL" apparel. And then let us inquire, if one million find here better style, greater beauty and becomingness, if they find here more stylish appearance and save money—isn't there room for one million and one? And reasonably, just as a matter of reason alone, we ask, shouldn't that one be you?

Will you be the next one? Will you respond to this call of Fashion? To this call of actual opportunity? Your part, remember, is only to cut out and return the card of fashion, the coupon printed below. Your "NATIONAL" Style Book will show you.

Waists, 98 cents to $10
Skirts, $3.98 to $15
Dresses, $10 to $30
Hats $2.98 to $15
and all other kinds of Apparel

Underwear, 25 cents to $5
House Dresses, $1.50 to $3
Furs, $2.25 to $42.50
Fur Coats, $27.50 to $79.50

Ladies' Coats, $10 to $50
Misses' Suits, $10 to $20
Children's Coats, $5 to $10.98
Children's Dresses, $1.75 to $7.98

"NATIONAL" Tailored Suits Made to Measure $15 to $40

SAMPLES OF MATERIALS SENT FREE

For twenty-three years we have been making garments to order---from simple measurements sent us by mail. So perfect is our method of tailoring, so perfect our system of making perfect-fitting suits, so complete our experience, that we say to you frankly that the superiority of "NATIONAL" Made-to-Measure Suits is positively, very positively, above all question or doubt.

Each Made-to-Measure Suit is actually cut and made to order, and we guarantee each suit to fit perfectly and be satisfactory in every way, or we will cheerfully refund your money. You will find, for the famous "NATIONAL" Tailored Suits alone, that your Style Book will be of unequaled interest and delight.

The "NATIONAL" Policy

We prepay postage and express charges on all our goods to any part of the world. Every "NATIONAL" Garment has the "NATIONAL" Guarantee Tag—our signed guarantee—attached. This Tag says that you may return any "NATIONAL" Garment not satisfactory to you, and we will refund your money and pay express charges both ways.

In writing for your Style Book, be sure to state whether you desire samples of materials used for "NATIONAL" Made-to-Measure Tailored Suits. Samples are sent gladly, but only when asked for ---and they are well worth asking for.

NATIONAL CLOAK & SUIT CO.,

Mail Orders Only 218 West 24th Street, New York City No Agents or Branches

"Oh, the half-forgot days of Crinoline frocks
When Cupid oft hid in a gay bonnet box"

Half-forgot days—yes, and half remembered. Forgotten the crinoline from our fashions of today, but carefully preserved, as in lavender, the exquisite conceits of various pretty periods and charmingly indeed they are wrought into our present day styles.

Forgotten the crinoline, because, and note it carefully, fashions steadily improve—become more artistic and more graceful. And of all seasons, this is the one most widely changed, improved and best. Styles for now, have drawn upon all periods. Suits and dresses have also the beauty of the past, and so you will find them wonderfully new and artistic and charming.

Of hats—if Cupid oft hid in a gay bonnet box, then today's pretty hats will have much to answer for. Because "NATIONAL" hat boxes will this season carry forth more beauty and becomingness, and delight, more of the very best work of Paris than ever before. "NATIONAL" Hats, this season, are beautiful. But Cupid's hiding place of the present day, fashion's own repository, the very home of style and beauty for you, is the "NATIONAL" Style Book—is your own "NATIONAL" Style Book we have reserved for you. To know Fashion's story complete, to see and know all the new styles in all kinds of apparel, you simply need fill in and return the coupon below.

Copyright, 1911, by National Cloak & Suit Co.

COATS ARE VERY NEW

Newness changed styles, and beauty and becomingness---these are the features of the coats for Fall. And in "NATIONAL" Coats you will find the sterling value feature, the long service and proper fit and low price features as well.

Space is too short here to give you an inkling of the real superiority of "NATIONAL" Coats. But just write for your Style Book and see. It will mean a world of difference to you in style, in coat service and in money saved.

Dame Fashion

Her Own Representative---
The "NATIONAL" Style Book

NATIONAL CLOAK & SUIT CO.,
218 West 24th Street, New York City.

I return herewith the card of Fashion. Please send me free my "NATIONAL" Fall Style Book.

Name .....

Address .....

.....

If you wish Samples of the Beautiful New Materials for Tailored Suits, state here the colors you prefer;

.....

Beauty Lines

Are in every woman's face. Those who have fewest should cultivate them, those who have most should retain them. Millions of women have found that Ideal for the Bath.

All Dealers

Bailey's Rubber Complexion Brushes never failed to give the desired results in all cases.

Bailey's Rubber Complexion Brush, mailed, 50 cents.
Bailey's Petite Complexion Brush, mailed, 25 cents.

Bailey's Won't Slip Crutch Tip

This tip won't slip on any surface. Made in five sizes, internal diameter. No. 17, ⅝ in.; No. 18, ¾ in.; No. 19, ⅞ in.; No. 20, 1 in.; No. 21, 1⅛ in.

Mailed upon receipt of price. 30 cents per pair.

100-page Catalog of Everything in Rubber Goods, Free.

Right Now

You Should Wear

Bailey's "Won't Slip" Rubber Heels

The tread surface is positively non-slipping, and more durable than if solid. They have proved the most resilient, lightest and longest wearing rubber heels made. Brains were used in making them. They will save yours by wearing them. All dealers.

Applied, 50 cents per pair; Mailed, 35 cents.
Send drawing of heel. Dealers write for prices

For three of your dealers names we will send you a pair for 25c.

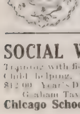
C. J. BAILEY & CO., Mfrs.
22 Boylston Street, Boston, Mass.

A Secure 5% Without Risk

INSTEAD of risking and tying up your idle money in an attempt to earn 6% interest, if you deposit it with this Company, you make a non-speculative investment, your money can be withdrawn at any time upon short notice, and we are paying 5% on deposits, compounded semi-annually, or remitted by check as desired.
Established eighteen years.

Assets $2,300,000.00

INDUSTRIAL SAVINGS AND LOAN CO. NEW YORK CITY



Conservative management and judicious investment of funds according to the stringent requirements of the New York State Banking Laws characterize this Company. This is the most secure and most profitable way to invest idle money.

Write for booklet.

Industrial Savings & Loan Co.
2 Times Bldg., B'way & 42d St., New York

EVERYWOMAN SHOULD EARN $25 PER WEEK

[illegible] wash fabrics, [illegible] Dealing direct with the mills [illegible] Others make $10.00 to $30.00 weekly. [illegible] Be first to apply for Agency. Standard Dress Goods Co., Desk 3 J. Standard Building Binghamton, N. Y.

ALL FOR 20¢

Three beautiful 12 inch LINEN Centerpieces, Holly, Eyelet and [illegible] designs, 4 Doilies and our catalog showing over 600 designs of art embroidery goods and 70 different EMBROIDERY STITCHES. All delivered for 20 cts.

P. W. KELLER CO., Waterloo, Iowa

SOCIAL WORK—The New Profession

Training with field work under Specialists in Civic [illegible] Child helping, Settlements, Recreation, etc. [illegible] $12.00. Year's Diploma Course $75.00. 9th year opens October 2. Graham Taylor, Pres. Julia C. Lathrop, Vice-Pres.

Chicago School of Civics and Philanthropy, Chicago

Bishop Fitzgerald Dead

IN THE death of Rev. Dr. Oscar Penn Fitzgerald, Bishop of the M. E. Church, South, at Monteagle, Tenn., Methodism loses one of its foremost leaders. He entered the ministry in 1863, and was elected bishop in 1890. At various times he was editor of religious publications and was the author of several notable books dealing with religious subjects. In 1873 he became editor of the Nashville Christian Advocate, and thereafter devoted himself more particularly to the Southern field, being himself a native of North Carolina. Among his best known works are Glimpses of Truth, The Epworth Book, The Day and the Word, and Upper Room Meditations. He was 82 years of age.

The Late Bishop O. P. Fitzgerald

Among the Workers

—IN A RECENT address, Governor Woodrow Wilson of New Jersey used these emphatic words: "To my thinking, the Christian Church stands at the centre not only of philanthropy, but at the centre of education, at the centre of science, at the centre of philosophy, at the centre of politics; in short, at the centre of sentiment and thinking life."

—ERIE, PA., HAS recently undergone a remarkable religious experience. Evangelist W. A. Sunday, with a corps of workers, has been conducting a spiritual campaign there. One thousand five hundred men formed a Workers' League and pledged themselves to do personal work among the unsaved. Over 5,000 sought the mourners' bench. The spiritual life of the churches has been greatly intensified.

—PLANS ARE being made for a number of special days at "The Orient in Providence" Exposition, to be held September 21 to October 7. These will include a China Day (September 26), a Japan Day, and probably Korea, Burma, American Indian, Medical Missions and other days. There will also be a Baptist Day, a Congregational Day, an Episcopal Day, etc., with addresses by prominent denominational leaders and secretaries of Mission Boards.

—A READER of this journal, Mrs. M. P. Robinson, New Jersey, writes us that the Vivisection Investigation League has been incorporated for the purpose of investigating the practice of vivisection upon human beings and animals and its results; also, to hold public meetings and give lectures to disseminate information on the subject, and to influence legislation to improve existing conditions in regard to the practice of vivisection. The offices of the League are in the Metropolitan Building, New York. Miss Maude R. Ingersoll, the Corresponding Secretary, will furnish all information to inquirers by mail or otherwise.

GOD GIVE US MEN

GOD give us men, strong men of noble mien;
Who face the ill of life with soul serene;
Men who will honor Thee with heart sincere;
Men who will serve the truth without a fear;
Men whom a false ambition can't entice;
Men who will form no partnership with vice;
Men who for winning favor will not lie;
Men who for honor's sake would gladly die;
Men whose strong will no grasping greed can bend;
Men to the best in other men a friend;
Men who see in other men a brother;
Not to self more true than to another;
Such men as these, O God, we pray Thee give,
That men more like to Thee may learn to live.

CHARLES REMINGTON MCNALLY.

The Land of To-morrow

IN THE Land of To-morrow (writes Laura E. Richards in her new book, Golden Windows), near the entrance gate two newly arrived spirits met, and looked each other in the face. One of them was a strong and beautiful spirit, with shining garments, and a face full of clear light; but the other was little and pinched and gray, and she trembled and cowered as she went.

"What ails you," asked the first spirit, "that you cower thus?"

"I am afraid!" answered the second. "It is all so strange here: I have no home, no friends, and I am alone and frightened."

"That is strange!" said the strong spirit. "I never felt so at home before. Everything is friendly to my eyes; the very trees are as if I had known them always."

"Let me hold your hand!" said the frightened one. "You seem so strong, and tread so freely, I shall perhaps not be so afraid if I am with you. I was a great lady on the earth. I lived in a fine house, and had servants to run and ride for me, and jewels and rich dresses, and everything that heart could desire; yet I had to leave them all in haste, and come alone to this strange place. It is very terrible! Was it so with you?"

"Nay," said the other; "I came willingly."

The frightened spirit clung to the other, and peered in her face.

"Tell me!" she cried. "Did we ever meet on the earth? Your face is not only friendly, it is familiar. It is as if I had seen you often, yet none of the noble ladies I knew had such strength and grace. Who were you, beautiful angel?"

"I was your washerwoman!" said the other.

"Sermons in Stones"

ONE of the most beautiful yet a most pathetic scene of nature is located near Allen's Park, Colo., way up in the Rocky Mountains. It is a pine tree growing in a crack in a large rock, and looks almost as if the tree had split the rock in trying to find an opening through which it might grow.

The Split Rock at Allen's Park

No doubt the seed was dropped in the rock or crack by a bird or carried by a strong wind, and finding just a little dust perhaps in which it might grow, it spread apart the pieces of stone until now it is a large and strong tree which is not less than one hundred years old.

Somebody has called it "The Rock of Ages," and as one stands and looks upon it he thinks of the goodness of God, for if God gives such strength to the trees of his forests, to overcome such a great obstacle as this, how much more will he help us who trust in him, to overcome the small things which so often cross our path.

We, like this tree, have the rock of sin and temptation crowding us on all sides, trying to crush out, as it were, our life; but if we only trust God and ask his help we will grow strong, no matter what may try to hinder our growth.

J. C.

NEW-SKIN

$250 In Prizes

WE are frequently surprised to learn of some new use for New-Skin. Look down the following list of uses and see if you know of any others.

If you do, send us a letter or post card with the information. For the ten suggestions which we consider best worth advertising, we will pay $25.00 each.

Uses for New-Skin

We know that New-Skin is good for Small Cuts and Wounds, including Scratches, Abrasions, Bruises, Burns, Scrapes, etc.

For Protecting the Skin in anticipation of unusual wear—A man who is going to take an unusually long walk, for example, can paint his feet with New-Skin and the shoes will chafe on the New-Skin film and not injure the skin underneath.

For Chapped Hands and Split Lips and for Hangnails. For Chilblains and Frosted Ears and Feet.

For use by Physicians and Medical Students, in certain cases as a protection to the fingers and hands. For Photographers' Fingers—to avoid staining hands with chemicals.

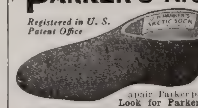
10c. and 25c.

For Stings of Insects; for Corns and Calloused Spots.

For Repairing Photographic Films, Eye Glasses, etc.

If you happen to know of any other uses, write us and perhaps you will win a prize.

Contest open to everyone without charge.



If more than one person makes the same accepted suggestion the prize will be equally divided.

Contest closes Dec. 30, 1911, Address "Prize Offer Manager" Dept. 70

NEWSKIN COMPANY, BROOKLYN, NEW YORK

PARKER'S Arctic Socks

Registered in U. S. Patent Office

Healthful for bed-chamber, bath and sick-room. Worn in rubber boots, absorb perspiration. Made of knitted fabric, lined with soft white wool fleece. Sold in all sizes by dealers or by mail. 25c a pair. Parker pays postage. Catalogue free.

Look for Parker's name in every pair

J. H. PARKER CO., Dept. C, 25 James St., Malden, Mass.

This Kitchen Set 85¢

Delivered Prepaid Anywhere in the United States 85¢

Our "direct from the factory" selling plan enables every housewife to enjoy one of these handy, time-saving kitchen sets at a price way below that ever named before. This set consists of 10 pieces—breadknife; carving knife; carving fork; meat chopper; meat saw; steel knife sharpener; paring knife; cake turner; egg poacher and hanging rack. Each piece absolutely perfect—made of tested steel, heavily nickel plated; handles made of hard, black rubberoid (waterproof). No housewife should be without this set—Order a set to-day, and if you are not satisfied that it is the biggest Kitchen Set bargain you ever saw, don't keep it—return at our expense and we'll refund your money.

HUNDREDS OF BARGAINS IN HOME FURNISHINGS

It will pay you to get acquainted with this establishment—we guarantee that we can save you a big sum on any piece of furniture or household article you need. We control a group of factories and sell direct to you at prices way below any merchant. Send us a postcard saying "I want to save money on my home furnishings" and we'll send you our Catalog and list of Specials that will interest you. Address

PHILLIPS BROS. & WEIL
"DIRECT-FROM-FACTORY-TO-YOU"
Dept. E., 819 W. 63d St. Chicago

The New Inheritance Tax Law Of New York State

Non-residents may now carry bank balances or deposit their securities in New York City, either temporarily or permanently, with the assurance that they will not be subject to the Inheritance Tax.

The new law, now in force, provides that intangible property, defined by the law as "incorporeal property, including money, deposits in bank, shares of stock, bonds, notes, credits, evidences of an interest in property and evidences of debt," held in New York by bona fide non-resident decedents, is not taxable in that state.

This Company has complete facilities for handling active and reserve accounts and for the safe keeping of securities, and cordially invites such business.

We have prepared a booklet containing the text of the new Inheritance Tax Law, together with explanatory notes, which we will be pleased to furnish upon request

Ask for Booklet N 342

Guaranty Trust Company
of New York
28 Nassau Street
Fifth Avenue Branch, 5th Ave. & 43d St. London Office, 33 Lombard St., E. C.
Capital and Surplus - - $23,000,000
Deposits - - - - 163,000,000

PHILADELPHIA

The St. James
Walnut and 13th Sts.

Ideally located in the center of business and social life.

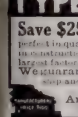
335 Rooms—275 Baths

Rooms $2.00 per day up
Room and Bath, $2.50 per day up
Suites of 2 to 6 Rooms

Famous for its cuisine

Eugene G. Miller, Mgr.

$1 English Knock-about Hat



A stylish, serviceable hat for dress or business. Genuine English Felt. Folds into compact roll without damaging. Broad outside band. Would sell for $2 in most hat stores. Colors: Black, Dark Gray Mixture, Brown Mixture, and White. Weight 4 ozs. Sent postpaid promptly on receipt of $1 (state size and color wanted. Satisfaction guaranteed.

PANAMA HAT CO., Dept. C, 830 Broadway, New York City

TYPEWRITERS FACTORY REBUILT

Save $25 to $50 on any make of Typewriter. Our "Factory Rebuilt" Typewriters are perfect in quality, condition and looks. Durable and reliable in construction and action in every way. Buy from the largest factory in the world with branches in all large cities. We guarantee for one year against defect in workmanship and material. Write for catalogue and address of nearest branch office.

American Writing Machine Co.
345 Broadway, New York

CORNS

Nothing removes them like A-Corn Salve. Takes out roots and all without cutting or danger of blood-poisoning. Easy, quick, sure. 15 cents at druggists' or by mail.

GiantChemicalCo.,Philadelphia

GUARANTEED MORTGAGES
for
Large and Small Investors

You can now invest small sums in first-class mortgage loans. You can have the same advantages which for hundreds of years capitalists alone have enjoyed. Whether your funds are invested by mail, you have the same security and the same returns. Send for our booklet on paying 5% to 6%, with the guarantee of this Company and the big cities of New York and Suburban Land forming the basis of them. The safest, most profitable investment for savings consistent with absolute security.

FIRST MORTGAGE TRUST BONDS

Under Supervision of New York Banking Department
Write for Booklet.

NEW YORK MORTGAGE CO.
Dept. D 1115 Broadway, New York City

The Spread of Thrift

IT IS a fact well known to students of social conditions that poverty and thriftlessness are too often synonyms. In proportion to income and wages the untrained laborer spends much more on his living than does the well-to-do. If this mass of expenditure on the part of the toiler were for actual necessities, it might be encouraged on the plea of greater resultant efficiency, but, unfortunately for all concerned, it is wasted on things actually useless or positively injurious. A few may be benefited by the ostentatious expenditures of the vulgar rich, but the family of the wage-earner are sure to suffer from his or their ignorant extravagance, while no one is materially benefited.

In our last article on this subject we pointed out that there were 9,142,700 depositors in our savings banks in 1910, or about one for every ten of our population. As a great many depositors, particularly in our cities, have accounts in two or more savings banks this number would be reduced if we could get statistics of the persons with more than one bank book; still the great total would not be so much lessened as to weaken the general deduction just made.

Thrift Is Growing Popular

It is interesting to note that in the days when great fortunes were unknown in the United States or were at least so rare as to make the millionaire a curiosity worth a day's journey to see, thrift was the exception among the masses. Perhaps in those early days, when hard toil was the lot of all and there was a nearly dead level of social and economic conditions, there was no sufficient stimulus to action; or it may be, though we doubt it, that a genuinely democratic spirit barred a man from excelling his neighbor in anything. Those were the days of cheap food, cheap labor and home-made clothes, and the spirit of progress, born of competition, had not yet come upon the people.

It was not till 1820 that savings banks became recognized institutions in this country, and for many years after their introduction they were confined to the cities north of the Potomac and along the Atlantic seaboard, principally in New England, in which section, through the introduction of steam, those great manufacturing enterprises, that were yet to enrich her, were being established. But great as has been the increase in factories and vast as has been the wealth derived therefrom, their effect on the masses for good is insignificant compared with that of the savings banks.

Fortunately we have the statistics of savings banks going back for ninety years. These show, as the following table demonstrates, what, in each decade, the savings of each person in the United States would have been had the money been equally distributed:

1820	$ 12
1830	54
1840	82
1850	1 87
1860	4 75
1870	14 26
1880	16 33
1890	24 35
1900	31 78
1910	45 95

Territorial Distribution of Savings

Here it may be well, for the purpose of illustration, to repeat that the total per capita of United States money in circulation in 1910 was $35.01, or a total for our population of 93,402,266, of $3,270,013,332.66. Adding to this the outstanding notes of our national banks at that date, we have $3,994,887,640 as the amount of currency available for business. Taking the per capita savings deposits of the country for the year named, we have a total of $4,207,782,083.30. This is $212,894,443 more than the total of all the money in circulation for 1910. The excess shows the amount that must have gone into the banks twice, without withdrawals and without lessening the bulk of currency in circulation. This would seem paradoxical did we not understand that money in business never lies idle, but, like the blood in the human body, or the streams that swell the rivers, is forever in movement, in circulation, and never resting in one place, though all the places through which the current passes feel its beneficent influence.

Where Thrift Is Common

It is instructive to study the growth of thrift through the decades, and to note its spread throughout the land. The individual savings banks deposits in the far Western States are far larger than in the Eastern States; but when we consider the per capita average the reverse is the case. In Connecticut and Massachusetts the average per capita deposited is about $250, and in none of the New England States is it less than $100.

The six New England States with New York, Pennsylvania, Delaware, Maryland, Ohio, and Indiana furnish three-fourths of all the savings deposits of the country, and these savings are stored exclusively in the cities and larger towns. The magnitude of the cash held in savings banks in the States named, can be measured when we remember the vast total of all the deposits, and then consider that in more than half the States in the Union the per capita savings in institutions is only $5. Up to the present the manufacturing and mining districts, in which wage-earners abound, and there is a weekly or monthly inflow of ready money, show a great preponderance of depositors and savers.

An attempt has been made to explain this disparity by showing that owners and cultivators of land find it more advantageous to invest all their savings in the improvement of their farms or in increasing their holdings. To a certain extent this is no doubt true, for with the spread of intelligence and the adoption of more scientific methods more money is needed for restoration and up-keep; but this could only check net income for a season or two at the furthest. The result must inevitably be increased revenue, which means greater savings.

What the Farmers are Doing

The fact that prosperous farms are usually removed from large cities and saving banks is another reason why the denser communities have larger per capita savings. Again, until recently agriculture has not been the profitable business that city dwellers are apt to imagine. In proportion to labor and the capital invested no toiling class receives less for its efforts than the farming. Happily the conditions are changing. The pressing mortgages, assumed for purchase or improvement, are being paid off, and in increasing numbers the farmers are getting their heads above water, and more and more they are laying by money for investment.

We can readily estimate, from State reports, the total of deposits in the city savings banks, but we have no means of even approximating the amount which farmers have invested or are investing in promising enterprises near home or away from it. We have reason to know that the farmers of the country have been plundered of great sums of money by unscrupulous exploiters of worthless schemes, but happily that day is past, or it certainly should be. One thing is very certain, and that is that the men who have done and are doing so much for their country have reached a position in which they are to become larger sharers in the general prosperity.

The Florsheim SHOE

LOOK FOR NAME IN STRAP

Quality materials and "Natural Shape" lasts produce perfect wear, perfect fit, and style that endures.

Ask your dealer or send amount to cover cost and express charges and we will have our nearest dealer fill your order.

Most Styles $5.00 and $6.00

Write for our free booklet "The Florsheim Way of Foot-Fitting," showing styles that are different.

The Florsheim Shoe Company
Chicago U. S. A.

The Excello
Medium round toe

5% How Much Does Your Money Earn?

Can you get it when you want it?

Is it amply safeguarded from danger of loss?

This Company pays 5% interest on your savings. Interest checks reach you always on the first days of January and July. In over sixteen years there has never been a day's delay.

You can withdraw all or part of your money at any time without notice—it is never tied up and out of your control.

Ask for the booklet telling about the careful, conservative management of this Company, its ample resources and its methods of doing business.

The Calvert Mortgage & Deposit Co.
1046 Calvert Building, Baltimore. Md.

6% Minus Worry

WHEN the Stock Market is erratic, as at present, the prudent investor looks about for investments which will prove safe, which will not depreciate in point of security and will pay him a reasonable, living income.

For such, we point to our First Mortgage Farm Loans as fulfilling every requirement of the most cautious investor. Our experience, covering over a third of a century, has demonstrated that a Farm Loan made by experienced and conservative lenders is the safest and most satisfactory investment for those desiring an income investment.

Our booklet "A" tells all about our mortgages and ourselves. Write for it to-day.

WELLS & DICKEY COMPANY
Established 1878. Capital and Surplus, $700,000
Security Bank Building, MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.

A NEST-EGG

By ARTHUR CHAMBERLAIN

MRS. FRANK TREVARTS paused as her husband unfastened the garden gate, gazing at the house beyond; their house.

"Isn't it a dear, Frank?" she exclaimed with dancing eyes.

"It is pretty good." Frank Trevarts let his gaze run over the little two-story cottage. "Of course, Ruth, I know you'd rather be in Winton, where your mother is, but business won't let us live there yet a while, anyway. We waited some time for this, didn't we?"

Mrs. Trevarts glanced gratefully at her husband. "Just think, Frank," she murmured; "if it hadn't been for that raise in your salary we wouldn't be married—and here! It almost scares me to think of it."

"Well, you don't want to think of it!" remarked her husband, briskly. "I've got the raise, and I've got you, and you've got me"—but at this point the conversation ceased to be intellectually appreciable.

"Now, see here, Ruth," observed Frank, adjusting his necktie over a slightly rumpled shirt-collar, "I'm not going back on this house—not a bit. But I'm a practical man, and I don't propose to go into ecstasies over this house as it stands—not much! I am going to start a piazza along this side and run out a little ell in the southwest corner—two-story ell; dining-room on the first floor and sewing-room over it, leading out of our room. We don't want to eat in the parlor, and I'm not going to have my wife eating in the kitchen."

"Oh, Frank!" Mrs. Trevarts' eyes grew round. "Why, it'll be a perfect palace! But it will cost a lot! Do you think we can afford it?"

"Ruth," replied her husband impressively, "I've figured this thing out, and I see we can't afford to do anything else. That sewing-room alone will be worth five hundred dollars a year in pure comfort, and the dining-room will be worth as much more. Then, as for the piazza—why, if we have the average of moonlight nights, that piazza is going to be worth at least a thousand dollars to us this summer; there's two thousand dollars; and it certainly won't cost that, so there's a profit the very first year, and no expenses afterward worth mentioning. Why, it's a cinch—a lead-pipe cinch!"

Ruth laughed. "It would be nice," she deliberated, wistfully.

Frank drew her closer to him. "I'm going to do it, dear. I can take the money out of the savings bank, you know."

"Yes; but, Frank, that's our nest-egg," replied his wife, desirous but doubtful. "Do you think we ought to?"

Frank looked at her quizzically. "Ruth," he persisted, "that nest-egg, at present, attracts a very unprolific breed of hen. I think we'll try it somewhere else."

Ruth laughed contentedly. "It will be beautiful, won't it, Frank?" she cooed. "Oh, there's Aunt Hannah, coming up the street."

She was off like an arrow; Frank walked away, whistling.

"Good morning, my dear," Aunt Hannah greeted her. "Try to be a little less impetuous, now that you are a married woman. So this is the house." Aunt Hannah scrutinized it through her glasses. "Quite suitable, I should say, for your means," she went on, as Ruth ushered her into the pretty parlor. "Let me see, you have a dining-room?"

"We—we eat in the kitchen, just now," hesitated Ruth, vaguely uncomfortable.

"Ah, yes; while you are setting things to rights—that is well enough. But, as a rule, my dear, I would use the parlor for a dining-room rather than eat in the kitchen. It would be an easy matter to clear the table after each meal and to set it aside out of the way. There are quite pretty folding tables to be had cheap—especially second-hand ones, and they are quite as good as new, for your purpose."

Ruth gave a little wriggle. "I guess we can afford a new table, if we need it, Aunt Hannah. We don't, though, we have a very nice dining-table, as it is. When we get our new dining-room—" she stopped, realizing that she had said more than was judicious, but Aunt Hannah caught her up:

"Your new dining-room? I do not quite understand. I thought you had no choice between the parlor and the kitchen."

"We—Frank thinks we need more room; he is going to add an ell—a dining-room and a sewing-room, and a little piazza."

Aunt Hannah looked disturbed. "Has there been—is there—any special sum which you can set apart for the expense?" she queried.

"We have some money put aside," faltered Ruth, uncomfortably.

Aunt Hannah considered. "Oh, if you—if Frank has been able to set aside a special sum—" she paused.

"It's in the savings bank." Ruth's voice sounded a little strained.

Aunt Hannah shook her head. "I cannot think that you are doing wisely, Ruth. Surely, my dear, you ought to regard your savings bank deposit as a trust to be reserved for a time of misfortune, or at least"—Aunt Hannah seemed to grope for a telling statement—"not to be wasted in foolish whims."

"We'll have the house, anyway, auntie," replied Ruth, with a touch of annoyance. "We're not exactly going to throw the money into the sea!"

"Ruth, my dear," returned her aunt, with agitated seriousness, "you are young, and so is Frank; and in your light-heartedness I fear that you forget how many untoward events the future may hold for you. A certain amount of ready money, my dear—"

"Aunt Hannah," interrupted Ruth, moved to self-defense by her aunt's insistence, "God has given me my husband and my health, and since all good things come from him, he has given me all good. I do not believe that he doles out his blessings. For my part, I would rather trust than to fret myself because there is a little less money to meet some phantom of the future, which may never appear."

"Oh, very well, Ruth," retorted Aunt Hannah, rising in offended dignity. "I feel it my duty to say to you that the course you propose is simply tempting Providence." She took leave with the air of shaking the dust of the place from her feet, and Ruth found it difficult, for all her daring defense, to rid herself of a sense of discomfort; she had never braved Aunt Hannah before.

"Yes, I see, Ruth," remarked her husband reflectively, when she poured out the story to him on his reappearance. "I meant that we should keep our own counsel, as far as might be, in this affair. Your Aunt Hannah is a good woman, Ruth; she's an unselfish woman, too. She's quite capable of giving twenty-five dollars to foreign missions, and then spending a whole day in trying to decide if she can afford to buy a new shirt-waist."

Ruth smiled. "Well, we'll have the ell and the piazza; that is settled," she declared, with an air of finality.

The next two months were busy ones. There was a joint determination to have piazza and ell an accomplished fact as soon as possible, not to lose the pleasure of a piazza for a retreat during the summer; the ell itself seemed daily more desirable. Aunt Hannah

Continued on next page

Brightness—cheer—comfort—follow the path of the paint-brush. Ravages of time and wear disappear before its magic influence. And they stay away when

ACME QUALITY
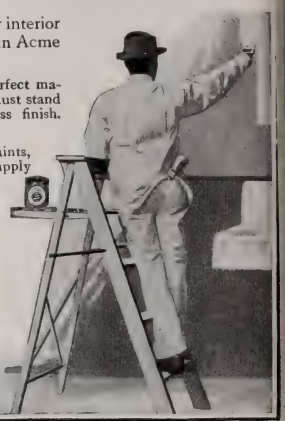
Paints and Finishes are used. Each made to give the highest value in wear and appearance. One for every purpose—each best of its class.



Acme Quality Varnishes are best for interior finishing. Tough, elastic, water-proof. An Acme Quality Varnish for every need.

Acme Quality No-Lustre Finish is the perfect material for surfaces, such as woodwork, which must stand repeated washing. Gives a dull, flat lustreless finish. Can be applied over plaster, burlap or canvas.

Your dealer should have Acme Quality Paints, Enamels, Stains and Finishes. If he can't supply you, write us. Send to-day for copy of

The Acme Quality Painting Guide Book

Tells what should be used for any given purpose, and just how it should be applied. Illustrated in full color. Sent free. Address

PAINTS ENAMELS THE ACME QUALITY KIND STAINS VARNISHES

ACME WHITE LEAD and COLOR WORKS
Dept. O
Detroit, Mich.

Corns All Gone By Wednesday

Apply a Blue-jay plaster on Monday, and the pain stops instantly. By Wednesday the whole corn loosens and comes out. No pain, no soreness, no inconvenience. All because of a soft wax which separates the callous from the toe.

Why do you temporize with corns? Why merely pare them or protect them? Here is a way to remove the corn, harmlessly, painlessly, and in 48 hours. Millions of people use it. It has fifty times as large a sale as any other treatment for corns. Think what folly it is to suffer a corn when a simple Blue-jay plaster ends the whole trouble. Go get it now.

A in the picture is the soft B & B wax. It loosens the corn.
B protects the corn, stopping the pain at once.
C wraps around the toe. It is narrowed to be comfortable.
D is rubber adhesive to fasten the plaster on.

Blue-jay Corn Plasters

15c and 25c per package

Also Blue-jay Bunion Plasters. All Druggists Sell and Guarantee Them.

Sample Mailed Free

Bauer & Black, Chicago and New York

(81) Makers of Surgical Dressings, etc.

A NEST-EGG

Continued from preceding page

appeared at rather lengthy intervals; for the most part with an air of tacit disapproval, diversified by an occasional word of adverse comment. It was with peculiar satisfaction that Ruth finally swept up the last stray shaving, and seating herself in her pretty willow rocking-chair where the long shadows of the afternoon made the piazza particularly attractive, awaited her husband's coming.

The shadows lengthened as Ruth rocked and sewed, until with a sudden start she became aware that it was growing too dark for further work, and yet her husband had not arrived. She strained her gaze down the street; some one was coming—Frank? No; Aunt Hannah, and no one else!

Ruth shrank back with a certain reluctance; then, struck with a sudden misgiving, sprang forward. "Aunt Hannah! Do you know where Frank is?"

Aunt Hannah came slowly up the garden path. "Ruth," she sighed, "I have something to tell you; please be patient, and let me tell it in my own way."

Ruth gave the rocking-chair to her guest, and sat down upon the edge of the piazza, clasping her hands tightly in her lap.

"As you know, Ruth," went on Aunt Hannah, impressively, "I have felt, from the first, that you and Frank were unwise—even reckless—in assuming the expense of this addition. I warned you that we cannot tell what a day may bring forth, and that it is a duty and a responsibility to prepare for the rainy day that comes to all. I regret that you rejected my advice."

"Frank?" interposed Ruth, with tense eagerness.

"Let me relieve you of unnecessary anxiety; the affair is serious enough as it stands. Your husband is well; but financially—" Aunt Hannah paused. "My dear, I am extremely sorry to tell you, but I have it on excellent authority—there has been a change of management at the office, and I have been given to understand—now, my dear, try to take it calmly—that Frank has lost his position."

Ruth sprang to her feet. "Is that all, Aunt Hannah?" she cried. Frank and I are young; he has ability, he will be welcome anywhere!"

"Ah, child!" gloomed Aunt Hannah, "I admire your courage, but you have had little experience. Competition is keen, and a man discredited by the loss of his position—"

Ruth turned quickly upon her aunt. "Is it quite kind to say to me that Frank is 'discredited,' Aunt Hannah?" she queried; gently, indeed, but in so firm a tone that her aunt flushed slightly and with a deprecatory gesture began a stammering apology, when her voice was drowned by a deep, hearty bass.

"What's all this about being discredited? Hullo, Aunt Hannah! Come to congratulate us? That's good. Didn't know you'd heard the news. Meant to be the first to tell Ruth, but no matter. Ruth! Sweetheart! Why—"

Aunt Hannah's face grew stern. "Frank Trevarts, if you choose to make a jest of misfortune, I suppose it is your privilege, but I must say—"

"One moment." Frank's tone held something that compelled attention. "Ruth, dear," he continued, turning to his wife, "I suppose what Aunt Hannah has gotten hold of is this: there has been a shake-up at the office; Meston, a new man, is to take my place. The firm mean to establish an important branch office at Winton, and they offer me the managership."

"Winton!" cried Ruth, eagerly. "Why, that's where mother is, and where we both wanted to go!"

Aunt Hannah drew a quick breath, glancing with a wistful air at her niece.

"It will about double my salary," Frank went on; "and Meston wants to take this house just as it stands, at a price that pays for all I've laid out on it, including the interest on the money. That nest-egg will have several good-sized eggs for company, Ruth!"

A little sob came from the rocking-chair; Ruth heard it, and turned with swift gentleness. "Dear auntie!" she cried, clasping her aunt's face in both hands and kissing it.

Aunt Hannah gulped once or twice, returning the caress. "Ruth," she ventured, "and Frank, I—I was mistaken. You trusted, and I—didn't. I think, maybe, you understand his ways better than I do. I'm sorry I'm to lose you, Ruth, but it is natural that you should be glad that you're going to your mother."

Ruth drew her aunt's face close to hers. "You can never lose us, auntie dear," she whispered. "Frank," she continued, looking at her husband with shining eyes, "we'll have Aunt Hannah make us a good long visit when we get all settled; just whenever she wants to come."

"Oh, Ruth!" cried Aunt Hannah, in feeble protestation.

"Yes, indeed!" declared Frank heartily, stooping down and kissing Aunt Hannah squarely on the lips.

CALLED HIGHER

Mrs. A. J. Potter (87), of Garrison, N. D., passed away at her home there on April 27.

Mrs. M. E. Drake (87), of Hamburg, N. Y., entered into rest on May 3.

Mrs. A. M. Goetsche, of West Newton, Pa., was called to her reward on May 12, 1911.

Mrs. Mary E. Siberts (76), of Fairbury, Neb., passed away at her home on May 11.

Mr. and Mrs. Warren Cox, of Brooklyn, Ill., have been called to their reward. They were for many years subscribers to this magazine.

James Burton, of Sugar Creek, Mo., has been called to his long home. He was for thirty years a reader of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD both in America and in England.

The Quality of Advertising

NOT long ago a well-known advertising man, who was on his way to New York City, remarked to his friend, anent a certain well-known advertisement which appeared above one of the windows of the railroad car: "Do you know that the trade-mark of that concern is worth over a million dollars?" "I shouldn't wonder," replied the other; "it is known to millions of persons." "Oh," said the first, "its publicity capacity is not the sum total of its value. It is what it stands for that counts—not only the article which it represents, but the widely known integrity of the concern. After years of associating the name of the concern with the goods they sell, the public has learned that this firm and these goods can be depended upon."

That is the keynote of modern advertising. Years of experience have shown that while mere money may purchase much publicity, the prosperity of a concern depends after all upon the quality of the goods advertised. One is as necessary as the other, and the prospective purchaser can make up his mind that the article which is consistently advertised for any length of time must have some sterling quality to recommend it.

Whenever any of our subscribers is defrauded by an advertiser in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD we will make good the claim, provided that the subscriber, who must be of record, has mentioned THE CHRISTIAN HERALD in writing to the advertiser, and provided the claim is made to us within two months of the date of the appearance of the advertisement. This guarantee does not apply to investment advertisements.

What New York's Smartest Women Will Wear

—And How You Can Easily Dress as Well—Told in this Beautifully Illustrated Bedell Book of Fashions.

Write for it today. Sent Postpaid FREE

This Suit as described $15 Express Prepaid

A copy of this, the largest, most costly and most exclusive fashion book published—the recognized style authority—superbly lithographed colored cover, is yours for a post-card request.

Shop in New York FREE

You will want to see all of the radical changes that the Fall season has ushered in. Every authentic style is brought by this messenger of Fashion to your very door. Through this Bedell Style Book you may examine them at your leisure, and have all the advantages of a shopping tour to New York. You can select from the greatest variety of prices, the same styles and enjoy the same low prices as the fashionable women who patronize Bedell's Famous New York Stores. It is a pleasure and a comfort to shop by mail through the Bedell Catalog. A post-card brings you this fashion authority.

An opportunity to secure your new Fall suit for much less than you expected to pay.

Diagonal Cheviot Suit Finely Custom Tailored $15

Customary $22.50 Value
Like Picture—Express Prepaid

No. 15 H. Unusual value is offered you in this handsome Fall Suit, made and tailored with the greatest care. The coat has smart semi-fitting lines and a stylish new wide collar of rich Panne velvet, charmingly edged with silk Hercules braid, and lapel effect joined with a tailored tab and braid ornaments A very new touch is the fashioning of the under arm sections, smartly over-lapping and finished with velvet buttons. The tailored sleeves have a velvet trimmed cuff effect. Silk braid frogs and ornaments close the front. Luxuriously lined throughout with guaranteed satin. The skirt is the very last thought in newness, with apron panel front, and back trimmed with wide silk braid and velvet buttons. An insert from knee depth adds the necessary fullness at bottom. The material is fine, imported diagonal wide wale cheviot, woven from the finest selected yarn, and carefully sponged and shrunk. Colors black, navy, brown and green. $15.00

We pay all Mail or Express charges to any town in the United States, no matter where you live.

We send every garment with our guarantee of perfect satisfaction, or your money back.

THE Bedell COMPANY 16-18 West 14th St. New York City

Ball Cup-Nipple FREE to Every Babe

This Ball Cup-Nipple is the only bottle nipple ever invented that has a cup, or that has puncture protected from enlargement (it being away from end of nipple) which thus feeds regularly and only cup full at a time can not collapse

It fits closely about the neck of any small bottle outlasts several ordinary nippies

We'll send you one FREE to try if you send us your address and your dealer's name on a postcard.

State Baby's age: kind and quantity of food at a feeding

Hygeia Nursing Bottle Company
1341 Main St., Buffalo, New York

Direct from Factory, Freight Prepaid and Guaranteed by the Manufacturer

You can buy a Gold Coin Stove from us $5 to $20 less than dealer's prices. We pay freight; safe delivery insured, polished and all ready to set up.

"Satisfaction or your money back any time within a year" is our written guaranty.

Free Catalog—Illustrates all our Stoves. Gives Price List and tells our Plan and Offer. Send for it.

Gold Coin Stove Co.
11 Oak St. Troy, N. Y.

I TRUST YOU TEN DAYS. SEND NO MONEY.
$2 Hair Switch Sent on Approval. Choice of Natural wavy or straight hair

Send a lock of your hair, and we will mail a 22 inch short stem fine human hair switch to match. If you find it a big bargain remit $2 in ten days, or sell 3 and GET YOUR SWITCH FREE. Extra shades a little more. Inclose 5c postage.

Free beauty book showing latest style of hair dressing—also high grade switches, pompadours, wavs, puffs, etc. Women wanted to sell our hair goods. ANNA AYERS,
Dept. B83 22 Quincy Street, Chicago

WANTED—MEN

BRAKEMEN, FIREMEN, ELECTRIC MOTORMEN, CONDUCTORS, TRAIN PORTERS

Hundreds put to work. $65 to $150 per month. 500 more wanted. Experience unnecessary. Application blank and map of new lines free. Give age and position wanted. Enclose stamp.

I. Railway C. I., No. 16, Indianapolis, Ind.

Nulite Casoline Table Lamp

A complete Light Plant weighing 7 lbs. Portable, absolutely safe, 300 c. p. brilliant light ½ cent per hour. Saves 50% of your light bill.

AGENTS—Write for Special Offer on complete line of gasoline lights and systems. Over 200 different styles. Highest Quality. Lowest Prices. Exclusive territory for capable town, county and traveling salesmen. 72 page illustrated catalog free. Write today.

NATIONAL STAMPING & ELECTRIC WORKS
4138, Clinton St., Chicago, U. S. A.

Amazing Profits

MADE IN MUSHROOMS

Anybody can make big money raising mushrooms entire year in cellars, sheds, barns, boxes, etc., in spare time. I tell you where to sell them. Write today for Free Illus. Instruction Booklet.

HIRAM BARTON
326 West 48th St., New York

Young People's Societies

The Exemplary Life*

THIS title is well taken. We are to remember that we, as Christians, are setting an example. Many of us think that it is modest to say, both to ourselves and others, "I am of so little consequence that I have no influence." There was never a more mistaken idea.

Not long ago, an elderly woman visited, after years of absence, a town where she had spent many summers in her youth. There she met an old neighbor of about her own age.

"Do you remember that green satin riding-habit that you used to wear?" asked the old neighbor.

"Green satin! Yes; wasn't it absurd!" laughed the visitor. "I was a terribly spoiled child, and in some way I conceived the idea that green satin was a suitable material for a riding-habit. The family all laughed, but I was allowed to have it."

"In those days," the neighbor confided to her friend, "I tried to have everything exactly like yours: I thought that glistening green riding-habit, swinging along so heavily with its weighted border, the most beautiful object in the universe. Nothing would do but I must have one, too. We could ill afford it, and the household was uptorn for weeks on account of it, but I got it in the end."

Later, in telling others this little story, the one who set this foolish example said, "Never for an instant did the thought enter my mind that anybody would be influenced by my example. I was in a little country place. It pleased my fancy to wear any silly thing that occurred to me. The thought that I had caused another to make such a spectacle of herself and to spend money which could be ill afforded, really depressed me for days, years past though the offense lay."

You never know who is watching you, and who may be measuring all religion by your conduct. The thought lends a dignity to our smallest action; and as we cannot explain doubtful circumstances to the general public, it is well to keep out of them so far as we can. You may go into a saloon merely for a glass of milk; but you cannot tell every observer that fact, and presently you will hear, or your friends will, that you are in the habit of "frequenting saloons." Then down goes your influence for good, and dishonor comes to your Master's cause.

This thought of ever and always representing the religion that you profess, should dominate your life, no matter what your inward state may be. Your sorrows may for a time overcome you, yet still the great banner must be upheld. You may be among strangers—unknown, lonely. All the more must you stand by your colors.

"If you have peace," says Dr. Abbott, in the Great Companion, "be glad of it. If you have no peace, go on just the same, resolved to show to the world and to your Master how loyal you can be to him."

Mr. Moody had a great sermon on Zaccheus. In it he called especial attention to Zaccheus' declaration that if he had defrauded any man he restored to him "fourfold."

"I am tired and sick," he said, "of mere sentimentalism, which does not straighten out a man's life. Nothing will give Christianity such a hold upon the world as to have God's believing people begin to act in this way. Zaccheus had probably more influence in Jericho after he had made restitution than any other man in it."

Let us ever remember that true line of the poet, "Merit lives from man to man"; and especially let us keep in mind that picture in the first Psalm of the model man who "doth meditate upon God's law both day and night."

* Topic of the Epworth League for Sunday, September 24. TEXTS: I. TIM. 4:12; PS. 15.

Missions in Africa*

AFTER Dr. Dye at Bolenge finished his service one day last spring, a chief asked him, "We have no ladder to get up to God. How shall we ever get there?" And when he had once asked the way, it was easy to show it to him.

When Dr. Dye told to his people the story of the chrysalis and the butterfly, they listened with rapt attention, and eagerly learned the lesson that he drew from it.

"Yes, it is so! God has given us lessons," commented the old chief, "but we could not know their meanings. Why did you not come sooner?"

Our great missionary movement is working none too rapidly. Let us do our best to see that no other voice from the dark regions of the earth rings out a reproach like this.

The Missionary Review tells of a Methodist church in the village of Hombo where at daybreak every morning a horn is blown and the people assemble in the king's house for a service of praise and prayer. It is a good way to begin the day, and it is a good king that opens his "palace" for such a meeting. The great obstacle in the way of evangelical effort there, as in most heathen countries, is the firm belief of the people in witchcraft, ghosts and the evil eye; but the Methodist missionaries at Angola report that this darkness is fleeing before the pure white light of Christianity.

Another formidable adversary encountered in Africa is the Moslem missionary. Within the last half-century, from nothing at all the Mohammedans have increased to a vast army. The missionaries writing from that section beg that the young men coming to Africa may be especially instructed in the tenets of Mohammedanism and in ways of meeting its arguments. Islam degrades womanhood, knows nothing of a truly broad, free education, and promises merely a sensual heaven. The lands in which it flourishes are the most backward of all in which any civilization whatever has taken root. We must not yield to it the vast continent of Africa.

Many of you have read of the celebration last July to commemorate the seventy-fifth year of the coming of American Board missionaries to the Zulus. For four days on that occasion the various missionaries met together. On the following Sunday every city church had a "missionary day," closing with an evening mass-meeting. Many other gatherings, some of the nature of industrial exhibits, were held also. The last was a public meeting presided over by Lord Gladstone, the Governor-General. It was a great time for Zululand.

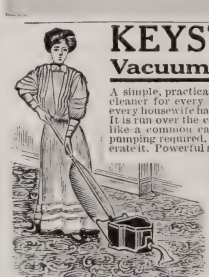
Bishop Walmsley sends most interesting accounts of the work in Sierra Leone. Think of conducting a service in three languages! Yet that is what has to be done when members of three different tribes are present at a meeting, as often happens in this quarter of the world. The Bishop pleads for more missionaries—more teachers—more doctors. The people need books and pamphlets. For these, accomplished linguists are required. Who will answer this urgent call?

The Africans themselves are helping wonderfully. On the Gold Coast there is a certain King Njoya, whom Missionary Schwartz of the Basle Society calls "the most influential missionary in all the interior." This converted king is building a great school for 500 pupils. He is not only constructing the house, but he teaches the school himself, "relates and dictates Bible stories to the children, composes Christian hymns and conducts their singing."

* Christian Endeavor Topic for Sunday, September 24. TEXT: Acts 8: 26-40.

See that the boy delivers Kingsford's. You ordered Kingsford's. What did you get—Kingsford's or an inferior substitute for which you pay the same price as for Kingsford's quality?

KINGSFORD'S CORN STARCH



There is all the difference in the world in corn starches, although the price and the size of the package may be the same.

There is no corn starch "the same as Kingsford's" or "as good as Kingsford's." Kingsford's has been supreme for sixty years. Owing to its extreme delicacy and purity Kingsford's takes the full flavor of every kind of seasoning.

Ordinary corn starches are made in a few days. It takes as many weeks to produce Kingsford's. Good cooks all over the country know the difference and they insist on the reliable Kingsford's package.

Send for Cook Book O-168 of the best recipes you ever tried. It's free—just send your name on a post card.

T. KINGSFORD & SON
National Starch Co., Suc'rs
Oswego, N. Y

KEYSTONE
Vacuum Cleaner

A simple, practical, low-priced hand cleaner for every home. Just what every housewife has been looking for. It is run over the carpet or floor just like a common carpet sweeper. No pumping required. One person can operate it. Powerful suction takes up all the dust. It makes housecleaning a delight. Fully guaranteed, and if not satisfied after ten days' trial, money will be refunded. We have a money-making proposition to AGENTS. Write to-day and learn all about the Keystone Vacuum Cleaner. Illustrated Catalogue FREE. Address:
Keystone Manufacturing Co., Box 11, Clearfield, Pa.

Send Your Old Carpet We Will Make New Rugs

Beautiful designs to your taste—Plain, Fancy, Oriental—fit for any parlor. Guaranteed to wear ten years.

Rugs, 75c and Up

Ours is the largest factory of its kind in America. Established 37 years. Originators of OLSON FLUFF RUG. (Grand Prizes at 3 World's Fairs.)

We Pay Freight

Old carpets are worth money; don't throw yours away.

FREE Write today for beautiful book of designs in colors, prices and full information.

OLSON RUG CO.,
Dept. 7, 40 Laflin St., Chicago

TYPEWRITERS ALL MAKES VISIBLE WRITERS
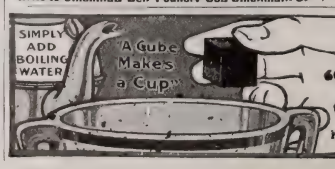
or otherwise

L. C. SMITHS, OLIVERS, UNDERWOODS, Etc.
¼ to ½ M'F'RS PRICES
Shipped ANYWHERE for Free Trial, or RENTED allowing Rent to APPLY
PRICES $15.00 UP
First Class Machines Fresh from the M'f'rs—Write for Illustrated Catalog 71
Typewriter Emporium, (EST. 1892) 92-94 LAKE ST., CHICAGO



THE "BEST" LIGHT

Gives 500 candle power. Casts no shadow. Costs 2 cents per week. Makes and burns its own gas. Over 200 styles. Every lamp warranted. No dirt. No odor. No grease. Agents wanted. Write for catalog, now.
THE BEST LIGHT CO.
3-70 E. 5th St., Canton, O.

BLYMYER CHURCH BELLS.
UNLIKE OTHER BELLS SWEETER, MORE DURABLE, LOWER PRICE. OUR FREE CATALOGUE TELLS WHY.
Write to Cincinnati Bell Foundry Co., Cincinnati, O.

ZOBO THE MUSICAL WONDER.
YOU CAN PLAY IT Without Learning.
Sing into the mouthpiece. Zobo does the rest. For Home, Church and Sunday School Entertainments. Full information FREE on request.
STRAUSS MFG. CO., 355 Broadway, Dept. 19, New York

Send for FREE SAMPLES and try the quick and easy way to make delicious bouillon. Box of 12 Cubes, 35c by mail, if dealer can't supply. Also in tins of 50 and 100 Cubes.

"STEERO" Bouillon Cubes
Reg. U. S. Pat. Off.
Distributed & Guaranteed by Schieffelin & Co.
Made by American Kitchen Products Co. New York 146 William St., N. Y.
Under Food Law, Serial No.

PHILIPSBORN'S

164-page Fashion Book

is ready to be mailed to you.

This most wonderful style book is America's recognized authority on fashion. Its magnificent display of the newest and smartest Fall and Winter models is sure to be of the greatest interest to all womankind. The prestige and reputation of the name of Philipsborn makes this book the most sought for and most welcome publication of its kind.

Sufficient books have been reserved to supply every reader of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD with her copy, but you cannot get yours unless you write for it. We know that you want this splendid book, that you will be keenly interested in its style offerings as it will enable you to dress more stylishly, more up-to-date, own more clothes for less money and keep abreast with the smartest dressers in the world.

No. 3491 Beautiful Taffeta Silk Waist, $1.98. A fitting example of the thousands of wonderful values in our catalogue. The new military effects and fashionable French Cuffs are also pictured fruit. Stylish high collar with three-quarter length kimono sleeve. Cuff with mock buttons to harmonize with trimmings in front. Fully tucked with black and white or black and white satin. Well made. Colors: black or blue. Sizes 32 to 44. Price only ... $1.98 25c. additional for mailing.

Send a postal, with your name and address, requesting that we mail you book No 89. Also state whether we shall send you samples.

PHILIPSBORN
The Outer Garment House
212-216 W. ADAMS ST. CHICAGO

You Can Weigh What You Should Weigh

You can, I know it, because I have reduced 25,000 women and have built up as many more — scientifically, naturally, without drugs, in the privacy of their own rooms; I can build up your vitality—at the same time I strengthen your heart action; can teach you how to breathe, to stand, walk and correct such ailments as nervousness, torpid liver, constipation, indigestion, etc.

One pupil writes: I weigh 83 pounds less, and I have gained wonderfully in strength." Another says: "Last May I weighed 106 pounds, this May I weigh 126, and oh! I feel SO WELL."

Write to-day for my free booklet.

SUSANNA COCROFT, Dept. 18-Q-R, 624 Michigan Boul., Chicago
Author of "Health in Slimness" "Self-Suggestion," etc.

Parcels Post Merchandise Co.

A Positive Money Saving System devised to save you money on things used in every home, which we can deliver by Parcels Post. Free Delivery. You save on every purchase. Satisfaction guaranteed. Let us explain and send you our Catalog of Women's and Children's Apparel, Handkerchiefs, Neckwear, Hosiery, Swiss Embroideries by the yard, etc.

$1

SPECIAL OFFER!

We will present you with a set of beautiful Swiss Embroidered Initial Medallions for the names of two from 2 to whom we can offer our service. Write to-day.

PARCELS POST M'D'SE CO.
300 Fourth Avenue, New York City

This Shirting Madras Flannel effect Waist, all colors ..... $1 Post Paid

THE HERO OF FAITH*

Sunaay School Lesson by Dr. and Mrs. Wilbur F. Crafts

IT IS the most familiar story in the Bible. It entranced us in childhood, and we asked to have it told to us oftener than any other story. It does not lose its wonder and charm as we grow older. We will give the story in outline to refresh memory.

Daniel as a youth was taken from Jerusalem to Babylon a captive, with thousands of other Jews, in B.C. 604. Great wisdom was given him by God, even from his youth. He so excelled all other wise men that the highest and choicest cabinet positions were awarded him by the successive kings, Nebuchadnezzar, Belshazzar and Darius. His position at court has been compared with that of Joseph at the court of Pharaoh. The prestige awarded Daniel angered the Babylonians, and they made a plot to destroy him. They made a tool of King Darius by proposing to him that he should proclaim himself a god for thirty days, commanding that all men should pray to him, and to him only, during that time, and that those who refused to do it should be cast into the den of lions. They were fully persuaded that Daniel would pray only to his God.

Daniel was true, and with open windows, while spies were lurking, he prayed to the true and living God as he had done aforetime. The spies reported Daniel's case to the king. The king recognized the plot, but was unable to change his law, and so commanded that Daniel should be cast into the den of lions. Before sealing the den, the king with deep feeling and tenderness spoke to Daniel, saying, "Thy God, whom thou servest continually, he will deliver thee."

Daniel was between eighty and ninety years of age at that time.

Anxiety for Daniel and remorse for his treatment of him murdered the sleep of King Darius, and he spent the night in wakefulness. He arose very early in the morning, and went in haste to the den of lions.

In a cry of anguish the king called out: "Daniel, O Daniel, servant of the living God, is thy God, whom thou servest continually, able to deliver thee from the lions?"

"O king, live forever. My God hath shut the lions' mouths, and they have not hurt me."

Then the king commanded that Daniel should be taken up out of the den. The king also commanded that those who had plotted against Daniel, and their families too, should be thrown into the den of lions. Then the lions' mouths were opened, and they at once destroyed the plotters. Daniel was restored to royal favor, and his God received honor throughout the Persian Empire by the decree of King Darius.

Daniel outlived King Darius, and was an honored counselor to his successor, King Cyrus.

How the Story Helps Us

1. It interests us in God's animals; his control over them and their obedience to him should make us more sympathetic with them.

2. It is a warning to us to keep envy and jealousy out of our hearts, as they are the handmaids of intrigue and murder, shown by the action of the princes and presidents who conspired against Daniel in the high position he had been awarded by the king as first president.

3. It illustrates the folly and wickedness of self-conceit, as in the case of Darius the king.

4. It shows the influence of evil associates and unwise counselors.

5. It shows how brave and true a man a statesman may be, as shown by Daniel.

6. It places before us an example of a ripe and useful old age, for Daniel was probably eighty years old at the time he was given the first place in the king's cabinet.

7. It teaches us how to pray: confidently, boldly, continually.

8. It encourages our faith in God.

9. It emphasizes the virtue of patience under trial.

10. It shows that it is possible to win those who are opposed to God, as King Darius, the aforetime worshiper of the sun, sent forth a proclamation through his realm that "the God of Daniel is the living God and steadfast forever."

11. It illustrates the retributive force of evil doing, for those who had plotted against Daniel, themselves perished in the lion's den.

12. It proves true the promise of God: "Because he hath set his love upon me, therefore will I deliver him; . . . with long life will I satisfy him, and show him my salvation." Ps. 91: 14, 16.

A Voice from the Sea

On the far reef the breakers
Recoil in shattered foam,
Yet still the sea behind them
Urges its forces home;
Its chant of triumph surges
Through all the thunderous din—
The wave may break in failure,
But the tide is sure to win.

O mighty sea! thy message
In clanging spray is cast;
Within God's plan of progress
It matters not at last
How wide the shores of evil,
How strong the reefs of sin—
The waves may be defeated,
But the tide is sure to win.

—Priscilla Leonard in the Outlook.

And so we will encourage ourselves in God when we find ourselves surrounded by adverse circumstances, which we can not change. We will endure as seeing him who is invisible (Heb. 11: 27). He is as the tide—sure to win.

Dens of lions are not in vogue in our land for capital punishment, but there are other places about as formidable, where mental and spiritual fibre are put to the test. One such place is described in the following story:

"I recently returned to my boyhood neighborhood. Full of gratitude, I rolled four decades from my shoulders, and stood up therein to praise the memory of a good man whose advice I accepted and whose dictum I obeyed with undeniable advantage to myself and others. In the pulpit of the church to which he belonged I stood and called his name, remembered by few—for he died years ago. I told the folk that he was a boss in a factory where I toiled as a boy—how he showed interest in his underlings and stirred them to join a society called the Cadets of Temperance. I recited the dim scene, where in the lodge room I took the vow of total abstinence with uplifted hand in solemn mood, how I signed the roster, drank the pledge of fealty in cold water, sang the ode, received the password and went out girded for the fray against King Alcohol. As I walked home alone that summer night, I paused at a stile to repeat my obligation, and renew my youthful resolve to abstain from all intoxicants. Half a lifetime after, in a State asylum for feeble-minded children, when I heard the matron say that three-fourths of the imbecile inmates were the progeny of drunken parents, I dug up my oath against rum, and deep in my soul registered once more my undying hatred of this fell destroyer.

"A short time after my adolescent

Continued on next page

*The International Sunday School Lesson for September 24, 1911. Daniel in the Lions' Den. Dan. 6. GOLDEN TEXT: "The angel of the Lord encampeth round about them that fear him, and delivereth them." Ps. 34: 7.

Your Name .....
P. O. Address .....
State .....

Cut out this Coupon and mail it today to Simpson Crawford Co., N.Y.

One FREE Copy will be sent to every reader of this magazine. Fill out this coupon, or if you prefer, send your name and address on postal to Dept. H.

NOTICE: Only a limited number are to be had—so we will put aside one copy (for a little while) for each reader of this magazine. It behooves you to write, and write promptly for your copy.

New York's Leading Fashion Catalogue For Fall and Winter 1911-12

PROTECT YOURSELF
Write for FREE Copy To-day

THIS 200-Page Book is the Handsomest and most Complete and Authoritative Publication on Wearing Apparel of every description for Women, Misses, Young Men, Girls, Boys and Infants.

No matter how much or how little you can afford to expend on your own and your family's wardrobe, you will be surprised at the great number of Money-Saving Opportunities this catalogue offers you.

—YOU PAY NOTHING EXTRA—

For Postage or Express. We prepay these Charges to your home and Guarantee Satisfaction or Refund Your Money.

— YOU TAKE NO RISK —

Simpson Crawford Co.
SIXTH AV. 19th TO 20th STREET. NEW YORK.
Address DEPT. H

Here's the Ostermoor Smile.

After a night of sleep on an

OSTERMOOR MATTRESS $15.

the old and young awake with a smile—fully rested and refreshed—ready for the work or play of the next day.

In our book you will find proof of actual service—five to fifty years in the best homes.

Write for 144-Page Book with Samples of Ticking FREE

Don't allow yourself to even think of any other mattress until you read this book. Postal brings it.

Avoid "just-as-good" imitations. Our trade-mark is your guarantee. When necessary we ship mattress 6 ft. 3 in. long by 4 ft. 6 in. wide, weighing 45 lbs., express prepaid, on 30 nights' free trial, same day we get your order. Money back if you want it.

Built—Not Stuffed

Ostermoor & Co.
115 Elizabeth St.
New York

Canadian Agency: Alaska Feather & Down Co., Ltd., Montreal.

This Beautiful Seal Plush Coat direct to you

$22.48

All charges prepaid

This is a wonderfully rich and luxurious coat that has every appearance of costly sealskin. Read this description:

No. 1602—Seal Plush Coat, 54 inches long; broad shawl collar and cuffs; lined with black or pearl gray guaranteed satin, inside pocket to match; two handsome silk cord frogs with seal plush buttons, also loop and frog to fasten coat at throat. The coat is not skimped anywhere, and meets full in front.

A coat like this in natural fur would cost a fortune. These textile reproductions of natural furs have been brought to a wonderful perfection. They give you exactly the warmth, fashion and luxury of costly furs at a modest price. They wear longer than natural furs, because they do not shed hairs. They are beyond comparison with the cheap imitations that have followed the success of Texfur Garments.

In addition to this lustrous seal plush, we make coats in Caracal, Bokhara Lamb, Persian Lamb, Baikan Lamb, Nutria and Velour du Nord. These are made up in a great variety of handsome styles from imported models and are sold at prices up to $49.40. We sell direct to wearer only, saving you all dealers' profits. This enables us to give better values for your money than you have ever seen.

Send No Money

We shall be glad to send you the coat described above or any other of our many styles C. O. D. on approval, giving you the opportunity to see and try on the coat before you pay a cent. We do this because we know our coats are unrivalled in style and quality.

When you see them you'll know at once that they are far greater value for the money than any you can buy in stores.

Write today for handsome Fashion Book L, showing all latest styles. We will also send free samples of any or all the beautiful furs described in our Fashion Book.

TEXFUR GARMENT CO.
530 Broadway, N. Y.

PATENTS SECURED OR FEE RETURNED.
Free report as to Patentability. Illustrated Guide Book, and List of Inventions Wanted, sent free.
VICTOR J. EVANS & CO., Washington, D. C.

A LADY LECTURER

Feeds Nerves and Brains Scientifically.

A lady lecturer writes from Philadelphia concerning the use of right food and how she is enabled to withstand the strain and wear and tear of her arduous occupation. She says:

"Through improper food, imperfectly digested, my health was completely wrecked, and I attribute my recovery entirely to the regular use of Grape-Nuts food. It has, I assure you, proved an inestimable boon to me.

"Almost immediately after beginning the use of Grape-Nuts I found a gratifying change in my condition. The terrible weakness that formerly prostrated me after a few hours of work, was perceptibly lessened and is now only a memory—it never returns.

"Ten days after beginning on Grape-Nuts I experienced a wonderful increase in mental vigor and physical energy, and continued use has entirely freed me from the miserable insomnia and nervousness from which I used to suffer so much.

"I find Grape-Nuts very palatable and would not be without the crisp, delicious food for even a day on any consideration. Indeed, I always carry it with me on my lecture tours."

Read the little book, "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs. "There's a reason."

Ever read the above letter? A new one appears from time to time. They are genuine, true, and full of human interest.

300 Years and the Bible

Continued from page 908

really successful address which I have delivered."

But even more than being a permanent classic for English, the Bible has become increasingly the indispensable book for life. Its message is directed toward conduct, which Matthew Arnold claims composes three-fourths of life. It has to do not simply with a far-away heaven, but its messages are directed toward the practice of heavenly virtues to-day. No book, not even the Bible, could live three hundred years for its literary excellence alone. It is because the Bible has added to its knowledge power, that we celebrate its tercentenary with such world-wide gratitude.

Indeed, there is hardly any phase of successful life interest which the Bible does not affect. Its reading today, as in other days, brings the gift of peace in the midst of many duties. "In this Book," says the aged grandmother in Tennyson's poem—"In this Book, little Annie, the message is one of peace." If one wishes to be reverent for a moment, let him think of the myriad of souls who have brought order out of chaos in their lives through the reading of the Word of God. Many a life in this age needs to be stopped rather than to be incited. As Wordsworth says:

The world is too much with us, late and soon,
Getting and spending, we lay waste our powers.
Little we see in Nature that is ours:
We have given our hearts away, a sordid boon!

The Bible has been universally associated with the prayer-life of the world. In essence it is the Word of God to man in answer to man's cry to God. It is the story of the prayer-life of the great pioneers of civilization. In its pages highest aspirations and deepest conflicts of the human heart are constantly reflected. The Bible restores men's souls in prayer. It gives glimpses of the prayer life of Jesus, who went out from being alone with God to his largest considerations and activity, his soul saturated with power and insight.

The Bible has also become immortal through its particular practicality. It helps men to help themselves. It teaches man his ability to do the thing he ought to do when it ought to be done, regardless of his feeling about it or of the consequences. The Bible is relating itself in this age to the cause of good citizenship through its direct inducement of self-control and high considerations of character. The Bible is a distinct message to such present-day questions as poverty, immigration, crime, economic and international problems, and to the leadership of religion; but its message to these questions is always through its message to the individual. God speaks through his Word, not to corporations, but to single men; not to families, but to members of the family—to the father, to the mother, to the brother or to the sister; not to that vague and many-sided thing which we know as society, but to every individual who by his minutest act is helping to weave the fabric of our modern life. The word of the Psalmist is still the word of man to Jehovah in this tercentenary year of the Bible:

Search me, O God, and know my heart: try me, and know my thoughts:
And see if there be any wicked way in me, and lead me in the way everlasting.

Thus with increasing power the Bible has breathed its message through the centuries, and the declaration of the King James revisers in 1611 was probably never more universally accepted than in this year of anniversary:

"If we be ignorant, the Scriptures will instruct us; if out of the way, they will bring us home; if out of order, they will reform us; if in heaviness, comfort us; if dull, quicken us; if cold, inflame us. Tolle, lege; tolle, lege!" CLAYTON SEDGWICK COOPER.

Sunday School Lesson

Continued from preceding page

initiation, I was sternly tested on this matter. I was apprenticed to the bricklayers' trade. My employer knew his business well, was a skilful craftsman, but much given to drink, as were all of his employees. At noon of my first day, he bade me pour the water from the pail, go to a nearby tavern, and get it filled with ale for the dinner. I brought it as ordered, took my place at the end of the line, seated like the rest in the shadow of the wall, and saw the bucket with the tin cup therein coming slowly toward me. I trembled inwardly as I saw that every bricklayer, every hod-carrier, every mortar-mixer, every apprentice, drank the beer. From my master down, each took a share, and I realized that I, a poor, weak lad, on my first day in a new crew, must offend the whole gang, censure their customs, stand their sneers, endure their scoffs, or surrender my principles.

"When the pail reached me, I whispered a refusal to the one who passed it, but the 'gaffer,' thinking I was merely timid in new company, cried out in hearty old-country style: 'Take it, Robert; don't be shy. I pay for it; you are one of us; have your sip of it.'

"I said with faltering voice, while all eyes turned on me: 'Excuse me, Mr. George, I never drank liquor, and cannot begin now.' He laughed uproariously, as did the others, and shouted: 'Ho, ho, lad, you'll never be a bricklayer till you learn to drink.' I put the untouched meal in my basket, arose slowly, shaking like an aspen tree, and, walking down the row of scornful men, I paused before the leader, and said: 'Mr. George, if that is true, I will go home and tell my father I am discharged; for drink liquor I will not, now or never; I will not!' I think I had mysterious help that day, unseen of all. To my amazement the boss leaped up and said, 'God bless you, boy, stand fast and you will be a man some day.' Then to the wage-earners he said: 'If any man of you ever asks him to drink, you will suffer for it.'"

There are "dens" similar to this in every part of our land, and of other sorts, where young men and women, and older ones too, are called upon to surrender their principles, their purity and their honesty. We repeat the familiar phrase as a helpful watchword: "Dare to be a Daniel."

A Hint for Teachers of Children

By all means have a picture to show while telling this story, and be sure that it is a good picture, and not such a one as is described in the following incident:

"A little boy, six years old, in the house where I was boarding, said to me: 'Mr. Mitchell, our Bible down in the parlor on the centre table does not tell the truth.' 'I wouldn't talk that way, Albert,' I said; 'the Bible always tells the truth.' 'Yes, but I mean its pictures do not tell the truth.' 'What is the matter with the pictures?' 'Well, there is a picture down there of Daniel in the lions' den, and Daniel stands with a lion on each side of him, and his hand on their heads, and their tongues are lolling out.' 'Well,' I said, 'what is the matter with that?' He replied: 'That ain't so, for the Bible says God sealed the mouths of the lions.'"—Charles Bayard Mitchell.

$33 From Chicago to California

VIA

Chicago & North Western

Union Pacific

Salt Lake Route

Sept. 15th—Oct. 15th, 1911

No matter what you may want to raise—cattle, wheat, fruit or chickens—California is the place. The people out there now can't raise enough to supply the demand. Let us tell you about the orange and lemon groves, the fruit lands, the wheat fields, the egg farms and the cattle lands.

On September 16th, 17th, 18th and October 13th, 14th, 15th, 16th, the Union Pacific will run Colonist Trains de Luxe clear through to San Francisco. Solid through tourist sleeping car trains, with diner (serving full meals for as low as 50 cents), and a lounging car in which will be given, three times daily, Victrola Concerts. This is your opportunity to go for little money and in luxury. Write

UNION PACIFIC OVERLAND

W. G. NEIMYER, Gen. Agt.,
Union Pacific Railroad Co.
72 W. Jackson Blvd., Chicago

17 Room 112

LASTING MEMORIALS

Over $90,000 worth of White Bronze memorials sold to readers of the CHRISTIAN HERALD. It is as enduring as the pyramids. Marble and granite get moss-grown, chip, crumble and decay. White Bronze is more artistic and less expensive. Write for FREE illustrations and prices. State approximate cost desired. Distance no obstacle; we deliver anywhere.

Good Agents Wanted—Liberal Pay.

THE MONUMENTAL BRONZE CO.
355-E Howard Ave., Bridgeport, Conn.

MANAGER wanted every city and county, handle good paying buisness, legitimate, new, exclusive control; no insurance or book canvassing. Address O. Halstead, 43 W. 34th St., New York.

AGENTS PORTRAITS, 35c. FRAMES, 15c. Sheet Pictures, 1c. Stereoscopes, 25c. Views, 1c. 30 days' credit. Samples and catalog free. Consolidated Portrait Co., Dept. 2496, 1027 W. Adams St., Chicago

BE AN ILLUSTRATOR—Learn to draw. We will teach you by mail how to draw for magazines and newspapers. Send for Catalog. School of Illustration, 14 Page Bldg., Chicago, Ill.

POST CARDS

10 Hallowe'en . 10c | 10 General Subjects. 10c
10 Thanksgiving, 10c | 10 Birthday . . . 10c
Three packages for 25c. 100 cards, 80c
Special Assortment Birthday or Remembrance Cards, 100 for 60c.
MADISON ART COMPANY, MADISON, CONN.

MUSIC TAUGHT FREE

HOME INSTRUCTION

We want to advertise and introduce our home study music lessons into all parts of America, and will give you absolutely free instruction if you will simply recommend the INTERNATIONAL INSTITUTE to your friends after you learn to play. We successfully teach Piano, Organ, Violin, Mandolin, Guitar, Cornet, Banjo, Cello and Sight Singing. You may not know one note from another yet, by our wonderfully simple and thorough method, you can soon learn to play. If you are an advanced player you will receive special instruction. Our lessons are sent weekly. They are so simple and easy that they are recommended to any person or little child who can read English. Photographs and drawings make everything plain. If you accept our free tuition offer you will be asked to pay only a very small amount (averaging 14 cents a week) to cover postage and necessary sheet music. We have successfully taught others and we can successfully teach you. Write to-day for our Free booklet, which explains everything. It will convince you and cost you nothing. INTERNATIONAL INSTITUTE OF MUSIC, 98 Fifth Ave., Dept. 156 E, New York

They die outdoors!

No mixing
No Spreading—
No Muss—
No Trouble—
Just crumble up a Rat Bis-kit

and the house Rats will seek it out in the outdoors. Easiest quickest cleanest way. Large size 25c retail size. Ex. all drug stores or direct prepaid. The Rat Biscuit Co. 1 N. Limestone St., Springfield, O.

"SAVE-THE-HORSE" SOUND
Legal Contract
SPAVIN REMEDY

$5. a bottle, with binding contract to refund money. Send for COPY, BOOKLET and LETTERS from Bankers, Farmers and Business men on every kind of case. Permanently Cures Bone and Bog Spavin, Thoroughpin, Ringbone (except low), Curb, Splint, Capped Hock, Windpuff, Shoe Boil, Injured Tendons and all Lameness. No scar or loss of hair. Horse works as usual. Dealers or Express prepaid. Troy Chemical Co., 39 Commercial Ave., Binghamton, N. Y.

PATENTS That Protect and Pay
Advice and Books FREE.
Rates Reasonable. Highest References. Best Services.
WATSON E. COLEMAN, Patent Lawyer, WASHINGTON, D. C.

CAPITAL AND RESOURCES—$1,750,000.
BEAUTIFY YOUR HOME WITH THE ARTISTIC REED & SONS PIANO

Save $128 to $222 on Your Piano

You want the best piano in your home—and you want to pay only the manufacturer's price for it. The Reed & Sons Piano has a world-wide name. It is the sweetest-toned piano, handsomely designed, and is constructed to uphold a hard-earned reputation, gained during sixty-nine years. Thousands of owners praise it. At the World's Columbian Exposition it won the highest award medal.

Send No Money

This piano was formerly sold through dealers, agents and jobbers. Their profits have been wiped out. It is now sold direct to the buyer and the customer receives the savings that would otherwise go to the middleman. You save from $128 to $222, by buying a Reed & Sons Piano. Better still, a purchase plan has been arranged that makes it easy for you to pay. No money down.

30 Days Free Trial in Your Home and we will pay the freight on any piano you may select.

This remarkable offer will allow your family and friends to enjoy the exquisite tonal qualities and to note the attractiveness of the design and finish—and inspect the easy action. When you are absolutely satisfied, you can pay by the month, three months, or twice a year. We want you to have the greatest enjoyment of owning so splendid an instrument. If we cannot satisfy you with the piano we will pay the freight for its return. This is the fairest offer ever made. It means 30 days' Approval Test, besides 30 days' Free Trial and three years' time to pay if satisfied. We give a 25 year guarantee bond with every Piano.

No Collectors—No Interest to Pay

Our direct to the home manufacturer's wholesale prices are so low—that you can have a celebrated Reed & Sons Piano for life-long use, at a price no higher than that of an inferior, cheap piano, sold by some dealers and agents, and still obtain the highest artistic quality. The Reed & Sons Piano will be a source of pride to you all your life. Just compare the piano, illustrated above, with the Piano your dealer or agent would charge you from $379 to $500 for, and we know that you will readily decide in favor of the artistic Reed & Sons Piano.

Big Book Sent You Free

You can save money by clipping this coupon right now. It will secure for you our special proposition and prices, all in the handsomest color—illustrated catalog, sent free. We guarantee that we can offer you a better proposition than any other piano concern in the world. A two-cent stamp will save for you the dealer's profit. Fill out the coupon, now

REED & SONS PIANO MFG. CO.
Dept. 36, Cor. Jackson Blvd. & Wabash Ave. Chicago, Ill.
Send me your big illustrated book Free.
Name .....
Street ..... R. F. D. .....
Town ..... County ..... State .....
Largest Factory to Home Mnfrs. in the World.

Our Mail-Bag

Continued from page 894

Mrs. J. C., Dover, Fla. When and where did Jesus wash the disciples' feet?

It was during or immediately after the Paschal supper in the "upper room" in Jerusalem, to prepare which Jesus had sent two of his disciples with instructions (see Luke 22: 7-13). He washed their feet to rebuke mutual rivalry and to teach condescension to one another by his own example (see John 13: 5).

Mrs. J. S. H., Neillsville, Wis. Please explain Ex. 33: 20.

It means that mortals could not gaze upon the unveiled effulgence of the Divine glory, a full disclosure of which is incompatible with humanity's present condition, and which none but spirits could withstand.

F. M., Oak Park, Ill. Please explain to me why John Baptist sent friends to ask Jesus if he were the One to come.

It is difficult to interpret this passage, except as a message of impatience and desperation, rather than doubt. Certainly, John had never displayed doubt to Jesus' Messiahship. It must have seemed hard to him to be permitted to lie in prison, useless to the cause and hearing little of its progress, after having been specially chosen to announce Christ to the people. It may even have occurred to him that Jesus could procure his liberation if he chose. Therefore, to set his mind at rest, in a moment of weakness he sent the impatient message.

G. W. W., Judkins, Texas. Please explain Mal. 4: 5. Has Elijah come, or do we still look for him?

To the Jews, Moses represented the law; Elijah, the prophets; John Baptist, though like Elijah in spirit was not the literal Elijah (see Luke 1: 16, 17 and John 1: 21). There is yet another consummating event to take place in connection with Jesus' second coming. Elijah (the Restorer) shall first come (Acts 3: 21) as was typified at the transfiguration (Matt. 17: 3, 11).

H. C. Y., Phœnix, Ariz. Kindly explain what is meant when you speak of a "form of proof of the life beyond" on page 616 in your June 14th number in the article on "John Clifford, Optimist."

Dr. John Clifford, Sir Oliver Lodge, Mr. Stead and many others, are earnest investigators into psychical phenomena. Believing absolutely in immortality, they cherish the hope that it may yet be demonstrated in a palpable, visible, material way to convince the world of the reality of the future life. To the Christian the words of Christ, added to the revelations of Scripture and the witness of his own Spirit, are sufficient.

M. O. A., Helena, Mont. Was the second son of David (Chileab) (II. Sam. 3: 3) and Daniel, the second son of David (I. Chron. 3: 1), the same Daniel who was carried to Babylon?

The names, Chileab and Daniel, are equivalents—a sort of two-fold name. The passages in II. Samuel and I. Chronicles refer to the same person. Daniel the prophet, who was taken to Babylon, was an altogether different person.

Miscellaneous

L. S., Cowesett, R. I. We know nothing of the existence of any such flag, and believe that none has yet been decided upon.

M. R. B., Macksville, Kan. Any reader may know the attitude of this paper toward the liquor traffic by studying its pages.

M. S. M., Weehawken, N. J. Yes: Sabbath observance is neglected in many American cities. Sunday newspapers, the automobile, concerts and various open-air attractions have contributed to this condition.

Y. M., Lancaster, Pa. The reply to your question on the taking of a monthly stock estimate is too long for insertion here. We would recommend the purchase of a good work on business system.

Replying to many who have asked the value of old Bibles, we regret that we are unable to give any satisfactory answer. This is something which can be estimated only by a professional bibliophile or dealer on a close examination of the volume.

Friend, Oneonta, N. Y. Your minister was right, in the main. Our national progress has not been wholly God-ward and heavenward; there are public evils which the churches have tolerated when they should have opposed them and their indifferent attitude toward the saloon leaves them open to deserved criticism.

D. H. R., Wyandotte, Mich. Ministerial vacations, as we know them, are of comparatively recent origin; but it is quite probable that they have had their equivalent in ancient times. Ministers, like other people, need rest and recuperation. It is safe to assert that even in early Gospel times they were spiritual "retrents," where the evangelists would retire to some quiet place for a season of rest and contemplation.

Prof. Anderson's Supper

The Bedtime Meal in Countless Homes Tonight

When Prof. Anderson invented Puffed Wheat and Puffed Rice, he gave you, for one thing, the best foods ever served in milk.

You serve them at breakfast with sugar and cream. Or you mix them with fruit. At dinner the puffed grains are crisps for the soup. Or a nut-like garnish when you serve ice-cream.

But the favorite way with children is to serve like crackers in a bowl of milk.

Done by Furnace Heat

These are whole-grain foods—not merely the flour. That adds a great deal to their food value.

In bronze-steel guns they are revolved for an hour in a heat of 550 degrees. Think of that. Boiling heat is 212 degrees.

It is that fierce heat which gives to these grains their enticing nut-like taste. It crisps them through and through. And it makes them twice as digestible as cereals baked or boiled.

The moisture in the grain turns to superheated steam. When the guns are unsealed each grain explodes. The millions of food granules are blasted to pieces.

The grains are puffed to eight times normal size—made four times as porous as bread. Each grain is made up of countless toast-walled cells. Imagine how those crisp, porous, nut-like grains taste when served in milk.

Puffed Wheat, 10c
Puffed Rice, 15c Except in Extreme West

Prof. Anderson's object was to make whole grains twice as digestible as ever before. As a result of this heroic process, puffed grains yield every whit of their food value. These are scientific foods.

But, with the first taste, that fact is forgotten. People eat these foods because they delight in them.

Five Meals Daily

Dr. Woods Hutchinson says that children should be given five meals every day. Food alone makes them grow.

For the extra meals give them something digestible, of maximum food value and surpassingly good. Give them whole grains of wheat or rice, made nut-like in a furnace heat, blasted to porous crispness. And serve them in milk.

During hot weather people have eaten a hundred million dishes of Puffed Wheat and Puffed Rice.

The Quaker Oats Company
Sole Makers—Chicago

(199)

Smoothing the Pathway to Health and Strength

THAT pathway sometimes looks gloomy—and long. The depressions of illness darken the way. Imperfect sleep increases the exhaustion of the nerves. Enfeebled appetite reduces resources of strength. Drugs that may have been used in a crisis leave their evil legacy in brain and blood.

The great army of physicians who prescribe Sanatogen know that it will smooth the path by steadying the steps, by nourishing the nervous system, by feeding the hungry cells of the body, by strengthening digestion and assimilation, by building up to its full, healthy height the structure that sustains individual power.

Sanatogen
THE FOOD-TONIC

is indeed, a reconstructor, working like nature herself—and with nature's own body elements—to restore that which has been taken away, to encourage the organism not by a momentary lift, but by revitalizing, by energizing—by helping to make whole again all that means yourself.

Fifteen thousand practising physicians have attested their faith in Sanatogen as a scientific food-tonic. Scores of famous men of many professions and of many nationalities enthusiastically bear witness to Sanatogen's splendid capacity to answer the call of the nerves, to fortify and rejuvenate the forces that make for perfect health and strength.

We ask you earnestly to get acquainted with Sanatogen. Investigate our claims first, if you like, and we are only too glad to have you do so. Ask your doctor about it, and in any case write at once for our book "Our Nerves of Tomorrow," the work of a physician-author, written in an absorbingly interesting style, beautifully illustrated and containing facts and information of vital interest to you. This book also contains evidence of the value of Sanatogen, which is as remarkable as it is conclusive.

Sanatogen is sold in three sizes: $1.00, $1.90, $3.60

Get Sanatogen from your druggist---if not obtainable from him, sent upon receipt of price.

THE BAUER CHEMICAL CO., EVERETT BUILDING 4th Ave., New York.

His Excellency Prof. Dr. Von Leyden
Director First Medical Clinic, Berlin University, writes:

"I have gladly and frequently prescribed Sanatogen in cases of delicate patients, in my clinical as well as my private practice, and am extremely satisfied with the results."

Prof. C. A. Ewald of Berlin University, Doctor Honoris Causa Johns Hopkins Medical School, Baltimore, writes:

"I can say that I have used Sanatogen in a great number of cases (that is, in those disturbances of metabolism which were mainly of a nervous or neurasthenic origin), and have obtained excellent results."

Late King Edward's Physician
Dr. Ernest Ott, Macclesfield:

"I have been using Sanatogen for a number of years in my practice with excellent results. These results have been notably good in the case of elderly people when it was desirable to build up the strength, to stimulate the bodily functions, and to improve the circulation of the blood."

The Late Emperor Frederick's Private Physician
Professor Tobold, M.D.:

"My experience points to the fact that patients suffering from nervous exhaustion after influenza, and who present the troublesome symptoms of neurasthenia, do, using Sanatogen, in a comparatively short time regain strength and vitality."

Prof. Thos. B. Stillman, M.S., Ph.D.
The well-known research chemist of Stevens's Institute, writes:

"The chemical union of the constituents of Sanatogen is a true one representative of the highest skill in the formation of a product containing Phosphorous in the organic phosphate condition, and so combined that digestion and assimilation of Sanatogen are rendered complete with the greatest ease."

John Burroughs
The distinguished Naturalist and author, writes:

"I am sure I have been greatly benefited by Sanatogen. My sleep is fifty per cent. better than it was one year ago, and my mind and strength are much improved."

Emerson Hough
the well-known author, writes:

"We had with us this spring as a guest a lady who was convalescent after a surgical operation and it occurred to me that she might be benefited by the use of Sanatogen. I am very glad to say that our surmise seemed well founded and that the patient steadily improved, so that she is well recovered from what bid fair to be a complete nervous breakdown."

Rev. H. N. Couden
Chaplain National House of Representatives, Washington, D.C., writes:

"Your Sanatogen is admirable. It has been taken with excellent results by a member of my family, who felt the need for a strengthening tonic. For overworked people especially Sanatogen should be a great boon."

Christian Herald

SUBSCRIPTION, $1.50 PER ANNUM
PUBLISHED 52 TIMES A YEAR

COPYRIGHT, 1911, BY THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

NEW YORK, SEPTEMBER 20, 1911

VOL. 34—NO. 38. PRICE 5 CENTS
OFFICES: BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK

Our Mail-Bag

Questions and Answers

W. M., Lexington, Ky. Where can teachers and business women find a protective lodge or order in case of illness or death? Men have them, why not women?

In several towns and cities women teachers and other special classes of women have formed protective unions, under various names; but we know of no national order of this kind.

M. R. H., Ware, Mass. In II. Kings 22 and II. Chron. 34, we have an account of the finding of the Book of the Law of the Lord. For how many years had it been lost to the people?

It was the Temple copy of the Book of the Law which had been laid beside the Ark in the most holy place (Deut. 31: 25, 26) and during the wicked reigns of Manasseh and Amon, the temple had been profaned by idols, the Ark removed from its site and placed where it had been forgotten for many years. The Jewish rabbinical writers believe that it had been safely hidden in a recess in the temple by some faithful priest. It had been hidden probably less than half a century (from B.C. 668 to 621).

N. N. R., Presque Isle, Me. Explain Rev. 5: 3. What is meant by "under the earth," and what "book" is referred to? Also (verse 5) who was the "Lion of the tribe of Judah"? And what is meant by the seven seals?

According to commentators, the roll or book referred to is presumed to be the Book of Life, or the title deed of man's inheritance, redeemed by Christ, which sets forth the successive steps by which it is to be recovered. None was found worthy to open this book or scroll but the Lamb. The seven seals imply complete closure, seven being the number that symbolized completion. The Lion of the tribe of Judah is Jesus, so-called because of his being of the branch of David, David's son and David's Lord, and, having gained the victory over the powers, sin and darkness, he is entitled to open the Book of Life. Under the earth means in hades, the place of departed spirits.

Dr. and Mrs. A. W., Youngton, Kan. What is the origin of surnames? Can any one explain the wide variety of names?

It may be stated, as a basis, that practically all names in ancient times, especially Oriental names, had a special significance. This might refer to the parents, the place of birth, or circumstances connected with that event, or it might relate to the bodily constitution of the child, its color of hair or eyes, or to some personal peculiarity. Sometimes the name represented a wish of the mother or father, a dedicatory vow, a promise, a prophecy, a term of endearment or any one of a thousand other things. Many Jewish surnames are simply the father's name slightly changed by the addition of a prefix, as in Ben-Ezra (son of Ezra). Prolific sources of both names and surnames were stature, complexion, habits, weakness, strength, employment, etc. The study of names is a very large one and many books have been written on the subject.

J. B., Waterbury, Conn. What is the attitude of the medical faculty relative to the use or discontinuance of alcohol in medical practice?

Every year increases the list of physicians who oppose its use, although many still employ it on occasion. That alcohol is a disease-breeder is conclusively shown in a recent article by Dr. Norman E. Ditman in Harper's Weekly, in which he demonstrates by statistics that within ten years the mortality from degenerative diseases has almost doubled, the chief causes being alcohol and an excessive meat diet. The present generation of Americans, he writes, are far heavier drinkers than their parents. Heart and kidney diseases increase in a ratio that is almost equivalent to the increased consumption of alcohol.

J. W. C., Roanoke, Va. Who was the King Lemuel spoken of in Prov. 31?

There can be no positive statement as to Lemuel's identity. Rabbinical writers hold it is a loving name which Solomon's mother gave him, and means "God-created" or "of God." They have a tradition that on the day the temple was dedicated he slept with the key under his pillow, and lying late was gently upbraided by his mother in the words of Prov. 31. Other authorities prefer to believe that Lemuel was some petty Arabian or Ethiopian prince.

J. McM., Georgetown, Tex. What percentage of all books published is the annual production of the Bible in all languages?

There are many great agencies constantly at work sending out the Word, and it is no exaggeration to say that the annual output far exceeds that of all the "best sellers" of any year combined In Great Britain, Continental Europe, India and the United States the Bible societies are the largest producers. In this country, the Bible is now printed (wholly or partly) in over 300 languages and dialects. When it is stated that in Europe, Canada, Australia and India there are over 7,000 Bible societies and auxiliaries all connected with the central organization (British and Foreign Bible Society), and that a single year's output of

Continued on last column

GENERAL CHARITIES FUNDS

Of The Christian Herald From June 1, '10, to May 31, '11

	RECEIPTS	DISBURSEMENTS	BALANCE
African Child Redemption Pledges	$386.00	$358.50	$27.50
African Inland Mission	3.00	3.00
Allen, R. J., Carrollton, Mo.	7.00	7.00
American Advent Mission, Nanking, China	5.00	5.00
American Bible Society	117.00	117.00
American Tract Society	53.00	53.00
Anti-Suicide League	4.00	4.00
Any Good Cause	319.45	155.00	164.45
Arabian Mission	10.00	5.00	5.00
Bach, Rev. T. J., Maracaibo, Venezuela	60.00	60.00
Bailey, Rev. Thomas A.	5.00	5.00
Bartel, H. C. and Nellie	55.00	55.00
Beals, Dr. Z. Charles, Wuhu, China	245.27	135.00	110.27
Bender, Rev. R. H.	65.00	65.00
Benn, Capt. George C.	7.00	7.00
Bethesda Leper Home, Dutch Guiana	67.00	67.00
Bostwick, Attie T., Foo Chow, China	10.00	10.00
Bowery Mission, Meserole Best, Treasurer	41,979.57	41,556.57	423.00
Brewster, Mrs. W. N., Hinghua, China	102.00	102.00
Bulgarian Mission	220.10	220.00	.10
Cantine, James, Muscat, Arabia	10.00	10.00
Chambers, Miss E. M., Kessab, Syria	18.50	18.50
Charity Organization Society	93.02	93.02
China Inland Mission	7.50	7.50
China Famine Fund	126,067.47	121,145.50	4,861.97
China Orphans	3,845.29	30.00	3,815.29
China Presbyterian Mission, George F. Fitch	13.00	12.00	1.00
CHRISTIAN HERALD Children's Home, M. Best, Treas.	36,274.47	35,701.02	573.45
Christian Mission to the Jews	56.00	16.00	40.00
De Schweinitz, Rev. Dr. P.	12.00	12.00
Door of Hope	11.65	11.00	.65
East Central African Mission, E. H. Richards	63.04	61.04	2.00
Endowment Mont-Lawn	4,247.10		4,247.10
Eliot, Eliza, Doswell, Va.	22.54	22.54
Elwood, Rev. Ellis P.	400.00	400.00
Fenwick, Rev. Malcolm	25.00	25.00
Fields Home for Crippled Children, Daisy	5.00	5.00
Five Points Mission	5.00	5.00
Florence Crittenton Mission	451.31	408.36	42.95
Foreign Missions	30.00	30.00
Grasser, Rev. Otto	14.00	14.00
Greeley, Rev. E. H.	226.40	210.60	15.80
Grenfell, Dr. Wilfred T.	23.00	23.00
Guerrant, Dr. E. O.; Society of Soul Winners	115.00	115.00
Hagqvist, Rev. W., Shensi, China	10.00	10.00
Hall, Miss A. E.	11.00	11.00
Harlem Mission and New York School for Boys	50.00	50.00
Harrow, Rev. J. M., Liberia, West Africa	138.00	138.00
Haswell, Susan E.	100.00	100.00
Henderson, Rev. Robert	303.45	297.25	6.20
Home Missions	55.00	55.00
Hoyer, Rev. N. F.	28.00	28.00
Hoover, Mary; M. E. Mission	60.00	60.00
Howard, Rev. H. G.	10.00	10.00
Hume, Dr. R. A., Ahmadnagar, India	6,708.19	5,100.00	1,608.19
India Orphan Pledges, Rev. W. H. Stephens	4.00	4.00
Inner Mission, New York	28.00	20.00	8.00
Inland South American Missionary Union	224.06	222.56	1.50
International Sunshine Society	159.30	154.30	5.00
Jansen, Rev. F.; Presbyterian Mission	2,964.63	1,319.64	1,644.99
Japan Orphans	65.50	65.50
Jerusalem Leper Mission	26.29	26.29
Keswick Colony	19.06	19.06
Kinnear, H. N., Foo Chow, China	96.00	96.00
Klein, Rev. Matthias, Sumoto, Japan	20.00	20.00
Lampe, Rev. W. F.	50.00	50.00
Lawson, Missionary	10.00	10.00
Lee, Blanche W.	80.50	80.50
Lee, Rev. and Mrs. D. H.	10.00	10.00
Loomis, Rev. H.	79.55	72.55	7.00
McAuley Water Street Mission	17.25	17.00	.25
McAuley Cremorne Missicn	151.30	151.05	.25
Mary Reed For Lepers	58.90	56.90	2.00
Mayesville Institute	6.00	6.00
Meyer, Lucy R.	5.00	5.00
Mission Among Sailors	1,899.86	1,844.86	55.00
Missionary Substitutes	35.15	35.15
Miscellaneous contributions of $3 and under	30.00	30.00
National Bible Institute	11.00	11.00
Olsson, Emilio	5.00	5.00
Owens, C. A.	6.00	6.00
Pacific Garden Mission	60.00	60.00
Paton, Frank S.	25.00	25.00
Perkins, Miss Sasha E.	18.56		18.56
Perkins, Rev., For Dora's Redemptıcn	22.50	22.50
Presbyterian Board	8.00	8.00
Prison Gate Mission	23.00	23.00
Pundita Ramabai	80.00	80.00
Pye, Rev. Watts O.	18.00	18.00
St. Rose's Free Home for Incurable Cancer	309.00	309.00
Schmitt, Christian	10.00	10.00
Schreiber, Rev. C. H.	50.00	50.00
Schwartz, Rev. H. W.	50.00	50.00
Sieg, J. McC.	50.00	50.00
Springer, Rev. J. M.	15.00	15.00
Stark, Rev. A. R.	7.50	7.50
Steele Orphanage	5.00	5.00
Sunday Breakfast Association	95.02		95.02
Sundry Charities	75.00	60.00	15.00
Stephens, Rev. W. H.	5.00	5.00
Tennesseetown Mission	10.00	10.00
Terrill, Wm. C.	50.00	50.00
Thomssen, George N.	10.00	10.00
Thornwell Orphanage	5.00	5.00
Union Gospel Mission	478.09	478.09
White Door Settlement	11.00	11.00
Wilcox, W. C.	6.00	6.00
Wilson, R. M.	60.00	60.00
Winsor, Mrs. M.	68.00	68.00
Wodehouse, Rev. R.	20.00	20.00
Woodberry, Mrs. J.	60.00	60.00
Zamora, Rev. Nicholas	10.00	10.00
Zulu Christian Industrial School
Totals	$230,952.34	$213,154.85	$17,797.49

WE HEREBY CERTIFY that we audited all of the General Charitable Funds of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD for the year ended May 31st, 1911. We made a thorough test of the cash received as indicated by published statements appearing in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. From the examination which we made, it is our opinion that all cash received has been deposited in bank and that all disbursements have been made for the purpose for which the money was received.

We attach hereto summarized exhibit of all Charity Funds from which it will be observed there was a balance on hand at June 1, 1911, of $17,797.49. Of this amount, $10,470.56 was disbursed during June and July, 1911, and the balance is held, we are informed, for future disbursement with the knowledge and consent of the donors.

ERNST AND ERNST — CERTIFIED PUBLIC ACCOUNTANTS — NEW YORK

Ernst & Ernst
Certified Public Accountants.

Our Mail-Bag

Continued from first column

that society exceeded 120,000,000 volumes (who or partial Bibles), some idea may be gathered the grand total when all other agencies are i cluded. Taking a smaller illustration: up to 184 the Caustein Bible Institute (founded to pri and circulate the Word cheaply) had circulat 5,000,000 Bibles and 3,000,000 Testaments. Up 1889, the Prussian Bible Society had circulat 5,239,238 Bibles. There are many other Bib societies in Germany. In Russia, a single socie has circulated nearly 900,000 Bibles. Our ow American Bible Society has an output of fro 3,000 to 4,000 volumes a day, and its annual issu have exceeded 700,000 to 800,000 Bibles in whole in parts. There are many other independe agencies engaged in Bible production, Th CHRISTIAN HERALD being one of the larges There is no available data for determining th percentage suggested in our correspondent's lette

W. M. A., Dayton, O. There is no re reason—judging from your letter—why yo should be discontented with your outlook i life. The world is still before you, and wit trust in God, good steady principles, industriou habits, thrift and a quick appreciation honorable opportunities as they arise, you wi do well. Remember, the discontented man- the "groucher"—is nowhere desired. This a propriate verse may give you an idea for motto:

Just where you stand in the conflict,
There is your place!
Just where you think you are useless
Hide not your face;
God placed you there for a purpose,
Whate'er it may be;
Think He has chosen you for it,
Then walk loyally.

A. E., Elizabethtown, N. C. Please explai John 3: 13.

It seems a paradox, and was doubtless i tended to startle his hearers as well as to im press upon them the fact that he was at onc both human and divine. Commentators hol that the sense of the passage (reading the con text) is that no man by going up from earth to heaven can obtain a perfect knowledge God; and none has so ascended but He whos proper habitation in his essential nature heaven, and who taking the clothing of flesh has descended, and is alone able to disclose th Father (see John 1: 18).

A. H., Curwensville, Pa., and many others. Kindly tell me where the following line is found:

"They also serve who only stand and wait."

This is the last line of the English Puritan poet John Milton's, sonnet on his blindness.

Miscellaneous

If "Old Subscriber," Carling, Ont., will sen her address, her question will be answered by mail.

Any one knowing the address of Rev. Isaac S. Brundage, formerly of Connecticut, but now supposed to be resident in the State of Ohio will confer a favor by forwarding it to hi nephew, C. E. Washburn, 80 Turner Street Willimantic, Conn.

H., Harriman, Tenn. Such an assertion could only be proved or disproved by a full inquiry. It is probably true.

B. U., Overton, Neb. The passage in the Mosaic law to which you refer no doubt meant just what it said. It was intended to place an indelible stigma upon immorality.

C. D. L., Wilkes Barre, Pa. The passage we quoted is not in the Bible. It is from a modern poet, and expresses the idea that if we are in God's care, he will keep us as he has promised to keep those who trust in him. Further, we have the assurance that though we may fall, we will not be utterly cast down. Backsliding is indeed a terrible fact; but even the backslider finds a way open for his return and forgiveness, if he chooses to take it.

C. H. H., Freehold, N. J. The passage in Luke 14: 26 was explained recently. That portion of the chapter from verse 25 to the close emphasizes the paramount importance of the Gospel call. The verse in question (26) means that we must be prepared to make any sacrifice, even of that which is nearest and dearest to us, and even to sever ties of blood and kindred for His sake. This is the test of real discipleship (see the corresponding passage in Matt. 10: 37, in which it is presupposed that the relatives tried to entice one away from Jesus, which makes the matter clearer).

B. F. M., Hillman, Miss. The passage in I. Kings 22: 22 has its parallel in Job 2. In both cases, the evil spirit was permitted to do its evil work and both instances are recorded in accordance with the theological attitude of the Jewish priesthood and historians of those days. Up to the time of the Babylonish captivity their theology on many points was uncertain and fluctuating (observes a leading commentator), and it was not until the time of Zechariah that they recognized a decided opposition or difference between the good and the bad spirits or angels. There is no basis for comparing these Old Testament passages with Acts 5: 4-8.

NEW YORK, SEPTEMBER 20, 1911

THE · CHRISTIAN · HERALD

A WEEKLY ILLUSTRATED NEWSPAPER FOR THE HOME

A Hopi Pottery-Maker

Indian Women Grinding Corn by Hand

A Hopi Basket-Maker

THE PASSING OF THE PUEBLOS

NOW that New Mexico and Arizona have become States their lawmakers will find themselves confronted with an "Indian problem" of more than ordinary difficulty. It will be necessary for them to define the status of the Pueblos, who are not "wards of the government," but American citizens, although the rights of citizenship have been denied them.

Under the terms of the treaty of Guadalupe-Hidalgo, which terminated the war with Mexico, it was provided that all persons in the territory ceded to the United States who had been citizens of Mexico should become citizens of the northern republic. It has since been repeatedly decided by the Federal courts that the Pueblos were citizens of Mexico, and, hence, that they are now citizens of the United States, with the right to vote, hold office, and enjoy all other privileges of citizenship.

For six years after the signing of the treaty, the Pueblos were permitted to exercise these rights. Members of their communities were elected to office, served as petit and grand jurors, and voted at all elections. Then, in 1854, the territorial legislature of New Mexico (which then included Arizona) abrogated the solemn treaty obligations of the Federal Government, and deprived them of the franchise, except as to irrigation ditch elections and elections of their own community officials. In 1901, the New Mexico legislature even deprived the Pueblo of the right to vote at ditch elections.

So the Pueblo is a being apart from the white man's laws, except when he happens to transgress them. Then he is held strictly to account. In general, the people are left to their own devices as regards the administration of the affairs of their own communities, with no attempt at regulation, policing or other control on the part of county or territorial authorities. They live in accordance with their ancient customs, enforce their own laws and administer their own punishments. In the Pueblo villages, from the smallest to the largest, there is less vice and crime than can be found in any villages or towns of the same population in America inhabited by the superior white race.

Several years ago, the Supreme Court of New Mexico decided that the lands of the Pueblos could be taxed by the territory. A Congress of Pueblos met at Santa Fe and petitioned the Congress of the United States to relieve them of this burden. Congress promptly acceded to this request, exempting their lands from taxation until such time as New Mexico became a State. The Pueblos have held their lands under Spanish, Mexican and American rule. In 1863, these lands were granted them in fee simple by patents of the United States Government. President Lincoln, accompanying the patent, gave to each pueblo an ebony cane with a silver head suitably inscribed. Each community prizes its cane as a sacred pledge or token, and it is passed from each governor to his successor as the badge of his office.

A Hopi Girl Wearing a Characteristic Headdress

The title of the Pueblos to their lands, therefore, is unassailable. Nevertheless, those lands are coveted by the whites. The only way that now appears to be possible is to tax the lands so heavily that the Indians will be compelled to sell all that they do not actually need for farming purposes. This is the policy that is openly advocated by a large section of the local press. The Hopi of Arizona (who are also Pueblos) may fare better. No one but the frugal and industrious Hopi could extract a livelihood from the soil of the Painted Desert. The Hopi may be permitted to keep his lands, for the very good reason that no white man would accept them as a gift.

So the puzzle that demands solution on the part of the new State of New Mexico is this: Can the Pueblos be taxed to the point of compelling them to sell all of their lands that they do not actually need, and still be denied the rights of citizenship that were pledged them by the terms of the treaty with Mexico, without clashing with the Federal Government's authority?

Nominally, all of the Pueblos, except the Zuñi and Hopi, are outwardly Catholics, but in reality pagan to the core. They were converted to nominal Christianity at the time when the Inquisition was a power in the land. The Zuñi and Hopi dwelt far from the seat of authority, and they massacred the missionaries and forgot their teachings. The rest of the Pueblos killed missionaries, too, but in the end were subdued. They remain professed Catholics to this day merely from force of habit.

In all there are about 10,000 of the Pueblos, occupying eighteen permanent villages in New Mexico and seven or eight in Arizona. It is

Continued on page 939

A Zuñi Water-Carrier at Her Doorway

A Zuñi "Rebecca at the Well"

THE American Pulpit

A Sermon by Rev. W. MacMullen, D.D.*

A FOOL'S VERDICT

TEXT: Ps. 14 : 1—"The fool hath said in his heart, There is no God."

THIS seems severe language, but we are to remember that the psalmist was looking out upon a world in which corruption was running riot. Wickedness seemed to be the established law of life. Good men were scorned and devoured like bread. And the cause of this carnival of foulness, the psalmist thought, was a denial of God. To the man with a vision and experience of God, human society, in such moral conditions, even though rich with material prosperity, was bedlam. And the madness which produced it was the denial of God.

We are coming back to the mood of the psalmist. The intense scientific activity of the past half century, its new formula of evolution, its new ability to interpret natural facts which were before dark and mysterious, all this has disturbed the faith of many souls, it has brought fear to the devout and jubilant joy to the skeptical. But the tide has turned. "The age of doubt" has passed into "a new epoch for faith." A great statesman has declared that "belief in God is the fundamental basis of the healthy life of any people." A famous scientist came back from his brilliant refutation of the Christian faith and died in the communion of the Christian Church, confessing, "It is reasonable to be a Christian believer."

The Limitations of Science

Science is admitting the limitations of her territory, and has acknowledged that there are some problems more profound than those she deals with, that the discovery of method is not the same thing as the discovery of power. While she may be able to say how things are made and are being made, as to why they are being made and by whom, she must either believe or be silent. The Great Companion is not dead. To assert that he is, is to be guilty of monstrous folly. "It is absurd to say that a number of atoms falling together of their own accord could make a sprig of moss, a microbe or a living animal." So said Lord Kelvin, the acknowledged leader of British science.

One of our accepted truths is that we are under the rule of law. Nothing is accidental. The tides, the seasons, the rains and snows and dews, the harvests, the storms that sweep the earth, the diseases that kill us, the changing temperatures, the swinging planets and shining stars, and even the erratic comets, are all under law. The most turbulent forces that disturb the earth beneath us or careen in the spaces about us, are under orders. Not only to the sea, but to every force that moves, has gone forth the fiat, "Thus far and no farther." If this were not true, we could have no science. Science is just a fuller knowledge of the laws that are prevailing in this universe of ours. To discover the forces by which the earth's crust is made and the laws of their working and write the history of their work, that is Geology. We ask how the stars move and shine, that is our Astronomy. We study plants, their structure and the laws of their growth, that is Botany. To know the air currents and cloud forces, that is Meteorology. Perhaps we shall know the mysteries of even the changing atmosphere so well some day that Kipling's brilliant imagination may come true and we shall have mail packets and freighters and hospital ships flying through the air, each at its appointed level in its well defined airy lane.

The Universe Under Divine Law

In the ignorant days, instead of ordered worlds, men looking up into the heavens saw only strange signs and wonders; in a storm they saw the fury of an outraged god or goddess, in chemical wonders they saw magic. We have some credulous and superstitious people in the world to-day, who believe in the fatality of the mystic number thirteen, and find signs in trivial events, and shudder when they break a looking glass. But now it is perfectly plain that both our science and superstition proclaim our conviction that this universe is full of meaning —is crammed with meaning. "Nothing walks with aimless feet." It is an ordered whole. Its parts are related. The laws that rule us here are in force on the furthest star.

* Pastor, Madison Avenue M. E. Church, New York City.

Our attempts to understand the universe prove at least that we believe it can be understood. We could not perceive order if it were disorderly. And if order exists, it is absurd to think it accidental. Order is the outcome of intentional thought. Our sciences are our discoveries and descriptions of "knowledge too wonderful" for us, of thoughts higher than ours, which have been wrought into the texture of worlds. If the universe were not rationally constructed, it would be a sealed book to us. We cannot understand the movements of an insane mind, because that mind has slipped from the control of personal will. No more could we understand a chaotic universe. If the worlds rushed through the spaces as though in drunken frenzy, if the atoms rushed about aimlessly, the universe would be a bedlam, our civilization would fall into ruin and we should go mad. Now to perceive the laws of the universe and then to fancy that these are a substitute for God is to be absurd. Yet the assumption has sometimes been made that the establishment of law is the dethronement of God. It is a sort of socialistic principle applied to stupid atoms—law prevailing, but no government. This is the dream of an anarchist. The theory of some has been more law, less God; all law, no God. Whereas the truth is, the extension of the domain of law means the extension of the rule of God, and law universally operating is God universally present. "O God, I think thy thoughts over after thee," said the great Kepler, as he found the laws of planetary motion, which speech was not only reverent, but logical.

> God is law, say the wise, O Soul, and let us rejoice;
> For if he thunder by law, the thunder is still his voice.

I think one of the pathetic things in Christian history is the terror which has come upon the defenders of the Christian faith more than once, because of changes in scientific thinking.

How God Works in Nature

The Copernican system of the universe seemed to deny man's importance by making the earth an insignificant planet, and because it seemed to contradict Biblical statements, the Church defied it and its champions were persecuted and sometimes burned to death. The alarm was false and came out of a false Biblical literalism, which is not yet dead. And again, when science said that the universe as it is is the result of progress; that it has had a gradual development; that forces now working in it and upon it have been slowly shaping it through the ages, there was another cry of terror from the ranks of the faithful. It seemed like a denial of God's immediate action. And indeed scientists have sometimes assumed as an established fact that God has been outgrown and is no longer necessary to account for things. Such fear and such effrontery alike spring from a false idea of supernatural action. It is the confusion of method with cause. It is absurd folly to think that because we have discovered God's way of doing things, we have therefore made him unnecessary. The gradual method of producing the natural order demands God's presence constantly, the sudden method demands it only occasionally. A story of an Eastern king is related that while walking in his garden one day with his counselor, discussing the wonderful works of God, the skeptical king said, "Show me a sign, and I will believe." And the counselor said, "Here are four acorns; will your Majesty please take and plant them and then look into this clear pool of water?" And the king did so, and when he looked up he saw four mighty oak trees, and exclaimed, "Truly, this is a miracle, this is the work of God." "How long were you looking in the pool?" asked the counselor. "About a second," said the king. "Eighty years have passed as a second," said the other. And the king looked at his garments, and they were threadbare, and again he looked into the pool and saw reflected therein the face of an old man, and he cried angrily, "This is not a miracle, after all." The counselor replied, "It is the work of God, whether it is done in a second, or in eighty years."

We used to argue from design, and to be very fond some years ago of the argument from the watch. Evolution, we are told, destroyed the value of this argument. Because, suppose the watch was not made by anybody as it is, but came from a preceding watch less perfect than itself, and that from another without dial or hands, and so on back until at th beginning there is nothing but a revolving barre then your argument is gone. No, it is strengthene For where did that original revolving barrel g power to evolve, where did it get power to impro itself and become a marvelous combination wheels, springs, pinions, dial and hands, all of the working together with the purpose of indicatin time? That is, if the universe is not a machine b a flower, it requires, not a smaller, but a larg and steadier exercise of infinite power. The proo of purpose in the world are not fewer with th new forms of thinking about it. They are mo plentiful. World history is crammed with adjus ments. An ordination council a few years ago ha before it a young candidate whose mind was aliv with the thinking of his time. He was asked by member of the council what he thought of Paley argument from design. "Oh, it was all very we for its day," he answered; "it called attention some indications of purpose in the creation, but th proofs of purpose which have been shown us sin by such writers as Darwin and Tyndal and Huxle throw all that exhibit into the shade." It was sprightly reply, perhaps a trifle flippant, but it w true. Adaptation is the constant necessity of th theory of the influence of environment upon lif And do such adjustments occur without a suprem and superintending mind? Absurd! "The fo hath said in his heart, there is no God." The arg ments for God's existence are mostly modern, be cause the doubt of his existence is a modern diseas It can never be epidemic, and has never been con mon.

Religion Never Outgrown

Such a speech is not only intellectual folly, bu vital folly. It brings hopeless confusion into huma nature. At the top of the developing natural orde stands man, and at the summit of man's being is h religious nature. It is the highest thing in hin the most characteristic, the most persistent. H was religious before he was highly intellectua Some say that in that fact we have the proof tha the religious impulse is not normal and not fina Man was religious before he knew better. H religion is a relic of his infancy, and should be lai aside with other nursery delusions. But it can be laid aside; it is vital. Delusions are outgrow —religion is never outgrown. No increase rational power drives it out. Now nature neve burdens us long with useless organs. If a facult is useless, it withers away, and if it doesn't, we fin means to cut it away. If spiritual instincts we lies, they would disappear. But they don't di appear. They persist, are inveterate, were neve stronger than now. And how shall we account fo them; these longings, prayers, faith, vision, peace Have they no adequate cause? No true answe John Fiske said once, that if man's religious natur and experience had nothing objectively real to a swer them, it would be something utterly witho precedent in the whole history of creation, an declared that "all the analogies of nature fairl shout" against such an assumption.

The Supreme Folly

No God! Then who is responsible for the divi things in human life? No God! Then saintline is but the moral flush of a diseased soul; then ma tyrs have burned in defense of a dream; then Jesu "Strong Son of God, immortal love," "holiest amon the mighty and mightiest among the holy," was th saddest and most pitiable dupe of the ages. N God! Then our prayers are worth less than th air they disturb; then morality can get no logic grip on the soul. Are the lower things in ma significant and true, and the higher things mea ingless? Is the body fed with what it needs, an the spirit fed only by its own baseless dreams? N God! Then nature has devoted her ages an forces to the elaboration of a colossal lie.

In these days, religious life, like all other thing is put under the dominion of law. We are assure that religious sentiments and experiences belong certain ages in the life of the individual, and are th result of certain physical conditions. But even so; if it be true that the experiences of free sou

Continued on next page

TE CRY OF THE WATCHMAN

TROUGH nights of mist and darkness,
Through days of fog and rain,
es with heart-throb strong and restless,
e stately ship across the main.
ers lurk beneath, before her,
dden rock or wand'ring barque;
ir course she does not falter, ith courage plunges in the dark;
bove the deck's safe footing,
om an aerie near the sky,
es from out the darkness floating,
e wakeful watchman's welcome cry,
All's well,
All's well."

ugh ways of mist and darkness, rough days of doubt and pain, s the soul with pace resistless, ith weather mark and strain.
s of error lie beneath her, e deep darkness veils the way,
sure's false lights seek to flatter, ght her upward course would stay:
rling winds of worthless passion rken faith's bright sunlit sky, with promise 'gainst destruction, rough sin's night there comes a cry,
"All's well,
All's well."

ugh life's misty ways and darkness, rough hot days of toil and pain, ed the wondrous soul of Jesus, ithout blemish, without stain.
ly through all ways of error,
ast all subtly hidden foes,
out coward fear or terror, ajestically the Master goes.
all men he marked the pathway, cross life's tempestuous main.
en, soul, and he will say
To God I'll lead you safe again,
"All's well,
All's well."

CHARLES REMINGTON MCNALLY.

A Fool's Verdict

Continued from preceding page

to be brought under law in our on for order, law in religion no bars God out than law in nature.
orders the conditions and makes ections between them and man's constitution so that his needs are and his soul set to singing? God man have intercourse. We are in world and in his hands.

the speech of the fool is true, then is folly. Dr. Watkinson refers to finds illustrations in an idiot boy used to whip his top on the pave-t day after day, month after th, year after year. Top spin-was his life work. He doubtless days of victory, and hours of de-
, and his performance was, to him, us and important. Yet it was ic. And if there be no God, all is but a useless spinning of tops. tops may differ. Some may be plain and some highly decorated;
e may spin quietly, and some hum oudly as to be heard across the t, but in any case, it is but mean-ss, useless top spinning. And the racter of the performance is not nged by giving it a dignified title calling it the "propulsion of a scope." And if the fool be right is speech, life is chaos. Our moral incts and moral habits might per-for a time, but not for long. An ist may be brave, but his courage either vanish when the storms e, or be a mere wooden stoicism.
life without God becomes un-kably dreary. Romanes said, e universe had lost its soul of liness with the denial of God, and was a lonely mystery." When heart sings with hope, throbs with pose, breaks with grief, no God to t its springing powers or dry its ing tears—it's a nightmare dream.
lad are we that the denial of God ut the refuge of the wicked or the y of the fool. This thought-woven verse, its universal order, our aspions and prayers, all prove Him.
l that we might not depend on con-ions reached by logical argument, us came to declare him and uncover
, and change our hopes into certain-
, our rational convictions into ious experience. In Jesus, we see l, and know him and become like
.

The First Congress of Races

By LUCIA AMES MEAD

THE purpose was to come into touch with those who are trying to organize the world in the interests of justice and peace, to lend them a helping hand and to establish close and permanent relations with the somewhat feeble and scattered groups in Europe who are fighting race prejudice and chauvinism. The journey began at Dundee, on hills overlooking the broad Firth of Tay. Here a valiant and aggressive fighter for peace—Rev. Walter Walsh, author of The Moral Damage of War and well known in America—has been a dynamo who has given electric shocks to Scotsmen ever since the days of the Boer war.

. . .

SITTING in his cosy parlor at "The Hague," as his home is named, it was as good as hearing Scott's tales of border warfare to listen to the story of the rescue of his friend, Crownright Schreiner, from South Africa. In the very church where we had that morning and evening preached an American gospel of world organization, a throng had met, some of them determined that this brave Englishman should never come out alive. When this was learned, in the pastor's study, prudence prevailed, an escape by cab from the rear of the church gave an hour's leeway before the stones of the pursuers were breaking windows and falling on the baby's crib at "The Hague." But the clever threat of the two forlorn police to order out upon the mob every policeman hidden in the darkness behind the garden wall finally prevented catastrophe.

The pilgrimage to Edinburgh and to various English towns must be passed over in order to speak of the summer's great event—"The First Universal Races Congress" held in London during the last week of July. Never was there such a gathering since time began. From every country in Europe, from far India, China, Japan, South Africa, America and the islands of the South, came twelve hundred earnest men and women of all races, each one paying a guinea for admission and faithfully keeping up the attendance until the close of the last session through days of excessive heat. German professors and highbred Englishwomen and Americans sat down to lunch with men and women of all degrees of color.

. . .

AT THE splendid reception and concert given at Claridge's Hotel by a New York lady in honor of the president, Lord Weardale, humble, dark skinned folk whose fathers had been slaves found themselves welcomed in their plain attire just as much as those English dames who wore rare jewels and rich gowns. Perhaps the most beautiful sight in this great world-group was that of a dainty Hindoo damsel clad in the graceful folds which put present Paris fashions to shame.

At the official reception one saw the young, keen-eyed Papal legate wearing a crimson silk robe, turbaned students from India, thoughtful Chinese officials, and our one American Indian, Dr. Eastman, a graduate of Dartmouth College, who, with Professor DuBois, smiling, tactful and agreeable, seemed to be the favorites among all the men of color. One of the tall, handsome men who spoke at the Congress took evident pride in his Maori blood. One of the most interesting was a black editor of a paper in South Africa, only one generation from savagery, who spoke good English and was a gentleman.

. . .

THE Congress had its genesis in a suggestion of Dr. Felix Adler, and was chiefly arranged by Mr. Gustav Spiller, of London, with a council that numbered many of the most distinguished savants of the globe. It was planned with scientific purposes in view to discuss the anthropological and economic problems as well as those of unreasoning racial antipathies. German scholarship came to show the essential oneness of all races and the immense preponderance of likenesses over differences. Professor Reinsch of Madison—the Roosevelt professor this year at Berlin—discussed "Geographic, Political and Economic Conditions." Riza Tewfik, an admirable member of the minority in the Turkish Parliament, showed the complex racial conditions in Turkey. "Miscegenation," "International Law and Subject Races," "Traffic in Intoxicants and Opium," and the peace movement, presented by French and American specialists, were among the vital subjects which enthralled the attention of eager listeners. A book of 450 pages, entitled Interracial Problems, containing the papers of invited speakers, was given every member before the Congress opened. An American edition has just been published by the World Peace Foundation in Boston. The sessions were devoted to discussions of these papers, no outline of which is possible in this brief survey.

This Congress will in due time be followed by a series of others. A plan of organization was adopted, embodying some of the principles suggested by Mr. Mead, who gave the closing address on "International Organization for Interracial Good-Will."

. . .

AT BRUSSELS, a pilgrimage was made to the "International Bibliographical Institute," a monument of research supported partly by the government, and a treasure house of information stored in corridors of drawers of card catalogues, wherein the fast-increasing number of international organizations are named and described. It is an astounding revelation to the average American, who in his appreciation of world relationships is often thirty years behind the times.

Berlin, August, 1911.

NEARING PORT

THE noble river widens as we drift,
And the deep waters more than brackish grow;
We note the sea birds flying to and fro,
And feel the ocean currents plainly lift
Our bark, and yet our course we would not shift;
These are but signs by which the boatmen know
They're drawing near the port to which they go
To land their cargo or to bring their gift.

So may our lives reach out on either hand,
Broader and broader, as the end draws near;
So may we seek God's truths to understand,
As the sea-birds shelter seek when storms appear;
So may the currents from the heavenly sea
Lift us and bear us to eternity.—Selected.

SEPTEMBER

WITH waving wand of goldenrod,
And asters in her hair,
Adown the year's sweet path she comes
With dreamy face and fair.
Within a circled arm she holds,
Filled over-brim, a tray
Of luscious fruits to scatter wide
Along her pleasant way.

The months of summer came and went
On dancing, flying feet;
Oh, dear were they, and swift were they
To hasten their retreat;
But even while with saddened eyes
We watch them disappear,
September comes to win our love,
And spread her bounties here.

EMMA A. LENTE in Christian Endeavor World.

THE CROWNING JOY

TO WALK with God in His fair world below,
Feeling His presence wheresoe'er we go,
This is the joy of life, the bliss supreme,
Not a mere fancy, not an idle dream.
"Lo, I am with thee," those blest words He spake,
"I'll never leave thee, I will ne'er forsake."
So, trusting fully the Almighty Friend,
We will walk joyful with Him to the end.

Mount Upton, N. Y. MRS. E. J. RICHMOND.

Are Our Children There?

By F. M. Barton

"AND God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes" is a text in Revelation that leads us to ask, Will there be tears in heaven? There is one thing that I think would cause me to weep in heaven, and that is, if my children should not join me there.

Let us imagine a scene in heaven. There is a father and a mother waiting not far from the gates, looking expectantly, and the mother says: "He'll be coming the while." And the father says: "Don't be worrying."

Thank God for the hopeful, patient, worrying, self-sacrificing mothers.

A young woman passes through the gates and as she comes near the father and mother they recognize her as John's Sunday School teacher. They greet one another, and the mother says:

"We are waiting for John."

"Isn't he here yet?" said the teacher.

"Not yet, but he'll be sure to be coming, won't he?"

"Why—I hope so."

"Why, aren't you sure John will be here?"

The teacher might have said "Yes," but minds and hearts are transparent there. The mother put her arms around the teacher and said: "We sent John to Sunday School and to you, every Sunday, to be taught the way of life, and the way to heaven."

"I know; I know," said the teacher, "and I did the best I could; but I only had one hour each Sabbath, and there were seven others in the class, and they were restless, and I did not know the way myself, as I should have known it. I used to try to keep them quiet, and I didn't realize how important it was, and knowing you were both Christians, I thought that you would look after his salvation. Let us hope for the best."

And the teacher joins the parents in hoping—and if their hopes were futile, we can understand why there is need for God to wipe away tears in heaven.

Why is it we have time to feed and clothe the house in which John lives, but we thoughtlessly send him away once a week with a nickel in his little fist (or more often with a copper cent) to purchase food for John himself—the John which is to live forever—and often he has to buy from some one entirely unfitted for the preparation of it.

The Sunday School is the greatest power for good in the world; but there is one thing the Sunday School cannot do, and was never intended to do—to relieve Christian parents of the duty of so teaching and training their children that their footsteps shall be established in the way of eternal life.

How painful the uncertainties and anxieties of parents as they lie on beds from which other hands shall raise them!

"John, you'll meet me over there?"

"Mary, I'll be waiting for you."

The world may write us down as successful, but before God we shall be ashamed if we have not led those he gave us to him.

When the breath of God came into the tiny bodies of John and Mary there came with it the homing instinct that would take their spirits back to the God who gave them. But we devote our lives to conforming them to this world. One would imagine from our teaching and anxiety for worldly success for them that they were going to live here forever. They will live forever, 'tis true, but not here.

Floods and Revolts in Troubled China

IN a recent issue THE CHRISTIAN HERALD published a special cable dispatch from Missionary Z. Charles Beals, of Wuhu, China, announcing that terrible floods had visited the Yangtse Valley, doing great damage to property and causing heavy loss of life. Press cable dispatches from Hankow, dated September 4, bring the intelligence that the floods are even more serious than at first reported, and that there are rumors that 100,000 persons have been drowned by the sudden overflowing of the Yangtse and its tributaries. These dispatches add: "The floods are the worst that have been experienced in many years. The ill-fated province of Anhui is submerged to a greater depth than ever before. It is estimated that more than ninety-five per cent. of the crops has been destroyed." The report received by the American Mission at Wuhu, while lacking in details, is believed to refer to the devastation of the waters throughout the entire submerged district since the beginning of the floods in that part of China several months ago.

It is hoped that the loss of human life may prove to be not so heavy as these estimates state, but the worst is feared. In a letter to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD from Missionary Beals, just received from Wuhu, he writes:

"The future of Central China hangs like a great dark cloud. We are powerless to even save many of our church people. This district, just north of us, is the same one THE CHRISTIAN HERALD readers helped save in 1901. It is ten times worse now. Those churches we organized by the help of your good readers seem to be all washed away. The members were farmers, and all they have is a bit of rice tied up in the tops of trees while they themselves are paddling around in tubs. Oh, the thousands of orphans there will be in our district! The Chinese officials are waking up, but they have little to meet the need."

The North China Daily News says that a gigantic scheme is on foot to employ modern engineering talent to make the low-lying areas flood-free, and the work has been entrusted to an American engineer, Mr. Charles Jameson. Large numbers of the natives will be employed in the work, but the vast majority will have to be removed from the unproductive areas for a time at least. The chief obstacle seems to be lack of funds available for the enterprise—which involves the reclamation of from 10,000 to 15,000 square miles—but this may be overcome. Meanwhile the loss by the latest flood in Anhui province alone will probably be in the neighborhood of 20,000,000 taels. In a single district—Weichow—over 600,000 mow of rice fields were destroyed in one day by the breakdown of a water dike and in the neighboring district of Nanlinghsien, a few days later, 100,000 more were swept away. Luchowfu and Hochow rice crops have met a similar fate. Wuhu is being filled with refugees, who are coming down the river in thousands of boats from the north and squatting wherever they can find dry land.

The Chinese Government has other important matters, as well as the floods of the Yangste Kiang River, to engage its attention at the present time. Reports of serious rioting, which in some sections has assumed the proportions of a revolt, are contained in the latest dispatches from Peking. The most serious of these outbreaks has taken place in the province of Szechuen, which is one of the largest of the western part of the Chinese Empire. Some portions of the province, notably those about its capital city Chengtu, are among the most thickly populated sections of the globe. The population of the city itself is 400,000, while that of the entire province, whose area is 218,000 square miles, is about 70,000,000.

A dispatch from the representative of one of the great daily newspapers reads: "The situation in the province of Szechuen is extremely critical. The Viceroy has instructed all foreigners in Chengtu to assemble in the Canadian Methodist Mission compound, as this is the easiest defended from attack. Foreigners in the country districts of the province are fleeing to the cities for refuge. A British river gunboat is now proceeding to Kiatingfu, south of Chengtu. There are seventy Americans in Chengtu and its neighborhood." In addition to being the capital of the province of Szechuen, Chengtu is one of the four great centres of the Chinese Empire. It is also the focal point of missionary endeavor in the western part of the empire. The largest missionary stations of the Methodist Episcopal Church of the United States and of the Methodist Church in Canada are located here.

The present troubles are mainly the result of the very bitter feeling against the railroad project of the Chinese Government, agitation being directed chiefly against the construction of the Szechuen-Hankow Railroad. It is to a great extent political and may not entail such grave danger to the missionaries as the first dispatches would indicate.

A View of the Yangtse Kiang River, Showing the Buddhist Temple at Wuhu

The American missionaries at the different stations at Chengtu are as follows:

Methodist Episcopal, No. 150 Fifth Avenue, New York. Board of Foreign Missions of the Methodist Episcopal Church—Joseph Beech, Ph.B., D.D., Middletown, Conn., and Mrs. Beech, Dixon, Ill.; Claude W. Freeman, A.B., M.B., Burlington, Ont., and Mrs. Freeman, Hamilton, Ont.; George B. Neumann, A.B., B.D., New Britain, Conn., and Mrs. Neumann, New Britain, Conn.; Elrick Williams, A.B., A.M., Urbana, Ill., and Mrs. Williams, Fort Dodge, Ia.; James M. Yard, A.B., B.D., Nichols, Conn., and Mrs. Yard, Nichols, Conn.

Woman's Foreign Missionary Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church—Clara Collier, Chester, Vt.; Georgia E. Day, Keosauqua, Ia.; Ruth B. Smith, Cedar Rapids, Ia.; Winnifred L. Stout, Hurley, S. D.; Anna L. Gollisch, Afton, Ia.

American Baptist Foreign Mission Society, Ford Building, Boston—The Rev. J. Taylor and Mrs. Taylor.

American Bible Society, Bible House, New York—Mr. and Mrs. Torrence. International Committee of the Young Men's Christian Association—C. D. Hayes, R. R. Service and Mrs. Service, Dr. William Wilson and Mrs. Wilson.

* * *

An Illustrated Chinese Pamphlet

We have received from the Shanghai Relief Committee a consignment of pamphlets, in album form, each containing over fifty full-page photographic illustrations of the famine districts (a large part of which are now covered by destructive floods) and with explanatory reading matter in English and Chinese. There is in each pamphlet a large colored map (Chinese and English) of the famine region. These pamphlets will be specially useful to missionary and other church societies and Sunday Schools and to all who are interested in missionary work. They will be forwarded by mail by THE CHRISTIAN HERALD to any address, postpaid at 20 cents each, or six for $1, the proceeds to be devoted to the China Orphan Fund.

PRESENT CONDITIONS IN MEXICO

MR. ALFRED C. WRIGHT, Secretary of the Mexico Mission at Parral, Chihuahua, Mexico, writing from an unbiased viewpoint of the conditions which have followed the recent revolution, says: It was thought that Mexico had made great progress under the Diaz régime, and as compared with what it was thirty years ago, that is true. The nation, however, was not content, and the recent revolution was the voice of the nation crying for greater progress—for the complete realization of all that Diaz had promised.

It was in no sense a retrograde movement, nor a return to principles rejected by the reforms of Juarez and Diaz, but rather a decided advance in so far as the principles for which the revolution stood are concerned. It was a popular movement calling for reform and the full exercise of their rights. They demanded, first of all, the establishment of a single term in all government offices, as experience had taught the difficulty in getting out those who had long continued in office. The second principle for which they fought was for a really effective popular election. For years the people have had no real voice in the elections.

Everybody was surprised by the rapidity with which the closing events of the revolution followed one another. The great mass of the people was in sympathy with the movement from one end to the other of the whole republic. It is too soon to say what the final results will be, but those already most manifest are a general feeling of freedom from restraint and a desire to take active part in politics. The freedom is seen in almost numberless periodicals which have sprung up, in which writers express their opinions with perfect liberty on all political subjects. Such a thing was unknown before, and many writers were imprisoned and printing establishments closed or confiscated because of opposition to the government. It is seen in gatherings and societies without restraint of any kind. It is this spirit, in part, at least, which is causing the strikes in mines, smelters and factories.

General Madero Addressing His Soldiers

The desire to participate in the government even by those who have little aptitude or preparation for it is seen in the multitude of candidates for all offices, from the presidency down to the pettiest municipal job, and the attendant personal and party strife engendered. The present condition in many respects is much worse than under the old government, but it seems probable that the principles for which the fight was made will be established eventually, and the revolution will be recognized as a necessary element in the true progress and development of the nation.

The accompanying photo shows General Madero addressing his soldiers at Juarez; the other prominent persons are General José de la Luz Blanco, Don Juan Dozal, who has been given a high position in educational work at Chihuahua, and General Pascual Orozco, Jr.

Ocean Grove's Greatest Love-Feast

EVEN the oldest visitor to Ocean Grove, the famous religious camping ground, cannot recall a "Love-Feast" so spiritually refreshing and soul-satisfying as that which marked the close of the camp meeting this summer. The camp meeting opened on Friday evening, August 25, when five thousand people, including ministers, partook of the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper. The tabernacle sunrise meeting at 5:45 A. M. was under the leadership of Rev. A. E. Ballard, D.D. The first sermon was delivered on Saturday morning, August 26, by Rev. H. C. McBride of the New York Conference, "Holiness unto the Lord" being his theme. On Sunday morning, August 27, the Rev. W. Morgan, D.D., of Newark, N. J., preached in the Auditorium to an audience of about eight thousand people. Nearly one hundred ministers, representing most of the conferences of the Eastern States, occupied seats on the platform. A feature was the singing of the Chicago Preachers' Quartette. Rev. C. H. Babcock preached in the evening, and at the altar service many professed conversion. One of the surprises of the week was to see a colored minister, Rev. T. A. Tindley, of Philadelphia, in the tabernacle pulpit, and to hear him preach a powerful sermon on the text, "For I am determined to know nothing among you save Jesus Christ, and him crucified."

On Sunday morning, September 3, at 9 o'clock, there were ten thousand participants in the auditorium at the opening of the camp meeting love-feast. To many this is the crowning glory of the year, and they came eager to get an opportunity to testify and bear witness for Jesus. Rev. Dr. W. H. Morgan was in charge of the service. After the hymn, "The Church's One Foundation," the opening prayer was made by the venerable Dr. A. E. Ballard. Dr. Morgan called on Rev. John O'Hanlon to give his experience, which he did in a few brief words.

Then Rev. Mr. Yatman testified to God's grace. Among those who testified were: Mrs. Kidder, ninety-five years of age; Mrs. Alfred Cookman, and Miss Cassie Smith, the evangelist. Mr. A. H. Deaven said that fifty years ago he was converted "in the straw at a camp meeting." Mrs. Judge Davis sang "Under His Wings," and the congregation joined in the chorus.

An Italian missionary from Rome and a Hebrew were also among those who testified. Three hundred witnesses spoke of Christ's power to save and keep from sin.

Dr. Morgan seemed at home and kept up the religious fervor by starting the singing of appropriate verses of familiar hymns, the congregation joining with him. These included "The sweet by and by," "Face to face with Christ, my Saviour," "What will it be?" "Peace, like a river," "O how I love Jesus," "There's not a friend like the lowly Jesus," etc., etc.

The Chicago Preachers' Quartette added much to the spirituality of the love-feast and the Aida Trumpet Quartette rendered some very sweet, uplifting music, while the great organ, under Mr. Reynolds' skilful fingers, made a sound like many waters. "Praise God, from whom all blessings flow" was sung with an earnestness that belongs peculiarly to Ocean Grove. Rev. Dr. A. E. Ballard pronounced the benediction.

Every seat in the auditorium was filled and many were standing at the doors when Rev. Frank B. Wilson of Yonkers, N. Y., preached on "What it means to be a true Christian." Rev. I. G. Wilson, of Philadelphia, preached the evening sermon. The closing services of this most remarkable week which Ocean Grove has enjoyed in years were held on Monday morning, and after the baptism of children and the reports of the leaders, the "march around Zion" began. The ministers led, followed by an immense concourse of people, walking two by two, and singing "We are marching to Zion."

The camp meeting closed with singing "God be with you till we meet again." To many it has proved a mount of communion and fellowship. Earnest Christians will carry back to their homes and churches more of energy for the prosecution of the work of the kingdom during the strenuous months of the winter season and more consecration to the cause of the life and light of mankind.

MARY BARTON COOKMAN.

Ocean Grove, N. J.

The Auditorium at Ocean Grove

The Trumpet Quartette

Labor Day Joys at Our Children's Home

LABOR Day, the last public holiday of the summer, was made bright for the little waifs who were spending the closing weeks of the season at Mont-Lawn, by the carrying through of a special programme and the presence of a large number of guests. It is not unusual for our Children's Home visitors to represent a considerable area, but the presence there on Labor Day of guests from six different States, one of them as far away as Iowa was noted with great interest. Mr. W. S. Buengerich, Mr. J. Y. Yoder, and a party which had made Mont-Lawn one of the objective points of a trip to the Atlantic Coast, were the representatives of that Middle Western State.

While the guests were arriving during the morning, the children interrupted their play in the different parts of the Home grounds to cheer each carriage as it drove up the long winding road. By noon most of the visitors had already gathered, and though many of them had seen the same things take place before, all were greatly interested in watching the children form in line and march to Fort Plenty for the special holiday dinner which had been prepared for them. After this noon-day meal was finished and lunch had been served to the visitors, all went to the Children's Temple, where the little ones spent an hour in showing the friends who had come to spend the day with them just how enthusiastically they could sing their favorite songs.

At the conclusion of the singing in the Children's Temple, both guests and children returned to the large lawn in front of the Homestead building. Here preparations had been made for an open-air production of the familiar story of the Pied Piper of Hamelin. A market place to serve as the scene of the little play had been prepared and was replete with fishes and hams and Dutch cheese and vegetables, to say nothing of the fearfully and wonderfully made rats which were to play such an important part in the story. Presently the portly, long-coated Burgomaster arrived, and was soon beset by the women of the town, who begged relief from the plague of rats. The familiar development of the story was enacted, the Pied Piper playing his lilting tune, appearing in his costume of brilliant red and white stripes from the fields back of Fort Plenty. When the story had reached that point where both tradition and the poet Browning left it, at the place where the children have been taken away from the town by the Piper in revenge for the crusty old Burgomaster's refusal to pay the agreed sum for the removal of the rats, the newer ending of the story, which has been invented by Josephine Preston Peabody, was followed out. In this the Piper, returning to the market place, is begged by all the townspeople to return to them the lost children. In reply to their entreaties he tells them that not for money but for their love and the love of their children he came to rid them of the plague of rats. Only their selfishness and dishonesty have compelled him to teach them this lesson.

Little children, Ah, I love them all;
They are the biggest miracle I know.
Wherever I go I search the eyes of man
To find such clearness; and it is not there
Lies, greed, cruelty and dreadful dark
And all that makes me sad I find.

The Piper, refusing the Burgomaster's proffered gold, makes them promise that if he pipes the children back they shall be taught to be honest men and women. Then, softly at first but growing louder and louder, he pipes till the children come flocking back from their hiding-place for the joyous reunion in the market.

The Children at Mont-Lawn Making Merry About the Homestead

OUR EDITORIAL FORUM

OTTO KOENIG, President — GEO. H. SANDISON, Managing Editor — THEODORE WATERS, Secretary

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is published weekly by "The Christian Herald," at the Bible House, Fourth Avenue, 8th and 9th Sts., New York City. The officers are: Otto Koenig, President and Treasurer, Bible House, N.Y.City; Geo. H. Sandison, Vice-President, Bible House, N.Y.City; Theodore Waters, Secretary, Bible House, N.Y.City.

Subscription Price, $1.50 a year, in advance.
Remittances should always be made in the safest manner available to the remitter. Register cash remittances.
Foreign Postage.—For each copy to be mailed outside the United States, Canada, and Mexico, add one dollar a year.

Change of Date.—It takes at least two weeks to change the date, after your subscription is renewed.
Expiration of Subscription.—The date on the wrapper indicates when your subscription ends.
Change of Address.—It requires three weeks' time to make the change. Give both old and new address.

Subscriptions may commence with any issue.
Letters should be addressed, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, New York.

Entered at Post Office, New York, as Second-class Matter
Entered as Second-class Matter at the Post Office Department, Ottawa

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD invites an expression of opinion from its readers on the remarkable Symposium on World Peace and Arbitration, the third instalment of which appears in this issue. All letters should be brief and each correspondent should state which of the contributions to the Symposium is regarded as the ablest and most convincing. Address all letters, "Peace Symposium," CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, N. Y.

The Home Evangelist

TO those who have already passed through some of the experiences of the Christian life, there are three things that bring to the heart a joy such as nothing else in the whole world can give. They are (1) the realization of acceptance with God and personal union with Christ; (2) the act of confessing Christ before men and (3) leading others from darkness into the light. "It is to me an inconceivable thing," said Dr. J. Wilbur Chapman, the greatest living American evangelist, at Chautauqua a few days ago in conducting the last service, "that we should be selfish in our possession of Jesus. If I know Jesus and seal my lips, I am more than hard-hearted. There ought to be on the part of every Christian such enthusiasm for Jesus, that we would seek out our friend and never be satisfied until we found him. To have your best influence in your own home is a great thing; and when you have won your brother for Christ, then it is well to go outside. When we come to that day in the Church when each man will seek out and find his own brother and bring him to Christ, each woman her own sister, then our pews will be filled and our pastors will rejoice. In these days we need a genuine wave of sane Christlike evangelism, which should find expression in each man seeking out his own brother. When you begin to win others to Christ you find that you have an endless chain. You win a boy to Christ and you may shake a continent. Only God himself knows where the work will end."

We have known timid Christians who from the moment they became personal workers and won one soul were transformed into the most courageous of men. Their eyes were suddenly opened to the tremendous spiritual possibilities before them. They realized the meaning of the words "He that winneth souls is wise," and why it is that, as Daniel wrote, "they that turn many to righteousness shall shine as the stars forever and ever." There is a great and abiding joy in this work which many Christians miss, either through self-consciousness or neglect of opportunities. Every true-hearted man and woman can be and should be an evangelist. However small the field, however meagre the opportunities, do not neglect them. You may never go abroad to heathen lands, nor even travel far from your own home, but there is personal work to be done right in your own circle which, if undertaken heartily, will never fail to bring you the richest of blessings.

Promoting Peace on Earth

FOR three weeks past THE CHRISTIAN HERALD has opened its columns to the views of those who stand foremost in various fields of public activity, concerning the Peace Movement. Their letters, the last instalment of which appears in this issue, have taken a wide range. Our Symposium has truly included "many men of many minds"—men prominent in statesmanship, in education, in the pulpit and on the lecture platform. Differences in denomination or in political opinion have all been laid aside. Yet it is surprising to note the essential unanimity in all the views that have been expressed in these letters. With a few notable exceptions, the conviction is clearly general that we have already entered the era of world-peace, although as yet we may be only in the initial stage. Practically all hold that the Church can exert a commanding influence in advancing the Peace movement; but even the pastors themselves admit that the Church, to be consistent, must preach a whole Peace Gospel and make its acts agree with its profession.

This is the position taken by THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. There can be no middle ground. And in no better way can the Church hasten the coming of the Kingdom of Peace than by advocating the general extension of local Peace Circles, a beautiful and patriotic work begun by THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, and one which is now growing at a remarkable rate throughout the country. These Circles are the ideal agency for the propagation of Peace principles among the rising generation. We trust to see in the near future Peace Circles in active operation in every town, village and hamlet. There is no cause that should be more productive of enthusiasm than this. The Peace Circle teaches loyalty of the better sort, patriotism on the highest plane, cultivation of the qualities and virtues that make good, sound, earnest Christians and the very best kind of citizens. We strongly urge those readers who have not already taken steps to organize Circles in their neighborhoods to do so now and thus become factors in this great Christian crusade which has in it the richest promise of divine blessing and a glorious fruition. While the complete accomplishment of "Peace on earth and good will toward men" must come from a higher Power than ourselves, it is surely within our province to do what we can to prepare the way. While we pray: "Thy Kingdom come," let us labor to make plain the way for its coming, and so we shall be serving God's purposes and making the world better and happier.

China's Sad Plight

NEWS cabled to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD several weeks ago by a missionary correspondent at Wuhu, conveying intelligence of terrible floods in the Yangtse River valley, has been fully confirmed by the press dispatches. Hundreds of square miles of rice and grain fields are submerged. Added to the widespread suffering from this vast inundation is the lamentable fact that nearly 100,000 persons have perished by drowning. As in former calamities of the same sort, the survivors are leaving the inundated sections and crowding the roads leading to the cities, clamoring for food. Our missionaries are already being besieged with appeals to take in more orphan children, whose parents have been victims of this latest disaster. China is making provisions from her own resources for the flood sufferers, but it is easy to foresee that the orphanages will have to bear an added burden for which they are totally unprepared. Any help rendered to them now would go further in lightening their load of care and responsibility than if given later. American engineering skill is now to be engaged in dealing with the gigantic problem of reconstructing the water system along the Yangtse Valley. If this can be done successfully it will be a great source of material blessing to the people of that ancient empire.

The Greater Heroism

FROM time immemorial the world has lauded its heroes, though the types of heroism it has worshiped have been as diverse as their rewards. At the dawn of history man almost deified such conquerors as the Pharaohs and Alexander. Greece and Rome placed their laurels on the brows of the heroes of the stadium and the amphitheatre. Physical prowess and perfection became their shibboleths. To-day the most highly prized decoration of all the world is the simple little bronze Victoria Cross which is awarded in England for the saving of human life under fire on the battlefield. That heroism which forgets self in its effort for others is now our standard.

Yet it does not stand alone. That humanity's heart still warms to the hero of brawn and endurance has been made plain by the acclaim that has greeted William T. Burgess, the Yorkshireman who recently swam the English Channel. With unwavering determination to duplicate Captain Matthew Webb's feat of thirty-six years ago, Mr. Burgess has persisted through fifteen failures; but on the sixteenth trial, after twenty-two and a half hours of battling the uncertain tides and currents of the Channel, after distressing illness occasioned by the motion of the water, and acute suffering from the salt which entered his eyes, he landed on French soil. The world casts its hat in the air and cheers such ability, endurance and perseverance. This feat gives the thrill of that physical power which h made and unmade nations.

While Mr. Burgess' success was still the absorbi topic of the street and the newspapers, a long t unpretentious procession bore to a last resting pla the remains of the heroine of the highest type, M Margaret Carey, of Brooklyn. Less than a sin column in the daily press told the story of how t woman, who had passed the years of middle life, r heroically to the call when from her doorstep in outlying section of the city she saw three childr standing where in a moment they must be crush under the wheels of an approaching railway tra Dashing from her own home to where the childr stood she reached them when the locomotive w but a few feet away. She hurled the children to place of safety, but before she could jump aside, t great engine, in spite of its emergency brakes, h hurled her to the rails and done its fatal wo This is the heroism before which the world stan in awed silence. This is the greater love whi forgetful of the laurel for its own brow, lays do its life for its fellows.

Will Canada Reject Reciprocity?

CANADA'S election, which will decide the fa of the reciprocity agreement with the Unit States, is close at hand, and Sir Wilfrid Lauri is making the campaign of his career in its l half. That he will succeed is the general beli of the party which he leads; but the foes of t measure are also extremely active and are maki a vigorous campaign, one of their chief argumen being that reciprocity will pave the way for anne ation. Apparently they are resting their wh cause upon the annexation bogy, thereby beggi the argument for greater markets and friend relations with their southern neighbors. Premi Laurier startled his hearers in his recent spee at St. Jerome by declaring that if his fight f reciprocity is defeated he will retire at once a forever from the political arena. "Rest to me," said, "is very sweet, and if defeated not a wo of reproach will pass my lips." It is not the no confident candidates are wont to utter in t heat of a campaign; but Sir Wilfrid knows Ca ada as few other men know it, and instead depressing his party on the eve of the battle, will probably have just the opposite effect a rouse their energies to new vigor.

General Note

—DURING THE RECENTLY closed session Congress passed a l authorizing the use of a site on a government reservation New York Harbor for the erection of a bronze statue comme orating the American Indian. The statue is to be erected a New York merchant at his own expense. The Secretary of W and Secretary of the Navy are named as members of a committ to select the site.

Contents of this Number

Wednesday, September 20, 1911

	PAGE
Our Mail-Bag	922
The Passing of the Pueblos (Illustrated) By John L. Cowan	923, 939
A Fool's Verdict. Sermon By Rev. Wallace MacMullen, D.D.	924, 925
The First Congress of Races By Lucia Ames Mead	925
Floods and Revolt in China (Illustrated)	926
Present Conditions in Mexico (Illustrated	926
Ocean Grove's Greatest Love-Feast (Illustrated) By Mary Barton Cookman	927
Summer's Last Holiday at Mont-Lawn (Illustrated)	927
OUR EDITORIAL FORUM	928
THE BIBLE AND NEWSPAPER (Illustrated)	929
A Summer School in the Balkans (Illustrated) By M. N. Poppoff	930
Some Memories of the Maine (Illustrated By Charles M. Pepper	931
Chats in My Veranda Nook (Illustrated) By Margaret E. Sangster	932
Our Boys and Girls (Illustrated) By Miss Janet Porter	933
Preachers on World-Peace. Symposium	934, 935, 936
"Daisy Don't." By Eleanor H. Porter	937, 938
Peace Circles Still Growing	939
Devouring the Word of God	940, 941
Sunday School Lesson, by Dr. and Mrs. W. F. Crafts
The Fight for the Child	942
Young People's Societies	943

THE BIBLE AND NEWSPAPER

Conducted by FERDINAND C. IGLEHART, D.D.

Notable Labor Day Parade

T WAS ideal weather on Labor Day in New York City, and the annual celebration was a memorable one. Between forty and fifty thousand people, including five hundred women, marched down Fifth Avenue from Central Park, where the procession started about ten o'clock, to Washington Square, where it ended at two o'clock. Although half million of the inhabitants of Manhattan Borough had gone out of the city to celebrate, they were not missed, as hundreds of thousands of spectators lined the streets to see the procession and joined in enthusiastic applause as it passed. Matthew A. McConbille was the Grand Marshal. At the head marched Chief Inspector Max Schmittberger of the Police Department with forty men. Every conceivable organization of workers was represented. In the first division were the members of the societies connected with the theatrical profession, the united housesmiths and bridgemen, and inside ironworkers. In the second division were the steamsters, eccentric firemen, pattern-makers, and beer drivers. In the third division were the tunnel and subway constructors, the drivers, the machinists and engineers. The fourth division included the seamen, the Riggers' Union, the Typographical Union, the longshoremen, the electricians, the Women's Trade Union, and the journeymen tailors. In the fifth division was the Garment Makers' Union. The sixth division was a continuation of the Garment Workers' Union. The real feature of the parade was the women, most of whom marched with the Garment Workers' Union. The floats in which they rode attracted the greatest attention and elicited the warmest applause. In the place of the child-labor float there was a large platform holding two women, one representing life, and the other labor, clasping hands with a group of young women below them, dressed in white, yellow and blue. The Stars and Stripes were borne all along the line. There were a few red flags which the Socialists carried. A number of banners friendly to the MacNamara brothers were seen, and collections were asked and received for the defense of J. B. MacNamara. Labor Day has been made a legal holiday in a number of States, and will no doubt be made such by the rest of the States of the Union before very long. There are five million artisans in this country who, with their families, represent twenty millions. The farmers and their families make twenty millions more. The labor problem is becoming more and more one of paramount importance. It is a matter of congratulation that there is so much general intelligence and virtue in the working people of this country, which is a prophecy of the largest measure of national thrift and happiness. The nation felt the shock of the feet of the hundreds of thousands of united workingmen who marched down the streets of the various cities on Labor Day. There are bad men who inflame the workingmen, there are adventurers who disturb them, there are unwise counselors who advise them, but there are also good and able leaders, and the great heart of labor in America beats in harmony with the highest mental and moral ideas; and it is to be hoped that the irritations and frictions between capital and labor will result in a better understanding of each by the other, and a juster distribution of the product of human industry. The greatest blessing has been turned out of the severest curse:

In the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat bread. (Gen. 3: 19.)

Danced Himself to Death

A. E. Scott and Mamie Webb of St. Paul, Minn., determined to test each other's endurance at a public dance. They started in with the first set at six o'clock in the evening and kept at it constantly until one o'clock, when Scott said he had had enough. He led Miss Webb to the refreshment stand, ordered a glass of soda water for each, and as he was about to drink his, he fell dead. The excessive devotion to the amusements and vanities of life does for many people more slowly but as surely what it did for the foolish young man—it breaks down the body and in many instances also destroys the soul.

Even in laughter the heart is sorrowful; and the end of that mirth is heaviness. There is a way which seemeth right unto a man; but the end thereof are the ways of death. (Prov. 14: 13, 12.)

Removed Hell from Name

A man appeared before Judge Grant in the County Court of Brooklyn the other day asking to have his name changed. It was Otto H. Hell, a confectioner of Broadway, Brooklyn. Mr. Hell had carried his name for thirty-six years, but felt that its annoyance was so great to him that he would have it changed to Hill, which he did. He said his new name would sound better than the old one and look nicer on an electric light sign he was arranging to put in the front of his store. The word Hell in German means bright, which is the expression of that which is beautiful and honorable, the very opposite of the meaning of the word in English. Many men have taken hell out of their theology and out of their sermons and have undertaken in vain to banish it from God's universe. The practical thing is to get the hell of sin out of the individual heart, with the promise of future happiness and not of torment. Christ in his teachings removed all reason for debate over the question of future punishment.

These shall go away into everlasting punishment. (Matt. 25: 46.)

Caught Black Hand King

Giuseppe Costabile was arrested in New York City a few days ago with a bomb under his coat. "This fellow was king of the Black Hand," said Inspector Hughes. "His was the master mind," continued the inspector. "He was the leader of a dozen men who operated in parties of three or four. All of them are bad Italians. They would not stop at anything. Their business was to write threatening letters and extort money." This outlaw, who pretended to sell olive oil, would go into an Italian store pretending to sell oil, and taking the proprietor into the back of the store he would tell him that he must hand over ten, thirty, fifty dollars, and do it regularly, or his store would be blown up or he or some member of his family would be killed. Scores handed out the money immediately; a few refused, and the threats were speedily executed, with the fearful explosion of a bomb or the murder of a merchant. When the Black Hand chief was arrested he told the detective that his days were numbered, and he would see that he was killed as soon as he got out of prison. There has been almost universal terror among the Italian population of New York on account of the threats and murderous work done so constantly by the Black Handers. It seems incredible that the city authorities should have allowed this terrorism and wholesale slaughter so long. The bomb-throwing and the killing of jewelers and others merchants for money has for a long time been a weekly and almost daily occurrence. It is hard to get evidence against these men, because the moment any one testifies against them, he is immediately marked for slaughter, which penalty usually follows within a few days. The failure to give proper police protection to the large defenseless Italian population in New York has been a burning shame, a scandal and a parody on the efficiency of a republican form of government. Fortunately the police authorities have awakened to the horrible and disgraceful situation, and have determined in earnest to put an end to this wholesale murder for money. We trust that the king of the Black Hand has truly been caught, and that the rest of his band will also be apprehended, and that the hand of authority which the citizens have a right to expect will prove itself able to successfully cope with this and every form of crime. Marriage of theft and murder, as is illustrated in the crimes of the Black Handers, was referred to by Christ when he said:

The thief cometh not, but for to steal, and to kill, and to destroy. (John 10: 10.)

Toadstools' Deadly Work

Michael Loprete, a workman of West New Rochelle, N. Y., went with his son Michael, Jr., eight years old, to gather mushrooms. A basketful of the fungi was secured, and Mrs. Loprete cooked them for a Sunday supper. Instead of being mushrooms they proved to be one of the most poisonous kinds of toadstoods. She and her son ate plentifully of the dish, and were so poisoned that two physicians were unable to save them. The husband and father was so shocked at the awful death of his loved ones that he became insane, and, failing in an attempt to commit suicide by leaping from a window, he killed himself with a pistol, and his family was almost wiped out. The field mushroom is found in abundance in pasture lots, and after a heavy rain it can be gathered by the basketful. It is, when properly cooked, a delicious food. Unfortunately, the deathcup amanita is a toadstool which is often mistaken for the edible mushroom of the fields. Good judges, of course, can distinguish the difference between them, but many make the mistake, and many deaths result. The Department of Agriculture has published a pamphlet on the subject, and distinguished naturalists have written upon it, and such books should be carefully consulted by those in search of mushrooms. Toadstool poisoning has been so common that many who greatly enjoy mushrooms will not eat them for fear there may be some fatal mistake made. This deadly food reminds us of the poison vine that was put into the pottage by mistake in olden time.

And it came to pass, as they were eating the pottage, that they cried out, and said, O thou man of God, there is death in the pot. (II. Kings 4: 40.)

The Representatives of the Women's Trade Unions at Washington Arch

A Pause in the Labor Day Parade

A Summer School in the Balkans

THE sixth Summer School for Christian Workers in that youngest kingdom of Europe, Bulgaria, was held in the city of Varna, on the Black Sea, between August 2 and August 13, this year, and was marked by the greatest success which has yet attended any of these educational gatherings. This Summer School is held once in three years, alternating between the fields of the American Missionary Board in Southern Bulgaria, and that of the Methodist Board in the North. The whole kingdom of Bulgaria may be said to be divided—as far as Protestant Christianity is concerned—between the Congregational and the Methodist denominations, though there are also a few Baptist missionaries at work. South of the Balkan Mountains the Congregationalists are the strongest body, while on the northern side of the mountains the Methodists practically control the field.

The Summer School is held in the interests of both bodies, and the few Baptist representatives also joined the movement this year. It is a connecting link between the denominations. It is believed that, in the course of time, it will be the means of obliterating all denominational lines. The writer spared no effort to make this season's session of the School a splendid success, and he feels that his efforts were not in vain. The main object was to secure as large an attendance as possible and to make the meetings spiritually quickening to all who attended. He was enabled to secure for the delegates traveling accommodations at half fare, and this did much to increase the attendance. Over one hundred delegates, including all the pastors of Bulgaria, excepting two, were present, together with a number of missionaries, native Bible women, colporteurs, teachers, two pastors from Macedonia, and a number of laymen. The gathering was unprecede in Bulgaria. Never before had so many Chri workers, representing three distinct denominat gathered from the entire kingdom. Among notable features of the programme were the dresses of Rev. S. W. Ge Calkett of London, Eng who is secretary of the Lands Missions Aid Socie

Mr. Gentle-Calkett cam Bulgaria especially to len help in this Summer Sc He gave us five morning tures on the Bible, taking subjects as "Plans for Stu "Grounds of our Faith," "The Place of Prophe These lectures gave to all ent a new impetus and ins for Bible study. The s speaker gave us five eve talks of a more popular an spirational character, whic is hoped, have kindled zeal for the work.

On the two Sundays du which the convention wa session, preaching serv were held in a public garde the seaside. There is doubt that a large numbe the people who attended t services had never be heard the sweet story of Gospel.

The deep feeling which characterized all the serv was well expressed in the f well meeting, which was signed to be the starting-p of a great religious reviva Bulgaria. That is now greatest need of Europe's fant kingdom, and our deep sincerest hope is that kingdom of Bulgaria may come a kingdom for Christ

M. N. POPPOF

Sofia, Bulgaria.

Preaching in a Public Garden by the Black Sea

TOPICS OF INTEREST THROUGHOUT THE WORLD

—ANTHROPOLOGISTS OF THE University of California announce that they have found "the most uncontaminated aborigine in the known world." They have obtained from him, on phonographic records, over 300 words of his language, and expect to exhaust his scanty vocabulary within a week or so. The tribal and folk lore obtained from him thus far is considered of great value. The man, driven from the mountains by forest fires, was caught near Oroville a few days ago while attempting to steal meat. "Ishi," as the anthropologists call him, means "man" in the tongue of the Southern Yahi Indians, his tribe. His theory of the origin of fire connects intimately with the mythology of other California tribes and tribes east of the Sierras, and with that of the Greeks and Romans. Professor Waterman offered him a bow and arrow. The old man—Ishi is over sixty—brightened up and walked outside. A hat was put on a post one hundred feet away, and Ishi sped his first arrow through the centre of its crown. His method of handling the bow is said to be different from that found among any other tribes.

—TWO OF the largest American concerns, the United States Steel and American Bridge Corporations, have issued orders forbidding the use of tobacco by their employees while at work, on the ground that it is an injury to health.

—A REPLICA OF THE statue at Washington of General Baron von Steuben, as a gift of the American Congress to the German Emperor and the German nation, was presented to Emperor William at Potsdam on September 2 by Representative Richard Bartholdt, of St. Louis, and C. B. Wolffram, of New York, the special American ambassadors appointed for the occasion. The unveiling of the statue was one of the central events of this year's celebration of the anniversary of the battle of Sedan, one of the principal national holidays in Germany. Mr. Bartholdt, who was introduced to the Emperor by the American Ambassador, Dr. Hill, made the speech of presentation. His majesty in his reply expressed the cordial thanks of himself and the German people to President Taft and the American people for "this beautiful monument."

—MR. WILLIAM T. BURGESS, a Yorkshireman, succeeded on S tember 7 in duplicating the feat of Captain Matthew Webb swimming across the English Channel. He was twenty-two a half hours in the water.

—DISPATCHES FROM Teheran, Persia, state that the force the ex-Shah, Mohammed Ali Mirza, suffered a crushing feat on September 6 at Im zadeh-Jafar. Arsch ed Dov one of the leaders of the re was wounded and taken oner. The ex-Shah lost ei men killed, 400 wounded, eleven captured.

—PLANS FOR the erection a wireless station of suffic power to allow steamers pl between Europe and Americ keep in constant and direct c munication with land, have l formulated by Mr. Marconi, has recently been conduc experiments at St. Johns, N foundland. The erection of station will, it is expected, begun in a few weeks, and completion will make St. Jo the main distributing point wireless messages between E land and America. Mr. M coni left for England on S tember 6 to make final arra ments.

—THE ODD spectacle of United States Government the role of second-hand j dealer was presented on S tember 5 when eleven bid competed for the scrap m relics of the machinery used the French Panama Canal C pany in its attempt to di canal across the Isthmus, which the Government wishe clear away before the water is completed. The scrap, sc tered along the Canal line, c sists of locomotives, dump c tanks, barges, and miscellane junk, weighing from 45,000 120,000 tons. The succes bidder must remove it wit three years. The highest was made by a Chicago firm was about $700,000.

Settling Great Britain's Labor Troubles

THE negotiations between the union laborers of Great Britain and the railway companies, which were inaugurated at the suggestion of Hon. David Lloyd-George, Chancellor of the Exchequer, are receiving the heartiest support of the labor organizations. The accompanying photograph, taken at Unity House, London, shows the Joint Executive Committees representing the Amalgamated Society of Railway Servants, the Amalgamated Society of Locomotive Engineers and Firemen, and the General Railway Workers' Union in session for the consideration of the various phases of the impending readjustment of the scales of wages and of working conditions. Mr. A. Bellany, J. P., President of the Amalgamated Society of Railway Servants, is the presiding officer of the meeting, and was one of the signatories of the settlement agreement, which was the outcome of the first meeting in British history of the railway directors and the union leaders.

SOME MEMORIES OF THE "MAINE"

The "Maine" Making Her Last Entrance to Havana Harbor — Funeral of the "Maine's" Victims — The Wreck as It Appeared in February, 1898

By CHARLES M. PEPPER

THE news which has come from Havana day by day regarding the Maine stirs a thousand memories. It was my good fortune, or perhaps my ill fortune, to watch that proud battleship as she came into Havana Harbor, to see the wreck in the first days after the awful explosion, to follow some of the victims of the disaster to the beautiful Colon Cemetery, to know something of the investigations made to determine the cause of the explosion, to possess some mementoes from the ill-fated vessel, and to take part in many of the events that came after the calamity which was one of the causes that involved two nations in war.

My room in the Inglaterra Hotel adjoined that of Consul-General Fitzhugh Lee. One afternoon we were standing on the balcony looking down the Prado and past Morro Castle out to sea. The Maine came in sight. She was on a friendly mission. General Lee and I watched her enter the narrow harbor, and wondered to each other how her presence would be taken by the Spanish population of Cuba, which was then much irritated toward the United States because of our efforts to improve the conditions which were caused by war.

Officially the Maine was welcome. On the part of the representatives of the Spanish Government there was no sign of displeasure and many of the Spanish residents of Havana expressed themselves as satisfied with the presence of the American warship in the harbor. The Cubans were, of course, delighted. On the part of some of the Spaniards there was sullenness, but no open mark of resentment.

The usual courtesies were exchanged between Captain Sigsbee and the officials who were trying to govern Cuba on behalf of Spain. There were also some informal and unofficial courtesies on the part of the Cubans not openly identified with the insurrection. I remember a breakfast at the Yacht Club in the beautiful suburb of Marianao. Captain Sigsbee and many of the officers were present, as was Consul-General Lee. It was a pleasant occasion.

A little later, I went for a trip to the interior with the purpose of going out among the insurgents and learning something of the actual conditions. At a little railway station in Santa Clara Province the station agent, who was also the secret representative of the insurgents, whispered to me that there had been a great calamity in Havana, that the Maine had been blown up. Telegrams had also been sent me from Havana but they were not delivered. That night I spent at the station, where there was also a Spanish regiment quartered. The best sleeping accommodations I could get were in the barn. A troop of guerrillas, that is, half regular Spanish soldiers, formed part of the camp. The news was evidently in circulation among the Spanish troops, but I am bound to say that I only heard of one expression of satisfaction, which was when a minor officer called exultingly to a lady that the Yankee warship had been destroyed.

A Scene Near Colon Cemetery, Havana

I returned to Havana the next night. In the café of the hotel Captain Sigsbee and Consul-General Lee were seated together. I shall never forget Captain Sigsbee's greeting. "My ship has been blown up," was all he said as he grasped my hand.

The hull was there in the harbor, mournful evidence of the complete destruction of the Maine. The work of securing the bodies of such victims as had been blown into the water was already under way. February 17, 1898, two days after the explosion, the funeral was held. It was in the late afternoon.

The Spanish Navy, through Captain-General Blanco, officially mourned. The flags were at half-mast and the public buildings were draped. The coffins containing the bodies were borne to the Ayuntamiento, or Municipal Building. There was a tribute from the Spanish Navy in Spanish colors with the simple inscription "The Navy Department to the Victims of the Maine." From the Havana Council there was a crown of silk ribbons laid on the coffins with the inscription "The People of Havana to the Victims of the Maine." Other tributes were from Americans, Cubans and Spaniards. The cortège that followed the coffins to the Colon Cemetery was a most impressive one. The streets were lined and everywhere was manifest profound but restrained emotion. It was sunset when the bodies were committed to the earth. Later came the recovery of more bodies and the work of the divers below the water. There was also the naval court of inquiry ordered by the United States, of which Admiral Sampson was president. The officers were quartered on the Montgomery, of which Captain Converse, the famous torpedo expert, was in command. Almost every day I had the privilege of visiting the Montgomery and talking over the developments. The report of the naval board is history and it can be read with special interest now in the light of what is disclosed in raising the Maine.

There came a day when the inquiry was ended, when the hulk had to be abandoned, and the Stars and Stripes withdrawn. A precious memento in my possession is a small piece cut from the last flag that floated over the Maine. It came from Captain Wainwright, who in the war that soon followed, in command of the Gloucester, showed how he and his fellow officers on the Maine thought her destruction should be avenged.

After the brief war between the United States and Spain was ended and the island of Cuba, by grace of the United States, was free, the Maine continued to be a sad memorial of the events which had been forerunners of the war. It was the first sight that visitors to Havana looked for. It will be good for Cuba, for Spain, and for the United States when the work of our army engineers is completed and the wreck is removed. I am one of those who believe that no question of expense or utility should prevent the United States from exhausting every possible means to determine the real cause of the explosion. My own belief always has been that it was from without.

AMONG THE WORKERS AT HOME AND ABROAD

—Rev. Z. Charles Beals in writing from Wuhu, China, just before the present great floods took place in that district says: "We have just held a series of good meetings. At the close eleven of the academy young men and fourteen of the church congregation professed Christ by baptism. There are others at the out-stations waiting. The heathen are finding God. We are building a large building, a Bible school and academy, where we shall prepare students for evangelists and colporteurs. The money contributed by The Christian Herald friends last year, $636, will be used for a wing to the building, and it will be called after the paper. We only wish it could be made up to $1,000 so as to furnish it as well."

—Cynthia Westover Alden, the founder and President of the International Sunshine Society, writes to The Christian Herald: "Our blind baby Billiken was brought from Kansas to our Arthur Home in Summit, N. J., by one of our ladies who found him there. He had been deserted by his parents and is deaf, dumb and blind. As no one knew in what State he was born, none of the States want to be responsible for his care. We have kept him as long as we can, so if there is any one who would like to help us keep the poor little waif right along, we would be very grateful and I would be glad to write to any reader who cares to know about poor blind little Billiken. Any gifts in aid of Billiken may be sent to The Christian Herald.

—The Seashore Divinity School of the M. E. Church South has just closed its summer session at Biloxi, Miss. About 150 ministers were present from the conferences of northern and southern Mississippi, Alabama and Louisiana, who took work in Sociology, and in the Old and New Testaments under the Rev. H. F. Ward, Leonidas Robinson and James M. Gray, the latter the dean of the Moody Bible Institute of Chicago. Dr. Gray's address, showing how the Word of God can be used expositorily, as an evangelistic appeal addressed to the hearts of men through their understandings rather than merely playing on their emotions, made a strong impression on the ministers as a reaction against sensational evangelism.

CHATS IN MY VERANDA NOOK

Happy Sundays for Children

By MARGARET E. SANGSTER

IN a recent visit to Mont-Lawn I was greatly impressed by the care that is taken to make the children happy on Sunday. The three hundred boys and girls who compose a Mont-Lawn family are as orderly and well conducted, as sweet and clean and wholesome looking as the children in your home. During the summer season three thousand children are your guests at Mont-Lawn, if you, as a member of the great CHRISTIAN HERALD household, are helping to sustain the splendid work that is carried on there. While Dr. Klopsch was living, Mont-Lawn was his peculiar pride and the joy of his heart. The spirit which he put into the undertaking is immortal. Every one of the Mont-Lawn staff treats the little children of the tenements, as they come and go, with individual interest and the kindest and gentlest speech and manner. No rough words are heard, no harsh commands are uttered, and the influence of the place is cheering, uplifting and educational. Ten summer days spent at Mont-Lawn by a child whose dwelling is in a crowded quarter of New York where there is little sunlight and no room to play, are remembered through the year and form a bright episode in child life.

I must tell you about the Sunday mornings at Mont-Lawn, where groups of children, gathered around affectionate teachers, listen to Bible stories, sing hymns and repeat verses. On Sunday afternoon there is a service in the Children's Temple, and again the children sing so sweetly and with so much expression that to hear them is a delight. They are addressed by ministers and other visiting friends, and as they march out by the different exits from their own pleasant service, their faces glow and their looks are tokens that they have found something blessed and precious in God's day.

Keep a thought of Mont-Lawn in mind, remember it in your prayers and give it what aid you can afford.

For our children at home, the Sabbath should be a day eagerly anticipated and fully enjoyed. The traditions of an austere past to some extent marred the Sabbath in some homes that were otherwise well ordered on that day. In the retrospect, the quietness, freedom from strain and even the undue strictness of such Sabbaths are in agreeable contrast to the reckless haste and waste of our present-day methods. A child should not be forbidden to play with her dolls on Sunday, her doll being to her what the baby is to its mother. No mother is forbidden to kiss her baby on Sunday and to smile at its prattle and hug it to her breast. Why then compel a little girl to forego her maternal care during the whole of a Sabbath day? An active little boy may be permitted to amuse himself in a quiet way with a picture puzzle, if he cannot be engrossed in a book. Parents must use discretion, keeping in the foreground the idea that the sacred day means, first of all, rest to the soul, combined with worship of the Father in heaven and a tender rebinding of earthly affections. The children who are in the formative stage of life are being trained to keep hallowed our priceless American Sabbath.

. . .

Women in Council

The first letter sent us for this week concerns the important question of gathering the whole family into the church. Our friend writes very sensibly on the subject.

"I feel that almost no subject is so important in America at this hour as the bringing of the whole family into the same church. All my children, for example, are church members, but they belong to different churches. When father is in one church, mother in another and grandparents somewhere else, the children naturally become scattered. The ministers are in the minority, but they can use their influence to promote unity.

"J. C. P."

I am afraid that we throw too heavy a burden on our pastors. Whole families will never be assembled under the same denominational banner or meet for worship in the same church edifice while one parent habitually attends one church and the other goes elsewhere. Father and mother should be in unity in this matter.

The next letter comes from the wife of a clergyman, one who is doing her best to be his helpmate.

"Two reasons account for empty pews. Church members are not invariably earnest Christians, and ministers are not always so faithful as they should be. In these days there is very little family prayer. Even in the homes of ministers family worship is not always observed. Ministers are too much in fear of giving offense to members of the congregation, so it comes to pass that they do not treat with enough plainness and they fail to give solemn warning in private to those who are negligent, backsliding or living wrong lives. I am a minister's wife and am not strong, but I do all I can to help my husband in his work. If ever the dream of co-operative housekeeping shall come true in a practical way it will be a real boon to me.

A. T."

. . .

Fashions in Names

MR. WILLIAM DE MORGAN has bestowed on his winsome little heroine, the child of Blind Jim in It Never Can Happen Again, the homely name of Lizerann. One does not find this name popular or even common today, but many of us can remember when Eliza Ann, Mary Jane, Ann Elizabeth, Sarah Jane, and the like, were as thick as blackberries in summer in the groups of children on their way to school. These names in conjunction are not much appreciated by mothers in the twentieth century. Anne, note the final e, and Katherine, note the k, are at present great favorites, though Ann and Catherine are considered commonplace. Little maidens are addressed by their stately names of Margaret, Elizabeth, Charlotte, Dorothy, or Jane, and the privacy of the family circle scarcely admits of Jennie, Maggie, and Lizzie as of old. Gladys, Beatrice, Priscilla, Mildred, Millicent and other pretty names are given to the babies of nineteen eleven, while Helen, Eleanor, Emily and Janet, with Ruth, Rebekah and Rosamond, are greatly liked. Gertrude, Grace and Alice are favorites too. Hannah, Martha and Phœbe are somewhat out of date. Effie is seldom heard, but Euphemia, of which it is the diminutive, is coming into notice once more. Florence and Jessie, Frances and Cecilia are names of which no little girl need be ashamed. Susan is never a common name, and neither is Pauline, although both are pleasant titles for a girl to bear.

As for the laddies, they can do no better than to wear the good plain names of John, Richard, Thomas, Harold, Frederick, Felix, Charles, etc. A good idea in naming boys is to call them by a family surname. To give either girl or boy a name that later its bearer may regret because of its lack of euphony, or for any other reason, is a mistake that parents should avoid.

. . .

To Sorrowing Mothers

There is always occasion to say a word of comfort to the mourner. The next letter should go straight to the hearts of any among us who are bereaved. Ought we not to be glad of that assurance of Scripture about our little ones here or there that "their angels do always behold the face of our Father in heaven"?

"May the mother whose darling lies in the cemetery not take thought that the highest order of angel has in charge the little children who have gone to the heavenly home? They are not lost. Mothers, overcome your grief. The soul shall emerge strong through suffering. Think and act lovingly in behalf of the child still with you. Resolve that your home shall be cheerful and put your sorrow in the background. Give the little girl a bright dress, and no a black one, let her doll have new clothes, encourage the boy to bring his friends into the house and in every way live as a Christian should, looking forward to blessedness by and by. For yourself carry sympathy to the sick, courage to the afflicted and light to those whose day is darkened. Forget yourself in ministering to others.

"F. M. D."

. . .

—E. G. T. It is not good form for a man to take hold of a woman's arm and pilot her through the street. He may offer his arm to an aged or infirm woman, and she may take it. Custom at present sanctions people in walking independently.

The Elks' Float, Winner of the Grand Prize in Asbury Park's Baby Parade

THE annual celebration of Labor Day at Asbury Park by the holding of a carnival and baby parade, has become an established custom. For the closing days of the beach season thousands gather at this popular Jersey resort and all join heartily in the celebration either as participants or spectators. In the parade children from all parts of the country appear in contest for the prizes which are awarded for the cleverest and most beautiful floats and costumes. "Carnival" has but few permanent homes in America, and the annual Children's Day at Asbury Park is one of its most distinctly unique forms.

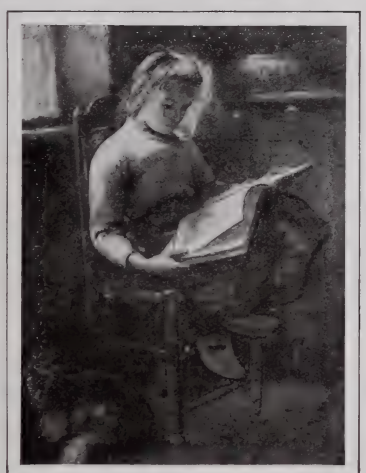
Our Boys and Girls and Their Books

O MANY Cozy Corner boys and girls have asked for a Library article. Some of our girls want to start small home libraries of their own, and write for advice and suggestions; others are at sea in public libraries and among the Sunday School book shelves, and do not know what books to "take out." These write and ask for lists of books that they may choose from. Still others have already started collections of books they especially like. "Tell me what company you keep and I will tell you what you are," says an old Spanish proverb. Tell me the books you read and I will tell you what you are likely to become, the proverb might have said, so inseparable are one's taste in books and one's character.

The Great Stone Face

NATHANIEL HAWTHORNE, whose Tanglewood Tales and Wonder Books every one should own, in his almost matchless story The Great Stone Face, tells of a boy who grew up under the shadow of a noble granite profile on a mountainside. Into the great nature-wrought image he reads day after day all that is noblest and best in human character. The Great Stone Face becomes his highest ideal of a man, and loving it he grows to be like it. Such is always the result of companionship with the great and the good.

The story of The Great Stone Face with its vast underlying truth might well be the cornerstone of every home library. And do you know this, my girls and boys—it is during the first twelve or fourteen years of your life that you may best become acquainted with much that is grandest and noblest in literature.



For Example

The stories of the Old and New Testaments, the great legends and hero tales of the world, and the so-called classics, that have stood the supreme test of being beloved of boys and girls and grown-ups alike, are the world's best books, and nowadays they can be had by almost any one.

There was a time when books were owned only by the very rich, and longer ago still, when there was no printing, every book was made by hand and belonged to the church. All through Italy and Spain you are shown splendid handmade Bibles beautifully bound and decorated on every page; they were made by monks, who sometimes spent a whole lifetime copying and decorating one volume. You may be sure there were no children's libraries in those days.

But to the business of lists and suggestions, which, I assure you, is no easy task.

My advice to any one who cares even the least bit for books, is this: Start right in by putting up a shelf or two in your own room. Planed pine boards can be bought for a few cents a foot, and wooden brackets are easily made; stain the shelf with walnut or rosewood, gather together what books you already own, put your name or initials clearly in each one, and stand them in a row on the shelf. You will be surprised at how charming the effect will be.

"How am I to sing your praise, Happy chimney-corner days?"

"Favorites on the Shelf"

SINCE you asked my help, I am going to take a short cut, so to speak, and give you a peep at the special row of my own earliest books, and you may determine then for yourselves why I call it "Old favorites on the shelf."

There is dear plump Old Mother Goose, her glory all undimmed and easily the queen of my nursery life. To this day I find myself in idle moments telling myself the tragedy of "Cock Robin," the adorable story of "Little Bo-Peep," or "Ding dong Bell, Pussy's in the Well," in French or German or English alike, for my mother believed in beginning early with languages. Nothing ever reaches the peculiar fascination that Mother Goose has always held over me.

To this day, mounted on her fluffy goose and crossing the disc of the yellow moon, she is the fairy godmother of all my dreams. Then come plenty of strong linen, almost indestructible, picture-books, and a large red volume where The Three Bears, Little Red Riding Hood, Hop-o'-My-Thumb, Cinderella, The Frog Prince, Puss in Boots, Jack the Giant Killer live. Gulliver's Travels, Grimm's Fairy Tales, Aesop's Fables, Pilgrim's Progress, Alice in Wonderland, The Story of the Bible, Ruskin's King of the Golden River, Edward Lear's Nonsense Rhymes and the Red and Green, the Yellow, the Blue fairy books compiled by Andrew Lang. Rab and His Friends—(was there ever such a dog story as that one, except perhaps A Dog of Flanders?) Then come the Peterkin Papers. I can remember this minute how we laughed over the funny Peterkins.

On the Next Shelf

There are Kingsley's Water Babies, Arabian Nights, Greek Heroes, The Adventures of Ulysses, The Princess and the Goblin. But there are too many in that shelf to mention here, so we will go on a little farther, where I see Little Women and the whole company of Miss Alcott's boys and girls, The Book of Golden Deeds, The Story of Roland, The Knights of the Round Table, Robin Hood. Was there ever such a story of adventure and daring as the chronicles of Robin Hood and His Merry Men? I should love to play fairy godmother with her little gray cloak and come and live these tales of the history and romance of those long forgotten times over again with every one of you. But we must hurry on.

There are Pride and Prejudice, Shirley, Zenoni, Don Quixote, The Lamp-Lighter and Robinson Crusoe (easily the greatest story of adventure ever written). Then come David Copperfield, Dombey and Son, Old Curiosity Shop and Barnaby Rudge. Ah, the appetite I had for Dickens in those old school-girl days! Romola, Middlemarch, The Mill on the Floss. For a long while I loved Maggie Tulliver in that story better than any one else. The Vicar of Wakefield, The Man Without a Country, The House of the Seven Gables and The Alhambra. How well I knew the wonderful stories of the battles of the Moors and the Christians before ever I went to Spain or visited their famous castle.

There is hardly a girl among you older ones, who if you have not already read them, would not love, for a time at least, over and above almost all the others, Lorna Doone and The Cloister and the Hearth. Every one of you should read Henry Esmond, Vanity Fair, The Light of Asia and The Light of the World. But already my list is too long; I shall have to put off until another time other lists, and perhaps next week I shall be confiding to the Cozy Corner boys the titles of my books on a shelf, which I call "In My Tomboy Days."

Little People's Corner and a Prize Contest

AUTUMN

The morns are meeker than they were,
The nuts are getting brown;
The berry's cheek is plumper,
The rose is out of town.

The maple wears a gayer scarf,
The field a scarlet gown.
Lest I should be old-fashioned
I'll put a trinket on.

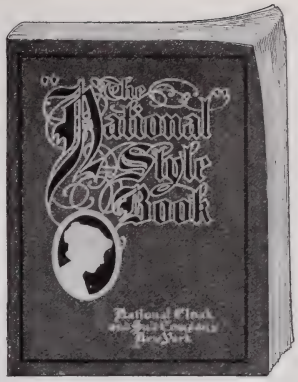
EMILY DICKINSON.

THE REBUS

Guess the answer to this rebus and make a drawing of it and send to the Aunt in the Cozy Corner, Bible House, New York, before the 30th of September. The ten best answers will be rewarded by delightful interesting books for boys and girls up to fifteen years of age, and there will be twenty charming Cozy Corner prizes awarded to the little people for the twenty best drawings in order of merit.

"This way and that way with both little feet"

My first is as black as any coal;
My second's a little girl's name;
My third and my whole
Is a princess fair,
Who once had nothing
But rags to wear.



Good-Night Verse

Let us love one another, for love is of God. He that loveth not knoweth not God, for God is Love.

Lovingly and faithfully,

The Aunt in the Cozy Corner

Bible House, New York.

Fall Fashions Are Very Beautiful

"The prettiest in years," "the most becoming fashions in a generation,"—this is the story of the fascinating, charming styles for Fall.

Never have you seen more becoming garments than the new "NATIONAL" coats, never were designed more grace giving, fascinating dresses and waists than your "NATIONAL" Style Book Shows. And of hats, Paris has sent us designs of unusual beauty.

Therefore, to know all these new styles, to see what is to be worn in New York, you should, right now, send for your own free copy of the "NATIONAL" Style Book.

But add to all this interest in the new and beautiful styles, the saving "NATIONAL" prices offer, and it becomes a matter of personal advantage that you send for your Style Book pictured above.

Just say, Send me My "NATIONAL" Style Book, Free. It will be sent you gladly by return mail.

Your "NATIONAL" Style Book Shows

Waists, 98c. to $10 — Hats, $2.98 to $15
Skirts, $3.98 to $15 — Furs, $2.25 to $42.50
Dresses, $10 to $30 — Coats, $10 to $50

Also a full line of Underwear, Hosiery, Scarfs Veils, Raincoats, Gloves, Sweaters, Leather Goods, Jewelery and of Misses', Boys' and childrens' wearing apparel.

"NATIONAL" Tailored Suits

Made to Measure

$15 to $40

Each Made-to-Measure Suit is actualy cut and made to order, and we guarantee each suit to fit perfectly and to be satisfactory in every way or we will cheerfully refund your money.

The "NATIONAL" Policy

We prepay postage and express charges on all our goods to any part of the world. You may return any "NATIONAL" garment not satisfactory to you and we will refund your money and pay express charges both ways.

In writing for your Style Book, Be sure to state whether you desire samples of materials used for "NATIONAL" Made to Measure Tailored Suits. Samples are sent gladly, but only when asked for—and they are well worth asking for.

NATIONAL CLOAK & SUIT CO.,
218 West 24th Street, New York City

Preachers on World-Peace

Notable Contributions to Our Symposium From Many Well-Known Ministers

TO-DAY THE CHRISTIAN HERALD publishes the third instalment of its Symposium on World-Peace and Arbitration. The two earlier instalments were devoted to the personal views of leading statesmen, including President Taft, State governors, United States senators and representatives, leading educators, generals and admirals and financiers. The present instalment is devoted more especially to the views of well-known pastors of various denominations, college presidents and others. As in the former publications, we prefer to let the letters speak for themselves.

. . .

Rear-Admiral V. L. Cottman Says the Time for Reduction of Forces Has Not Yet Arrived

The time is not yet opportune for any reduction of army or navy by our own or other governments as a step in the direction of peace. We must have an adequate trained military force, maintaining especially an adequate navy, trained and prepared for immediate action.

A nation which stands for disarmament and general reduction of military and naval forces, and which has already taken steps to that end, could not exert the same influence for peace as a nation fully equipped for warlike emergencies. In some countries there is a danger, in zealously espousing the peace programme, of lowering the patriotic spirit of their people.

V. L. COTTMAN.

Navy Yard, Puget Sound, Washington.

. . .

Bishop John H. Vincent (Meth.) Writes That the Church Should Be an Important Factor in Peace

The present agitation for international arbitration and world-peace is undoubtedly of the intelligent and earnest Christian heart. The Church should pronounce on the subject with such emphasis, sustained by such convincing reasons, as to make an impression on all statesmen. An international court, if able to enforce its judgments, would insure almost universal and enthusiastic approval.

I have the hope, and with increasing confidence in it, that we are now in the beginning of the era of world-peace. To be patriotic it is not essential that a nation should cultivate the martial spirit. There is not the slightest danger of that spirit being lowered. The Christian attitude on the subject is "Peace on earth and good will to men."

JOHN H. VINCENT.

Chicago, Ill.

. . .

The Church Should Create Conscientious Peace Sentiment, Writes Rev. J. E. Davis (Christian Church)

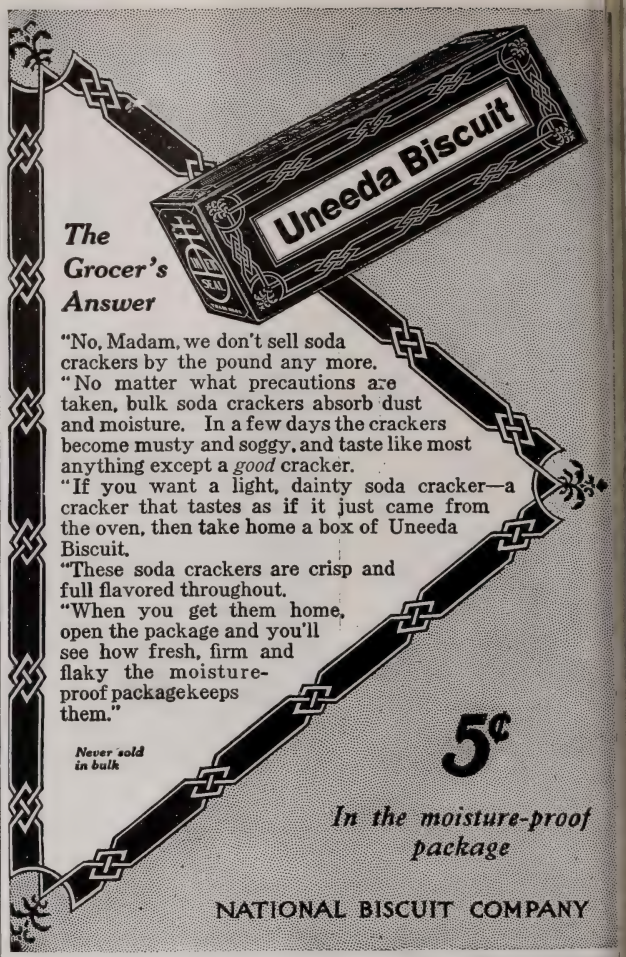
In the present agitation for world-peace, the churches of Christ may perform a useful service. There is hardly a community, howsoever remote, but has its church and some kind of public service during the year. These churches and their services have more to do with the formation of public sentiment than any other community function. Here then is the opportunity for the church to create conscientious sentiment that will serve to influence all legislation and public utterances arising either directly or indirectly from the life of that community. Such work as this cannot but produce practical results in the public life of its community citizens at the ballot box, in the work of its public school teachers, and in the service of those who may become State legislators, congressmen, or other officials. Peace organizations in conjunction with working churches could accomplish much by having public addresses on the subject at mass meetings of the church, or at brotherhood meetings. The circulation of tracts and peace literature at meetings of this kind would be a commendable activity on the part of every church peace organization.

The nations of the world are undoubtedly entering that world-peace period spoken of by Isaiah, when nations shall not learn war any more; that period of world-peace wherein the Bible declares the kingdoms of this world shall become the kingdoms of our Lord Jesus Christ. It is the period, I believe, just preceding the "great falling away." It is the period of Gospel supremacy brought about by the faithful evangels of the Cross.

The only national danger relative to the martial spirit of our country is that we should make the mistake of talking war, train standing armies for war, and go out to fight, when our cause could better be settled some other way. Our national danger is that in war we kill off our best, and degenerate our tribal stock by so doing, instead of conserving it.

Beatrice, Neb. J. E. DAVIS.

. . .



The Whole Civilized World Tending Peaceward, Writes Rev. A. H. C. Morse, D.D. (Bapt.), Brooklyn, N.Y.

This is the day which prophets and righteous men have desired to see. The hope for a world-wide peace is deep-seated in the heart. Poets and prophets have united to tell of a time when men should cease to learn the cruel arts of war, and when military instruments should be beaten into implements for agriculture and productive labor. Through commerce, travel and missionary effort the world has been unified, and all races are seen to be interdependent. The captains of commerce and industry have become captivated with the idea of peace. Every industry is crying for peace as an opportunity for co-operation. Economists and statesmen are all for peace, and that as simple men of intelligence. A man with a pencil and paper in hand, and an average degree of intelligence, can soon figure out that the investments of war are really investments in public poverty; that the war debts of the world are unjust mortgages against the incomes of future generations; and that the expense of maintaining armies and navies in time of peace is really an affront to the peace sentiments which now possess the world.

The churches of the country must now take the lead in maturing what they have already developed. Peace conferences cannot be too numerous. The pulpit and the press must be used to augment the present deep concern. And surely prayer is in accord with the world-wide desire for peace. Let the churches unite to pray and teach and develop public sentiment.

The Third Hague Conference will convene in 1915. There is certainty of a general world-treaty of international arbitration upon all great questions among all the great nations before that date. That will open the way for large disarmament. Meantime there is one thing that ought to be immediately effected: An agreement among the greater nations on financial neutrality. Let this be done, and nations will not be able to prosecute a war from sheer inability to raise a war loan from a neutral power. There is an especial obligation upon America. The European nations are so packed together that no one of them can well become a leader

Continued on next page

All-Wool Dress Goods Direct from the Mill—Fresh Off the Loom at ⅓ Saving.

Tilton Weaves have been standard for over 60 years. Very likely you have used them and know how thoroughly satisfactory they are. Our line this year shows all the new, fashionable patterns and colors—some of them are the most attractive we have ever produced.

For your new dress, suit, coat or skirt, be sure to see our samples.

Why It Pays To Buy Direct From Us

First, you save at least one-third, because we give you the discount allowed to wholesale and retail merchants. Next, you get absolutely fresh goods, made from virgin wool, no shoddy or "extract." You are sure of reliable goods, and have a wide selection of the latest and best patterns from which you select at ease in your own home. All our grades and weights are plainly marked so that you know exactly what you are getting.

Generous Samples Free Showing standard patterns, and the new Scotch effects, the new Blue Grays, Blueberry Blues, Heathers, Tans and Grays, also silk Pencil Stripes and Hair Lines. All fabrics 55 inches wide.

TILTON WOOLEN MILL (Established 1842) 103 Mill St., Tilton, New Hampshire

The Church's Great Opportunity

Continued from preceding page

r all the others. Therefore it is iat providence has appointed Amer-a to lead in this world-wide move-ent for international peace. And far she has wisely led.

A. H. C. MORSE.

Brooklyn, N. Y.

. . .

he Era of World-Peace Begun, Writes Dr. L. S. Rowe, Professor of Political Science, University of Pennsylvania

The agitation for arbitration and orld-peace is as deep-seated as the ovement which has resulted in the stablishment of order and settled rule ithin modern civilized communities. he development of international re-tions is taking the same course as ie growth of national or domestic ffairs, to-wit: from the rule of force the rule of law. World organiza-on is a necessary prerequisite to aking this movement "institutional," nd thus emancipating it from the un-ertainties of individual effort.

To give the international court ower to enforce its judgments would erve to guard against acts of out-wry by the parties to the treaty. overnments not parties to the treaty ould also be deterred from commit-ng acts of aggression, by reason of ie growth of the spirit of legality hich the existence of such a court ould foster.

There is every indication that we re at the beginning of an era of orld-peace. The struggle for social etterment, national and international, ill furnish ample field for the devel-pment and exercise of those virile ualities which were formerly bred in ie atmosphere of armed conflict.

Philadelphia, Pa. E. L. ROWE.

. . .

elf-Defense and Patriotism Cannot Be Eliminated, Writes Rev. Dr. Ely, the Well-Known Philadelphia Pastor

The churches can best assist by ractising peace methods among their embers and between denominations, nd ministers should both practise and reach this subject everywhere. The pirit of peace must precede all ethods of securing it, hence I fear hat a permanent or authoritative ribunal with fixed laws of action will e either ignored or assailed. In my udgment, a temporary tribunal, cre-ted from time to time, would serve he end desired.

We are in the era of peace, but the rinciples are not yet reduced to ords, and hence great care must be xercised lest mere formal ceremonial etters may supplant, grieve or even rive away the real spirit of peace. uthority must rest somewhere, and hus far we have found it nowhere xcept upon the head and shoulders of hrist. The spirit of self-defense nd protection is a necessary element n patriotism. The world has not eached a point of mutual confidence nd understanding. While the meth-ds of peace are more effective and ore desirable than the methods of ar, we are nevertheless to be pre-ared for self-defense, and may be alled upon any time to forcibly de-end the generally accepted standards f justice. JAS. B. ELY, D.D.

Philadelphia, Pa.

. . .

n Opportunity for Some Nation to Become a Messiah of World-Peace, Writes Rev. H. P. Lyman-Wheaton (Episcopal)

The greatest power in the world to-ay is the pulpit. Therefore let the ulpit sow the fruit of righteousness n peace for the individual, for society, or the nation, that makes for peace. et all the servants of God unite in rayer, that no selfish interest or align influence may be suffered to ar the efforts which are being put orth in the cause of universal peace.

I believe we are now in the begin-ning of the era of world-peace. Apart from the consideration of all Biblical prophecy, the orgy of blood and anguish through which the na-tions have passed is of itself more than enough to make them form a solemn compact never to permit the sword to be drawn again between any two peoples on the earth on any pre-tense whatsoever. It is, moreover, evident that the present race in mili-tary and naval preparations can only end in bankruptcy, or in the speedy precipitation of the bloodiest inter-national struggle that the world has ever seen. Civilization cannot much longer afford to carry the burden which the selfishness, materialism, and mutual distrust of nations impose upon it.

Very few people, I imagine, would care to suggest that any one nation should take steps to disarm before the rest. But I am confident that the nation that was great enough to make such a venture, and stake all its fu-ture upon it, being willing to be cruci-fied, if need be, for the sake of it—the Messiah of a new and nobler in-ternationalism—would in the end come to occupy the most glorious place in the long roll of nations.

H. P. LYMAN-WHEATON, D.D., PH.D.

Ridgefield, N. J.

. . .

Establish Universal Good-Will and Disarmament Will Follow, Writes Rev. Joseph Hamilton, Toronto, Canada

Every church in sympathy with the peace movement might hold a meet-ing, and pass such resolutions as would strengthen the hands of those who will take any part in making the movement practically effective. The minister of each church might preach a strong sermon on the subject.

We have been so long used to the necessity of cultivating a martial spirit and a martial training that they seem almost a necessity; but with the advent of universal, or even partial peace, we may well believe there would come developments in a new and wholesome direction. The Chris-tian ideal is the universal peace pre-dicted in the Scriptures. When there is universal goodwill there will be no difficulty about the abolition of arma-ments. JOSEPH HAMILTON.

Toronto, Can.

. . .

The Church Inconsistent in Favoring Peace, While Maintaining the Boy Scout Movement, Writes Dr. S. C. Swallow

"The true basis of patriotism in the highest sense," is found in the philoso-phy of Christ, embodied in the so-called Golden Rule, "Do unto others as ye would that others should do unto you."

The churches cannot consistently advocate international arbitration, so long as their individual members vote for candidates for public office who favor the establishment and mainte-nance of great armies and navies. Their very existence is a menace to universal peace. The "Boy Brigades" and "Boy Scouts," in so far as they partake of the martial form or spirit, though offsprings and wards of the church whose captain is the "Prince of Peace," are the conservators and promoters and perpetuators of the war spirit and hence of international strife. The remarkable and widely extended interest taken in the Boy Scout movement by the churches of nearly all denominations in America, indicates their zeal in following the example of the most warlike nations on the globe.

The boys are not to "question" or reason, for the commands of the Scout Masters are to be implicitly obeyed in demonstration of their soldierly qual-ities. And even the teachings of the

Continued on next page

I DO NOT hesitate to award Karo the preference above any other table syrup used in my household.

As an accompaniment to waffles and griddle-cakes it deserves all that can be said in praise of it. It is as clear and as sweet as honey and richer in consistency without the cloying quality that makes honey distasteful to some, and unwholesome if eaten freely.

I have also used Karo in the preparation of puddings and gingerbread, with satisfactory results. The candies made from it are pure and delicious.

Marion Harland

Karo is known and liked by more people than any other syrup in the world. 70,000,000 cans consumed in 1910. Your grocer has Karo—two kinds—

Karo (Extra Quality) red label—clear as strained honey—very delicate flavor.

Karo (Golden Brown) blue label—full rich flavor.

Send for the Karo Cook Book—50 pages, including 30 perfect recipes for home candy making. It's free—just send your name on a post card today to Corn Products Refining Co.

Dept. C New York P. O. Box 161.

Take This Good Job

on Sworn Statement of its Worth

YOU CAN do this—anywhere you live—if you get the chance. To begin at once, write today for this new proposition, proved wonderfully successful. No experience was necessary for these teachers, lawyers, salesmen, clerks, writers, business men—and women as well as men—who joined our selling organization, now making better incomes than they had before.

We show you sworn statements before notaries and voluntary enthusiastic letters from our representatives everywhere telling the money they are making—$25 to $50 a week and up—many at the rate of several thousand dollars a year.

Be your own "boss"—independent to work in the time you please. Work when you know you can make the most money.

Do this in part or all your time as Agent, Salesman or Manager

Let me send you the facts, sworn statements, etc., of the wonderful success of our agents who are making more money than they ever dreamed possible. As Harmon, of Texas, said: "The man who can't sell the Never Fail better go back to chopping cotton. He couldn't sell $10 00 gold pieces for $1 00." And it's true.

I want a good man or woman in every territory of the U. S.—as local agent for one county, or as general manager for a number of counties. This proposition offers an opportunity for you, to build up a splendid and permanent income. Hundreds of others are making a big success of this in their territories. No experience is necessary to start, but I want representatives who will do their best, who will treat me square, and who will follow plain, easy and helpful instructions I am organizing my selling force now, and I want you to begin at once

The NEVER-FAIL AUTOMATIC Razor SHARPENER

—So Much Talked About

No charge made for territory. Protection against others running over your field. Co-operation, assistance, personal attention to each man.

This is a new proposition. A positive automatic razor stropper—absolutely guaranteed to sharpen to a keen, smooth, velvety edge any razor—safety or old style—all the same. Handles any and every blade automatically. Just a few seconds will put it in perfect and better shape to give a cool, soothing, satisfying shave than can any expert hand operator, no matter how carefully he works. Men are eager to buy it. Women buy it for presents to men.

The possibilities are unlimited. We absolutely prepare you on how to start at once and make a great success for yourself and us. Investigate. Don't delay. Territory is going fast. Write today, and give the name of your county.

Address, Secretary, THE NEVER FAIL CO.,
1131 Colton Building, Toledo, Ohio

If You Like Home-Made Things

Make This Better Syrup at Home with little trouble and for half the cost. Make one gallon by simply dissolving 7 pounds of white sugar in 2 quarts of boiling water and adding one ounce of

Mapleine

(The Flavor De Luxe)

You can make any quantity of this delicious syrup as you need it. And the flavor—it's the extracted essence of goodness, healthful and irresistibly delicious.

Sold by grocers—35c for a 2-oz. bottle (Canada 50c). If your grocer hasn't it, send money order or stamps to Dept. F.

Crescent Mfg. Co.
Seattle, Washington

Send for "Mapleine Dainties," a recipe book telling how to use Mapleine for syrup, icings, ice cream, desserts, puddings, cakes, etc.

Peace Now the Church's Hope

Continued from preceding page

Bible, the pulpit and the Sunday School are subservient to the "unquestioned" commands of that unknown and unknowable quantity, till developed in the character of the boys, and known by name only as the "Scout Master." Well, that is militarism with a vengeance. The Church has become, through its Boy Scouts, not only the apologist, but the patron and promoter of militarism with all of its horrible possibilities. The Church in its resolutions says "Amen!" to international arbitration propositions, and in its Boy Scout propaganda it says "Amen!" to the cultivation of the war spirit. This being true, there is little hope of international peace through the agency of the Church of the Prince of Peace, the very name of which has become a misnomer if not a paradox.

Isaiah's vision was of a period when Christ's kingdom should be so established that "He should judge among the nations, and they should beat their swords into plowshares and their spears into pruning hooks; nation should not lift up sword against nation, neither should they learn war any more."

So long as the boys of the nation learn war, the authority of the Scout Master superseding that of the parents, and the mimic soldiers' camp and bivouac taking precedence of the sanctity of the home, and the authority of the Scout Master supplanting that of the Bible, so long will all talk of national disarmament be mere talk.

S. C. SWALLOW, D.D.
Harrisburg, Pa.

. . .

Martial Spirit Has Nothing to Do with Patriotism, Writes Prof. Gannett, Distinguished Scientist and Geologist

I consider the present agitation for international peace as deep-seated, permanent, and a fixed, universal desire of the human heart. It should be forwarded by the coalition of the most powerful civilized nations, for the purpose of preventing war anywhere. To give to the International Peace Court the power to enforce its judgments would produce an excellent effect. I believe we are now at the beginning of an era of world peace. It is not essential that a nation should cultivate the martial spirit. That spirit has nothing to do with patriotism. We can hardly call soldiers of fortune patriotic; but as long as wars are possible the martial spirit will be a necessity. HENRY GANNETT.
Washington, D. C.

. . .

Impose the "Truce of God" Upon the Whole World, Writes Rev. W. T. Dawson (Pres.), Newark, N. J.

I believe that the present arbitration proposals are a long step toward a world-peace. The churches can do much to help the movement (1) by the inculcations of the pulpit; (2) by organized support of the movement.

As an Englishman, I rejoice particularly at the drawing together of America and my own country. War between these two great branches of one race must henceforth be an absurdity and an impossibility, and America and England, if united, are strong enough to impose the "truce of God" upon the whole world.

Newark, N. J. W. J. DAWSON.

. . .

A Federation of World Parliaments to Meet Here in 1913, Writes Dr. W. O. McDowell

The era of world-peace is at hand, witness an authorization signed by a majority of the members of the present Congress (and expected to be signed by all) to be presented at the meeting of the Interparliamentary Union, by Hon. Richard Bartholdt, at its meeting in Rome, Italy, October 3-5 next. This authorization approves the invitation to be presented to the Interparliamentary Union to meet in this country as the guest of the United States and Canada in 1913.

War should be, and will be, outlawed as completely between the nations as it is between the States of the American Union, when the parliaments meet in the United States in joint session. The Hague Court can be developed to its possibilities for useful service by making it, by the legislative enactment of the united Parliaments of the World, the High Court of the world with full jurisdiction. W. O. MCDOWELL.
New York.

The National Suffrage Hymn

MRS. W. W. PENFIELD, one of the most beautiful and highly esteemed society women of New York, and a devoted woman suffragist, offered some weeks ago a prize of $100 for a national suffrage hymn. One hundred candidates contested for the honor, their verses only being open to the reading of the judges, while their names were hidden in sealed envelopes. On Saturday, August 26, the distinguished committee, of which Mrs. Ruth Litt was the chairman, decided that "The Ballot Song of American Women" had won the prize. The sealed envelope containing the name of the author was then opened, and many tears were shed when the touching fact was revealed that she was Miss Minetta Theodora Tailor of Newcastle, Ind., who died on July 26, five days after she had sent away the poem which has attained such eminence.

Miss Tailor was in frail health at the time, and the note enclosed with her nom de plume indicated her fear that she might not live much longer. It said, "I would be contented to pass on beyond, if I could carry with me the knowledge that I had written an acceptable anthem for the great cause which has always been so dear to me."

Miss Tailor graduated from De Pauw University and was for some years prior to her death associate professor of languages there. She spoke fluently forty-five tongues and dialects and has been employed by both our government and Great Britain in important translation work. She was the author of many books, and organized the Association of Western Writers, of which many distinguished men and women are members; was president for several years of the Indiana Federation of Women's Clubs; and was at the time of her death chairman of the Literary Committee of the General Federation of Women's Clubs—a woman of great attainments, wide human interests and intense devotion to everything which tended to elevate womanhood. Her anthem, which is inspiring and noble, is thus invested with a pathetic interest, which will appeal to all of her sex everywhere.

We quote a stanza and the chorus:

We are walking where the heroes all have trod,
A weary way where we can only plod;
But we're talking in the space
Where the martyrs took their place,
And our mighty shout is risen to our God.

Ye Powers of Evil, earth is not our own!
Women helping, you shall be o'erthrown.
And a better life shall rise
Than has gladdened human eyes,
And true peace shall blend the nations into one.

We the people! All the people! How it rings!
Justice broad and free, the living heart of things!
Sisters working for the light,
Brothers striving for the right,
We the people! All the people! How it rings!

About Remembering

By ELBERT HUBBARD

HENRY DICKSON
America's Foremost Authority on Memory Training and Principal Dickson School of Memory, Auditorium Building, Chicago.

FOR a long time I ha been promising mys to write up my go friend, Mr. Henry Dickso of Chicago, and I have n forgotten.

Mr. Dickson is teachi a Science or System, whi I believe is of more impor ance than the entire curric lum of your modern colleg

MR. DICKSON teach memory.

Good memory is nece sary to all achievement.

I know a man who is graduate of three colleges. This man is neith bright, interesting nor learned.

He's a dunce.

And the reason is that he CAN NOT REMEMBE He can not memorize a date or a line of poetry. H mind is a sieve.

Education is only what you remember.

Every little while I meet a man who has a memory, TRAINED MEMORY, and he is a joy to my soul.

The manager of a great corporation never misses a face. he sees you once the next time he will call you by name. H told me how he did it. He studied memory-training wi Prof. Dickson. He said a lot of nice things about Pr Dickson, that I hesitate to write here lest my good frie Dickson object.

This Dickson system of memory-training is very simpl If you want to enlarge your arm, you exercise it. The san with your mind. You must put your brain through a fe easy exercises to discover its capacity. You will be su prised how quickly it responds.

You do not know when you will be called upon to t what you know; and then a trained memory would help yo

To the man or woman whose memory plays tricks recommend that you write to Prof. Dickson, and if his fac do not convince you, you are not to be convinced.

Write today for FREE booklet and facts. Address

PROF. HENRY DICKSON
701 AUDITORIUM BUILDING CHICAG

"CRAFTSMAN

HOUSE PLANS FRE

Send 6 cents for a copy of "24 CRAFTSMA HOUSES," showing exterior and floor plans of 24 hous that cost from $900 up to build. To interest you in our mag zine, "THE CRAFTSMAN," our FREE HOUS PLANS, and in Craft articles, we will also send you beautifully printed 32-page booklet entitled "The Craftsma House." If you are interested at all, both of these books w be very useful to you.

"THE CRAFTSMAN IDEA" means real homes, n mere houses: it shows you how to save money on unsle partitions—how to avoid over-decoration, how to get wi sweeps of space (even in a small house), restful tones th match and blend—and enables anyone to always have beautiful and artistic home.

"THE CRAFTSMAN MAGAZINE" treats building, furnishing and beautifying homes—on art—n breiders—cabinet work—and kindred topics. In the Magazi each month are published the plans of two new and entire different houses. Already we have shown 125 houses, a you can have your own choice.

"CRAFTSMAN HOMES," by Gustav Stickley, 2 pages, beautifully bound and printed, treats on home buil ing, home making, home furnishings in full.

Edgar E. Phillips, Manager, THE CRAFTSMA
Room 265, 41 West 34th Street, New York Cit

Let Your Idle Money Safely Earn 5%

ASSETS of $2,300,000, conservative management, judicious investment of our funds, following the stringent regulations of the New York State Banking Laws, assure more than ordinary protection to our patrons, upon whose deposits we are paying 5% per annum. This is compounded semi-annually or remitted by check, quarterly or semi-annually, as preferred. Deposits are received personally or by mail, and funds may be withdrawn whenever desired, upon short notice. We have been established eighteen years and have patrons in every quarter of the world.

Write for particulars. Probably we can refer you to some one in your locality.

Industrial Savings & Loan Co.
2 Times Bldg., B'way & 42d St., New York

STUDY LAW

High-Grade Instruction by Correspondence

Prepares for the bar. Three Courses in College, Post-Graduate and Business Law. Nineteenth year. Classes begin each month. Send for catalog giving rules for admission to the bar of the several states.

Chicago Correspondence School of Law
553 Reaper Block, Chicago

"DAISY DON'T"

By ELEANOR H. PORTER

H, DAISY, don't!"

Always she had heard it, and from every one: father, mother, , brother, and Aunt Abby—from Abby the oftenest of all. No er then that, when the Lady with Smile asked her name, she an- ed:

aisy Don't."

aisy—Don't! Why, child, that be—your name!" fore she could answer and say, , ma'am, it is," mother came in. er had on her second-best gown her company smile, which proved the lady must be somebody, inh, so you've already met my little hter," began mother's best-com- voice; then it changed very ly to the everyday one. "Daisy, ! You musn't hang on the lady's s like that. It's very rude, dear." isy straightened up at once, her r to her lips—she had not meant rude.

h, Daisy, don't!" chided mother's again. "How often have I told not to put your finger in your h, dear!"

isy dropped her hand quickly; but rd the lady she turned somberly phant eyes.

ou see," they seemed to say, "my is 'Daisy Don't'!"

the Lady with the Smile did not ve it then, she certainly must have ved it later when she rose to go; Daisy found two warm arms close t her while two red lips were pering very, very softly:

ou poor, poor little Daisy Don't!" the Lady was not smiling now. there was such a kind, kind look lown in her eyes that Daisy did nind the loss of the Smile at all. terward Daisy saw a great deal of Smile and of the Lady, for they to live just next door. The Lady the minister's new wife, mother and must always be politely l "Mrs. Mason"; but even this y did not mind very much, for if lid have to say "Mrs. Mason," she l still think "The Lady with the e."

for her own name and what she called—never, after that first did the Lady call her "Daisy t"—which was really rather ge, when you come to think of it, he Lady had shown she knew the in that one minute just before went away that first day.

home it was still always "Daisy t." And always in the same h she was told something not to And there were so many of them se things she must not do! She not shout, or run, or sing—for She must not play tag with the s, nor swing on the pretty cur- in the doorway. She must not— ed, sometimes it seemed that there nothing she could do, except some greeable things which she must do. it was all so puzzling.

the Lady with the Smile, one she took her perplexity.

lease, why," she asked, dropping elf on the lowest piazza step and ing her words with grave care, use, why is it that if I like it, it's and if I don't like it, it's good?"

e Lady laughed and turned away least, she seemed to laugh; but she turned back, she seemed al- to be crying, and away down deep ar eyes was that kind, kind look Daisy loved.

ou poor baby! is it all quite so as that?" she asked. "What do mean, dear?"

isy sighed.

don't know as I can tell, 'zactly," dmitted, her brows puckered into own. "But—but all the things I are bad."

What things?"

"Why, running and playing, and calling 'Boo' at folks, and—and just being me; those are all bad things. But the others—taking baths, going to bed, and—and being a little lady—those are good things. Now why, please, isn't there any good things that —that I'd like to do?"

"Why, there are, dear. There must be."

Daisy shook her head. After a long pause she began again.

"It's the same about eating, too," she observed mournfully. "I'm tired of nootriment. I want things to eat. But nootriment is good, and things to eat is bad."

This time the Lady laughed outright.

"As if you didn't have things to eat now, dearie!" she objected.

Again Daisy shook her head.

"Things to eat is cake, and 'serves, and soap-sudsy top of pies and things, and I never has them—much. I has nootriment."

"'Nutriment'!"

"Uh-huh"—the admission was sorrowfully reminiscent—"rice, and milk, and shredded wheat, and mushy things."

"Oh, Daisy! Daisy, don't," called a voice across the garden. "You mustn't bite your fingers like that! . . . Dear me, Mrs. Mason,"—the voice was nearer now; mother had reached the hedge—"you don't know how hard I try about just that one thing, to say nothing of all the rest. I'm always telling that child to remember her fingers every minute and keep them out of her mouth."

An odd little sound came from the Lady with the Smile. Daisy, looking at her, thought how very, very pretty she was with those two little red spots in her cheeks, only now there was no kind, kind look in her eyes.

"Perhaps, Mrs. Ellery," she was saying with an odd little laugh, "perhaps if you didn't tell her to think of them quite so much she'd forget she had any fingers, sometimes, to—to put in her mouth! That might work, you know."

It must have been on Daisy's very next visit to the minister's house that the Lady with the Smile said brightly:

"Oh, Daisy, see here, just see what I have now for those little hands of yours to do!"

Daisy jumped quickly, and put her hands behind her back. She had been biting her fingers! She remembered now. But the Lady with the Smile did not seem to remember or to notice at all. And very soon Daisy, too, forgot to remember, so wonderfully interesting was the puzzle that the Lady with the Smile put before her.

The picture puzzle was only the beginning of the wonderful things that Daisy found to do at the minister's house in the days that followed. Always there was something, and they were good things, too, and she liked them—liked them; good things! At all events, the Lady with the Smile said they were good, and Daisy knew she liked them, puzzled as she was that she should do so, when they were good.

Strange to say, too, with the coming of the good things that she liked, there was a curious going of the bad things that she had liked before to do. At least she was so busy that she had no time to think of them; and she quite forgot, also, to remember her fingers, to keep them out of her mouth. But that, she decided, did not matter; for she was very, very sure they could not be in her mouth very often, they were so constantly in use somewhere else. Always it was "Daisy, do this," and "Daisy, do that," and for "this" and "that" she needed her fingers, of course—so how could they be in her mouth?

And how Daisy loved it—this "Daisy, do this," and "Daisy, do that!"

Continued on next page

Pretty New Fall Waists

Sizes: 32 to 44 Bust.

2009. Tailored waist of fine linon. Front daintily embroidered and tucked with four pleats over shoulders. Closes conveniently in front with five large pearl buttons through a panel of tucking. Tucked cuffs fasten with two pearl buttons. White with embroidery and stitching in white, in delft-blue or coral-pink. The usual $1.50 waist $1.00

2003. Serviceable, practical waist of good silk-finished black sateen. Very desirable style, buttoning conveniently in front through a scalloped edge panel of heavy embroidery. Splendid quality and durability, for $1.00

2004. Tailored waist of fine cross-checked sateen in neat black-and white patterns. Buttons in front beneath a prettily tucked panel, with tiny crochet buttons, six back. Two medallions providing becoming trimming. Just the thing for a serviceable, every-day waist, yet pretty enough for better wear. $1.00

2005. Dainty waist of cross-bar dimity. Buttons in front through a panel of Swiss embroidery. Laundered collar and cuffs embroidered to match. Pocket at side is very appropriate for a waist of this kind. A delightful styled splendid quality, yet only $1.00

2010. The most wonderful lace waist ever offered. Of fine Brussels net over foundation lining of fine batiste. The new "Peasant" style with front and sleeves beautifully embroidered in charming design. Sleeves and collar tucked and edged with lace. White or ecru. Both dressy and serviceable yet note our remarkably low price $1.00

2012. Tailored button-in-front waist of fine Imported French cross-bar nainsook that will wear splendidly. Front employs 2 panels of dainty Madeira embroidery, and closes with large pearl buttons beneath a tailored box-pleat. Detachable soft stock collar is provided also. French cuffs neatly box-pleated. Special $1.25

Satisfaction Guaranteed or Your Money Back

STANDARD MAIL ORDER CO. 244 W. 17th St., NEW YORK

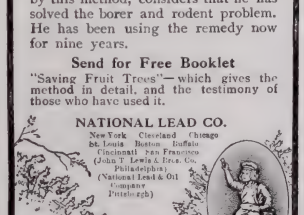
Write To-day for a FREE Copy of the Standard Bulletin

POST CARDS

10 Hallowe'en . 10c | 10 General Subjects, 10c
10 Thanksgiving, 10c | 10 Birthday . . . 10c
Three packages for 25c. 100 cards, 80c
Special Assortment Birthday or Remembrance Cards, 100 for 60c.
MADISON ART COMPANY, MADISON, CONN.

FOR INDIGESTION
MURRAY'S CHARCOAL TABLETS
Once Only, for trial
A 25c box for 10c
A. J. Ditman, 2 Astor House, N. Y.

White Lead on the Farm
Saving Fruit Trees



You can protect your fruit trees against borers, rabbits and mice by a simple and sure method.

One large fruit grower with an orchard of 12,000 trees, all protected by this method, considers that he has solved the borer and rodent problem. He has been using the remedy now for nine years.

Send for Free Booklet

"Saving Fruit Trees"—which gives the method in detail, and the testimony of those who have used it.

NATIONAL LEAD CO.
New York Cleveland Chicago
St. Louis Boston Buffalo
Cincinnati San Francisco
(John T. Lewis & Bros. Co. Philadelphia)
(National Lead & Oil Company Pittsburgh)

BONDS

Secured by Selected
NEW YORK REAL ESTATE
Yield 6% Net Annually.
(Payable Semi-Annually)

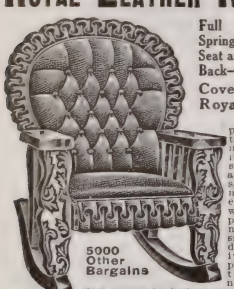
An issue selected by careful investors, who for many years have recognized their unsurpassed combination of



SECURITY and INCOME

SEND FOR FREE BOOKLET 14.

15 YEARS' RESULTS:
Assets over $3,000,000
Surplus nearly . . . $1,000,000
Repaid Investors, over $1,000,000

New York Realty Owners
489 FIFTH AVENUE NEW YORK

ROYAL LEATHER ROCKER

Full Spring Seat and Back— $3.85

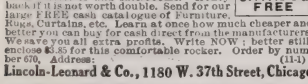
Covered in Best Royal Leather



Look at the picture: doesn't this Rocker look inviting with its high, broad, shapely back and deep roomy spring seat! It's made to last forever, and it's wide arms, supported by six neatly turned smooth spindles, and massive front carved posts, give it the exclusiveness and style that cannot be had in any other rocker. Frame thoroughly seasoned oak, high golden and glossy finish. Best quality Black Royal Leather; workmanship first-class. Price but $3.85 makes it the biggest bargain ever offered. We can afford such values because we own our own timber lands, saw mills, factories and salesrooms. Money back if it is not worth double. Send for our large FREE cash catalogue of Furniture, Rugs, Curtains, etc. Learn at once how much cheaper and better you can buy for cash direct from the manufacturer. We save you all extra profits. Write NOW; better still, enclose $3.85 for this comfortable rocker. Order by number 670. Address: (11-1)

BIG CATALOG FREE

Lincoln-Leonard & Co., 1180 W. 37th Street, Chicago

AGENTS! BIG PROFITS

Sell Brandt's Newly Patented Automatic Razor Stropper. The only invention that puts a perfect edge on any razor in 20 seconds. Works automatically. For OLD style razors or SAFETY Blades. Makes one blade last a year. Any one can use it. Guaranteed for life.

Sharpens and Keeps Sharp Any Razor in the World, OLD Style or SAFETY.

Harry Bartow sold 40 stroppers in 18 hrs. 15 min. You can do as well. No selling experience needed. It sells itself. Every man wants one. Be the first in your locality. Write for prices, terms and territory. Be quick.

© BRANDT CUTLERY CO., 84 West Broadway, New York

Ladies, Ease Your Feet

A customer writes: "I kept my Pillow Shoes all last year for just a 'dress up shoe.'" Now I am wearing them for every day. They don't lose their shape like other shoes. They are the only shoe I ever put right on new and wear with comfort."

The soft, gloss-like feel of PILLOW SHOES $3.25 Postpaid in U. S.

is simply charming." Soft, easy, durable, neat, stylish; genuine hand-turned shoes of Vici-Kid. No lining to wrinkle and chafe; no breaking in necessary. Absolute comfort and fit guaranteed or money refunded. Price includes rubber heels. All styles. Write for free catalog and self-measure blank. Customers everywhere.

PILLOW SHOE CO.,

184 Summer Street, Dept. 3, Boston, Mass.

Try It Ten Days Free

We make this liberal offer because we know when you see the Aladdin Mantle Lamp work, you will never use any other. Burns kerosene (coal oil). Noiseless, odorless, clean, safe, economical. Guaranteed: money refunded if not satisfied. Needed in every home. Ask nearest office for catalogue M explaining free trial offer and how to get your lamp free.

AGENTS: T. H. BALL sold 850 on money-back guarantee; not one returned. Stacey sold 12 in one hour. Newsom sold 12 in 10 calls. Gibson sold 48 in 5 days. Sells itself. Our Sunbeam Burner fits other lamps. Complete line for homes, stores, etc. Ask for our liberal agency proposition.

MANTLE LAMP CO. of AMERICA, Dept. 311 Offices at—Chicago, Ill., Portland, Ore., Waterbury, Conn., Dallas, Tex., Winnipeg, Montreal, Canada

ORNAMENTAL FENCE

25 Designs—All Steel

Handsome, cost less than wood, more durable. Don't buy a fence until you get our Free Catalogue and Special Prices.

We can save you money.

Kokomo Fence Machine Co. 109 North St., Kokomo, Ind.

AGENTS My Sanitary Coffee Maker produces pure, sweet coffee, needs no settler and never wears out. Saves coffee, money and health. Every wife buys at sight; new invention; exclusive territory. Send 15c. for one size, postpaid initial AND NAME STATIONERY. The latest thing in refined, sensible and moderately priced, initialed to order ladies' fine writing paper. Big money making orders in villages and cities. FREE information and "Portfolio" showing handsome styles in colors and embossing. NEW ENGLAND PAPER CO., Main St., Bolton, Vt.

DR. LYONS, 430 Day St., Pekin, Ill.

Agents Wanted For Security Products

High grade made-to-order Dress Skirts, Petticoats, Specialties. Liberal commission. Exclusive rights. Write today for catalogue. SECURITY CO., Dept. 5, Woodsport, N. Y.

"DAISY DON'T"

Continued from preceding page

"You see, I isn't 'Daisy Don't' over here," she laughed gleefully, one day. "I's 'Daisy Do'! But, of course, over there—home, you know—I'd have to be 'Daisy Don't,' 'cause that is my name," she finished bravely.

"You little—darling!" cried the Lady with the Smile, in a voice all full of breath and shakiness. And again Daisy found two warm arms about her, and two red lips close to her ear.

"Oh, but I love to be 'Daisy Do'—truly I do," cried Daisy, wrinkling her forehead into an anxious frown: the Lady with the Smile seemed to be almost crying.

From the doorway at that moment came a new voice, and Daisy looked up to find the minister watching his wife. In his eyes, this time, was the kind, kind look.

"I see your 'do's' are working, my dear," he was saying.

The Lady with the Smile laughed a little shakily, and grew very pink indeed.

"I'm only filling vacancies—not making them," she answered, half under her breath. "You know every little—helps!" None of which Daisy quite understood; for, of course, what the Lady was really doing was cutting out patchwork squares for her to sew for her doll.

It was not very many weeks before Daisy longed to bring into the life of Daisy Don't some of the happiness that belonged to Daisy Do; but just how to go about it, she did not know. She knew only that in the minister's house, everything she did—at least everything that they talked about her doing—was "kind" and "good" and "helpful"; while at home everything she did—at least everything she heard about—was "naughty" and "bad." And it was naughty and bad—sorrowfully she admitted that. At home she did bite her fingers, she did shout, she did bang doors, she did track in mud. She did "bother dreadfully." So mother said. While at the house next door she "helped." So the Lady with the Smile said.

She helped!

For some time Daisy pondered this. It came to her then that if, here at home, she should do what she did at the house next door, perhaps here, too, she would be helping. Perhaps here, too, in time, she would be Daisy Do instead of Daisy Don't. Very well, then, she would do here what she did at the house next door; and she would begin right away.

It was on a Monday morning that this decision was reached, and for one brief minute Daisy's heart failed her; for Monday was always a Bad Day, and it did take some courage to start in on a Bad Day. She had said, however, that she would begin to-day; and she must. So, bravely, she set about it.

From the very first she saw that it was not going to be easy. Mother, flying from room to room, said:

"Daisy, don't! You mustn't tease so. As if I could stop to cut patchwork with you Monday morning!"

Father in the library cried:

"Daisy, don't! You're mussing my papers all up!" And when she had explained that she was only dusting off his desk, he had laughed, and said: "Nonsense, child! run away. My desk doesn't need dusting; besides, I'm too busy. I'm in a hurry to get down to the office."

In the sitting-room Aunt Abby was dusting, but even she could not be helped, it seemed, for very quickly she cried out:

"No, no, Daisy, don't! You'll drop it. That's mother's choicest vase. Do run away, child!"

And Daisy obediently ran—only to be stopped almost instantly by a fretful:

"Oh, Daisy, don't! You mustn't jump so! You fairly jar the house."

It was the same everywhere—Brother Tom, Sister Mary, Bridget in the kitchen. No one could she help, nowhere was she wanted; and disconsolately she wandered back once more to the nursery just out of mother's room.

It was then that there came to her the Great Idea.

Through the open doorway she could see mother's bed, and it was still unmade. . . . She could make beds! Many, many times, in the house next door, she had helped the Lady with the Smile make her beds. And she would make this one—alone. How pleased, then, would mother be to come in and find her bed all made! Mother hated making beds; she had said so.

But it was hard—this making a bed all alone; very different from having the Lady with the Smile on the other side, with her merry "One, two, three—now!" as she swung the sheets and blankets away to the head. They were so big to-day — those sheets and blankets—and so heavy! And it did take such a lot of tugging to get each one in place; and it was so far, far, away round to the other side—and always there was the other side which had to be fixed, whichever side she was on! And even after all were up, and the spread put on, how could one get it smooth unless one crawled up on top to reach?—and if one did crawl up, how did one smooth the awful wrinkles that the crawling-up had made?

But it was done, at last, even to the smallest wrinkle being patted into smoothness. Daisy's arms ached, but she did not mind that. Her dress was torn, but that, too, she did not mind, for mother—mother was almost at the door; and in a minute she would see—the Bed!

Breathlessly Daisy waited, her shining eyes on the door; then it opened. Mother had come.

"Mother, see—I did it—the bed!"

There was a moment's hushed pause; then mother spoke.

"Daisy, Daisy," she cried, "what does possess you, child, this morning? Now why in the world did you do this? Don't you know?—it's the day to change the sheets!" And with one sweep of an angry arm, the tugged and smoothed and patted blankets lay flung once more across the footboard.

There were a quick cry, a sobbing moan, and the stumbling patter of small feet—feet that belonged to one whose brimming eyes could not see the way.

"Oh, Daisy, don't!" called a sharp voice, wearily; but the stumbling feet still sped on and on, through the nursery and down the hall, faster and faster—too fast; for the brimming eyes did not see the stairs.

There came a child's frightened scream, and a crashing, bumping fall; then—silence.

Long, long hours later an anguished mother hurried over to the house next door.

"I came to you. I had to," she sobbed to the minister's wife. "The dear little thing talks all the time—about you—'The Lady with the Smile'—you know she always called you that. . . . No, she isn't right in her head yet, but the doctor hopes she will be—soon. No bones are broken! Thank God for that! He thinks—he thinks she'll come out all right. But it's what she says now that—that I don't understand. And I want to know—I must know! I thought perhaps you — could tell me. It's all about 'Daisy Don't' and 'Daisy Do.' And—and can you tell me?"

And the Lady—without the Smile now, but with the kind, kind look in her eyes—told her.

Still later, long hours later, Daisy opened her eyes and saw mother. Mother was crying.

"Oh, Daisy, do—do speak to me," she was sobbing brokenly, "in your own dear voice!"

Daisy smiled. She almost laughed, weakly, tremulously.

"Why, mother, you did—you did call me 'Daisy Do'!" she cried.

THE CELESTIAL SURGEON

If I have faltered more or less
In my great task of happiness;
If I have moved among my race
And shown no glorious morning face;
If beams from happy human eyes
Have moved me not; if morning skies,
Books, and my food, and summer rain
Knocked on my sullen heart in vain,
Lord, Thy most pointed pleasure take
And stab my spirit broad awake.

ROBERT LOUIS STEVENSON.

Korean Christian Worker

THESE young helpers in the medical work at Mokpo, Korea, work in the clinics in the morning and in the afternoon attend the John Watkin Academy. They will prepare to enter the Severance Hospital Medical School at Seoul, the only medical school in Korea and under the care of the Northern Presbyterian Mission. Three of the men are married. They receive for support eight yen a month apiece, the equivalent of four dollars gold. They are all baptized Christians and engage in personal evangelistic work, making trips to the surrounding country from time to time, in medical and evangelistic work.

Kil Moksa Yun Moksa Yi Moksa

Three Native Korean Students

Called Higher

Mrs. M. Brink, of Wildwood, Mich., has been called to her reward.

Captain Ole Lars Aga (61), of Armor, N. Y., was called higher on April 30.

J. W. Thurlow, of Osceola, Ia., passed away at his home there on April 11.

Miss Z. A. Bates (69), of Forest City, Ia., passed to her reward on April 22.

William C. Clark, of Lititz, Pa., was called to the Master's house on May 22.

Mrs. C. B. Reilley (82), of Bay City, Mich., passed away at her home on May 8.

Mrs. Jane Taylor, of Honnon, N. Y., passed to the great beyond on May 9.

Mrs. Mary Herron, of Viroqua, Wis., fell asleep in Jesus, February 21, 1911.

Mrs. B. Mevers, of Lawrence, La., entered into rest May 13, 1911.

Mrs. N. E. Burpee, of Casa Verdugo, Calif., has passed to the reward of years of active service.

Mrs. A. N. Hood (81), of Outremont, P. Q., Canada, passed to her heavenly home on January 11.

William Hutton (75), of Wichita Falls, Texas, has been called to the reward of long faithful service.

Rev. R. Stephens, of Perry, Ia., has been called to his reward. He was for years a subscriber to this magazine.

Mrs. Louisa E. Cummings (80) entered into rest at her home in Sunbury, Pa., on March 21.

Mrs. W. R. Houck (74), of Kingfisher, Okla., passed away not long since at her home. She had been for years a reader of this magazine.

Mrs. Virginia E. Geiger died at her home in Morganfield, Union County, Ky., March 13, 1911, aged 63. She was a member of the Presbyterian Church thirty-five years, and a subscriber to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD for twenty years.

BE A TRAINED NURSE
AND BE INDEPENDENT
Earn $10 to $25 a Week

One of the most profitable and best paid Professions open to women. Home Instruction. To those sending on or before Oct. 20th, we make this Special Offer:

Plan 1, $70 Cash (all Payment of Course
Plan 2, $25 and $5 monthly for 2 months
Plan 3, $15 and $5 monthly for 5 months
Regular price of Course, $50.00

Send postal for illustrated booklet and application blank.

Rochester Nurses Institute,
176 Institute Bldg.,
Rochester, - - N. Y.

Peace Circles Still Growing

HOUGH the Peace Alliance Treaties are at this time held up at the hands of the United States e awaiting amendment or sub- y resolutions defining their , the public throughout the Unit- ates and England and France is y not daunted. The voice of the e cries out against war. No ring nor postponed ratifications uiet the Vox Populi. The hearts e people are opened to the ways ace. No delays nor hope deferred icken the hearts of nations. The has heard the spoken word, there be Peace." The evenings he mornings of the first days of a organized to the vast experience iversal brotherhood have come, s surely as the daylight succeeds awn, all nations of the earth will en and take heed.

the recent words of President "Now, wherever good men and n the world over are longing and ng for the speedy success of the Movement, their eyes turn first en confidence to the Great Re- of the West, to the land whose are of peace and justice, in- y and freedom, to the land which than any other has used the ful method of arbitration for the ment of its differences with other ns. In this great movement we he hope of the world."

esponsibility of the Individual ver in the history of civilization he responsibility of the individual so apparent. The time has come every man, woman and child in vast republic, who approves of in lieu of warfare, is an impor- factor in the Peace Movement. ne can afford to be indifferent o opportunity to "stand resolute he great cause" should be lost.

e again THE CHRISTIAN HERALD stly holds out to all its readers the tunity to advance the cause. We ll to unite with us in spreading and wide into the North, the , the East and the West the CHRISTIAN HERALD Peace Cir- lovement. Add to your Social ings, your Missionary Bands, Church Endeavor, to your Civic, Educational and Village Improvement Leagues, to your clubs and organizations of all kinds and to the home circle, at least one Peace Circle feature. Organization leaflets and Peace Circle propaganda, including plans for organizing and conducting successful local Peace Circles in the city, the village, the church, the school, and the home, together with programmes and many delightful suggestions for social gatherings, will be forwarded to any one who writes and asks for them.

In the Cause of Peace

If you individually are able to do but little in the cause of Peace, will you not allow us to help you augment that little to something more important by sending us the names and addresses of at least ten people—ministers, school teachers, professional men, neighbors, any good types of citizens whom you would like to see actively interested in the great cause? To these we will gladly forward free of any cost our attractive Peace Booklets and Leaflets, which should be in the hands of every true believer in the Peace Movement.

Programme for Peace Circle Meetings Between Sept. 20 and Oct. 4

1. Music.
2. Roll Call and reading of Initiation Pledge.
3. Historian to present and read the Peace Symposium in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD.
4. Spokesman to present subjects for discussion given out at the last meeting and invite three and five minute speeches from members and visitors.
5. Presentation of the following subjects: New Phases of the Peace Movement; Obstacles in the Way; Peace Movement in the Public Schools; The Old Patriotism versus the New Patriotism; for discussion at the meetings of the next two weeks.
6. Music, recitations, refreshments, rally and announcement of the next place of meeting.

Address all communications to CHRISTIAN HERALD PEACE LEAGUE, Bible House, New York City.

Passing of the Pueblos

Continued from page 923

that in the days of the Spanish bation there were fifty populous nunities. The principal seat of Pueblo culture has always been the Rio Grande. Here may still aced the half-obliterated ruins of lo communal towns that may flourished when Europe was peo- only by barbarians. The Pueblo n population of the Southwest is ily declining and soon these peo- will be but a reminiscence. One on is found in the neglect of sani- n. Epidemics of small-pox, diph- a and other diseases rage un- ed, and tuberculosis is a scourge most every village. The infant ality is terribly high. Inter- iage among the members of the clan also contributes to the de- . Another cause is the growing ency of the young men and young en of the Pueblos to marry among native Mexican population, and to up their own language, religion, old manner of life. Perceiving this means the extinction of the ity of their people, the elders of strong and flourishing villages strictly forbidden intermarriage the Mexicans. In Taos it is said the head men have even gone to length of forbidding the women to the Spanish language, thinking if the Indian maidens cannot talk Spanish, the Mexican youth will be discouraged. Nevertheless, the destiny of the Pueblos appears to be to replenish the "Greaser" stock of the Southwest.

Even the United States Government is unwittingly aiding the obliteration of this ancient people. In nearly every village of the Pueblos there is now a school. At Santa Fe and Albuquerque industrial training schools are conducted, and there are similar schools at Blackrock, on the Zuñi Reservation, and Keams Canyon, on the Hopi Reservation. Everywhere the Pueblo is ceasing to be an Indian, and becoming a mere half-breed.

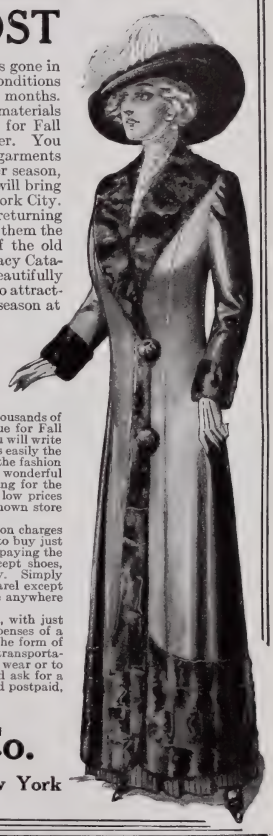
JOHN L. COWAN.

Answered Prayers

G. E. M., Reading, Pa. "God has helped us through many trying ordeals in answer to prayer."

E. T., Tennessee. "I thank God for answering my prayer that an injustice might be exposed."

Mrs. W. B., Massachusetts. "God has delivered me from great difficulty in answer to prayer."



C. B. D., Phoebus, Va. "I wish to acknowledge the Father's goodness in answering my prayers."

R. A. C., Whitefish, Mont. "I give thanks that God answered my prayers. My daughter was sick and she is now recovering."

We are now mailing our 600-page Catalogue, and it will be sent to you, FREE and Postpaid, upon request.

DRESS BETTER
AT LOWER COST

Your money will go further this Fall than it has gone in several seasons, owing to the very unsettled conditions which have existed in the textile trade for several months. We have been fortunate in our purchases of raw materials and made up goods. Then, too, the new styles for Fall are extremely beautiful, more attractive than ever. You will be delighted with the strikingly beautiful garments which have been designed for the Fall and Winter season, and surprised to learn the very low prices which will bring them to you from the great Macy store in New York City. Many of our buyers have returned or are now returning from the fashion centers of Europe, bringing with them the newest things produced by the style creators of the old world, and you will surely want to see the new Macy Catalogue with its wonderful variety of merchandise, beautifully illustrated, fully and accurately described, and all so attractively priced as to enable you to dress better this season at a very material saving.

Macy's Prepaid Price For This Fine Coat will surprise you. This beautiful garment is only one of thousands of ready-to-wear garments illustrated in the Macy Catalogue for Fall and Winter and we are ready to send you a free copy if you will write for it. The new book is larger and better than ever. It is easily the largest catalogue issued by any retail store in New York, the fashion center of America. It contains 636 pages, showing a wonderful variety of dependable, high grade merchandise, everything for the family, everything for the home, all priced at the same low prices which have made Macy's the largest and most widely known store in New York.

Then, too, our new policy of prepaying the transportation charges on thousands of articles enables the woman in California to buy just as cheaply as the woman in New York City. We are prepaying the transportation charges on all ready-to-wear apparel except shoes, and all jewelry. There is nothing more for you to pay. Simply send us the price we ask for any article of wearing apparel except shoes, or any piece of jewelry, and we will deliver it free anywhere in the United States.

Our merchandise passes from first hands direct to you, with just one small profit added. We cut out the profits and expenses of a host of middlemen and pass along the saving to you in the form of lower prices, and on thousands of articles we pay all the transportation charges too. Therefore, before you buy anything to wear or to use this Fall, please write us a letter or a postal card and ask for a copy of our new book. It will be sent you by mail, free and postpaid, the day we receive your request.

R. H. Macy & Co.
811 Macy Building, Herald Square, New York

NEW WAY TO IRON
No more hot stoves—kitchens—burned hands. No waiting for irons to heat. No running to and from stove. No wood—no buckets of coal—no costly burning of gas or gasoline. Worker is delightfully cool. Work is easy—clothes look fine. Big ironing costs 1 cent.
IMPROVED MONITOR SAD IRON
Self-Heating. Not Sold in Stores. $3.50 Express paid east of Colo. and Tex. 350,000 use and praise it: Mrs. Davis, Ind. writes, "I consider the Monitor finest iron on earth". Stop ironing the old way. Iron the new, easy way.
AGENTS WANTED! Thousands of dollars in profit already paid our workers. Send today for big circular showing exact size picture of iron, territory, offer, terms, etc.
MONITOR SAD IRON CO.
69 Monitor Bldg., Big Prairie, O.

This Leather Bag 89 Postpaid

Here's one of our greatest bargains. Seal grained 11-inch leather bag-heavy silvered frame, handsomely ornamented taffeta lined-inside pocket-leather coin purse-worth $1.50-sent direct, or can be bought through our agents for 89c.

Good Agents
make big money selling our great values in Embroideries, Battenbergs, Silks, Millinery Belts, Bags, Petticoats, Dress Goods, Waists, etc. We give Free Sample Outfits and extend Credit. Write for Catalog and Proposition.
EMBROIDERY & IMPORT CO., 1901 Pine St., St. Louis

HONEY—Calf, sage honey, freight paid, per lb.—Light Amber, 10c; White, 11c; Water White, 12c. Will ship allowing inspection before payment. Large sample, 10 cents. Honey leaflet free. Spencer Apiaries Co., Box 52, Nordhoff, Cal.

"HOW I BECAME A NURSE"

Jane B. Marshall, Beverley, Mass. C. S. N. Graduate

Would you like to read the stories of 200 intelligent, sincere women, who became successful nurses by 6 to 12 months' study at home?
"How I Became a Nurse" is the title of a book issued in celebration of 10 years' successful correspondence training in nursing. It contains 184 pages of intensely interesting experiences by graduates of this school who studied, practiced and mastered the art of professional nursing by the C. S. N. home-study course. Thousands of our graduates, with and without previous experience, are to-day earning $10 to $25 a week.
Send for a copy of "How I Became a Nurse," with our 10th annual 64-page illustrated Year Book explaining method.
The Chautauqua School of Nursing
341 Main St., Jamestown, N.Y.

Barcalo Buffalo

Barcalo iron or brass beds and cribs are beautifully designed, easy to put up—have unbreakable corners.
Every Barcalo Bed is Guaranteed for 35 Years
Over 100 designs—$10 up, all pictured in our Style Book of Beds. Write for it and please give your dealer's name.
BARCALO MFG. CO. No. 27 Louisiana Street Buffalo N. Y.

Devouring the Word of God*

Sunday School Lesson by Dr. and Mrs. Wilbur F. Crafts

EZEKIEL had a godly heritage, being the son of a priest. He was one of the captives taken by Nebuchadnezzar from Jerusalem to Babylon in B.C. 598, being at that time a mere youth. But God's hand was upon him to make him a preacher of righteousness to his wayward people, the Israelites, in their captivity. And God prepared him for the work. Hear Ezekiel's own words about how it was done: "And when I looked, behold, a hand was sent unto me; and lo, a roll of a book was therein; and he spread it out before me; and it was written within and without. . . . Moreover he said unto me, Son of man, eat that thou findest; eat this roll, and go speak unto the house of Israel. . . . Then I did eat it; and it was in my mouth as honey for sweetness. And he said unto me, Son of man, go, get thee unto the house of Israel, and speak with my words unto them." (Ezek. 2: 9—3: 4.) There have been many conjectures about that roll, but it is enough for us to know that it contained the word of God, and the command was that Ezekiel should so acquaint himself with it that he could teach others. It was an illuminated text; the Spirit of God was leading Ezekiel into all truth as he tried to read and understand it. He likens it to mystic creatures which had the brightness of fire and lightning. It was the appearance of the likeness of the glory of God. (Ezek. 1: 28.)

Ezekiel's Call

"Then the spirit lifted me up and took me away." The days of his preparation were over.

"I went in bitterness of spirit." The gravity of preaching God's truth was a weight upon his heart.

"I came to them of the captivity at Tel-abib," where was a settlement of the captives on the river Chebar, not a great distance from Babylon.

"I sat there overwhelmed among them seven days." So those who came to comfort Job sat, when they saw his desolation (Job 2: 13).

"Give them warning from me." So God spoke to Ezekiel after the seven days, and it was like a clarion note calling him to do his duty.

"I have made thee a watchman unto the house of Israel." Still God is speaking to Ezekiel. In the spirit of this saying, Tissot has painted a wonderful picture of the prophet Ezekiel, on the top of a watchtower in the attitude of a muezzin, with his hands clasped upon his forehead, and his piercing eyes filled with the demand that men shall not linger.

"If thou warn the wicked, and he turn not," etc. It is not God's way to break into any man's soul.

"Thou hast delivered thy soul." All that God held Ezekiel accountable for was that he should faithfully deliver the message, and he should not be held responsible for the souls of men.

It has been said of Ezekiel in comparison with other prophets: "He is not so much of a counselor and seer as Isaiah, nor so much of a reformer and intercessor as Jeremiah, nor so much of a prince and statesman as Daniel, but more of a priest in his general spirit and bearing. More than a hundred times is he called 'a son of man,' a title given to no other prophet except Daniel, and to him only once (Dan. 8: 17), signifying doubtless to them of the captivity that he was not only a living witness for God, but a priestly mediator, with somewhat of the distant dignity of the great Son of man himself."—Professor J. T. Hyde.

We have many times in our lessons quoted from Dr. Joseph Parker, who in his lifetime was one of London's most eloquent preachers. It will be interesting in this connection to give a brief outline of how, when a young man, he entered the ministry. There are points, especially connected with his first sermons, that are to be compared with the beginnings of Ezekiel.

By the time he was fourteen, the oft discussed question, "What is Joseph to be?" had reached an acute stage. It was decided that he should follow his father's trade, and be a mason. The experience did not last long. Within a year he was back at school, partly paying his way by being an usher. Then it was thought by his parents that he might be made an architect, and they supplied him with a drawing-board and instruments; but that was abandoned, and he again returned to school. When he was about sixteen years of age, he heard his future being discussed by his father and a distinguished guest. Both were, however, quite at a loss to reach any decision.

All of the while the boy had been cherishing a secret desire to be a preacher of the Gospel, and he had made some preparation for it by commencing a library—a few books hung on two shelves fastened to a nail in the wall. He committed to memory great speeches then current, and delivered them as he walked along the country road or before imaginary audiences of thousands. This practice naturally led to preaching in the open air, which he occasionally did in some solitary place with a rock for a pulpit. Dr. Parker dates his first real sermon from his eighteenth year, which he delivered from the village green, with a company of villagers seated on beams and planks. It came about this way: He had gone to the service with two preachers, each of whom delivered a sermon. While listening to the second preacher he was seized with an overpowering desire to unburden his soul. He arose and stood where the preachers had stood, and took for his text: "It shall be more tolerable for Tyre and Sidon at the judgment than for you." The villagers were startled as the young preacher set forth the iniquities of the age, and loosed all the thunders he

Continued on next page

*The International Sunday School Lesson for October 1, 1911. The Prophet Ezekiel a Watchman. Ezek. 3. GOLDEN TEXT: "Hear the word at my mouth, and give them warning from me." Ezek. 3:17.

Read This Letter

We Ship the Same Day Order Is Rec'd.

Save $5.00 to $40.00 On Your Stove Purchases

SPLENDID Kalamazoo Stoves and Ranges sold direct from the factory will net you $5.00 to $40.00 saving—sometimes more as shown in this letter. No dealer, jobber, middleman or salesman makes a cent on Kalamazoo stoves and you pocket their profits and get the best—America's Standard Stove.

Kalamazoo Range Better than $80 Stove—as Over $40.00 Saved.

125 Broad Street, Lyons, N. Y. April 18, 1911

Gentlemen: The Kalamazoo Range ordered of you arrived all in good order. It is as near perfect as my wife says, as a stove can be. It bakes far better than the stove she used before, which cost $80.00.

Yours respectfully, WM. C. FIERO.

Cash or Credit

Pay on terms that meet your convenience on 30 Days Free Trial, 360 Days Approval Test, Freight Prepaid and Shipment made same day order is received. 170,000 satisfied customers prove our proposition.

Big Stove Book—FREE

A price for every purse among our 400 styles and sizes, illustrated and described, against the dozen styles your dealer has. Brimful of inside stove facts that the dealer himself doesn't know. Get the how and why of the Kalamazoo proposition. Send NOW—ask for catalog No. 103.

Kalamazoo Stove Company, Manufacturers

RADIANT BASE BURNER

Kalamazoo, Michigan

"A Kalamazoo Direct to You"

Protect

Your Medicine, Bath, and Toilet Accessories—and beautify your bathroom with this snow white enameled All Steel Cabinet at about

One-Half Usual Cost

Enameled inside and out, dust, germ and vermin-proof. Never warps, shrinks nor swells. Beveled plate mirror door, adjustable shelves. Nickeled bronze hinges and handle. Send postal for circular of

HESS MEDICINE STEEL SANITARY CABINET LOCKER

Cheaper than wood, easily cleaned; can be hung or sunk into wall of bathroom or any room in the house. Made in four styles and four sizes. Sent on approval anywhere in United States.

Write for prices and illustrated descriptive folder.

HESS, 959 Tacoma Building, Chicago

Makers, also of Steel Clothing Lockers

PHILADELPHIA

The St. James

Walnut and 13th Sts.

Ideally located in the center of business and social life

335 Rooms—275 Baths

Rooms $2.00 per day up. Room and Bath, $3.00 per day up. Suites of 2 to 6 Rooms

Famous for its cuisine

Eugene G. Miller, Pres.

Automobile Jackets, Blizzard Proof

Outside texture so closely woven it resists wind and wear alike. Lined with wool fleece that defies the cold. Snap fasteners, riveted pockets.

PARKER'S Arctic Jacket

Registered in U. S. Patent Office.

Better than an overcoat for facing cold and work together. Warm, durable, comfortable. Ask your dealer, or sent postpaid on receipt of $2.85.

JOHN H. PARKER CO., Dept. C 25 James St., Malden, Mass.

I Was Deaf 25 Years NOW I HEAR PLAINLY

with this artificial EARDRUM in my ears. I never feel them—they are perfectly comfortable, and no one sees them. I will tell you the true story, how I got deaf, and how I made myself hear.

Medicated Ear Fat. July 15, 1

ARTIFICIAL EAR DRUM COMPA 2 ADELAIDE STREET DETROIT, 1

YOU CAN WRITE A SHORT STORY

Beginners learn thoroughly under our perfect system; many sell their stories before completing the course. We help those who want to sell their stories. Write for particulars. School of Short-Story Writing, Dept. 44, Page Bldg. Chicago

YOU CAN AFFORD to have a new Song Book in your Church or Sunday School, and one for every person when you can afford it.

"FAMILIAR SONGS OF THE GOSPEL" for $3 for 100. Words and music, 83 very popular songs. Sample copy 5 Cents. E. A. K. Hackett, 100 North Wayne St., Fort Wayne, Ind.

Come to Montana!

The great Treasure State invites you, with her 93 million acres: lots of room, lots of sunshine, lots of opportunity.

Montana is in the center of the Great Northwest Prosperity Belt. Where dry-farming methods are opening the eyes of the world to their safe and sure scientific principles and wonderful results. Where irrigation is showing what marvelous resources have lain under the cattle range.

Free Government Homestead Land in choice localities. Farming and orchard land in fertile valleys at low prices. You can make money and enjoy life working out-of-doors on an orchard or farm of your own in Montana. Look it over this Fall. See the harvests in the productive Yellowstone, Clark's Fork, Shields, Gallatin and Bitter Root Valleys. Low-rate Homeseekers' Tickets to points in Montana sold every Tuesday in September and October. Round-trip, 25 days return limit, with stopovers.

Send for illustrated booklets about Montana and full information about low fares.

L. J. BRICKER
General Immigration Agent
30 Northern Pacific Bldg.
ST. PAUL, MINN.

NORTHERN PACIFIC YELLOWSTONE PARK LINE

The Northern Pacific Railway has land for sale, adjacent to its lines in Montana. For printed price lists and descriptions, address Thos. Cooper, Land Com'r., St. Paul.

Sunday School Lesson

Continued from preceding page

ld command, and delivered his soul h audacious frankness.

is second sermon was also preached the open air, and he chose for his t: "If I whet my glittering sword, d mine hand take hold on judgment, will render vengeance to mine ene-s, and will reward them that hate " (Deut. 32: 41).

His third sermon was delivered at wheelwright's door, the pulpit being arge block of old oak, and it is said, he sermon went like an equinoctial e."

When he began to have appoint-nts, he sometimes walked fourteen es to reach them. He went on with work of preparation by rising at o'clock in the morning to study his eek Testament, and to read theology h a clergyman.

We have given this story at length h the hope that it may suggest to ne earnest young men how they may ze hold of the way to become the d's messengers.

nday School Teachers and the Bible

All Bible teachers are in a way the cessors of Jeremiah and Ezekiel. th prophets studied and loved the ble before they began to tell others out it. Jeremiah said: "Thy words re found, and I did eat them; and y word was unto me the joy and re-cing of my heart" (Jer. 15: 16). e "eating," as in the case of Ezekiel, ant not bodily assimilation, but ntal and spiritual; the soul being engthened by God's truth, as the dy is built up by food.

"Underbuilt with Bible study." This pression was used by Mr. Robert E. eer in recommending Bible study. e further says: "Those who depre-te devotional Bible study, as some , are wrong. To study the Bible as study Euclid, or Plato, or Mill, or not, may have no effect whatever on the soul of a man or his charac-r. The kind of Bible study which e Y. M. C. A. (and, we add, all Sun-y School teachers and scholars) ught to do is the study of the Bible the interest of personal religion, as e revelation of a living, personal rd, our Father, to us, his sons, to ow us how to live among men and ow to live in his Spirit. There is limited need of this kind of study. is of infinitely more importance than e critical, or literary, or historical udy of the Bible, necessary as these e."

"Do you know the Scriptures better an you did a year ago?" asks Rev. ayland Hoyt, D.D. And then he ys: "You ought to. Have you more aces in the Bible to which you go as bird goes to her retreat? You ought . Are there more precious spots in e Bible than there were once? There ught to be. Suppose some one had trusted me with a great matter, nd had given me written instructions s to how to conduct it, and suppose hen I felt like it I went and read a entence, and then after a week, half dozen sentences, I should have only e most fragmentary knowledge of e instructions. But how many hristians there are who treat the ible thus."

There are Sunday School teachers ho give comparatively little study o the Bible; not enough to teach it ithout a Lesson Leaf Quarterly or uestion book in hand.

Preparation Plan for Teachers

1. Read I. Tim. 4: 10-16.
2. Pray for the Spirit's guidance nto all truth.
3. Read the lesson from the Bible not lesson leaf).
4. Think about the lesson and try to bsorb it.
5. Make notes for self-help.
6. Consult lesson helps, in Bible ictionary, Concordance, Teachers' uide or Lesson Notes.
7. Select illustrations from many sources: nature, everyday life, history, other parts of the Bible, etc.
8. Make outline of plan for teaching the lesson.
9. Prepare questions, in order to have a fixed plan for developing the lesson. These questions should not be carried into the class on paper, but should be in the teacher's mind and heart.
10. Pray for God's blessing on the plan thus prepared, for strength to carry it out, and for preparedness of the minds and hearts of the scholars to receive the lesson.

A Famous Judge's Opinion

The late Justice David J. Brewer once said: "For over fifty years I have been connected with Sunday Schools as scholar or teacher. During twelve of the years passed since I came to Washington, I have met a class of adults, and with them studied the sacred volume. And now, cui bono? (what good?) The question is asked as a personal one, not how or how much it has affected others, but what profit has it been to me? First. I have learned to have a greater tolerance of the views of others in respect to the meaning of different portions of the Book. Second. Study of the Bible has given familiarity with the best specimens of literary composition. No book ever written has more lofty imagery, such appealing poetry, or displays such exquisite selections of choicest words and phrases, expressing highest thoughts. . . . None furnishes such apt and useful quotations. Even in legal opinions (and they are generally dry and colorless), I have often found some sentence in the Bible to give emphasis to my thought, and vigor to the argument. Third. That its study gives assurance that it is what it purports to be—a message from God to man. . . . Fourth. One thing which is clearly disclosed by its teaching is the fact and unity of a Divine Being. Fifth. More and more am I convinced that Jesus of Nazareth came into this world as a revelation of the purpose and character of the Divine Being. . . . He stands in life above men by virtue of a relationship to the Infinite not possessed by others. He is in a most real sense the incarnation of the Divine."

A Timely Gift

WE HAVE just received your check for $20 for the Lord's work in our hands, for which we send you genuine thanks, and you will be glad to hear that it came as a direct answer to our earnest prayers for an outing for the fifty little boys and girls we now have in charge in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD orphanage. It was like this: we have no yards to either the boys' or girls' homes, so we thought a trip up or down the beautiful Siang River would not only be instructive to the older boys and girls, but would give us a chance for some Gospel work, and would do all the children a lot of good physically. We were asking our heavenly Father that he would send us some funds from some unsought-of and unthought-of source—and now yours comes, and is just a-plenty to hire the two large boats we need, and spend ten or twenty days on the river. We can only praise Him. The children are a sort of junior missionary army now. The older boys paste up and give out the tracts, while some help me sell Gospels, and all, boys and girls, form a large Gospel chorus, and sing in unison the sweet Gospel songs from large written song-sheets, and this will draw the crowds. Thanks again from us, and all the fifty children shout, to-sie! (Thanks!)

ALLEN AND JENNIE CAMERON.

Changsha, Hunan Province, China.

"It's the Finest Fish I Ever Saw"

That is what every one says of our

NABOB BRAND

of Absolutely Boneless Georges

CODFISH

The fish from which this is made are caught on those Banks where the best and thickest codfish are found. It is the finest selection of the catch, cut into thick, white, flaky pieces, all bones removed. The fish is carefully packed in an improved hinge-cover box lined with wax paper.

You can not get fish of a quality like this anywhere except from us.

A trial 4-lb box, $1.00 (5-lb. box $1.20; 10-lb. box, $2.35) delivered anywhere in the immediate confines of the United States and at residences where express companies make such deliveries.

Send for price-list of Mackerel, Halibut, Lobster, Sardines and all sorts of salt-water products of the highest quality.

CONSUMERS FISH COMPANY, 70 Commercial St., Gloucester, Mass.

Kaleidophane

Makes art glass out of plain glass

It is a thin, translucent material, easily applied to any pane of glass without removing it. Reproduces perfectly all the rich coloring and beautiful designs found in stained glass at a fraction of the cost. Will not fade from light or washing. Made in many patterns, appropriate for homes, hotels, cafes and other business places. Also churches, clubs and public buildings. Use Kaleidophane wherever privacy is desired. Shuts out the view but admits the light. More economical than curtains or shades for transoms, cellar or bathroom windows and show windows in stores and offices. Costs little and very easy to put on. Write today for free samples.

KONINSKI ART CO., Dept. C, St. Louis, Mo.

Rugs, Carpets, Curtains, Blankets From the Mill We Pay Freight

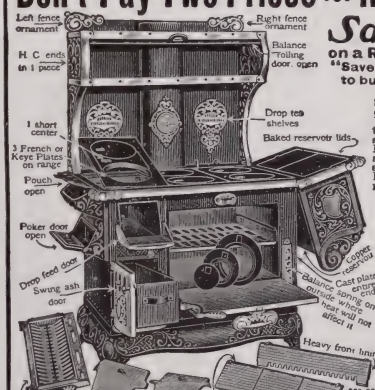
Manufacturers' prices save you dealers' profits. We give a guarantee of satisfaction and save you 33 1-3 per cent. We have 25,000 satisfied customers. The well-known Regal Rug, 6x9 ft., reversible, all-wool finish, $3.75. Our Brussels Rug, 6x9 ft., greatest value known, $1.85. Splendid grade Brussels Rug, 9x12 ft., $11. Famous Invincible Velveta, 9x12 ft., $16. Standard Axminsters, 9 x 12 ft., $18.50. Fine quality Lace Curtains, 45c per pair and up. Tapestry Curtains, Wilton Rugs, Linoleums, at mill prices.

Write to-day for our NEW ILLUSTRATED CATALOG, No. 14. Scarfree. Shows latest designs in actual colors.

UNITED MILLS MFG. CO.
2438-2462 JASPER ST., PHILA.

SPENCERIAN STEEL PENS

Sample card 12 pens & 2 penholders for 10 cents. Spencerian Pen Co., 349 Broadway, New York.



EVERYWOMAN SHOULD EARN $25 PER WEEK

Introducing our very complete line of wool suitings, wash fabrics, fancy waistings, silks, bibbs, petticoats, dresses, etc. Dealing direct with the mills, our prices are low. Others make $10.00 to $30.00 weekly—you can also. Samples, instructions, etc., in neat case, charges prepaid. No money required. Exclusive territory. Be first to apply for Agency. Standard Dress Goods Co., Desk 3 J, Standard Building Binghamton, N.Y.

Don't Pay Two Prices for Ranges & Heaters

Save $18 to $22 on a Range or Base Burner.

"Save enough on a single stove to buy your winter's fuel."

Read about our Remarkable Stove Improvements. Highest Grade Materials, Superior Workmanship, Latest Patterns and Scientific Construction in our illustrated FREE Catalog. It explains all about how the finest stoves in the world are made. Read the description of our new improvements in stoves.

No Others In the World Like Them

Hoosier Stoves the best in the world

SAVE HALF THE COAL

Bluefield, Col.—I received my stove and have tried it thoroughly. I am perfectly satisfied with it. I use about one-half the coal and get about one-third more heat than I did with my old stove. I don't see how you can put the material used and the excellent workmanship on your stoves and sell them for the price you do. I could not duplicate mine in my town for $60.00. I have saved $20.00 on my stove. SAML. L. WADE, Prof. English.

WE HAVE MORE THAN 18,000 LETTERS LIKE ABOVE.

HOOSIER STOVE FACTORY
164 State St., Marion, Ind.

NOTICE

No matter where you live, we deliver Hoosiers to you to use 30 days free in your own home before you buy.

MAIL THIS COUPON TODAY

Gentlemen—Please mail me free your Stove Catalog containing full part culars in regard to your new improvements on stoves I may purchase a Cook Stove Range, Heating Stove or Base Burner in the near future. (State the kind of stove you are interested in.)

Name

Town

State

The new improvements on Hoosier Stoves and Ranges absolutely surpass anything ever produced. You can't afford to buy until you know all about these wonderful improvements. Send for Free Catalog and prices.

HOOSIER STOVE FACTORY
164 State Street
MARION, INDIANA

Cut out this coupon today, sign your name and address in full and mail to us

St. Address or P. O. Box

The Fight for the Child

CIVILIZATION and Christianity have done much for the child. Time was when childhood was lightly esteemed and often harshly and cruelly dealt with. The Greeks and Romans had no place for the deformed or infirm, and left them unaided to a cruel fate. Christianity smiled upon the child and blessed it, and no sweeter words were ever breathed than those of Jesus: "Suffer the little children to come unto me, and forbid them not, for of such is the kingdom of heaven."

And yet is there great need for the waging of vigorous warfare in the interest of the child, and many battles have yet to be fought and won before the child will be protected as it needs to be.

That was a splendid fight put up by the Earl of Shaftesbury in the early half of last century on behalf of the children who had been "caught in the grip of the new industrial system." It is said that "Lancashire factories bought them by large loads from the London workhouses and held them for years nominally as apprentices, really as slaves. In a stifling atmosphere babies of five were made to stand on stools and feed the great machines for fourteen hours a day. Underground in the mines things were even worse. Children of six were sitting alone all day in pitch darkness, opening and shutting doors as the trucks ran by." The grand Christian Earl had to fight against fearful odds. The mill-owners and mine-owners had great influence in the House of Commons. The cry was raised, "British industries will be ruined if child labor is abolished!" but Shaftesbury fought on, and after seventeen years of persistent work, in 1847 he saw his Factory Bill become a law, and the iniquitous child labor was a thing of the past.

That was a splendid fight Judge Ben Lindsey put up at Denver, when he insisted on the enforcement of the child labor laws. He found in the cotton mills children of ten and twelve years working like slaves without any chance of education, and subject to the worst kind of moral conditions. He tells in Everybody's Magazine that proceedings were taken against the company and the owners and superintendents heavily fined. One of the owners—a man of wealth—protested at being termed a criminal. He said: "We have never had any trouble until this fight started. We're helping Denver, and we ought to be encouraged instead of being persecuted. I warn you right now that if this thing is kept up we'll shut down the mills and you'll have to take the consequences." Judge Lindsey says: "The fight was kept up. The children were forced to go to school. The mill shut down and I became 'an enemy of prosperity' — prosperity founded upon the slavery of children and the stunting of young lives."

Senator Beveridge, in a speech dealing with this question, said: "The-lowest estimate I have been able to find is that every year there are not less than 10,000 little boys and girls from seven to fourteen years of age actually killed by the overwork. . . . The lowest estimate I am able to find is that 250,-000 American children who survive the work in the cotton mills and the coal breakers, in the silk mills and the glass factories and sweat shops of this country until they reach maturity are made degenerates every year and poured into the body of American citizenship. . . . Little girls below seven years of age—five years old—are dragged from bed at four and five o'clock in the morning, fed with coarse food, and made to work standing on their feet for twelve long hours. Boys on the coal breakers of Pennsylvania from seven to sixteen years of age sit in the chutes of rushing coal and pick with bleeding fingers the slag as the coal speeds by. Occasionally a little fellow falls into the coal chute, and he is swept into the great roaring mass of fuel material and crushed to death. . . . These children's bodies are literally wrecked. Their bones are made crooked before they are formed; their minds are dulled; their souls are stunted; and not only their usefulness for this life but the possibility of life hereafter is involved."

During the agitation against child labor in England in 1847, Elizabeth Barrett Browning wrote the "Cry of the Children." Some of its lines have particular point in the present crisis in this country:

They look up with their pale and sunken faces,
And their look is dread to see;
For they mind you of their angels in high places,
With eyes turned on Deity.

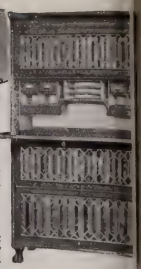
"How long," they say, "how long, O cruel nation,
Will you stand, to move the world, on a child's heart?
Stifle down with a mailed heel its palpitation,
And tread onward to your throne amid the mart?

Our blood splashes upward, O gold-heaper,
And your purple shows your path;
But the child's sob curses deeper in the silence
Than the strong man in his wrath!

REV. GEORGE W. RIDEOUT.
Trenton, N. J.

A Deserving Case

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD has received a letter from a reader in North Dakota, which presents a case that is entitled to the charitable consideration of other readers. The writer says: "This is our fourth season here. We have had only one fair crop. The year before last we made fairly good money; but last year and this, we 'dried out' and some fields did not return the seed, and we are in debt, of course. Our creditors want their money and if we can't get it somewhere, we shall lose everything. You may perhaps know of some one who would be willing to make us a loan on easy payments and at a low rate of interest. We can give security if desired."



Any reader of this journal who may be benevolently disposed and who knows the joy of service rendered without ostentation, "in His Name," can learn further particulars of this case by addressing THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. We shall be glad to put such a one in communication with the writer of the appeal, whom we believe to be a worthy person.

Precious Gifts to Mont-Lawn

MANY letters have been received from readers during the past week, showing the warmest sympathy with our work among the children at Mont-Lawn. "I sympathize with the little waifs and wish I could help to alleviate the suffering of many. In my possession are two gold coins which I have kept for years in memory of my babe who died many years ago. I have decided to use these souvenirs to help give the pleasure that a sojourn for a few days at Mont-Lawn will afford to some poor little waif," writes MRS. C. D. B., Clarksburg, Md. L. S. W., Flatbush, N. Y., writes, asking an outing for two poor children—"the oldest a 'little mother,' who cares for the younger ones while the mother, a widow, works in a paint factory. The three children (the youngest is a baby) are locked in the top floor of a tenement while the mother is at work." The golden gift from C. D. B. will give these little ones an outing.

I have been a subscriber for THE CHRISTIAN HERALD many years and enjoy it much. I am sure it is doing much good.
New Lyme, O. MRS. E. E. TUCKERMAN.

GUNN SECTIONAL BOOK CASES

You will save money by putting these bookcases in your home. The handsome designs, the rich finish, the removable non-binding doors, the absence of disfiguring iron bands, make them far better than the old-fashioned kind.

Our prices are lower than others and high quality is guaranteed. Write for our artistic Catalog C H, with colored illustrations, showing Sanitary Clawfoot, Mission and Standard styles. Sold by dealers or direct.

Gunn Furniture Company, 57 Victoria St., Grand Rapids, Mich.

FINAL ANNOUNCEMENT OF

LAST CHANCE

Magazine Offers Expiring September 30

WE shall be able to offer only a few of the magazines named below at the present very low prices after September 30, 1911. You will have to pay considerably more for most of them and as much as double for one or two. Now is the time to take advantage of the lowest possible prices for next year. This offer closes September 30, 1911.

The Christian Herald offers cannot be duplicated anywhere. The special clubs of Magazines offered in this way are controlled by us, and they can be obtained only by ordering from us. These combinations offer discounts of from 30 to 50 per cent. These clubs will enable you to save considerable money on your Magazines for 1912. All orders should be sent to The Christian Herald, Bible House, New York City. You should renew your subscription to the following magazines now, before prices go up.

American Boy,	(Regular Price)	$1.00	✗ Hampton's,	(Regular Price)	$1.50
✗ American Magazine,	" "	$1.50	Little Folks,	" "	$1.00
✗ Cosmopolitan,	" "	$1.00	✗ McClure's,	" "	$1.50
✗ Delineator,	" "	$1.00	✗ Pearson's	" "	$1.50
✗ Good Housekeeping,	" "	$1.25	World Evangel,	" "	$1.00
Harper's Bazar,	" "	$1.25	✗ World To-Day,	" "	$1.50

✗ Woman's Home Companion, (Regular Price) $1.50

Magazines marked ✗ will not be offered again at this low rate

Four Genuine Bargains

CHRISTIAN HERALD ($1.50 a Year) AND ANY 1 Magazine above, $2.00
CHRISTIAN HERALD ($1.50 a Year) AND ANY 2 Magazines above, $2.65
CHRISTIAN HERALD ($1.50 a Year) AND ANY 3 Magazines above, $3.30

CHRISTIAN HERALD . ($1.50 a Year)
REVIEW OF REVIEWS . ($3.00 a Year)
ANY ONE OTHER Magazine listed above,
Send Us Only $3.00 For All Three

104 Magazines For Only $3.00

The Christian Herald 52 Issues
The Outlook 52 Issues, Including 12 Double Numbers
$3.00

Regular Subscription Price of the Above is $4.50

For "Modern Priscilla" (Fancywork—Monthly) add 50 cents to any combination. For "Farm Journal" 2 yrs. (General Farm Paper) add 25 cents to any combination.

Foreign Postage Extra. Canadian Postage Extra on Magazines.

All Subscribers accepting Magazine offers will have full privileges of paid-in-advance subscribers in connection with our own special Book and Premium Offers, and will receive FREE our New 1912 Almanac, as described in September 13th issue of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD.

LAST CHANCE

The Christian Herald, Bible House, New York

Young People's Societies

A Well-Rounded Life*

A RICH man was once heard to say, "It is absurd that you should ask me to give a tenth of my income for my religion and charity. I have more than ten important causes to which to contribute—four children, a wife, the enlargement of my business, a country place, life-insurance and a dozen others. To give a tenth of my income to the Lord, as you suggest, would be all out of proportion."

Yet when this man's prosperity declined fifty per cent. because of the closing of the church in the village where his country place was situated; and when one of his sons went down to a drunkard's grave, he began to see that when he placed the cause of Christ in the same category and as approximately of only equal importance with his life insurance and other worldly items, he himself had seen things badly out of proportion.

All other causes are included in this one cause. A man must take proper care of his own; he should lay up something every year for the chances of illness and old age; but the prosperity of his home and of his beloved depends most of all upon the prosperity of Christ and his church in the world. Let us give thought and care and calculation to it, lovingly and generously supporting it to the extent of our ability. "Oh, to grace how great a debtor" is each one of us! We can never pay the debt, but we can do our best toward it. Our feeling should be that of Watts in the beloved hymn commencing, "When I survey the wondrous cross," and we should feel to our souls' depths the lines:

> Were the whole realm of nature mine,
> That were an offering far too small;
> Love so amazing, so divine,
> Demands my soul, my life, my all.

To the thoughtful observer, even the pessimistic, there must be visible many bright tokens that the race is improving. Most of us will agree with Dr. J. R. Miller when he says: "There are indications that commercialism has been born again. This is not saying that politicians, railroad kings, and captains of industry are becoming saints; it is saying, however, that the religion of Christ is at work with resistless energy in all the world's life, and that out of the travail of souls a better righteousness is coming."

This righteousness includes not only justice, but more. Men will give not only what they judge that they ought, but they will long to give and will stint themselves in order to help Christ's "little ones."

Mr. Moody used to tell a story of a rich man who was converted, but who complained bitterly that the Lord had bestowed upon him no gifts of eloquence or exhortation.

"What can I do in the way of service?" he asked humbly.

"You remember," said Mr. Moody significantly, "that one of the most useful fishes that the disciples caught revealed, when his mouth was opened, a piece of money. You may not have the silver tongue of eloquence, but you may have something quite as helpful to God's cause."

The man understood; and one of the finest buildings in the consecrated Northfield group was his gift.

The Christian life of any of us who do not yield freely of our substance, as well as of the devotion of our lips, is bound to be poor and unsymmetrical. Loving service means giving—not only of time and thought but of the increase of our "basket and store."

> There doth not live
> Any so poor but they may give;
> Any so rich but may receive.
>
> Withhold the very meagrest dole
> Hands can bestow, in part or whole,
> And we may stint a starving soul.

*Topic of the Epworth League for Sunday, October 1. TEXT: II Cor. 8:7; Luke 11:42.

Great Lives: Peter*

THE figure of St. Peter looms larger in history than that of any of the other disciples. John was more lovable, any one of the rest was more stable during his discipleship—not one of them, saving the arch-criminal of all time, Judas Iscariot, sinned more grievously; yet not one was more eloquent, more zealous, more successful than Peter. Probably Paul, with his superior education and more cultivated ancestry, was more able. Surely he was a better writer, since no one in the literary roster of any country surpassed him, and in tact and in the management of men he was pre-eminent. But the great martyr-apostle to the Jews was called by Jesus the rock on which he built his church, the shepherd to whom he especially confided the feeding of his sheep, and his name is always placed first in every apostolic list.

It is supposed that Peter was at the time of his calling of about the age of our Lord. We know that he was married, because we hear of his wife's mother, to whom he appeared to have been a model son-in-law. Tradition tells us that his wife's name was Perpetua (or, some say, Concordia), and that they had several children. It is supposed that Perpetua suffered martyrdom.

It would seem that the great apostle to the Gentiles received his special training for his mighty work chiefly from Peter (Gal. 1: 18, 19). He had seen James and "no other disciple," but he "abode fifteen days" with Peter. Those sacred days must have been full of deep and heaven-inspired interviews.

It is true that Peter is with cause usually called the apostle to the Hebrews in contradistinction to Paul, as the apostle to the Gentiles; and yet the crown and consummation of Peter's ministry is considered to be his baptism of the heathen Cornelius, a representative of the Roman force and nationality; yet coming into the Christian fold without any intermediate study of or subscription to Judaism. Thus Peter, who had, as Dr. McClintock says, "first preached the resurrection to the Jews, baptized the first converts, and confirmed the first Samaritans, now threw down the barriers which separated proselytes of the gate from Israelites."

After Peter's imprisonment by Herod Agrippa, and his miraculous deliverance, we lose sight of him for some years. Then came the great clash between him and Paul (see Gal. 2), and the bitter reproof from Paul because Peter had yielded to the importunities of the ultra-orthodox, and had socially separated himself from the Gentile Christians, while continuing in churchly relations with them. Most humbly apparently did Peter bow to the reproof of his younger colleague. No trace of enmity or bitterness toward Paul can be found in Peter's later conduct or writings.

In accordance with our Lord's prophecy, he was undoubtedly crucified in Rome at about the same time that Paul was beheaded.

That Peter was very dear to his Lord the whole Gospel narrative shows. When the awful denial occurred, the Lord, as Mr. Moody remarks, might well have said to him, "Have you forgotten how I healed your wife's mother? how I stretched out my hand and kept you from drowning? how I allowed you to witness the transfiguration? how you were with me in Gethsemane?—and have you forgotten me so soon?" But he did nothing of the kind. He simply cast one look on Peter and there was so much love in it that "he went out and wept bitterly."

*Christian Endeavor Topic for Sunday, October 1. TEXT: John 21:1-19.

"Standard"
GUARANTEED PLUMBING FIXTURES

BECAUSE of their durability and efficiency "Standard" guaranteed plumbing fixtures never cease to add value to your building investment, as long as your building endures. Their comfort and convenience are a constant source of satisfaction.

Build permanent sanitary protection into your home by specifying, not verbally, but in writing (using catalogue numbers), "Standard" plumbing fixtures, and seeing to it personally that they and not substitutes, are installed. Each "Standard" fixture bears a guarantee label for your protection. It is the assurance to you of modern and sanitary equipment of the highest quality.

Genuine "Standard" fixtures for the Home and for Schools, Office Buildings, Public Institutions, etc., are identified by the Green and Gold Label with the exception of baths bearing the Red and Black Label which, while of the first quality of manufacture, have a slightly thinner enameling, and thus meet the requirements of those who demand "Standard" quality at less expense. All "Standard" fixtures with care will last a lifetime. And no fixture is genuine unless it bears the guarantee label.

Send for a copy of our beautiful catalog, "Modern Bathrooms." It will prove of invaluable assistance in the planning of your bathroom, kitchen or laundry. Many model rooms are illustrated, costing from $78 to $600. This valuable book is sent for 6 cents postage.

Standard Sanitary Mfg. Co. Dept. 56 PITTSBURGH, PA.

New York ..... 35 West 31st St
Chicago ..... 415 Ashland Block
Philadelphia ..... 1128 Walnut St
Toronto, Can ..... 59 Richmond St., E.
Pittsburgh ..... 106 Sixth St
St. Louis ..... 100 N. Fourth St
Nashville ..... 315 Tenth Ave., So.
New Orleans, Baronne and St. Josephits
Montreal, Can ..... 215 Coristine Bldg.
Boston ..... John Hancock Bldg
Louisville ..... 319-23 West Main St
Cleveland ..... 648 Huron Road, S. E.
London ..... 53 Holborn Viaduct, E. C.
Houston, Tex ..... Preston and South Streets
San Francisco ..... Metropolis Bank Building
Washington, D. C. ..... Southern Building
Toledo, O. ..... 311-321 Erie Street
Fort Worth, Tex ..... Cor. Front and Jones Sts

LIMBERT'S ARTS AND CRAFTS FURNITURE GRAND RAPIDS AND HOLLAND

MADE BY HOLLAND DUTCH CRAFTSMEN

$2

Our New Style Book Mailed Free

IT should be in the hands of every home maker who appreciates the artistic, practical and highest quality of Craftsmanship in furniture. The booklet illustrates over 300 patterns of our Holland-Dutch Arts and Crafts furniture, gives an interesting history of this charming style since the 15th Century and contains colored plates of Arts and Crafts interiors showing what tasty and harmonious effects can be obtained for a small expenditure.

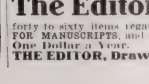
Ask your local dealer to show you Limbert's Holland-Dutch Arts and Crafts, and see our trademark branded into the wood. If he cannot supply you, send us his name and we will send you the address of our Associate Dealer near you.

CHARLES P. LIMBERT COMPANY
Holland, Mich Dept. N Grand Rapids, Mich.

"DON'T SHOUT"

"I hear you. I can hear now as well as anybody. 'How?' Oh, something new—The MORLEY PHONE. I've a pair in my ears now, but they are invisible. I would not know I had them in, myself, only that I hear all right"

The MORLEY PHONE for the DEAF



makes low sounds and whispers plainly heard. Invisible, comfortable, weightless and harmless. Anyone can adjust it. Over One Hundred Thousand Sold. Write for booklet and testimonials.
THE MORLEY CO., Dept. 754, Perry Building, Philadelphia

LAME PEOPLE

The Perfection Extension Shoe is worn with ready-made shoes. Both feet look alike. Shipped on trial. Write for booklet.
HENRY F. LOTZ,
313—3rd Ave., New York

IDEAL FOLDING BATH TUB

For tubless houses, campers, cold water flats, small rooms, use in any room. Light, lasts years. Write for free booklet—or offer.
N. O. Y. BATH MFG. CO.
103 Chambers St., N. Y.

The Editor A Journal of Information for Literary Workers, published each month from forty to sixty items regarding magazines which PAY FOR MANUSCRIPTS, and outlines their specific needs. One Dollar a Year. Fifteen Cents a Copy.
THE EDITOR, Drawer H, Ridgewood, N.J.

"I want to compliment you, Mary, on the fine flavour of your Postum since it has been well-boiled.
"The old nervousness and liver troubles have left me since I gave up coffee and use

POSTUM

Have you read the little book, "The Road to Wellville," found in packages?

"There's a Reason"

Postum Cereal Company, Limited
Battle Creek, Mich., U. S. A.

Canadian Postum Cereal Co., Ltd.
Windsor, Ontario, Canada

Christian Herald

COPYRIGHT, 1911, BY THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

SUBSCRIPTION, $1.50 PER ANNUM
PUBLISHED 52 TIMES A YEAR

NEW YORK, SEPTEMBER 27, 1911

VOL. 34—NO. 39. PRICE 5 CENTS
OFFICES: BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK

"THE TWO SISTERS." From the Famous Painting by William A. Bouguereau, in the Metropolitan Museum of Art, New York

OUR · MAIL · BAG

Questions and Answers

H. A. L., Nashville, Mich. Who is the author and what is the title of the poem commencing "Backward, turn backward, O Time, in your flight"?

Mrs. Elizabeth Akers Allen, born 1832, died August 5, 1911. The title of the poem is "Rock Me to Sleep, Mother."

Mrs. J. P. R., Lorraine, Miss. Is the quotation, "It is not all of life to live, nor all of death to die," from the Bible?

No. It is the latter part of the second stanza of the hymn beginning, "Oh, where shall rest be found?" by James Montgomery.

M. L. J., Kansas City, Mo. 1. What is the literal meaning of Matt. 23: 5-8? 2. Luke 20: 46, 47? 3. Are those who are not saved to receive different degrees of punishment? 4. How will we be able to recognize our loved ones in heaven? 5. What is the "unpardonable sin"?

1. Jesus was warning his hearers specially against the sin of spiritual pride, and inculcating humility and service. 2. In the passage in Luke, the same theme is dealt with, but with added evil characteristics which aggravate the offense and assure heavier punishment. 3. Scripture teaches that there are different degrees both of reward and punishment. 4. Recognition in heaven has been already discussed in THE MAIL-BAG. It is indicated in many Bible passages, including II. Sam. 12: 23; Luke 16: 23; Rev. 6: 9, 10; I. Thess. 4: 13-18; Heb. 13: 17; Matt. 8: 11; Eph. 3: 15, etc. These passages intimate the preservation of identity, and that heaven is the Christian's fatherland where we shall see our friends and loved ones, whom here we have "lost awhile." 5. The "unpardonable sin" is believed to have been attributing the works of the Holy Spirit to Satanic agency. With respect to all other sins, we can only answer that we have Jesus assurance that our Father is ready to forgive "to the uttermost" those who come to him repentant and believing.

Mary D., Springfield, Ill. Our Sunday School class has been divided on the meaning of Mark 8: 26. Can THE MAIL-BAG help us?

There was a disposition on the part of the populace to look upon Christ simply as a worker of wonders—a miracle monger—and to overlook the spiritual meaning of his work. They crowded about him so greatly as to frequently impede his progress. Notoriety of this sort was far from being his desire. It did not aid his commission and it stirred up the opposition of the Scribes and Pharisees to a point that threatened a serious interruption to his ministry and led to plots being laid against his life.

A. H. S., Washington, D. C. How long did the plagues of Egypt last and what time elapsed between them?

There is no positive statement as to the period of time they occupied. Some writers contend that each plague lasted throughout a season, basing this belief on a comparison of the plagues with certain natural phenomena occurring at fixed seasons in Egypt. This, though ingenious, is not generally accepted. The general view taken by Bible scholars is that each plague lasted only for a short time, and that a few weeks, or at longest a month or two, sufficed for the happening of the whole.

Mrs. L. B., Albany, Mo. There has arisen in our Bible Study class a discussion over John 4: 24. The sentence: "God is a Spirit," or the new version, "God is Spirit." Some of the class believe God exists in tangible form.

It is related that when the Westminster Catechism was being compiled, the assembly of divines took up in due course the question: "What is God?" A long discussion followed, without satisfactory conclusion. One of the oldest divines present—a venerable Christian—was asked to lead in prayer and did so in these words: "O Thou who art a Spirit, infinite, eternal and unchangeable in thy power, wisdom, holiness, justice, goodness and truth, teach us what thou art." The prayer of this inspired divine, with the exception of the last clause of five words, was adopted as the Assembly's conception of Deity and included in the catechism, where it stands today, probably the best definition ever attempted. If we add the three adjectives, "omnipotent, omniscient, omnipresent," it is as complete as man can make it. The Bible tells us that no man hath seen God at any time, implying that the full effulgence of the Divine Personality is such that the human vision or senses are incapable of beholding it. To attribute a tangible or human form to God is an ancient error. The divine likeness and image of God in man was not a likeness of bodily form or features, but of godlike temperament, disposition, desires and aspirations after spiritual things—spiritualized intelligence.

L. C., Little Muddy, Ky. Do you think there will be degrees in heaven?

There are several passages that indicate the probability of degrees. Daniel's famous passage relative to the soul-winners who will "shine as the stars forever" is one; Paul implies a similar diversity when he speaks of one star differing from another in glory; so did Jesus in his reply to the two disciples for whom it was asked that they should sit at his right and left hand in his kingdom. The parable of the talents also bears a kindred interpretation.

Mrs. W. D., Ogden, Utah. Have there been any further developments since the reported finding of the Ark of the Covenant? What did the Ark contain when it was hidden?

There is little doubt that the story of the recent finding of the Ark was untrue; at all events, as we foresaw, it has not been verified. The Ark itself was made of wood, heavily lined with gold, and while the exact dimensions are uncertain, it is believed by the best informed authorities to have been about 38,873 cubic inches. In I. Kings 8: 9, it is said that nothing was kept in it but the tables of the law; but in Heb. 9: 4, the information is given that it contained (presumably at the time of its hiding) besides the tables, a golden pot of manna and Aaron's rod.

W. D., Jr., Jacksonville, Fla. In reckoning a tithe for a business man, what is the best method to be applied? I know there are several ways of tithing.

The simplest and most direct is to tithe the income, not the gross receipts. To give one-tenth of the gross receipts would obviously be a tax upon both income and capital. If at the end of a certain period it is ascertained that a given sum has been received in your business, there should be deducted from it the cost of goods sold, expenses of management, rent, light, taxes, wages, advertising and other legitimate business expenses. The balance is income, and it is this which is available for tithing. Similarly, shares, bonds, or other securities are tithed not on the principal, but on the interest or proceeds. See the various Scriptural passages on "the tithe of the increase."

J. W., Exeter, Mo. 1. Is there any Scripture to show that infants are saved? 2. Will infants have infant bodies through eternity, or will they have adult bodies?

1. Infant salvation has been widely discussed among Church authorities and by Christian writers generally. Rom. 5: 18 is held to justify the view that children dying in infancy partake of the benefits of Christ's sacrifice. They have not reached the age of responsibility (see Rom. 5: 15, 17). Neither faith nor disbelief can be applied to infants. Jesus' own words when he blessed the children were "of such is the kingdom of heaven." God adopts our infants as his children even before their birth, when he promises that he will be a Father to us and to our offspring, and this promise, it is held, includes their salvation. To assume that all infants who die without baptism are lost, was a conclusion rejected even by Calvin. The children of Christian parents are included in the covenant with Christ, and the rite of baptism is the natural and visible sign and seal of that covenant. 2. There is no reason to suppose that the future life will be other than one of progress, and this would imply progress in growth in every direction. We can only conjecture what that growth will mean in the spiritual world.

E. J. C., Minneapolis, Minn. 1. Were there two Marys who anointed Jesus? 2. Were the two thieves tied or nailed to the cross?

1. The conclusion adopted by the majority of interpreters is that there were two anointings: one during Jesus' Galilean ministry (Luke 7) and another at Bethany (Matt. 26, Mark 14 and John 12). It cannot be proved that Mary, the sister of Lazarus, was the agent in both anointings, though she may have been in the second. Nor is it definitely shown that Mary of Magdala was in either scene. The Mary of the first anointing, "out of whom went seven devils," was probably another person altogether. There are several women who bore the name Mary. The whole subject has been much discussed, without any fixed conclusion being reached. 2. That Jesus was nailed to his cross according to prophecy is certain (John 20: 25, 27 and other passages). Nailing and binding were both used. There is no reason to doubt that the two malefactors shared a similar fate.

H. P., Blairsville, Pa. Please let me know the name of the originator of the tintype, and when it first came into use.

A French painter and physicist, Louis Jacques Nande Daguerre, discovered the tintype, a process made known in 1839 at a meeting of the Academy of Sciences, France, and called in honor of him the daguerreotype.

R. M., Waterbury, Conn. Please explain Matt. 5: 29, 30, also verse 48, same chapter.

It is an injunction to us to make sacrifice of that which is nearest and dearest and most precious, if it should stand in the way of our salvation. The illustration is made striking by the use of an extreme figure of speech. Verse 48 points us to God himself, who, being absolute perfection, is our highest model.

Copyright, Underwood & Underwood

Snake-Charmers in India

ONE of the most typical and interesting sights which greets the eye of the traveler in India is the never-ending procession of dervishes and fakirs. Though many of these are members of various Mohammedan and Hindu orders, the large majority of them are merely mendicants or single devotees, who subsist by the exercise of their proficiency as jugglers, hypnotists or snake-charmers. All of these are popular with their own countrymen as well as with the visitor, but though the cleverness of the juggler or adeptness of the hynotist may charm the crowd, they are never surrounded with such a mob as can be found about the blankets where the snake-charmers have spread out their collections of reptiles. The photograph here reproduced is a typical one. The variety of snakes which these men carry about with them forms quite a collection, varying all the way from a diminutive adder to a fairly large python and a king cobra.

Miscellaneous

Mrs. J. E. P., Oberlin, Kan. See answer to Mrs. T. A. A., Garbes, Okla., in MAIL-BAG, September 6 issue.

W. A. M., Chariton, Ia. According to Matt. 1: 5, Rahab became the wife of Salmon (the son of Naasson or Nahshon) and the ancestress of Boaz, grandfather of Jesse.

Mrs. L. G. S. B., Meriden, Conn. The name of David's mother is nowhere given. Nahash, whose name is mentioned in both Samuel and Chronicles, was a king of Ammon.

J. J. B., Bloomington, Ill. A parcels post is greatly favored by the people and is bound to come at no distant date. It would greatly increase the postal revenues, besides being a popular accommodation.

M. E. K., East Aurora, N. Y. No such doctrine is taught in the Bible. Still, even the regenerate may backslide, though they will not "utterly fall." Satan cannot drag down successfully those who have been justified and sanctified, although they may be tempted and tried.

H. L. S., Rutland, Vt. The Lord's Prayer reads: "Thy kingdom come; thy will be done on earth as it is in heaven." This is the universal prayer of the Christian Church, that our hearts may be so disposed to God's will in all things that we will do his works here on earth, and thus begin to live in the true spirit of his kingdom where he rules in the hearts of men.

Josephine B., Richmond, Ind., writes: "I wish to reply to the question of Clara M., New York, in OUR MAIL-BAG: 'Why does a woman strive so hard to make an inferior man of herself?' by asking her to explain how any intelligent woman can enjoy taxation without representation, and why to desire to have a voice as to how her taxes are to be expended makes an 'inferior man of herself,' or makes her the least particle unwomanly."

NEW YORK, SEPTEMBER 27, 1911

THE · CHRISTIAN · HERALD

A WEEKLY ILLUSTRATED NEWSPAPER FOR THE HOME

Little Girls Loading Tiles at Oporto

A Portuguese Chicken-Vendor

A Pleasure-Boat on the River Douro

WOMEN'S WORK IN PORTUGAL

IT WAS at Leixoes, the port of entry for Oporto, that I had my first introduction to the women workers of Portugal. Outside the entrance to the custom house stood a row of women, barefooted, and arrayed in garments of kaleidoscopic variety of color. Not one of the women was dressed in a single color, and many of the shirtwaists were decorated with polka dots of a hue distinctly antagonistic to that of the shirtwaist itself. They kept up a constant chatter and gesticulation, which seemed to increase or diminish according to the notice taken of them, and as the gendarme on duty frequently waved them back I thought they were beggars. The customs examination over, however, in came this motley crowd with a rush, and, balancing on their heads the valises and other belongings of the new arrivals, off they marched with them to the cars outside, which were to take us up to Oporto. Thus these women turned out to be not beggars but porters.

Shortly after leaving the harbor at Leixoes we reached the river Douro, parallel to which our car ran all the way to Oporto. Down by the river dozens of women were engaged in the domestic occupation of washing clothes. In front of each woman was a large smooth stone, and on this she pounded and slapped the clothes after they had been well soaped. This method is, needless to say, a trifle hard on the clothes, but it is certainly an improvement on the Mexican way, which is to pound the clothes with stones.

Interesting as this scene was, it did not compare with the ox-carts and their drivers which we passed on the road. Now, carts drawn by oxen are used in many lands, but nowhere is the outfit so unique as in Portugal. The cart has a small body, like a Roman chariot, sometimes made with basket sides, and the wheels are often just circular blocks of solid wood. The oxen have huge horns, not infrequently measuring three feet and even more from the crown of the head to the tip. Above the heads of a team of oxen is always attached a beautifully carved board, about four feet long by two feet wide, the edge of which is fringed with horsehair. These boards are of Moorish origin and are highly valued by their owners, who will not part with them even when offered a considerable sum of money. But the women, who drive these carts quite as often as the men, are the chief novelty. They seem to be in a class to themselves. Short, slightly built women they are, often quite young girls, in tattered clothes, bare feet, and wearing a peculiar style of hat, of black or yellow straw, like an inverted bucket. They draw up the skirt for two or three inches below the waist and tie it around with a black cloth. This is to relieve the weight of the skirt, which is made of some heavy material. The drivers walk ahead of the oxen, holding to a piece of rope or leather thong, the two ends of which have been attached to the inside horn of each of the oxen. In the free hand they carry a long stick, seldom if ever used. Almost always I saw these women plodding along with their eyes on the ground, hauling away on this rope as if pulling the team after them by main force. In turning to the right or left they would exert their full strength on that side. In this way, and by short, sharp exclamations, the animals were guided. Some of the girls were really beautiful in their rough simplicity, but constant association with the great clumsy oxen seemed to have made them exceedingly bucolic in temperament.

Another branch of women's work in the troubled republic is the tending of the gates at the level crossings on railroads. In most countries this work is done by men, but all over Portugal you see women standing by the closed gates at crossings as the train rushes by, holding two rolled-up flags, one red and one green, and looking themselves a good deal like elaborate flags, clothed as they are in the extraordinary complexity of colors which goes to form the costume of the poorer class Portuguese.

Still more curious is it to see the women acting as hod-carriers on buildings. With the greatest ease they will go up steep gangplanks or ladders, carrying on their heads heavy loads of the bricks and mortar used by the men.

Perhaps the most interesting feature of the Portuguese women in their work is the method employed of carrying everything on the head. Before I went to Portugal I was told that the women carried even the children on their heads, but this they

Continued on page 965

Uphill with a Load of Heather and a Baby

A Typical Morning Scene on the Ribeira at Oporto

Women Unloading Sand from a Barge

The American Pulpit

A SERMON BY

Rev. Frederick F. Shannon, D.D.*

LIFE'S WIDENING HORIZON

TEXT: John 4 : 28 (R.V.)—"So the woman left her water-pot, and went away into the city."

ONE is at a loss to find words to describe this scene. There are only two persons in it. One stands upon the crowning summits of life. The other exists down in the blackest shadows of being. The One is the Life. The other is a type of death. The problem is to get the Life behind the death-shadow, that it may be lit up with the Light of Life. And this is what our Master actually does. He stoops from the pure heights of his own stainless beauty, slips his strong, tender hands beneath a soiled soul, and gently lifts that soul up into the white light of the Eternal.

But oh, the manner in which he does it! Surely, that is beyond all telling. Delicacy, tact, wisdom, love—all are here raised to their highest power. For here is a soul whose doors and windows are locked and barred. This poor woman is deep in her own misery, bleak in her own despair, unlovely in her own lovelessness. Now, see how the Master first wakes her, then wooes her, then wins her. The Prince of Life; he becomes a pauper. Moreover, he becomes a pauper begging from a pauper. "Give me to drink." He is quickly repulsed by the woman's reminder of the age-long antipathy between Jew and Samaritan. "How is it that thou, being a Jew, askest drink of me, who am a Samaritan woman?" But he subdues her intended repulse into a symphony of tenderest yearning. "If thou knewest the gift of God, and who it is that saith unto thee, Give me to drink; thou wouldest have asked of him, and he would have given thee living water."

Life's Water-pot Stage

And so, with unspeakable wisdom, he leads her out and on and up. He leads her out of herself. He leads her on to himself. He leads her up through himself into the Fatherhood of God. Now, our text reveals her doing for others, in her own measure, what has already been done for herself. Or, to put it in a word: She symbolizes a soul climbing out of the jungles of animalism, into which it has wilfully plunged, up into the limitless realms of spiritual life. Thus does the passage tell of life's widening horizons. At first, our horizons are narrow and cramped enough. Literally, they are indeed less than seven miles away. But literally, also, they may be expanded into the tremendous immensities of measureless being, into the plummetless depths of life in God, through Christ Jesus.

I. Consider Life's Water-pot Stage: "So the woman left her water-pot." But is it so only of the woman? Is it not also true of every one of us? Human life begins at the water-pot stage. God intends childhood to be a day all morning. Childhood's day has no noon, no dark end. It is one great fresh swath of unmown greenness. Every blade of grass hath its dewy sparkle. For no blistering sun hath yet scorched those liquid jewels. Truly, the ring of innocence, worn upon childhood's fingers, is set with diamonds. They are diamonds named trust, curiosity, wilfulness, happiness. And this is all good, very good. I sometimes think that every time a child is born the universe is re-created in miniature. Only, if we pause to think, the child teems with bigger, vaster wonder than the universe. For God created the universe out of his power. But God created the human spirit out of himself. Into the universe he blew the breath of his power. Into man's soul he breathed himself. That is how God created man in his own image and likeness. The universe is only an energized atom on a large scale. Man is an inbreathed theocosm, smaller than the physical universe, to be sure. But he is greater and grander and more astonishing than anything in the universe. For, in Christ, man is the child of the great Father God. And God is within, but God is also behind and above the universe and man.

The Wonders of Childhood

And so, creation's crowning wonder, the little child, begins life at the water-pot stage. His circle is small. He is satisfied with rattles. He is tickled with straws. He is an entranced victim of gew-gaws. I have watched children blowing bubbles. As the airy, fairy, rainbowed globes floated away, the children laughed for joy and wonderment. But far more mystic and beautiful than the gorgeous color-bubbles are the children who blow them. And I have watched the stars blossom upon the far-spreading bush of space at night. I am told that in size, as the earth is to a sand-grain, so many of the stars are to the earth. But far more wonderful than the dazzling buds that bloom upon the vast star-bush is the mighty and eternal God who blows them into ageless brilliance. For the moment, however, I am saying that the most commanding process on this earth is that whereby a boy becomes a man. I believe that it is grandly true. The most magnificent sight we ever behold is a great big capacious man growing up from a little boy.

Man's Failure

Now, in the race's childhood, we are told, God made a man. But the man the Lord God made, through no fault of God, was a failure. And let us be manly enough to confess that man's fall was not a fall heavenwards, either. For, as Dr. Newman Smith says: "It is but a superficial view to regard man's fall as a fall upwards. It is in itself considered a descent, nothing but a descent, and never an ascent. No retrogression, taken by itself, can be regarded as a step forwards. Man's fall is a fall away from his true type. Sin is a plunge downwards, and into darkest depths." Also, Professor Rudolph Eucken, of the University of Jena, writes in his last book: "Where evolution prevails, the order of the whole prescribes what is to be done at each point, and the direction to be followed: there is no choice and no freedom of decision. But without these there can be no history, in the specifically human sense. To talk of historical evolution is, properly speaking, an absurdity. Where there is evolution, there is no real history; and where there is history, there is no evolution. For if we are to have history, the individual must have freedom and reason, but this is excluded by evolution."

As you know, Eucken is not a theologian. He is a philosopher, rated by many the greatest philosopher living. Now, it seems to me that Eucken is endeavoring to teach Christians an essential lesson. It is this: We should never become morally mawkish in our attempt to be fashionably scientific. For thus do we Nietzscheize Christian morals. That is, we lead them into an atheistic slaughter-house. And for what? Why, that the life-blood of Chrstian morals may be yielded up simply to gratify the brutality of a philosophic butcher. And every time we are guilty of this unchristian thing, we belittle the high and noble interests of science itself. For when an age takes a worthy hypothesis like evolution, and insists that the hypothesis is not secondary, but a kind of primary Messiah named the reign of law, then it is time for us to realize that science, morals, and humanity are all alike grievously wounded. For then it is no longer evolution, but deevolution, which is another name for devolution!

The Second Stage Is Reached

As I was about to say, ever since that far-off man-failure, God has been patiently growing men from boys. And it is a magnificent task. I believe it is altogether worthy of the great Taskmaster. We begin at the water-pot stage. We begin barely on the topmost fringe of the vanishing point. We begin at the next door to nowhere. But if we are true, we end in the many-splendored palace of God's eternal somewhere. I have heard a certain parsonage lad not improperly described as an "animated mudpuddle." Of course! The business of a healthy boy is to get as much mud as possible to cling to his face and hands and clothes. And it is equally the business of a healthy man to get as much godliness soaked into his spirit as his capacity will allow. At three, Phillips Brooks whined for a red-handled knife and fork. At fifty-three he had engirdled the world with his prophet eloquence. But, even then, he writes to a friend: "I sometimes have suspicions that if I could live for five hundred years, I might come to something and do something here." Sir Isaac Newton was a dull, lazy boy on class. As he gravitated foot one day, according to schedule, a boy friend kicked him on the shin-bones. Then did young Isaac wake up, promptly thrash the offender, and start for the head of his class. Incidentally, he began that day his discovery of the law of gravity. For Brooks, for Newton, for you, for all of us, life's first horizon is the water-pot stage. But it is not the last.

II. Consider, therefore, that Life's Second Horizon is the City Stage: "And went away into the city." There is an old saying that God made the country, and man made the town. But the saying is not older than the untruth at its heart. For God made the country, and God made the town. And God is going to make both country and town, some of these ages, into the White City of the Universe. "And I saw the holy city, new Jerusalem, coming down out of heaven from God, made ready as a bride adorned for her husband." Ah, made ready? Yes! What is lovelier, more silver-fair, than a bride made ready by love and adorned by white garments, for her husband? Well, the country-man, and the city-man, empowered by the grace of the God-Man, are going to make earth ready to be a part of the Capital City of the Great King.

Nature's God

Still, I think there are some joys the city-grown man must forever lack. There is, first, the joy of growing up in the country. I am not saying that there is conscious joy to the lad, in all cases, who is doing the growing. But that is equally true of all precious things. Their preciousness somehow grows upon us according to the square of their distance. Now, I think, in after years, the country-grown lad recalls most vividly his memories of growing things. Lowell once said John Henry Newman made the mistake of thinking that God was the great "I was" rather than the great "I am." Surely, no man with the perfume of country springs, summers, autumns, and winters drifting through his memory, can ever speak of God in the past tense only. Our country boy need not become the slave of a shallow pantheism, because he is constantly reminded that the living God is an ever-living Presence. For what is the truth, grasped there amid the growing, glowing things, which makes ceaseless music in his heart, as the years slip away? Is not that dear, and ever dearer truth just this? He sees God in the cloud and in the clod. He sees God in the blackberry and in the night. He sees God in the greening tassels of corn and in the divers-colored curtains of dawn. He sees God in the unrolling apple-blossoms and in the "golden foot-prints" of the fading day. He sees God in the lustrous noon-tide and in the cool of the evening—"as the stars draw back their shining faces when they surround the fair moon in her silver fulness." He sees God in the wing of the oriole and in the velvet gloriole of the violet, too modest to lift its shy head in the noisy world's vanity fair. He sees God in the beasts which do seek their meat from him, and above all, in his human brothers.

Now, all of our poets sing the song of country and city. God does not forget the country for the city, nor the city for the country. And God's great truth-singers and truth-seers—the poets—move the city countryward, and the country cityward. Song is the priest that makes the twain one symphony. Browning was a city man. But when he thinks of the country, like his own thrush:

> He sings each song twice over
> Lest you think he never could recapture
> The first fine careless rapture.

And Shelley, too, the idol of Browning's youth, goes to the country, hears the skylark sing, and brings back to the cities of earth his song, To a Skylark.

"And went away into the city." There is another joy the city-grown man has never had. It is the country boy's first visit to the city. Ah! can he ever forget it? Never! Never! Never! He began to go the night before. Unlike the successful rival in Locksley Hall, he did not hunt like a dog in dreams. For there were no dreams because there was no sleep. He lay awake all night trying to hurry up the morning. But it seemed the morning would never, never come. Have you forgotten, O city man evolved from the country boy, the weary waiting as "you watched the long black shadows creep"? And

Continued on next page

* Pastor, Grace M. E. Church, Brooklyn, N. Y.

e's Widening Horizon

Continued from preceding page

they kept on creeping. Then, r creeping on, they crept some e. Surely, you thought, Aurora's riot made as slow time as a gas- automobile. The poets had told how Aurora, goddess of the n, rose out of the sea in a char- "with rosy fingers dropping gen- dew." But on that morning you e going to the city for the first , Aurora's fingers were not rosy ey were not even handsome nbs. Nor did they drop gentle They did not drop anything— ss you thought they had dropped Like Enoch, Aurora simply was And you had no reason for king God had taken her. Aurora, her dawn-chariot, rosy fingers, gentle dew, had just forgotten to e—that was all!

nd lo! when you were at last dy to tumble into an abyss of amless sleep, why, Miss Aurora e! You were up in an instant. beat the lark, you beat the sun, beat everything and everybody ut yourself. Though you had al- dy packed your grip, you packed gain for joy. And now it was in more masculine, volcanic state n ever. You even forgot to comb r hair. You did not so much as k of morning prayers. You re- ved to say them twice over that ht in the city. You kissed nobody d-by. That had all been duly done night before. Certainly! Why, ting with a kiss might cause you miss that train. And you were de- mined not to miss that train, even ugh Aurora had almost missed

Of course you arrived at the sta- n exactly one hour before the in was due. Then you learned t the train was exactly two hours e. Then, also, you become sud- ly desperate and dangerous. hen the train did come, your hteous soul, with all its vexed in- r workings, was going at a speed t made the engine pistons seem ite slow. And thus, in the chill ay of that distant dawn, you rted upon your first visit to the y. It surpassed your wildest eams. Like a colored friend of my yhood, you could not see the city the houses. You thought every- ng was going helter-skelter, pell- ell. You were sure everybody was ing the wrong way. You were con- ent, in short, that everybody in hurrying crowds was lost. But t one was so hopelessly lost as ur own dazed, miserable self. Then u had a sudden fit of homesickness. ad it not been for the restraining nd of your older friend, the next ain would have carried you home- ard.

Ah, men! that has been so many, any years ago. Time hath taught u a better lesson, I trust. It mat- rs not whether you be country- ed or city-bred. Every Christian an knows that it is in the wise inter- ange of country and city that God's rpose for humanity is being wrought t. The city needs the country, and e country needs the city.

"So the woman left her water-pot, d went away into the city." Have u left yours? Have you forever rted with the smaller that the rger might have a chance in your ul? Have you made all your go- gs in the City of Time harmonize ith the laws of the City Eternal? re you already out in the spacious ighways which lead to the City hich hath the foundations, whose rchitect and maker is God?

Prizes the Premiums

English would fail me to express my true preciation of your splendid premiums which have duly received. Many thanks. May all ccess attend your endeavor to send THE HRISTIAN HERALD into more than a million mes. M. M.

Toronto, Ont., Can.

The Great Floods in China

THE great "Father of Waters" for China has over-supplied the fertile fields that lie along its banks and the lower lands along its tributaries, so that for the most part along both banks from Ichang (way in the interior) to the Grand Canal, a distance of several hundred miles, there is practically one great sea of water. A large portion of the rice crop of China is produced in this region, and this is a total loss. Not only this, but the homes of the people in the country, and the villages, and in many instances even the cities are under water.

. . .

TO BE more concrete, let me tell of the part of this flood of waters that I passed over in coming to this mountain for a short vacation. The city of Luchowfu, in which I live, is located about one hundred and twenty or thirty miles from the port of Wuhu, and a small stream gives us a waterway to that city. A lake forty miles long lies along this waterway about sixty miles from the Yangtse River itself. The launches that ply along the river and across the lake have not been running for weeks. They were compelled to stop, lest the waves produced by the launch should destroy the high embankment along the river. These dikes, in ordinary seasons, serve quite well for the most part to protect the extensive rice fields that lie from ten to twenty feet below. But when any part of the dike gives away, all the land under its protection is lost, and the poor people have to look on and see the results of their labors for the last few months gradually covered over. All they can do is to turn all hands in to cut as much as possible of the half-green rice and carry it to the dike and pile it there, or hang it in the trees to dry. Not only is their living for the next year completely gone, but the rising waters, not satisfied with the crop, take the thatch-covered mud hut too, even though it be located on the highest bank.

. . .

THE city of Chao Hsien is at the mouth of the lake, and the water from the Yangtse was sweeping in toward the lake at a very rapid rate, thus causing the flood to rise all along the small river. The city wall of Chao Hsien, which makes its course along the river, was so nearly submerged that one could reach the water with the foot from the top of the wall.

After our boat had made ten miles more of the course, we no longer followed the winding stream. One reason was that we could not well find it; but a better reason for our purpose was that a short cut "across lots" was much nearer and quite as easy, for the water stood well above the dikes to which the people had trusted for protection. And these crumbling banks scarcely offered resistance to the passing of the boat.

But where were the houses of the little village we just passed? There they stood, deep in water! Here a tree-top waved in triumph above the flood, and yonder, a clump of trees that stood at the waterline in this great lake of blue, proved to be the site of a tumbling hut. Again, another clump of trees could be seen, and the mast of a boat, with the villagers half in the boat and half in the house, living on boards that were kept out of the water by piles of stones on which they were placed.

. . .

IT WAS a sad thing to see the coffins of ancestors reverently piled up on some little knoll, all high and dry, or safely supported on bamboo poles, in drier place perhaps than even the household furniture. You wonder why they did such a strange thing? Simply because they fear that such a gross neglect as leaving an ancestor to the mercy of the waters—perhaps even to the danger of being carried away by the waves, so they could not longer worship them—should bring upon them a far more terrible calamity than the devastation of crops and home, or even than the jeopardy of life itself.

. . .

MAY I add a last word? There are many Christians among the suffering ones who should certainly claim the assistance of Christians elsewhere; but gifts should be so conditioned that the funds be used for the rebuilding of dikes, the establishing of schools, and for the education and support of children, under conditions where they are taught to work and earn their living and thereby become self-respecting sons of fathers who were willing to toil.

F. C. BUCK.

Luchowfu, Anhui Province, China.

. . .

[Cable advices from China intimate that the provincial and general governments are making considerable appropriations in view of the recent floods, and it is clearly stated that foreign help need not be sent unless requested, which has not yet been the case. There has been no cabled appeal from the missionary committee at Chinkiang. The number of orphans, however, in their care must necessarily be greatly increased, and THE CHRISTIAN HERALD will render such aid as lies within its power in taking care of these orphan charges.]

FEELIN' FINE!

THEY ain't no use in kickin', friend, if things don't come your way;
It does no good to holler 'round, an' grumble night an' day.
The thing to do's to curb yer grief, cut out your little whine,
An' when they ask you how you are, jest say, "I'm feelin' fine."

They ain't no man alive but what is booked to get his slap;
They ain't no man that walks but what from trouble gets his rap.
Go mingle with the bunch, old boy, where all the bright lights shine,
And when they ask you how you are, jest say, "I'm feelin' fine."

Yer heart may be jest bustin' with some real or fancied woe,
But if you smile the other folks ain't very apt to know.
The old world laughs at heartaches, friend, be they your own or mine;
So, when they ask you how you are, jest say, "I'm feelin' fine."

ANONYMOUS.

BEYOND TO-DAY

IF WE could see beyond to-day
As God can see;
If all the clouds should roll away,
The shadows flee,
O'er present griefs we would not fret,
Each sorrow we would soon forget,
For many joys are waiting yet
For you and me.

If we could know beyond to-day
As God doth know,
Why dearest treasures pass away
And tears must flow;
And why the darkness leads to light,
Why dreary paths will soon grow bright;
Some day life's wrongs will be made right,
Faith tells us so.

"If we could see, if we could know,"
We often say,
But God in love a veil doth throw
Across our way;
We cannot see what lies before,
And so we cling to him the more,
He leads us till this life is o'er;
Trust and obey.

C. LOUISE BELL in Exchange.

Ignorance of the Bible

THAT the Bible is neglected in our present educational system is evident from many indications. We hear occasionally of instances of gross ignorance of the Bible in our schools and colleges, but rarely has such an illustration of wholesale unacquaintance with the Book been discovered as that which is related of a class of seventy-eight students in a Western educational institution. They were undergoing a Biblical examination, the result of which is thus told by a contemporary:

"The test was not made offhand, but nearly an hour was allowed to write down the answers. The results were startling. One volunteered the valuable information that the Old Testament was written B.C., the other was not; another affirmed that 'the Old Testament represented Hebrew fable,' while 'the New dealt with historical characters.' Another, again, that 'the Old was composed largely of stories and proverbs, which are not any longer believed to have actually happened.' 'By the Law,' said one wise youth, 'is meant the laws given by Christ to his disciples, while the Gospel simply means the Scriptures as taught to the people.' We can only quote a few of the hundreds of other ridiculous replies. 'The Gospels,' for instance, 'were the letters which St. Paul wrote to the churches.' 'The temple of Solomon was in Babylon.' 'Sinai was the place of the landing of the Ark, or the mount from which Christ spoke.' 'Levi was a name applied to Jews who were small in stature, compared with Leviathan, which meant large.' 'Levi was a Jewish man; Leviathan a woman.' 'The Isle of Patmos was the place where the children of Israel were fed in the wilderness.' ' "Thou art the man" are words said by Judas to Christ, or by a prophet in his chariot teaching Christianity to the man at his side.' ' "Before the cock crow thou shalt deny me thrice," was said by Christ to one of the thieves hanging beside him in the crucifixion.' 'Abraham was called by God to preach the Gospel.' 'Jacob's ladder was a vision that Jacob had one night when he slept outdoors near a mountain which looked like a pair of stairs.' 'Aaron's rod brought the manna and doves to the ground when the tribes of Israel were without food.' ' "The thirty pieces of silver" were one of the parables,' etc."

A stronger argument in favor of Bible study as a part of the curriculum in educational institutions would be hard to find.

Anvil Sparks

..LITTLE worries often make big scars.

..A NAUGHTY person sells himself for naught.

..IT TAKES practice to make perfect in hypocrisy.

..NONE but the humble have real self-respect.

..HE IS never strong who knows not his weaknesses.

..FORGETTING is overlooking what memory retains.

..TRUST in God is vastly more than submission to fate.

..LOVE is the root out of which all genuine courtesy grows.

..CHEERFULNESS is a good brand of oil to burn on a dark night.

..THE most pitiable slave is the one who is ruled by his passions.

..WHO helps not to lift up his companions, falls down with them.

..THE difference between faith and fate is that between life and death.

..IN THE higher walks of life, folks ought always to walk upright and straight.

..THE measure of a man is the friends he keeps in the guest chamber of his heart.

THE "HOUSE OF GOVERNORS"

Hoke Smith	Woodrow Wilson	John K. Tener	Frederick W. Plaisted	Chester H. Aldrich	Aram J. Pothier	Emmett O'Neal	Edwin L. Norris	William W. Kitchin	Joseph M. Carey	Albert W. Gilchrist	Robert S. Vessey	Marion E. Hi
Georgia	New Jersey	Pennsylvania	Maine	Nebraska	Rhode Island	Alabama	Montana	North Carolina	Wyoming	Florida	South Dakota	Washington

GOVERNOR WOODROW WILSON of New Jersey, as the host of the occasion, welcomed the twenty-eight Governors who had gathered at Spring Lake, N. J., for the fourth meeting of the informal Congress of Governors on September 12. In his opening speech the Governor said New Jersey was glad to have the Governors for their second "independent" conference. "I suppose," he continued, "there never was a time in America when large questions were more generally debated than now. There certainly never was a time when there was a more pleasing and profitable candor on the part of public officers than now. There is no mistaking the signs of the times. The people of the United States expect their Governors to exercise leadership—leadership of the most vital sort; therefore it is of the utmost importance that the men who undertake leadership should come together in common council to consider the affairs of the whole country. It is more important to draw the country together in thought than in any other way.

"The vitality of the conference is manifested," Governor Wilson concluded with a sharp look around the room, "by the fact that it has released itself from Federal guidance. We are now an independent body." Governor Joseph M. Carey of Wyoming replied to the address of welcome. The first session then proceeded to a careful consideration of the various subjects of the programme which had been mapped out in advance. Governor Norris of Montana opened the discussion by the reading of a paper entitled "Strengthening the Power of the Executive." This subject brought up for discussion the recall and referendum, which have played such important parts in the politics of the country during the last year. The Governors aired their views upon these subjects in no uncertain fashion. One of the most heated discussions of the entire conference took place in that connection.

On the second day of the conference, the Governors, many of whom had never before had the opportunity of visiting the coast defenses, were the guests of the War Department and the officers of Fort Hancock, at Sandy Hook, where a number of the great coast defense guns were fired for their especial benefit. This excursion to Sandy Hook was made after the morning's discussion of employer's liability and workmen's compensation problems. It was the only topic scheduled for that day, and many of the Governors regarded it as the most important one which would engage their attention during the present meeting. Two addresses were made, one by Governor Marion E. Hay of Washington and the other by Governor Eugene N. Foss of Massachusetts, but several of the others took part in the informal exchange of opinions. Governor Foss emphasized the fact that workingmen's compensation is essentially a business subject and ought to be brought to a uniform level all over the United States.

Governor Hay in his address heavily scored the indemnity, casualty and liability companies, making some startling statements as to the proportion of all indemnities paid which these companies received. "Out of six hundred thousand dollars, collecte from the employers of the State of Washington i 1909," said Governor Hay, "only one hundred thou sand dollars reached the workman or his family. He described the scope of Washington's new com pensation law, which went into effect upon Octobe 1, and which is considered one of the most compre hensive laws of this type which has yet made it appearance upon the statute books of any State.

On the morning of the 14th, the House of Gover nors advanced a new idea in American politic when it voted, 25 to 1, to send a committee to appea to the Supreme Court of the United States to chec "the autocracy of inferior Federal Courts." Th basis for this appeal will be a decision recentl handed down, enjoining the Railroad Commissio of Minnesota from regulating interstate railwa rates. There was a good deal of discussion as t the advisability of this move, but in the end th majority seemed convinced that it was wise. Thi is by all odds the most important subject which th House of Governors has ever considered in the fou years of its existence.

The session of September 15 brought the con ference to a close. Governor Dix of New Yor addressed this last meeting on the subject of Stat inheritance taxes. As is the custom with man legislative bodies the Governors brought their con ference to a close by a more or less facetious sessio in which each one detailed some of his odd experi ences in connection with his position as Governor o his State.

Mount Etna Again Spreading Destruction

DURING his visit to America last winter Professor Frank Alvord Perret, K.I.C., the famous American volcanologist, prophesied in an article which appeared in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, that within three years, and possibly within a much shorter time, a great eruption of Mount Etna, in Sicily, might be expected. Not more than one-third of the time limit which Professor Perret's scientific care placed upon his prophecy has elapsed, and already Mount Etna is again in violent eruption. The most recent dispatches from Catania, a town upon the eastern coast of Sicily, state that the crest of Mount Etna now represents a truly terrifying spectacle. Great clouds of resinous smoke, broken by brilliant flashes and explosions, hang about the mountain. A torrent of molten lava, estimated to be about 2,000 feet wide and between forty and fifty feet in depth, is flowing down the slope, and everything in its path has been entirely demolished.

Large sections of the side of the mountain, which were covered with the encrusted lava of former eruptions, have been torn down; earthquake shocks of great violence have occurred frequently during the past few days, and many of the peasants fear a repetition of the Messina disaster. The people, who had hardly had time to recover from the effects of the eruption of a year or so ago, have left their homes, carrying with them the aged, the sick, and whatever meagre belongings they have been able hurriedly to gather together.

Sixteen new fissures are reported to have opened in the sides of the volcano, from which the great stream of lava, moving at the rate of 1,250 feet an hour, has traveled several miles in the direction of Linguaglossa, a town in the foothills to the northwest o Etna. This town and Randazzo, t the northeast, are located upon eleva tions, which removes from them th threatened destruction by the lav flow, although storms of ashes hav beat upon them until many of th people, panic-stricken, have left fo other parts of Sicily.

Copyright, Underwood & Underwood, New York

A View of Mount Etna in Eruption, Taken from Catania

The main lava stream has made it way sluggishly among the foothill and crossed the railway line whic encircles Mount Etna, and so cut of communication between these tw towns.

The 20,000 inhabitants of Castiglion and Francavilla turned their backs o their homes on September 14, fleein before the advancing flood. Bot towns are threatened with destructio When the stream was within thre miles of the towns the people collecte their portable property, and with thei farm animals and household pets mad for the higher places.

The material contained in the ar ticle by Professor Perret, which TH CHRISTIAN HERALD was enabled t publish during the early part of th year, was secured at great expens and at the risk of his own life by th writer, and is one of the most com plete treatises upon a characteristi volcanic eruption which this exper has ever prepared. The eruptions de scribed by Professor Perret in tha article were typical of the action o Mount Etna, and may be taken as generally descriptive of the presen troubles there.

IN FOURTH ANNUAL SESSION

Lee Cruce	John F. Shafroth	Augustus E. Willson	Edmond F. Noel	Judson Harmon	William Spry	Walter R. Stubbs	John Burke	Herbert S. Hadley	Wm. Hodges Mann	James H. Hawley	Francis E. McGovern	Wm. E. Glasscock	Eugene N. Foss
Oklahoma	Colorado	Kentucky	Mississippi	Ohio	Utah	Kansas	North Dakota	Missouri	Virginia	Idaho	Wisconsin	West Virginia	Massachusetts

CHINESE CITY BESIEGED BY A RABBLE

ALTHOUGH dispatches from Shanghai of September 10 stated that the great floods upon the Yangtse-Kiang River covered a territory of 700 square miles in extent, and that the river was forty-five miles wide in many places, the scene of the world's actual interest in China has been transferred nearly a thousand miles, to one of the interior provinces. The unrest which had made itself apparent in the province of Szechuen in connection with the anti-railroad agitation of the provincial governments, has now assumed such proportions that it may no longer be termed rioting, but has become a revolt of the most serious sort. The disturbances which took place about the city of Cheng-tu have spread to many of the surrounding towns and a large part of the countryside. The city itself has been reduced to a garrison of about 1,800 Chinese troops and its ancient walls for protection. It is practically surrounded by the rebels, among whom there is claimed to be a large number of deserters from the Imperial army.

On September 8 the viceroy's yamen was destroyed by a mob of anarchists within the city. The leaders of this movement were apprehended almost immediately, and pursuing an edict from Peking, were promptly executed. The reports from various sources in the affected province give widely differing versions of the present trouble. They are agreed, however, that the rioting has passed that stage where it might be handled by the police, and is now a matter to be dealt with by military force. The Imperial edict of September 12, which authorized the immediate destruction of the ringleaders of the disorder, also has led to the belief that the authorities at Peking are convinced that if the rebellion is not promptly suppressed, it is more than likely to spread to other parts of the country where there has been much discontent. Some of the newspapers are urging the people to join in the uprising, and only the merchants are at the present time preserving peace in many places, due to their fears that the success of the rebels might be the beginning of a general conflagration.

The city of Cheng-tu has been for several days isolated by the destruction of the telegraph wires, so that a great deal of anxiety was felt for the foreigners who were known to be there. When reports finally reached a point from which they could be telegraphed, it was learned that the city was practically in a state of siege; that the rice supply had been reduced to such an extent that the viceroy feared trouble within the walls and had ordered the foreigners to leave the Methodist Episcopal Mission compound and the hospital where they had gathered for their own protection. This meant a long trip to Chung-king by cart or by river through a country where anti-foreign placards had been posted for many weeks. It was believed that the foreigners were guarded by troops, who escorted them to the places of safety from which they have since wired of their arrival. One hundred and thirty refugees, of whom thirty are Americans, sixty Canadians, and the rest German and British, are now making their way to points of safety further down the Yangtse River from Chung-king. Through the British legation a cablegram from Sui-fu has been made public, reporting the arrival there of the first party of the refugees. The dispatch, which was dated September 9, says: "Other missionaries remain at Cheng-tu on the advice of the viceroy, who is confident. The troops easily repulsed both the attack on the government house and the later attack on the gates in the city."

The Cheng-tu General Hospital

Although considerable anxiety was at first felt for the missionaries, it is now believed that they have all reached places of comparatively little danger. Fearing lest the worst should happen, the British consul at Chung-king, who is temporarily in charge of American interests in that district, issued an order that all American and British citizens in the upper districts of the Province of Szechuen must leave immediately for the nearest places of safety or remain in the districts which may at any time be disturbed by the rioters, at their own risk. The most recent dispatches would seem to indicate that none of the English residents wished to take such chances and practically all are en route for the coast.

From Peking come the reports of the attempts of the Imperial authorities to suppress disturbances. The president and vice-president of the Szechuen provincial assembly have been arrested, together with a number of others, as the ringleaders of the rebellion. Unpublished edicts order a large force of Wuchang troops to leave immediately by the quickest route for Szechuen. It is the opinion of many students of Oriental affairs that China is rapidly approaching a great crisis in her history. Some of these prophesy very confidently that the present uprising is almost sure to spread to the neighboring provinces, especially to the south, where the Mongolian element has for years been opposed to the Manchu dynasty. Some have even gone so far as to suggest the possibility of the overthrow of the present royal family's authority, while others believe that the government is thoroughly able to cope with the situation, despite the fact that the disastrous floods of the lower Yangtse Valley may be expected to drive thousands, whose means of support have been destroyed, into the ranks of the revolutionists. There seems to be a general agreement among those conversant with the present state of Chinese affairs that the present trouble is but the precursor of a series of such outbreaks by the reactionary element in the Flowery Kingdom.

The American Asiatic fleet, under the command of Rear-Admiral Murdock, is hastening to the scene of the trouble, that it may lend as much protection as possible to the American interests in the interior. The Saratoga, Rear-Admiral Murdock's flagship, together with the New Orleans and the Albany, left Shanghai on the morning of September 10 for Nanking. Some of the smaller vessels have been ordered to Hankow. "If necessary," Rear-Admiral Murdock cables, "I shall take the Helena and the gunboats to Ichang. All draw too much water to proceed further. Four special river gunboats of other nations are at Chung-king." This last statement refers to the two British, one German, and one Japanese light-draught gunboats which were ordered up the river by their respective nationalities upon the receipt of the first news of the rioting.

The Methodist Episcopal Mission House in Cheng-tu

OUR EDITORIAL FORUM

OTTO KOENIG, President GEO. H. SANDISON, Managing Editor THEODORE WATERS, Secretary

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is published weekly by "The Christian Herald," at the Bible House, Fourth Avenue, 8th and 9th Sts., New York City. The officers are: Otto Koenig, President and Treasurer, Bible House, N. Y. City; Geo. H. Sandison, Vice-President, Bible House, N. Y. City; Theodore Waters, Secretary, Bible House, N. Y. City.

Subscription Price, $1.50 a year, in advance.
Remittances should always be made in the safest manner available to the remitter. Register cash remittances.
Foreign Postage.—For each copy to be mailed outside the United States, Canada, and Mexico, add one dollar a year.

Change of Date.—It takes at least two weeks to change the date, after your subscription is renewed.
Expiration of Subscription.—The date on the wrapper indicates when your subscription ends.
Change of Address.—It requires three weeks' time to make the change. Give both old and new address.

Subscriptions may commence with any issue.
Letters should be addressed, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, New York.

Entered at Post Office, New York, as Second-class Matter
Entered as Second-class Matter at the Post Office Department, Ottawa

A Suggestion to President Taft

IT IS the general hope that some peaceful solution of the trouble between Germany and France over the Moroccan question may yet be reached. But should the resources of diplomacy fail, there is still another effort that might and should be made to avert war between these two great nations. It is within the province of a third Power to make a tender of its friendly offices to both principals, with the view of submitting the whole question at issue to international arbitration. There is no one Power in Europe free to make such an offer; all have more or less vital interests involved in the present trouble, so that they can not in any sense be regarded as unbiased or impartial. There is, however, a Power which could tender its offices in the interest of peace with entire propriety and acceptability. Its impartiality would be unquestioned. Its offer to set the wheels of arbitration in motion would be welcome news everywhere. That Power is the United States.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD respectfully offers this suggestion to President Taft for two obvious reasons: First, Because there is no other government qualified to take up the task; and second, Because it is a duty which this nation owes to itself and to humanity to vindicate its peace and arbitration declarations before the whole world by a sincere effort to avert a European war.

Dignified Pleasantries

IT is not often that the Governors of some thirty American States have enjoyed so favorable an opportunity for oratorical recreation as they had at the recent Governors' Conference at Spring Lake, N. J. In the intervals of discussing various important national questions, they exchanged views on politics and occasionally extended their oratorical pinions in the good old spreadeagle fashion. Governor Hayes of the State of Washington—who hails from the live wire regions of the far Northwest—in the course of an address on industrial conditions in his State and on the compensation laws for workingmen, gave his fellow Governors a dash of the old-time Western peroration which strongly recalls Proctor Knott's famous speech on the city of Duluth. He was discussing the work of the Industrial Insurance Committee of Washington, which he regarded as an epoch-making one. "Gentlemen," he said, "the State of Washington has its head in the clouds and its skirts are washed by the broad Pacific. On mountain, plain, valley and the summits of 10,000 hills is a timbered wealth of billions. Our workers—from the mines, from the seclusion of our logging camps, from the fisheries of Bellingham to the orchards of Vancouver, from the totem pole of Seattle to the river of Spokane—have been heard, and the great State of Washington has said to its toilers, 'Ye are my children, and as your Mother State I shall exact from all a strict accounting.' The manner of the accounting is embodied by law in this piece of constructive legislation."

There were many other topics equally interesting, that claimed the attention of these genial and dignified Executives, among them being the recall and the urgent need of a uniform divorce law for all the States. Governor Lee Cruce of Oklahoma gave New York a sound rebuke for permitting prize-fighting exhibitions. He had driven all the pugilists and their lawless associates out of his own State; but though he could stop a prize fight he admitted he was powerless to prevent lynchings. Frankness in discussion was a feature of the Conference, whatever the topic, but the 10,000-hill-power speech of the Washington Governor was distinctly the gem of the occasion and stands a living proof that this type of American oratory still survives.

Money and War

SEVERAL of the contributors to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD'S Peace Symposium emphasized the importance of financial and economic equilibrium as a means of preserving world-peace. They pointed to the fact that the international business relations of different countries are now so extensive and inter-dependent that no one government could afford to go to war without involving its own people in immense losses in consequence of this widespread financial web. This view has just received a remarkable illustration. As a result of the wrangle between France and Germany over Morocco, financiers in both these countries, and in Great Britain and America as well, have been greatly disturbed. In Berlin and Paris the stock exchanges have shown the strain in a way that indicates very clearly what might be expected should war really occur. The cable dispatches point out that an immediate result would be an industrial and social upset which would involve others besides the principals. If the mere possibility of war creates a semi-panic such as that which prevailed recently at the Berlin Boerse when even the best securities declined to the danger point, while savings banks had to confront unexpected and heavy runs, what might not happen in the event of active conflict? Yet, in the face of such self-evident facts, we find blind but persistent apologists for big armaments, like the Army and Navy Journal, which denounces United States Senator John Sharp Williams for characterizing such armaments as the greatest of follies, and as involving oppressive taxation. A single glance at the present European situation would convince any sane observer that the Senator was right and that mammoth armies and navies, however they be regarded by the ruling Powers, are a killing burden upon the backs and pockets of the people themselves.

Norman Angell—perhaps the most widely read writer on the economics of war since Jean Bloch wrote the famous book which is said to have inspired the Czar to call the first Peace Congress—has predicted that the next European war will have a surprise in store for the nation that is the aggressor. Even this gloomy outlook, however, may not deter a nation resolutely bent on conquest or aggrandizement from taking the fateful step that will shatter the peace of Europe. With gigantic standing armies, and the finger on the trigger, a single untoward incident may precipitate a conflict.

Maine's Missing Majority

AFTER twenty-seven years of prohibition, Maine in the September election voted so indecisively that the official count will probably be needed to settle the question whether the State is "wet" or "dry"—whether Prohibition has been ruled out of the Constitution or is to remain in it. So close was the vote that the corrected returns of a single township of less than 200 voters would have changed the result in the entire State. "Wets" and "drys" have each claimed the victory. So slight is the advantage on either side that for the present the battle must be regarded as a drawn one, although the "wets" have put in the last claim. While the friends of temperance everywhere will regret the inconclusive issue of the battle, there can be nothing but approbation and the most cordial encouragement for the gallant sons of Maine who fought this the greatest of all fights for State-wide Prohibition. Never before were the liquor forces so strongly marshaled for aggressive warfare. There was a marked contrast in the methods adopted by the leaders of the two armies. The "repeal" forces conducted a silent campaign; they sowed anti-Prohibition literature everywhere; they cared nothing for speakers or street parades or public meetings or patriotic enthusiasm. Their efforts were spent among the workingmen, the easy-going, the thoughtless and the indifferent. On the other hand, the Prohibition forces were strongly represented in parade and by public demonstrations, where they listened to able oratorical appeals, and in church gatherings and prayer-meetings. Possibly in their confidence of the result, they may have omitted that kind of missionary work among the indifferent class which would have developed a "balance of power" in the election.

If the official canvass should result unfavorably to Prohibition, it will simply mean that the real battle in Maine has yet to come. Nothing has been lost that cannot be retrieved. By more thorough organization; by energetic effort directed to arousing all the supporters of Prohibition to a sense of duty; skilful tactics to meet methods equally skilful, and by the use of every legitimate means within their power, they may yet win back the proud fame of Maine as the leader of the temperance hosts of the nation.

We believe in prayer, but work is also prayer. And prayer that is supplemented by an effort which shall quicken the conscience and engage the zeal of every individual son of temperance cannot fail to win a triumph. This is the lesson of the Maine election—pray hard and work harder still if you mean to win.

The Opening of School

THERE is something thrilling in the thought that all over our broad land, in city and hamlet, east, west, north, south, our youth have almost simultaneously begun their year of study. There are some poor schools, some unworthy teachers, some sections where schools are too few and the months devoted to education are wrongly limited, but the beginning of this new "lap" of the great onward march of our children toward the goal of an intelligent citizenship has been practically a onward and a united movement. What would the patriarchs of the olden time say if they could come to earth and witness it? What would St. Paul and St. Peter say? What would Plato and Quintilian say?

It is easy to imagine their surprise and equally their delight. Broad as was their vision and high as were their ideals, it is doubtful if they had ever dreamed of a time when the State would provide for all its children a thorough education; when libraries would open inviting doors at almost every corner; and wisdom would indeed be justified of her children.

But proud as we may well be of the magnificent educational opportunities afforded to our youth, it is well for us to remember that they are as yet far from perfect. Serious criticisms are passed in various towns and cities upon the manner in which the schools are conducted. In certain quarters politics control the educational system. In others it is asserted that immorality prevails to an alarming extent.

There is much for us all to do before our schools and colleges will be the fine and uplifting forces which we would have them. It is a duty which we all owe our country to follow closely their fortunes. Upon them, next to our churches, rests the future of our beloved land.

—THE Premier of Russia, P. A. Stolypin, was attacked and severely wounded by a would-be assassin while he was attending a gala performance at the opera in Kieff, on September 14. The assassination was attempted under circumstances that lent themselves to a most dramatic scene. The Imperial box was occupied by Emperor Nicholas, the heir apparent, Grand Duke Alexis and the Emperor's daughters. Premier Stolypin was seated in the pit not far from the Emperor's box. The curtain had fallen on the second act when the audience was thrown into a panic by the appearance of a young man who walked to the Premier's side, and after a moment's conversation drew a revolver and shot him twice. The Czar jumped to the edge of the box at the first shot and to calm the turmoil in the house ordered the orchestra to play the national hymn. The Premier's wounds proved to be through the wrist and through the breast, and were at first declared to be fatal. Later reports, however, hold hope of his recovery, though the convalescence must be very long.

Contents of this Number

Wednesday, September 27, 1911

	PAGE
Our Mail-Bag	948
Women's Work in Portugal (Illustrated)	947, 965
Life's Widening Horizon. Sermon By Rev. Frederick F. Shannon, D.D.	948, 949
The Great Floods in China By F. C. Buck	949
The House of Governors (Illustrated)	950, 951
Mount Etna Again Spreading Destruction (Illustrated)	950
Revolt in China	951
OUR EDITORIAL FORUM	952
THE BIBLE AND NEWSPAPER (Illustrated)	953
Furniture from Old Boxes (Illustrated) By Kate Upson Clark	954
Maine's Indecisive Battle	954
The Woman Who Jumped in the Dark (Illustrated) By John Arbuthnotte	955, 966
The World's Fastest Motor Boat (Illustrated)	956
Our Boys and Girls (Illustrated) By Miss Janet Porter	957
Our Comfort Corner. By Margaret E. Sangster	958, 959
Christian Emancipation. Epworth League Topic.	961
Borrowers and Investors	962
The River of Life Sunday School Lesson, by Dr. and Mrs. W. F. Crafts	963, 964
The Little White Room. By Marguerite Goode Laird	966
New Work. Christian Endeavor Topic	967

THE BIBLE AND NEWSPAPER

Conducted by FERDINAND C. IGLEHART, D.D.

Chinese Cruiser Visits America

THE cruiser Hai-Chi of the Chinese Imperial Navy, the first vessel of any kind flying the ... yellow dragon flag that has ever been in ...erican waters, steamed up the Hudson River the ...rning of September 11 and anchored opposite the ...diers' and Sailors' Monument. The warship is ...43,000 tons displacement and is in command of ...ar-Admiral Chin Pih Kwang, the second highest ...king officer in the Chinese navy. The ship has ...reat yellow silk flag with a huge blue dragon ...h big black eyes, a red tongue, and white claws ...ought in exquisite needlework. A delegation of ...inamen first boarded the vessel and were re...ved heartily by the Admiral. Then Admiral ...ang went to his own quarters, where he received ...resentatives of Rear-Admiral Leutze of the New ...rk Navy Yard, of Major-General Frederick D. ...ant and of Captain C. C. Marsh. Yung Kwai, ...cretary of the Chinese Legation, and Wing Shiu ..., the Consul-General at New York, assisted the ...inese Admiral in receiving the American visitors. ...e Hai-Chi remained in New York ten days, and ...er visiting other American ports will go to Mex... and Cuba, and returning to New York for a ...ort call will sail for England, where she will act ... a convoy for a new cruiser that has just been ...mpleted for the Chinese ...vernment, and the two ...ll go to China by way of ...e Suez Canal. Admiral ...ang went to Beverly to ...come the guest of Presi...nt Taft. There was a ...und of splendid recep...ns before the ship left ...ew York. Among the ...ew of 450 officers and ...en there is not a single ...eue. With the excep...n of five or six, all the ...icers speak English, the ...dmiral himself using the ...nglish language almost ... fluently as the Chinese. ...e cruiser has a fine ...ass band, which played ...e Chinese national an...em not only, but many of ...r national airs. The ...ip has a surgeon, but no ...aplain. Among the sail...s were several Christian ...ung men, who were con...rted to Christianity and ...ucated by missionaries. ...e world moves. China is ...ming into the light of ...r Statue of Liberty and ... Christ's Cross. The prophet makes this mention ... battleships in national warfare:

> And at the time of the end shall the king of the south push at him: and the king of the north shall come against him like a whirlwind, with chariots, and with horsemen, and with many ships; and he shall enter into the countries, and shall overflow and pass over. (Dan. 11:40.)

The Chinese Cruiser "Hai-Chi" at Anchor in the Hudson River

ammoth Sturgeon in Harlem

Henry Essig and Thomas Biddle were seated in ...eir motor boat anchored in the Harlem River in ...e New York City limits the other day when their ...at received a hard slam and they were badly ...lted. Looking over into the water they saw a ...onstrous fish not two yards from the side of the ...at, the swish of whose tail had given them their ...ouble. Essig took a boat hook and jabbed the ...n through the monster's gills. The anchor was ...rriedly lifted and the fish dragged them in the ...at in a zigzag course along the river, both men ...nging with all their strength at the end of the ...at hook. John Dinsmore, the superintendent of ...acomb's Dam Park, cast a rope from the bank. ...e boat was pulled ashore and the fish was landed. ... was a sturgeon and weighed 406 pounds. This ...onster was one of the few survivors of those of its ...nd that used to abound in the Hudson and other ...ast rivers, and while there are some in the Great ...kes and rivers they are becoming so scarce that ...e now practically import from Europe all our ...viar, which brings $100 a keg. Professor H. ...ailey of Cornell believes that civilization has risen ...om the hunting stage with respect to its table food ...hes as with cattle and poultry, and that the wild ...ust give place to the domestic, and that our water ...lds must be purified and restocked with sturgeon, ...out, bass and shellfish of all kinds. Mr. Horace K. Knowles, formerly United States Minister to the Balkan States, tried two years ago to introduce into the Delaware River choice specimens of the royal sturgeon of the Danube, but the waters were too foul to sustain them. Fish culture, which has only fairly begun, will help in the solution of the problem of a cheaper living and that of a provision for our marvelously increasing population. Fishes were included in the articles of food for us promised by the Almighty to Noah.

> And upon all the fishes of the sea; into your hands are they delivered. (Gen. 9:2.)

Massacre of the Innocents

The adulteration of food by poisonous ingredients is severe enough on grown people, but it has caused the wholesale murder of children. Mr. Rutledge Rutherford, food expert, estimates that 250,000 children were killed last year from eating chemically treated matter. He points out that coal-tar dye is invaluable for coloring clothes, sulphuric acid for washing straw, arsenic for giving gloss to candy, wood alcohol for fuel, saccharin as a medical remedy; but that all these are deadly enemies of a healthy stomach. He claims that the child consumes saccharin in the greatest quantity, causing muscular weakness. It is 550 times sweeter than sugar, but has no food value, while sugar is one of the most strength-producing of foods. He says the children cry for sugar and the modern adulterations of saccharin, arsenic, glue and varnish are given instead. The modern laws against the adulteration of food by poisonous ingredients are beneficent and should be rigidly enforced. The men who make money, however, by the poisoning of both food and drink fight these laws and the true officers who undertake to enforce them. In one of the Saviour's most powerful messages he refers to the fact that a parent will not give a stone to a hungry child crying for bread, nor a serpent to one asking for a fish; and yet society to-day is giving the crying children much meat and drink which has the poison in it that kills.

> Or what man is there of you, whom if his son ask bread, will he give him a stone? Or if he ask a fish, will he give him a serpent? (Matt. 7:9, 10.)

Discovers New Race

In 1908 William Stefansson was sent from New York City upon an expedition to the North by the American Museum of Natural History. By a letter to Mr. Herbert L. Bridgman he claims that he found a race of men in Victoria Land, in Arctic America, who resemble Scandinavians, who have never seen other white men and took the white man who discovered them for an Eskimo. He accounts for them on one of three hypotheses. One is that he has found a new branch of the human family, and another is that these beings may be the descendants of the 300 Scandinavians who suddenly and mysteriously disappeared from Greenland in the fifteenth century and of whom no trace has ever been found. The other is that they may be the descendants of a large party of Sir John Franklin's men, who also mysteriously disappeared. From whatever place or stock they may have come, they are our brothers to whom we owe the blessings of the best civilization and the Gospel of Jesus Christ. Paul makes reference to this universal kinship in his sermon on Mars Hill:

> And hath made of one blood all nations of men for to dwell on the face of the earth, and hath determined the times before appointed, and the bounds of their habitation. (Acts 17:26.)

Killed With Gas

They are administering gas to mosquitoes out in Hawaii and untold myriads of them are being destroyed. The extermination has been so complete that wire screens in the windows in Honolulu are no longer necessary. This campaign of destruction is being carried on under the supervision of the Board of Health, but public spirited citizens have also subscribed $12,000 a year to the campaign. Mr. Ernest Mott Smith, Secretary of the Territorial Government and President of the Territorial Board of Health, gives the following graphic description of their fight against the mosquito pest: "We started using oil, but there was complaint that this gummed up the basins of the sewage drains, and then our chief sanitary officer hit upon the use of calcium carbide as an exterminator. He discovered its efficacy by accident. This officer runs an automobile, and one day in cleaning out the acetylene generators of his lamps he threw some of the calcium carbide into an old bucket in which were a lot of wigglers or embryonic mosquitoes. The next morning he discovered that a soapy film had formed on the surface of the water and that the wigglers were all dead. He made some experiments and found that calcium carbide was almost as inexpensive as oil and more effective; so since then we have been killing mosquitoes by gas. Then we employ mosquito fish. I don't know where the chief sanitary officer gets these, but they are little creatures from an inch and a half to two inches long. You can take a jar so black with wigglers that you cannot see through the water and in half an hour there will not be a single wiggler outside the fish. The fish are transparent and their little bellies will be perfectly black with the wigglers they have swallowed." There is a description given of the manner in which the Egyptians got rid of the myriad flies that pestered them:

> And the Lord did according to the word of Moses; and he removed the swarms of flies from Pharaoh, and from his servants, and from his people; there remained not one. (Ex. 8:31.)

Blind Man Received Sight

Dr. L. H. Chapin, the Cleveland physician and literary man, was making a journey across the Syrian Desert seven years ago, when the hot, blinding sands destroyed his sight. Dr. Chapin last winter, in a desperate determination to regain his sight, made a trip around the world, consulting the best eye specialists in European capitals and in India, but to no avail. Returning home, he consulted Dr. Arnold Knapp, one of the best-known oculists in America. Dr. Knapp undertook the case, and cut away part of the iris, which had contracted and adhered to the lens, in one of the most delicate surgical operations that could possibly be performed. A week later Dr. Knapp took the bandages from his patient's eyes, and the blind man cried out, "Why, I can see; see just as well as when I was a kid! And Anna," he cried to his wife, to whom he had been married four years ago, "I can see you for the first time, my love. Oh, it's wonderful!" The restoration to sight of this man by the miracle of modern surgery calls to mind the cure of the blind man by the Great Physician, and his answer to those who were investigating the reason of the cure, and of the cure of spiritual blindness which it typified:

> One thing I know, that, whereas I was blind, now I see. (John 9:25.)

Pretty Furniture From Old Boxes

The Work-Room

Corner of the Exhibition-Room

Photos copyright by Brown Bros.

THAT was a happy thought of Miss Louise Brigham, a clever New York woman, which led her to construct the first article of household furniture out of a common packing-box.

"I believe," she said to herself as she saw the useful and beautiful product which she had evolved, "that out of these boxes, which are usually either split up for mere kindlings or thrown away altogether, a house could be fully and substantially furnished at almost no expense."

Little by little, this ingenious and resourceful young woman developed her thought until now she can show you several interesting apartments which she has furnished almost entirely with box-furniture. Better than this, she can show you classes of city boys, kept from the street, learning the use of tools, and each one devising some strong and needed article of furniture for his home, and all made from the despised and worthless packing-box.

Mr. Stover, the New York City Commissioner of Parks, last summer gave Miss Brigham permission to use the Gracey mansion in the charming little East River Park (the "Carl Schurz") at Eighty-eighth Street, for box-furniture classes. For fifteen years the stately old Gracey house had stood there empty and useless. The Commissioner did not know much about box-furniture, but the skill and energy of Miss Brigham convinced him that she had a real lesson to teach the hordes of children who swarm the East Side of New York, and the use of the house was given her.

But tools and certain necessary materials were still to be provided, and the Home Thrift Society stepped forward to supply them. Then Miss Brigham issued her call to the neighborhood.

"Did you invite the girls?" she was asked.

"Oh, the girls were asked for one day each week," she replied seriously. "You know girls will play quietly with their dolls and make no trouble. It is the boys that need to be kept busy. They are the ones that get into mischief." (And yet we are told by certain of the present-day agitators that girls are no better than boys—a corollary to which is that women are no better than men.)

The call was tumultuously answered. Ireland, Italy, Germany, Poland, Bohemia—almost every European country—was represented in that eager, responsive flock. They were told to solicit boxes from the grocers and other merchants in the vicinity, and the merchants fell into the spirit of the thing instantly and donated their boxes by the cart-load.

Then each boy, chosen on the good old principle of "first come, first served," was given a large packing-box for a table and an outfit of tools to keep on the shelves which each was taught to make inside it, from the boards of one side.

The boys soon learned to carefully split up the boxes; to sort out the longer and shorter boards in grades; to pick out the best ones for special purposes, and then to plane and sandpaper them, and dove-tail or nail them together in the most economical and workmanlike manner.

During one of the great August storms, a fine locust blew down in the park. The box-furniture boys saw a great opportunity here.

"May we have it for wood?" they begged of the authorities.

Permission was given them, axes and saws were brought into active use, the class hand-cart (made by the boys themselves) was piled high, and now the boys have some fine hard wood out of which they propose to make strong mallets, work-table tops and other things for which their softer box-material is not suitable.

Miss Louise Brigham

Though there are only twenty "benches," and though the class really consists of but twenty members, yet there is always a small army of boys besieging the outer ramparts of the Gracey mansion, in the hope that some regular little carpenter may have failed to appear at the appointed time, in which case his bench may be forfeited at Miss Brigham's discretion, and given to another boy for the da Consequently, since every worker has a chance exhibit in the final display, many more than twent are represented, and their pride in the simple cu boards and chairs over which they have so faitl fully toiled is touching to see.

You may ask how it is decided that the boy sha make a cupboard or a chair. The boy himse chooses. He is told to ask his mother what sh most needs in her housekeeping, and the size of th nook or corner which she wishes to fill. Accor ingly, the child undertakes a chest of drawers, wash stand, baby's high chair, baby's low chair, a cril with a shaving-filled pillow and mattress, baby hammock or "scups" (swing), to hang in a doo way, go-carts, baby's clothes-horse, a hangin flower-basket, spice chest, coal-box, footstool, fram for coat-hangers, or some other useful house hold convenience grows beneath his bus little fingers. Sometimes it may happen tha he has no special home demand, and so h puts in a petition to be allowed to make som toy which has struck his fancy. Accordingl in the exhibition may be seen small wheel barrows, rocking-horses, Swiss villages, catamaran, a derrick, a Roman chariot, an other odd and amusing devices. As all ar painted in white enamel, and as a friend ha given $100 for the decoration of the exhibi tion room, the affair promises to be not onl a creditable showing of the industry of score or so of rough little city boys, but a absolute "thing of beauty."

The girls are allowed to work at th benches one day each week. They joyously seize the opportunity, and have prove themselves quick and "handy," but they ar chiefly restricted to the pleasures of raffia weaving, which may be done at the mansio every Wednesday. If they were only a naughty and unmanageable as their broth ers, perhaps they might have more privi leges!

Every city might well establish a box-fur niture industry, to keep its boys wholesome ly busy during the long vacations and after schoo hours on the stormy winter days, when Miss Brigham's "shop" will also be open to impart its beneficent influences. Her address is 540 East Eighty-eighth Street, New York City, and she might perhaps be induced to drill teachers and help to organize similar movements in other parts of the country. Her knowledge has been acquired by travel and study all over the world, notably with Anton Lang in Oberammergau, and in the art studios of Paris and London.

KATE UPSON CLARK.

MAINE'S INDECISIVE BATTLE

AFTER a most exciting campaign, the great struggle between the "wets" and "drys" in Maine came to a close on September 11. Both sides were confident of victory, yet so close was the vote that the result may fairly be regarded as a drawn battle. First the claim was made on the night of election that the repeal of the Prohibition Amendment in the Constitution of Maine had been carried by 1,000 to 1,200 majority. Next morning, this was reversed and the "drys" claimed a victory of several hundred votes. On Wednesday, however, the "wets" were again out with a bulletin giving a majority of less than two hundred in the entire State in favor of repeal. On Wednesday—three days after election—errors were coming to light which added to the uncertainty. An example was the vote of the town of Limestone, which was first reported to the press as standing 12 for repeal, 175 against, while it was reported to the Secretary of State with the figures reversed. There were many similar blunders.

The total vote of the State according to the returns made to the Secretary of State was as follows: for repeal 60,241; against repeal 60,588. After these figures had been announced it was understood that further discrepancies had been discovered which would indicate a small majority against repeal.

There were a good many picturesque and interesting features in the campaign. Up to the last moment, the "repeal" managers were intensely active. They wasted no time in parades and demonstrations but flooded the State, and especially the cities, with repeal literature. On election day they had autos at work bringing their voters to the polls. Their campaign had been a "silent" one for weeks. Far more public and picturesque was the campaign of the Prohibitionists. All through the State orators of national fame spoke on the great issue. Every argument was used to arouse the energies of voters for the preservation of the amendment in the Constitution. Special church services and prayer-meetings were held in cities, towns and villages. Parades of hundreds of children marched, bearing banners with rousing inscriptions. Church bells tolled out a reminder of duty, even while the votes were being cast. The temperance folks are not discouraged and entertain strong hopes that the official count will give the State to Prohibition.

Secretary Fassett of the Maine Non-Partisan Local Option League, said that the "repeal" managers were satisfied they had won, but would await the official canvass of the vote.

President L. M. N. Stevens of the National W. C. T. U., sent this telegram in reply to an encouraging message from THE CHRISTIAN HERALD:

"PORTLAND, ME., Sept. 15.

"We deeply appreciate your hearty congratulations. Undoubtedly Prohibition has won, and we trust the Governor will so declare. It has been a mighty battle for the home against the saloon, and the victory will hasten the day of National Prohibition. L. M. N. STEVENS."

THE WOMAN WHO JUMPED IN THE DARK

BY JOHN ARBUTHNOTTE

I SHALL never forget the time the minister came to tea when I had nothing in the house except ead and sugar," laughed Mrs. Caithss, scattering another handful of eat to her flock of thrifty chickens. ome up here on the porch and I'll l you all about it—these chickens ve had enough to last them."

She settled herself comfortably in creaky rocker, and smiled at the rld in general. "Bless you, yes," e said; "we had a hard time at first. hen a woman's forty and has two boys like Fred and Nelse to look er and not much money in the bank, e can't help having to cut some etty close corners. But it's eresting to see how close you n come and not hit—and 've never hit a corner once, ough sometimes we've come etty close.

"Fred was nineteen and lse two years younger when decided to come out here. he boys wanted to go on the nd. I knew they didn't know at they'd have to face—I as brought up on a farm, and had been through it before—t I didn't see anything else do. The boys had a good ucation, but no trade. So we shut our eyes and jumped in e dark.

"How did we know where to me? Just luck and chance, dear. A few days after we cided to come, the son of one our neighbors who had taken land not far from here lled on us; and when he arned of our decision he said, ome right along.' He said e new Grand Trunk Pacific as coming through the next ason, and that we couldn't do tter than come to Saskatchean and start right at it. We dn't know anything about y other district, and what he id of the land and the new ilway sounded good; so we ld our household goods, expt what we had to have for usekeeping, and went right ong.

"We got to Regina on the orning of March 23. My, but e were busy that first day, tting a place to store our ods, looking around the town, d wondering what was going become of us. I had never arned a trade, so I had to ok for a position as a servant, d before long I was chief ok in a boarding-house at irty dollars a month. Nelse t work with a farmer near hat is now Watrous, on the rand Trunk Pacific Railway, d Fred went on to file our claim.

"Then he went with some other setrs to see what his homestead looked ke; and in June he came back to egina with a sorry story. Threeurths of that first homestead was in slough, and he had had to file abanonment papers and take out another ece of land that was at least reasonly dry. Good land, isn't it?" she id, looking out across the fields oudly. "This year we got thirty-five ushels of wheat to the acre on the uth quarter. I don't believe there's better piece in Saskatchewan.

"Well, the day we all filed, I shall ver forget what a good time we had. 'e didn't know whether we were going make it or not; we didn't feel very rtain about where meals and clothes d seed and machinery were coming om, but we had each other, and we idn't waste any time in regretting nything. That fall, I went out on the land myself, and after paying freight on my household effects, I had just one hundred and forty dollars left. Don't tell me how explorers feel! I've been one, and without any base of supplies or any dogs to kill and eat, either. But I was bound we should have a home, and I went straight ahead and figured that we would come out somehow.

"Fred met me at the station nearest our land, and we started on a four-day trip behind our oxen, Duncan and Hughes. This was my first introduction to them, but do you know, before that first year was over, I felt almost as much affection for them as I did for the other members of the family. So much depended on their eight legs. Well, we lived in a tent going out, and only once did we see a woman. Dear me, I did get so homesick for the sight of a petticoat! But Fred told me that there was a Mrs. Mason living near our place, and that was some comfort.

"Well, we went along and we went along, like the pig in the fairy tale, and on the fourth day Fred stopped the oxen on a rise in the prairie, and told me to look towards a range of hills and try to see a tiny dark speck toward which he was pointing. I sighted and sighted off the end of his finger, and finally I saw a dot about as big as one currant in a bun, and Fred told me that was our home.

"Well, I'm not denying my heart sank. It did look so little! Finally I plucked up courage to ask how big the house was, and Fred said, as calmly as if he were describing a brownstone mansion, that it was ten by twelve. Goodness! I thought, that's just about the size of my pantry in Toronto! Where will we ever put anything? But I didn't say it out loud, for Fred was so pleased over it that I didn't have the heart to spoil his fun.

"The next thing we saw was Mrs. Mason's place. She was living in the stable until she could get her house finished, and she came out to welcome us with a baby on her arm, and a smile that looked better to me than anything I'd seen for weeks. She says now that I looked to her like a letter from home, she was so lonesome. I had my first friendly cup of tea there, and trotted her baby, and began to perk up a little, so by the time we got home I could tell Fred how nice the house looked, and how good it seemed to have a home of our own.

"Well, that was the beginning. We had to haul water five miles; we had to haul wood nearly thirty; we had to go nearly ninety for provisions; we had to exchange work with the neighbors in order to cut enough hay to feed the oxen over winter. One day when I was alone on the place, we had a prairie fire. For days the air had been smoky, and at night we could see fires on apparently every side of us. Then suddenly one fire seemed to get in a hurry, and came tearing along directly towards me. I never had entertained that kind of a visitor, and I was scared nearly out of my wits. I put our valuable papers, my watch and the few dollars we had in a crock, with a plate atop, and I sat down beside it and prayed, for there didn't seem to be anything else to do. It kept coming and coming until it was within about a quarter of a mile from our place, and then the wind veered, and it swung clear. Of course we had fire-guards, and I suppose now that they would have protected us anyway; but I never was so glad in my life as when I saw that black swath going away from my direction.

"It was getting towards winter by this time, and Fred had to fix up the stable for the cold weather. Meantime, I sodded the shanty, and got things under cover all I could. The Homestead Inspector came to see us, and he was so good and thoughtful that I felt as if I had a real friend. He had been sent to see if the settlers had suitable houses for the winter and plenty of provisions and fuel, of course; but somehow I felt as if I had somebody to rely on besides myself.

"Late in the fall Nelse came back, walking most of the ninety miles with a sack of provisions on his back. He and Fred went to work to dig a well, but I never saw such a provoking piece of ground as that well-site. We dug and dug—fifty, seventy-five, a hundred and thirty-six feet, and there wasn't enough dampness to stick a postage stamp with. Then they went over to Mrs. Mason's farm, and helped Jim Mason dig on his well. After twenty-one days of digging they struck good water, and there was plenty for both of us without a long haul.

"We spent Christmas at Mrs. Mason's that year, and oh dear, I was so sorry about the children. We didn't have any money to get even the plainest kind of presents for anybody, and it was too pitiful to hear those poor little things wonder why Santa Claus didn't come, and finally decide that he must have lost the trail. But we couldn't help it; and indeed if one of my old school friends hadn't sent me twenty-five dollars out of the goodness of her heart, I don't know how we should ever have come through that winter. But we did, and in the spring Nelse did the thirty acres of breaking, while Fred went to work for one of the farmers in the district. Somehow we managed to squeak through, and that season things looked a lot better. We put in more crop, bought some machinery and another ox, and had a good yield. It was about time we did, too, for we were just about as patched as it was possible to be—I thought of Joseph's coat of many colors every time I looked at Nelse's clothes, for there were four different colors of blue in his overalls. But new settlers were coming in, a good many of them bachelors, and I baked bread for them, and mended and sewed for them, and raised chickens to sell, and had a big garden. That summer we actually had four women in our township, and a Presbyterian divinity student used to come out and hold services around in the houses. He was the man who had to

Continued on page 966

"A tiny dark speck . . . Fred told me that was our home"

THE WORLD'S FASTEST MOTOR BOAT

THAT the mania for speed on land and through the air has not entirely ousted from its position the interest in speed upon the water, has lately been evinced by a score of motor boat races and trials which have been held upon Huntington Bay, L. I.

These speed trials were of an international nature, as several British and Canadian owners of fast motor boats brought their crafts to compete against the American boats. Although prodigious speed was developed by all of these little racers, the American boat Dixie seems to have outdone them all. Provided each with a life preserver and dressed in oil skins, the crew of the champion racer put her over the accurately surveyed one mile course in Huntington Bay at a speed which has never before been attained by any marine craft. In a series of trials which were timed by the official timer, she covered the course first in one minute and thirty and three-fifths seconds, again in one minute and thirty-one seconds, one minute a thirty-three seconds, one minute and thirty-one a four-fifths seconds. The mean time of these ra computed according to the admiralty rule was o minute, thirty-o and seventy-six hu dredths seconds, a her speed figured the same way w 39.26 nautical mil or 45.21 statute mil per hour.

Although the inte national racing whi had been planne for a cup valued $1,000 was not as su cessful as had be hoped because of rou weather, which ma the operation of the comparatively fra craft impossible, speed records f boats of any cla have been broken du ing the time that t English and Canadi sportsmen had the boats in our wate

Copyright American Press Association

The American Motor Boat "Dixie" Traveling at High Speed

Topics of Interest Throughout the World

—THE DIFFICULTIES OF maintaining such quarantine regulations as will effectively stamp out the cholera now so prevalent in Italy and about the shores of the Mediterranean were brought to light a few days since in dispatches from Switzerland which state that the population of some of the interior towns of Italy, enraged by the sanitary measures of the authorities, and being convinced that it was their intention to kill the patients whom they had isolated, gathered to the number of several thousand, and having stormed the hospital, carried the cholera patients in ghastly procession through the town. The Italian Government has been reduced to the necessity of ordering out the troops for the purpose of protecting these people against themselves.

—ALTHOUGH THE new republican government of Portugal has been considered of sufficient stability to receive recognition by a number of the great powers of Europe, it may have its hardest fight for existence still before it. Reports from Lisbon state that a force of 5,000 infantry, cavalry and artillery, which is well drilled and possessed of two aeroplanes, is about to carry war, on behalf of the deposed King Manuel, into Portugal. The news contains many accounts of plots and counterplots, and there is little doubt that the people of northern Portugal are strong royalists. It seems that the lack of ready money is the only thing which now delays the attack, and the royalists are daily expecting remittances from their backers in England and Brazil.

—AT THE MORNING service of September 10, in St. John's First German Lutheran Church in Newark, N. J., there was presented to the church society a beautiful silver mounted Bible, the gift of Emperor William of Germany. There are only three other churches in the United States which can boast the possession of Bibles presented by the German Emperor. The volume which His Majesty has sent is about 12 x 15 inches in size; bound in morocco and ornamented with solid silver clasps and corner-pieces. On the latter are representations of the four evangelists. On the flyleaf the Emperor has written, "And the very God of peace sanctify you wholly," from I. Thes. 5: 23. Below this he penned his name. The book is illustrated with beautiful reproductions of paintings of Bible subjects by the master artists.

—ON THE NIGHT of September 11, a wind storm of almost cyclonic proportions swept through the southern part of Wexford County, Mich. A great deal of damage was done in several settlements and small villages. In the town of Hobart, the damage was the most severe. The school house, a store and several other buildings were demolished. A report from Hobart states that a woman and six children were killed in the destruction of a building and the bodies buried under the debris.

—HON. ALVEY AUGUSTUS ADEE, Second Assistant Secretary of State, and one of the most experienced officials in the public service, completed his twenty-fifth year of diplomatic duty in the department on August 3 and his forty-second year of service under the national government. Mr. Adee has the deserved reputation of being a most skilful authority on international diplomatic usages, and especially with respect to the adjustment of delicate questions that may arise between our own and other governments. He is also an authority on questions of precedence, and on many other matters that arise in State Department affairs he has proved himself a valuable and capable official.

—ON SEPTEMBER 15, President Taft made public a letter in which Dr. Harvey W. Wiley, chief of the Bureau of Chemistry in the Department of Agriculture, was vindicated and cleared of all charges made against him by the Personnel Board of the department. Mr. Taft was most hearty in his commendation of Dr. Wiley's administration of his office, and expressed his sympathy for the doctor, who has been so maligned by some of the food interests of the country. Dr. Wiley made public his reply containing his thanks to the President and to the press of the country which has supported him throughout this ordeal.

—FROM THE GREATER part of Eastern America, the Brooks comet is now plainly visible to the naked eye, about twenty degrees northwest of Vega, the bright star overhead in the early evening. The comet's appearance is that of a round nebulous star. With the aid of a telescope or opera glass a tail can be seen, which will increase in length for several weeks to cor Dr. Brooks, the discoverer, says the comet was nearest t earth on Sunday, September 16, when it was something ov forty million miles away. The motion now is westerly.

—ONE OF THE ODDEST accidents which the press of the count has recorded for a long time took place in New Orlea on September 11, when a half-mile square of the city w flooded with molasses. A great tank, which had forme been used by the city as a reservoir, had been purchased by t Sugar Planters' Storage and Distributing Company and us as a place of storage for molasses. This great tank burst u der the pressure and allowed a million or more gallons of t sticky fluid to run through the streets. Scores of persons we caught by the advancing flood and forced to wade to places safety. Others were rescued by the police, fire departme and street cleaning employees. Although this is a great loss the owners of the molasses it has caused a laugh all over Am ica. It may yet have its serious aspect, as vast swarms of fl have been attracted to the city by the sticky deluge and thou millions will be destroyed they may yet do their deadly work disease carriers.

—THE MUCH-DISCUSSED Astor marriage took place at Newpo on September 9, the Rev. Joseph Lambert, a Congregatio pastor of Elmwood Temple Church, Providence, R. I., perfor ing the ceremony. The preach is reported as saying he garded the whole matter "as business transaction." He h been thirty-four years in t ministry. There is a report th the whole question will brought up before the Congreg tional Council of Rhode Islar —THE BRIGHT DREAM of a f faithful women crystallized ir reality September 18, when Mineral Bluff, Ga., an industr school for girls threw open doors. The object of the sch is "to improve the condition mountain girls by combining i dustrial with literary educatio The primary object is to rea the class which has suffered fr "arrested development." T Mineral Bluff Industrial Sch is non-sectarian. The day ope with a lesson from the Bible a the Lord's Prayer; and pup are required to attend churc These children will be taught be self-supporting. The indu trial curriculum will inclu housekeeping, cooking, laund dairying, poultry-raising, ag culture, floriculture, etiquet ethics, civic improvement. T school will be conducted on t family plan. This work will supported by the efforts of t Southern Mountain Educatio Association, whose headquart is in Atlanta, Ga. This assoc tion has about two hundr members. One of the membe donated the school-house. T officers of the association ar Mrs. Edward W. LaZarus, pr ident; Miss Elizabeth Hanr Miss Helen Gray, Mrs. Jo Dickey, Mrs John Stubl vice-presidents; Mrs. J. C laway Stubbs, recording s retary; Mrs. T. T. Stevens, c responding secretary; Mrs. W. Webster, treasurer; Mrs. M. Zirkle, assistant treasurer.

Fishing by the Wholesale

BETWEEN four and five thousand persons turned out not long since to witness the biggest fishing lark that Westchester County, N. Y., has seen in many a day. Several tons of fish were taken from Lake Kensico and carried to Rye Lake and Bryan Pond by the Daniel Gray Fishing Club of White Plains, N.Y., and Mount Kisco Gun Club. Lake Kensico, which has up to this time been a comparatively small body of water, is to be transformed, by the construction of a dam, into a lake thirty miles in circumference and had to be drained for the building operations. When the water had been reduced to a comparatively small muddy area, the sportsmen from the clubs, together with many volunteers and employees, started to drag the fish out with seines. In spite of spoiled clothes they worked like mudlarks at sorting the immense haul of fish, discarding the useless and inedible ones and putting the bass, pickerel, and other game fish into tanks, that filled the automobiles and wagons along the edge of the lake, to be taken to their future homes. In each drawing of the net there was a most curious collection: ugly-nosed old black bass, hoary with age, and some of them having ancient hooks fastened in their square jaws; deep-mouthed and long-bodied pickerel; snappy silvery young shiners, fat old suckers and blear-eyed carp, besides yellow perch and innumerable smaller fish of all fresh water lake varieties.

THE COZY CORNER

September Heading—By Myrtle M. Sherman, age 16. Prize, a first prize book.

Good Work from Our Boys and Girls

DEAR BOYS AND GIRLS: As you see from these bits of your work which we publish from time to time, our Cozy Corner standard is growing steadily higher. Joseph Barkley's prize story is distinctly charming and well written. He has told us much in a few words, and this is one of the first and best things to learn about composition. "The Lullaby" and "The Doll's Hospital" show careful work, and the little drawings in this page are as nice as any we have as yet published.

Growing More Interesting

IT IS just as we predicted; the Boys' and Girls' Department in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD grows more interesting day by day, and this is because we are all so wide awake, so up-and-at-it in our work and play together.

Lessons First

MANY of you are starting off to school again this month, and I believe most aunts in Cozy Corners would seize upon the opportunity to moralize and administer bits of timely advice; but I shall not, except to say quite simply and directly, Get at your lessons and master them. It is the mastering that counts, and after a while, when the lessons themselves have slipped from your memory, you will be, oh, so glad of the pluck that has stayed by you—pluck to master the greater lessons that come to us all and must be learned and mastered.

The Wonders of the World

THE Aunt in the Cozy Corner wishes to come in at the end of the day when school lessons and home chores are over, and whisk every boy and girl into far-away countries, where we shall see the wonders of this splendid old world and learn to know and love many of the brave and beautiful things of history and romance. So we have planned a splendid journey in a magic airship. Will you go along with us? And after that there are still other wonderful things planned for THE CHRISTIAN HERALD boys and girls. If you have not already written and introduced yourself to the aunt in the Cozy Corner, do not wait, hurry a letter off to-day, and be earning as fast as you can some of our Cozy Corner prizes.

A Prize Winner

ONE of our prize-winners writes to-day: "My little Cozy Corner watch is such a lovely prize. It keeps perfect time, and I take it with me everywhere."

Another one submits charming pictures snapped with his Kodak won in the Cozy Corner. And so it goes. Reassuring messages of this kind come every day.

With my love and glad wishes to you all and assuring you, my dears, that every one is welcome and that I firmly believe there is no better place to find your way into, to spend cozy afternoons and long autumn and winter evenings, than right here in the Boys' and Girls' Department of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD,

The Aunt in the Cozy Corner

Drawing by Paton Edwards, age 14

My Doll Hospital

I built a nursery hospital,
There were many that were there;
A Teddy-bear, a dog, a cat,
And dolls with curly hair.

My biggest doll, Miss Anna Belle,
Was chief head and trained nurse,
And when my dollie-patients died,
She came and helped them first.

One day we 'formed op'rations;
Miss Anna Belle was there;
She had such a big, old, ugly knife,
The dolls kneeled down for prayer.

"Oh, please," they prayed, "deliver us
From the hands of Anna Belle!
Deliver us, we pray thee, please!
Then we'll be good and get well."

THELMA ALBRIGHT, age 10.
Prize, a Book of Legends.

In the Hollow of the Old Buckeye

IT WAS in the late September when three little foxes overheard Father and Mother Fox say, "It is time our little ones went out into the world alone to earn their living." And for many days Father Fox reminded them carefully to be on the look-out for Farmer Wayne's hounds. "Such fierce fellows! they will chase little foxes and snip their tails off," he always added very fiercely indeed. Bold and fluffy Redtail barked with delight at the prospect of a chase, but little Tawny was timid and wished she might always live in the Old Buckeye. As the hunter's moon, full and slivery, came over the far-away hill, casting long shadows on the ground, the three little foxes stole quietly out of the hollow tree and around Elephant Rock, which guarded their home by day and night, and trotted away toward Farmer Wayne's, where the big fat ducks and chickens lived. Very brave indeed they felt to be out hunting all alone. "Whoo, whoo!" screeched an owl in a tree, and three scared little foxes scampered back up the slope so fast that all the Man-in-the-Moon saw was a bunch of bushy tails, disappearing into the hollow of the old Buckeye.

JOSEPH BARKLEY, age 11.

Lullaby

My baby, fear not, I am with thee,
Trying to get thee to rest;
Do not cry, dearest, hush, hush thee,
Sleep in your warm little nest.
Rock-a-bye, rock-a-bye, honey,
Rest, dear, for mother is nigh;
Fear naught, for the angels will guard thee,
Sweet baby mine, hush-a-bye.

Sandman has come with his sand, dear,
Let your big bonnie eyes close;
Mother will watch o'er your crib, dear,
Angels will grant thee repose.
Rock-a-bye, rock-a-bye, baby, sleep, dear,
Sleep, dear, they will ever be nigh,
Night's shutting round thee so fast, dear,
Sleep, baby mine, hush-a-bye.

MARGARET TUCKER, age 11.

Drawing by Paton Edwards, age 14

Some Extra Prize Winners

Freda A. Jones, 13; H. Erma Redman, 16; Edith Bott, 15; Elsie D. Taylor, 14; Florida L. Campbell, 13; Gaylie Woodring; Marjorie Hunt, 12; Mary Little, 14.

August Honor Roll

Mildred Oakes, 12; Lysbeth C. Vickery, 12; Sue Hill; Marian Nicholson; Pauline Potts, 16; Eva L. Sherer, 15; Samuel E. Steele; Sadie McCloy, 13; Earl W. Roop; L. Theodore Sherwood; Mary Sheehan, 12; Fern Harriet Richardson, 9; Maynard Fisk; Ruth Anthony, 9; Glenna S. Auldridge, 13; J. Howard Wilterding, 12; Hattie A. Spalding, 11; Bertrand D. Morris, 10.

Prize Winners "In the Hollow of the Old Buckeye" Contest

First Prize—Joseph Barkley, age 11; a best Brownie Eastman Kodak.

Second Prize—Hilda Whitezel, age 15; a box of Japanese water-color paints.

Third Prize—Tom Meltzer, age 16; Naval Blue Hill Box Kite. T. Paton Edwards, age 14; prize: An Airshipping Story with up-to-day booklet on modern air-craft.

Answers to August Puzzles

Topsy-Turvy Verse

With carrots in the morning,
And turnip tops for tea,
If a bunny can be happy,
I'm sure he ought to be.

Answer to puzzle of August 2: Ages respectively 2, 4, 6, 10.

THIS is a simple, safe and exceedingly satisfactory way to clean rugs and carpets.
It is applicable to the finest oriental rug and to the cheapest ingrain carpet.

Have ready:

A supply of Ivory Soap Paste, made by dissolving one large cake of Ivory Soap, shaved fine, in three quarts, or two small cakes in four quarts, of water, kept nearly, but not quite, at boiling point for 15 minutes. When cool, it will be like jelly. This is sufficient for a 9 x 12 rug.

A fairly stiff scrubbing brush (a rice fibre brush is excellent).

A piece of zinc, or heavy galvanized iron, 12 inches long and 4 inches wide, with smooth edges. The top should be turned over a little so that it can be held securely. Any tinner will make this for you for 10 or 15 cents and it will last for years.

Some soft clean cloths.

A pail of clean, lukewarm water, to be renewed as often as it becomes dirty.

A pan, or empty pail, to receive the used Ivory Soap Paste.

Proceed as follows:

First, sweep the rug. Begin work at the corner farthest from the door. With a spoon, or by hand, scatter Ivory Soap Paste over the surface of the rug, covering not more than a square yard at a time. Scrub vigorously. Scrape up the paste with the zinc. Wipe thoroughly with a cloth, wrung out of clean water. Work with, not against, the nap. Proceed in this way, section by section, until the entire rug has been cleaned. Have windows and doors wide open so that the rug may dry quickly. Do not replace furniture, or walk on it, until it is dry.

Follow these directions, and your rugs will be as clean and bright as when new. The colors will not suffer. The fabric will not be injured.

Ivory Soap . . 99 44/100 Per Cent. Pure

An October Prize Offer

A Guess-Me-Please

I am spelled in four letters, a very small word,
In which only three of the letters are heard;
I hang on the tree, on the bush, on the flower;
I cover the oak in the midst of the bower;
I am yellow and silver, I am brown, I am white,
I am tinged with all colors you see 'neath the light.
I am thick, I am thin, I am narrow, or broad,
I float on the river and fly on the road.

Every boy and girl, big or little, is welcome to enter this prize contest. Prize for best drawing of the answer, a guaranteed gun-metal watch.

Prize for second best drawing, a Brownie Eastman Kodak.

Prize for third best drawing, a box of best Japanese Water-Color Paints.

And twenty charming extra prizes for the twenty next best drawings.

The October Souvenir

The Aunt in the Cozy Corner wants this month especially to hear from all of our boy and girl readers who have never written to the Cozy Corner before. Every one who writes for the first time (and all others who enclose a two-cent stamp to cover the expense of sending) will receive our beautiful October Cozy Corner Souvenir. This souvenir is a very lovely picture, beautifully colored and autographed by the Cozy Corner Aunt. You are very sure to be proud of it, and will hang it up in your room as one of your treasures.

Our Good-Night Verse

Blessed is every one that feareth the Lord, that walketh in his ways. Happy shalt thou be, and it shall be well with thee.

OUR COMFORT CORNER

BY MARGARET E. SANGSTER

Daily Heroism

WE ARE very much by the way of considering comfort in its limited meaning of consolation. We comfort the child who has fallen down and hurt himself; we help him up, caress him, kiss and soothe him, and usually do our best to make him a little weakling. Sympathy should never be withheld from the child who is hurt, and yet it is not always wise to express it by pity. The little fellow is often best consoled by having his attention diverted from the transient pain. Cultivate in the little girl and boy, if you can, a habit of fortitude, of courage, and of strength. Very early in life children may learn that accidents will happen and the sooner they learn to restrain tears and endure bumps and bruises without crying the happier they will be. As we go on in life we need more and more to acquire the art of meeting whatever comes with an undaunted front. Looking back over the years we are sure to see long stretches of brightness, many red letter days and much home delight; here and there we have had disappointments, illness has laid us aside or bereavement has touched us. The griefs and pains have been exceptional and we have had the victory over loss and trial when we have kept our eyes fixed on Him who sends us whatever he deems essential for our discipline as well as for our pleasure. "Be brave" should be our motto day by day.

Comfort is not merely consolation. Its primitive meaning carries with it the idea of valor. There is a phrase in Revelation that has the thrill of a bugle note; the splendid message comes to us ringing down from the sky, "To him that overcometh I will give to sit with me on my throne." In the beautiful catechism of the Reformed Church of Holland there is a phrase worth repeating, "In all our tribulation with uplifted head we must expect our Lord from the sky." Think of living on this exalted plane; think of meeting sorrow in this triumphant spirit. To achieve this is to walk this world without a tremor, and to diffuse happiness as well as enjoy it.

. . .

Some Practical Suggestions

A YOUNG girl came home from her summer vacation the other day and casually remarked, that she had taken a seven mile walk in the mountains wearing pumps. In consequence of her mistaken footgear the walk had exhausted her instead of adding to her vitality. "My ankles ached so that I could hardly go to sleep," she said. As a practical suggestion toward homely comfort let it be remembered that well-shod feet prevent headaches, backaches, and nervous irritation. To be well shod is to step forth securely and gently on country road or city street alike; the dainty shoe that is meant for the drawing room is not the sort of shoe appropriate for going about one's work in the kitchen, nor for shopping or rambling across country. Bed-room slippers rest the feet in the evening when one has withdrawn from the family circle, assumed the kimono of ease and loosened her hair from its comb and pins. Our English sisters understand better than we the comfort of frequently changing shoes and of never wearing indoors the shoes and boots that are worn outside the house.

A great comfort would be insured to the woman who does her own work if her kitchen sink were placed under a window instead of in a dark corner. So much work must be done at the sink and dishes must be washed there so many times a week that the health and comfort of the housekeeper would be greatly promoted if arrangements were made for all her work to be done in clear light instead of semi-obscurity.

A candle by the bedside with matches at hand is a comfort to be prized by those who have not availed themselves of portable electricity. In these days the man who lives on the edge of a village and must sometimes return to his home late in the evening may carry a flashlight in his pocket. What would the highwaymen of old have thought of a sudden searchlight thrown into their wicked faces at the instant when they sprang from an ambush, demanding of the traveler his money or his life? If we are accustomed to brilliantly lighted streets, the absolute blackness of the road on a moonless night in the country takes us by surprise. I once went to a prayer meeting accompanied by a friend on a summer evening in northern Vermont. We were sojourners in a village inn and it seemed to us as we stepped out of the church door that we were suddenly enveloped in midnight gloom. Everyone passed out of sight in an instant; we had lost our bearings and stood uncertain what step to take when a man emerged from the darkess carrying a lantern. That lantern was an unspeakable comfort and it made us think anew of the familiar text in which there is mention of "a lamp unto our feet and a light to our path."

Your grandmother used to wear a nightcap when she retired to rest. Exquisite hand sewing went into the nightcaps worn by gentlewomen of an older day; they were hemstitched, lace-trimmed and ruffled. There is a hint that these obsolete articles are again to be in fashion. If one sleeps out of doors in a porch fitted for the purpose, or as everyone should, with windows wide open and a current of air sweeping through the room, the head should have some protection. A three-cornered bit of knitting, a scarf or a square of soft Shetland wool will be found a practical comfort on a windy night. Colds are almost unknown to those who protect themselves in this way and sleep in the open.

Why do you spend money for expensive and ornamental furniture in the living room when comfort is better insured by easy chairs? A substantial rocking chair or a sleepy hollow chair is a comfort as well as a luxury.

. . .

The Privileges of a Wife

WE HAVE heard from time immemorial that the sphere of a wife is within her home. There she reigns supreme. She should find beside the hearth her widest opportunity for influence and her daily meed of joy. Granting that these premises are well founded, what is to be said concerning wifely privileges when a husband happens to be a domestic despot? Taking a leaf from a letter sent the other day to this page, let us glance at the situation of a woman still in her early twenties who was married in her later teens to a man who promised to love and care for her, cherish and

Continued on next page

Gold-Filled Watch Cases That Are Dependable

YOUR representative jeweler will show you a wide range of styles in "Crescent" and "Jas. Boss" Gold Filled Watch Cases.

His stock is selected from more than three thousand exclusive designs, in all sizes for ladies' and men's watches.

Beautiful engraved patterns—Engine-Turned effects—and exquisitely finished Plain Polished cases.

While you are examining the cases note the depth of the engraving. There is your plain proof of the thickness of the gold on the "Crescent" and "Jas. Boss" goods—which means a lifetime of wear and service.

A cheapened gold-filled watch case can never be engraved deeply—because the engraving tool cuts through the thin film of gold and exposes the composition metal underneath.

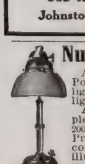
Yet you will find such trashy cases stamped "guaranteed for 20 years"—and there is no way that you as the purchaser can be protected against these meaningless "guarantees."

Except this—insist on getting a "Crescent" or a "Jas. Boss" case, so that you can be sure that the values are right.

You will know these cases by the trademarks illustrated on this page. These marks are standard with the fine jewelry trade and have been for fifty years.

TRADE MARK
JAS. BOSS
GOLD FILLED
Reg.U.S.Pat.Off.

TRADE MARK
CRESCENT
GOLD FILLED
Reg.U.S.Pat.Off.



The Keystone Watch Case Company
Established 1853
PHILADELPHIA

KNOX
PURE, PLAIN, SPARKLING
GELATINE
Dessert Book FREE

Our recipe book, "Dainty Desserts for Dainty People," illustrated in colors, showing just how the dishes look, and giving over 100 recipes for Desserts, Salads, Puddings, Ices, Ice Cream, Candies, etc., will be sent you, FREE, for your grocer's name. If he doesn't keep Knox Gelatine, send 2c stamp for pint sample, or 15c for 2-quart package.

CHARLES B. KNOX CO.
355 Knox Ave.
Johnstown, N. Y.

Nulite Gasoline Table Lamp

A complete Light Plant weighing 7 lbs. Portable, absolutely safe, 300 c. p. brilliant light ½ cent per hour. Saves 90% of your light bill.

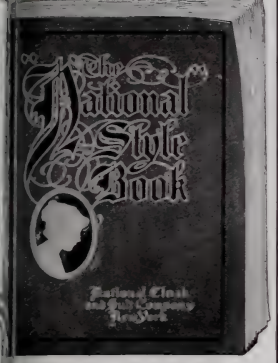
AGENTS—Write for Special Offer on complete line of gasoline lights and systems. Over 200 different styles. Highest Quality. Lowest Prices. Exclusive territory for capable town, county and traveling salesmen. 72 page illustrated catalog free. Write today.

NATIONAL STAMPING & ELECTRIC WORKS
4138. Clinton St., Chicago, U. S. A.

ZOBO THE MUSICAL WONDER.
YOU CAN PLAY IT Without Learning.
Sing into the mouthpiece. Zobo does the rest. For Home, Church and Sunday School Entertainments. Full information FREE on request.
STRAUSS MFG. CO., 355 Broadway, Dept. 19, New York

White Lead on the Farm
Interiors

Walls white leaded can be given the exact colors you want, they wear for years without renewing and can be washed and cleaned like painted wood work.



"Dutch Boy Painter"
Pure White Lead

and pure linseed oil make the one perfect covering for interior walls. This is the method adopted by leading architects for the largest mansions and it is equally desirable for the smaller home. Let us tell you more about this modern way of treating walls.

Our Free Painting Helps

We will send you free on request color schemes and miscellaneous painting instructions that you will find of real, practical value. Ask for Helps 3156

NATIONAL LEAD COMPANY
New York Cleveland Chicago St. Louis
Boston Buffalo Cincinnati San Francisco
(John T. Lewis & Bros Co., Philadelphia)
(National Lead and Oil Co., Pittsburgh)

"What Hat Will Be Most Becoming to Me"

"What suit shall I wear--what dress shall I ... what skirt, what waists--where, just where ... I find the clothes most becoming to me?"

...nd your answer is printed above.

..."NATIONAL" Style Book, your Style Book, ...es you of the greatest becomingness by giving ...r your choice the widest variety of the most ...thful new styles in every kind of apparel.

And the whole matter of the selection of your clothes is thus made very simple.

You only need write us to-day, "Send me free my "NATIONAL" Style Book." That is the one important first step--the thing to do now.

And second, select from this Style Book --- from all New York's best styles the garments you like best--your order will be filled immediately, express charges will be prepaid by us, and we will take all the risk of your being fitted perfectly and entirely delighted.

You thus gain in Price, Promptness, and Style.

"NATIONAL" low prices mean an important saving to you. "NATIONAL" prices are so low, our promptness in filling orders so well known, our styles so beautiful and becoming that to-day more women buy their apparel at the "NATIONAL" than buy of any other house in the world.

The question is, "Will you take the first step now by writing for your Style Book. It shows you:

...resses, $10 to $30 Hats, $2.98 to $15
...ats, $10 to $50 Skirts, $3.98 to $15
...rs, $2.25 to $75 Waists, .98 to $10

...lso a full line of Underwear, Hosiery, Scarfs, Veils, ...coats, Gloves, Sweaters, Leather Goods, Jewelry, and ...mplete line of Boys', Misses' and Children's Wearing ...arel.

..ATIONAL" Tailored Suits $15 TO $40 Made to Measure

Samples of Materials Sent FREE

...ch Made-to-Measure Suit is actually cut and made ...der, and we guarantee each suit to fit perfectly or we ...cheerfully refund your money.

The "NATIONAL" Policy

We prepay express charges on all our goods to any ...rt of the world. You may return any "NATIONAL" ...rment not satisfactory to you and we will refund ...ur money and pay express charges both ways.

...writing for your Style Book be sure to state whether ...desire samples of materials used for "NATIONAL" ...-to-Measure Tailored Suits. Samples are sent gladly, ...nly when asked for---And the samples and the Style ...e are well worth asking for---now.

...ATIONAL CLOAK & SUIT CO.,
218 West 24th Street, New York City

Our Comfort Corner

Continued from preceding page

honor her all her life. She has been married not quite five years, and her wedding ring is a badge of slavery, while her single solace is the little child who clings to her and of whom his father is absurdly jealous. The man has never a caress for the baby and seldom a gracious word for the baby's mother. When in her early married life she ventured to invite a few girl friends to a meal in her home, she was curtly ordered not to repeat the offense. She went to her new home with a good provision of clothing, her parents having given her a generous outfit. She never has money to spend and from year to year has worn the same clothing made over until it is no longer presentable.

The husband in question has a good income and no vices. Where are the wifely privileges in this travesty of a home? What ought this wife to do? In what way can this man's eyes be opened to the folly and wickedness of his course? The question is open for discussion.

. . .

The Wish to Write

THE wish to write for the press is so general and education is at present so widely diffused that hundreds of people make the attempt to earn money in this way and are unable to understand why they are disappointed. An author of eminence receives from day to day in his morning mail letters from youthful aspirants who hope that he will read their manuscripts, and from cultivated women of middle age who frankly assure him that they see little difference between his work and their own. They are amazed that their stories are returned by critical editors while the magazines and papers constantly publish articles that seem to them less worthy of favor. For his own protection this author and others are compelled to decline the censorship offered them.

It does little good to assure the average amateur in writing that this in common with other professions has to be acquired by earnest and diligent effort. An apprenticeship must be served to every art, trade and calling. No one learns to make dresses, paint pictures, cure diseases, preach sermons or build houses without being taught principles and methods. Writing comes under the same necessity for discipline. If one wishes to write for the public one must possess some original talent as a beginning, and then must be willing to devote years of patient study to the accomplishment of the designed purpose. Last of all, the would-be writer must take to heart the children's couplet:

If at first you don't succeed,
Try, try again.

. . .

A Delicate Question

A GIRL wrote the other day asking whether it was always unmaidenly to let a possible suitor understand that his attentions were welcome. Her point seemed to be that a man must not only always take the initiative in courtship, but that a young woman must also, as a matter of course, play the part of the rose guarded all around by prickly thorns. A man is sometimes so diffident, so fearful of rebuff, and so unworthy, in his own eyes, of the great gift he is seeking that he needs a little gentle encouragement, and lacking it will go on his way alone. Of course most men are bold and many have a good conceit of themselves. The young girl who wears her heart upon her sleeve, whose obvious attitude is that of anxiety to be wooed and married, and who fails to let herself be sought, is a little like a jarring note in music; she is a bit out of tune. There are exceptions to every rule and women know perfectly well that there are sweet, gentle, modest and quite feminine ways, charming but not at all aggressive, in which they may let a man see that their answer to the all-important question will be the one he desires. "Why don't you speak for yourself, John?" said Priscilla in the sweet old New England story when the John she favored was loyally pleading the cause of another. Faint heart never won fair lady but fair lady is not to be blamed if she lets faint heart understand that his wooing will not be in vain.

. . .

Keeping Up to Date

AS PEOPLE advance in years they should take special pains to keep up to date, not merely so far as acquaintance with current events is concerned, but by being in full sympathy with the forward movements of the time. Unless we have the habit of attending the new theories, weighing and discussing them impartially, and unless we have an open mind as to the reception of new methods and new ideas, we must of necessity be left behind in the day's march. The procession will pass us by, we shall be out of touch with what is best in benevolence, science and art. We shall cease to be neighborly and forget how to be interesting, and far too soon arrive at the moment when everything we meet is an irritation and a trial. "Aunt Elsie," said a girl, "used to be a delightful companion. She is now easily irritated and her ideas are out of date. She has grown morbid and rusty, and she constantly complains that the younger generation is not what it was when she was young." Poor Aunt Elsie had lost the recipe for remaining young, being happy and being in demand. She had been beaten in the race with Time. No one need be beaten in this race who decides on keeping step with to-day, and continuing to be interested in to-day's doings.

. . .

The Lord is a Good Paymaster

"FOR years I denied myself the pleasure of giving, because my means were limited and I could not afford any indulgences. I have always been in financial straits, and I at last decided that if I waited until I was free from anxiety I would probably die without ever having been able to help any good cause. I just made up my mind that I would give when I thought it right to do so, and whenever I have had two dollars in my purse I have given one to a cause that appealed to me. I have gone without things that I wanted and needed, to help others and make subscriptions, and in these days I feel that I have been justified. In an unlooked-for way the Lord has come to my aid, and I have been able to pay off a big mortgage on which the interest has been a heavy tax for some years. M. S."

. . .

Send Them to Bed with a Kiss

O MOTHERS, so weary, discouraged,
Worn out with the cares of the day,
You often grow cross and impatient,
Complain of the noise and the play;
For the day brings so many vexations,
So many things going amiss;
But, Mothers, whatever may vex you,
Send the children to bed with a kiss.

The dear little feet wander often
Perhaps, from the pattern of right,
The dear little hands find new mischief
To try you from morning till night;
But think of the desolate mothers
Who'd give all the world for your bliss,
And, as thanks for your infinite blessings,
Send the children to bed with a kiss.

For some day their noise will not vex you,
The silence will hurt you far more;
You will long for the sweet children's voices,
For a sweet, childish face at the door;
And to press a child's face to your bosom,
You'd give all the world for just this;
For the comfort 'twill bring you in sorrow,
Send the children to bed with a kiss.

Get SEALY Tuftless Comfort

Sealy Tuftless Comfort is created in the Sealy Mattress by the Sealy combination of pure, long-fibre cotton filling, the pneumatically-formed batt method of making, and the tuftless style of finishing.

This combination is used exclusively by the Sealy Mattress and only in the Sealy Mattress can you get real Sealy comfort.

Sealy Tuftless Comfort means something new and better to the sleeper. It means a bed that bouyantly supports the body with hardly a consciousness of contact.

So fully does the Sealy conform to the body's form and position that the sensation is that of floating—floating off to delicious sleep and invigorating rest. There is no hitting of high spots or dropping into low spots as on a tufted mattress.

Try this Sealy Tuftless Comfort for 60 nights with the privilege of your money back.

The Sealy Triple Guarantee:

First:—We guarantee the SEALY to be made entirely of pure, new long-fibre cotton, without linters or mill-waste.

Second:—We guarantee the SEALY for 20 years against becoming lumpy or bunchy.

Third:—We guarantee that after 60 nights' trial you will pronounce the SEALY the most comfortable mattress that you ever used, or your money back.

SEALY MATTRESSES are made in all sizes, covered with the best grade of A. C. A., Bookfold Sateen, or mercerized Art Tickings, either Plain Edge or Roll Edge—but never tufted. Prices, $20 to $25.

Send for our booklet "The Real Difference in Mattresses" and the "Mattress Museum"

With them we will also send you the name of our representative where you can see the SEALY in your town, and who will give you the guarantee.

SEALY MATTRESS CO.,

Factory and General Offices at our 14,000 acre cotton plantation, SUGAR LAND, TEXAS.

New York Offices and Warerooms:
Lexington Ave. & 46th St.

Chicago: 1300 Michigan Avenue.
San Francisco: 45 Kearney Street.

Write to address nearest you.

Utmost in Coat Luxury for $46.50

A magnificent garment, rich, and warm and fashionable.

The material is guaranteed Sealette, a marvelous reproduction of natural seal, so faithful that experts cannot tell the difference. The long, wide collar, cuffs and trimmings are genuine Opossum Fur, soft and lustrous.

This coat is 54 inches long, inner pocket and all silk brocade lining which may be had in seal brown, gold or pearl gray. Closes with a beautiful silk frog set and buttons.

This superb coat is but one of many handsome models shown in our catalogue, ranging from $17.98 upward for women's sizes and $8.98 for girls'. We use the very finest textile furs, Sealette, Caracal, Neva Caracal, Lambskin, Pony, Velour du Nord and others. They are all perfect reproductions of the natural fur and retain their rich lustre and beautiful appearance through long service.

But descriptions do not do them justice. You should see these furs, made up into stylish models, fashioned after very latest imported European modes. Let us send you the coat shown above for your inspection.

Do not send money

Simply write, asking us to send the coat. We shall be glad to ship it C. O. D. so you can inspect and try it on before you pay a cent. We are glad to do it, because we know its luxurious beauty will appeal to you and you will see what a wonderful value it is.

We can give far greater value for your money than retail stores, because we sell direct from maker to wearer, saving you the dealers' profits.

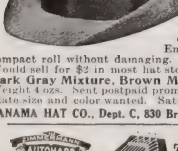
Write for Fashion Book "L" showing actual photographs of other models in all the different furs with full descriptions. We shall also be glad to send you samples of any of the textile furs we use so you can see for yourself how wonderfully faithful they are and how superior to the ordinary kinds.

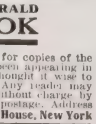


TEXFUR GARMENT CO.
530 Broadway, N. Y.

$1 English Knock-about Hat

A stylish, serviceable hat for dress or business. Genuine English Felt. Folds into compact roll without damaging. Broad outside band. Would sell for $2 in most hat stores. Colors: Black, Dark Gray Mixture, Brown Mixture, and White. Weight 4 ozs. Sent postpaid promptly on receipt of $1 Mate size and color wanted. Satisfaction guaranteed.

PANAMA HAT CO., Dept. C, 830 Broadway, New York City



Buy the Original
ZIMMERMANN "AUTOHARP"

"The Nation's Favorite" None genuine without our trade mark "Autoharp" A musical instrument adapted to all classes. At all music stores or direct from us. "Easy to Play, Easy to Buy." Send for Free catalog. THE PHONOHARP CO., East Boston, Mass.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD BOND BOOK

We have received so many requests for copies of the financial articles which have been appearing in The Christian Herald, that we thought it wise to preserve them in pamphlet form. Any reader may secure a copy of this useful booklet without charge by forwarding 4 cents in stamps to cover postage. Address The Christian Herald, Dept. 96, Bible House, New York

Corns—The only way to cure them is to take them out by the roots. A-Corn Salve does that. Quick, safe, sure. 15 cents at druggists' or by mail. Giant Chemical Co., Philadelphia

ESTABLISH THE SOLE AGENCY IN YOUR TOWN AND ORGANIZE A sales force to represent the manufacturer direct, for the greatest household necessity. This is our first offer to agents, so write now and we'll show you how. William M. Palmer & Co., 203 Broadway, N. Y.

An Old Friend of Count Togo

I HAVE this evening had great pleasure in reading The Christian Herald of September 6. Every article is of the greatest interest. Your copy of Jacque's painting, "The Shepherd," is marvelously executed. "The Dawn of the World's Peace" is a most interesting group of articles, our good President leading. Representative Richmond P. Hobson's closing words, "justice, liberty, charity, brotherhood, the forerunners of peace," will be acceptable to all. There would be peace except for the jingoes who want war, especially with Japan. But in God's own good time, we shall have peace—"Peace on earth, good will towards men." By way of an introduction, I may say that I am now one of the four surviving officers of the great expedition to Japan in 1853 under Commodore Perry. There may be some three or four of our sailor boys left out of 191 officers and 1,500 men composing that squadron of nine vessels. I had an agreeable visit to Admiral Togo. Through his interpreter (Japan's Consul-General in New York) he wanted to know much that I could recall of Japan when he was a young boy.

I read your "Answered Prayers." I have faith in prayer. In November of 1906, I was taken with nervous prostration, and many, many times despaired of ever getting well. I wished myself out of the world. I did my work daily in a mechanical way; but my family and friends daily prayed for my recovery, and their prayers were supplemented with my own feeble efforts. God heard these petitions, and, on Easter Sunday last, I was wondrously restored to health, and God's name be ever praised! Reading your paper has given me real pleasure.

Boston, Mass. WILLIAM SPEIDEN.

A Dying Man's Testimony

SHORTLY before his death, Mr. Geo. W. Culberson of Dungannon, Va., wrote the following letter to his family:

"From the time I took sick I had but little hope of recovery. Now I have none. What life will be beyond this I know not. Sometimes the grave looks very dark and cold; but when I consider that all the grave holds is the decayed house in which the immortal principle dwells for only a short time, and that that principle is on a far higher plane, where it is glory forever, with all the redeemed of God, where it is a reunion of all we once loved, then the grave has no terror. If you ever doubted the reality of the Christian religion, I trust you will never do so again. Keep the faith and come on where we will meet Christ and his angels, those that suffered martyrdom for his cause, father, mother, brother, sister—all we once loved on earth, around his throne. If I thought this letter would influence one soul to turn and live for God, I would ask you to have it read in church. If I never see you on earth, don't shed one tear for me, but praise God, and when you are summoned, come on, and if God will permit, I will meet you and be one of your escorts to the throne of glory. Good-by."

Answered Prayers

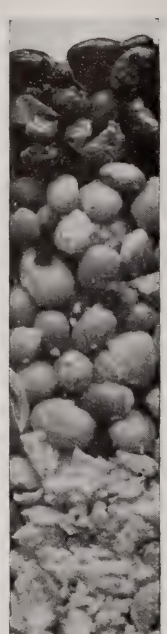
Reader, Tulare, Calif., thanks God for answer to prayer.

E. D. B., Texas, thanks God for continued answer to prayers.

M. E. W., Bardstown, Ky. "I have had many prayers answered."

H. P. L., Tilden, Neb. "I thank God for rain in answer to prayer."

J. G. E., Wilmington, Vt., thanks God for a direct answer to prayer.



H. A. M., New York. "I am grateful to God for answering my prayers."

Reader, North Point, Pa. "God has mercifully answered prayer for me."

D. B. H., Chittenango, N. Y. "God has answered many prayers for me."

Mrs. S. S., Corsicana, Texas, thanks God for improved health through prayer.

T. L. W., North Weaver, Pa., thanks God for answered prayers during illness.

Which Do You Serve, Madam?

These are home-baked beans—a vertical section from a baking dish pictured by actual photograph.

The top beans are ruined by crisping. They get too much dry heat.

The next beans get too little heat—not even half enough. They are the beans that ferment and form gas, because stomachs can't digest them.

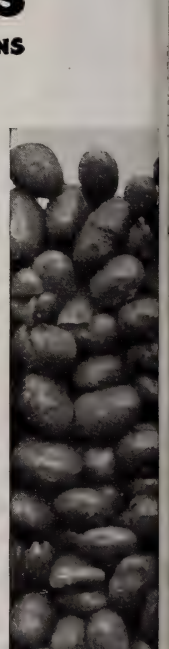
The lower beans simmer during the baking. Thus this mushy mass.

Does It Pay?

Behind every dish of home-baked beans there are sixteen hours of soaking, boiling and baking.

Here's exactly what you get:

Some crisped, some soggy, some hard and whole. None anywhere near digestible. Dry heat ovens can't break up the granules so that beans digest.



They are good to the taste—we admit that. Baked beans can't be made distasteful.

But beans are food—Nature's choicest food—84 per cent nutriment. And what does food amount to if it can't digest?

Don't you think it a pity, for lack of facilities, to spoil a food which ought to be more nourishing than meat?

Van Camp's BAKED WITH TOMATO SAUCE PORK AND BEANS

"The National Dish"

Here is part of a can of Van Camp's Beans, pictured by actual photograph.

These beans are baked five times as well as any baked at home. They are baked in small parcels—baked for hours at 245 degrees.

But they are baked in steam ovens. So not a bean is crisped, not one is broken up. They come to you nut-like, mealy and whole.

The tomato sauce is baked with the beans, so the zest goes through and through.

These beans are digestible. They do not ferment. You get the whole wealth of their food value.

They are served cold in a minute, or hot in ten minutes. You can keep a dozen meals on hand. They never lose their freshly-baked flavor.

We refer to Van Camp's Beans—not the usual ready-baked. We refer to white, plump Michigan beans selected by hand. We refer to sauce made of whole, vine-ripened tomatoes. We refer to steam-oven baking.

When you once compare these beans with others you will always get Van Camp's. And you won't go back to home baking when you find them out.

If you'll try them tell your grocer. Telephone him now.

Three sizes: 10, 15 and 20c per can

Van Camp Packing Company (Est. 1861) Indianapolis, Ind.

(170)

The Florsheim SHOE

LOOK FOR NAME IN STRAP

Plenty of toe room in the Florsheim Shoe—no matter what the shape—made over "Natural Shape" lasts—an exclusive feature.

Ask your dealer or send amount to cover cost and express charges and we will have our nearest dealer fill your order.

Most Styles $5.00 and $6.00

Write for our free booklet "The Florsheim Way of Foot-Fitting," showing styles that are different.

The Florsheim Shoe Company
Chicago U. S. A.

The Pedal
Plenty of toe room

EVERYWOMAN SHOULD EARN $25 PER WEEK

introducing our very complete line of wool suitings, wash fabrics, fancy waistings, silks, infants, petticoats, hosiery, etc. Dealing direct with the mills, our prices are low. Others make $10.00 to $20.00 weekly—you can also. Samples, instructions, etc., in neat case, charges prepaid. No money required. Exclusive territory first to apply for Agency. Standard Dress Goods Co., Desk 33, Standard Building, Binghamton, N.Y.

PATENTS SECURED OR FEE RETURNED.
Free report as to Patentability. Illustrated Guide Book, and List of Inventions Wanted, sent free. VICTOR J. EVANS & CO., Washington, D. C.

This kitchen Set 85¢

Delivered Prepaid Anywhere in the United States 85c

"Direct from the factory" selling plan enables every housewife to enjoy one these handy, time-saving kitchen sets at a price way below that ever named before. This set consists of 10 pieces—breadknife, carving knife, carving fork; steel chopper, meat saw, steel knife sharpener, paring knife, cake turner, egg lifter and hanging rack. Each piece absolutely perfect—made of tested steel, heavily nickel plated; handles made of hard, black rubberoid (water proof). No housewife should be without this set—Order a set today, and if you are not satisfied that it is the biggest Kitchen Set bargain you ever saw, don't keep it—return at our expense and we'll refund your money.

HUNDREDS OF BARGAINS IN HOME FURNISHINGS

We will pay you to get acquainted with this establishment—we guarantee that you can save you a big sum on any piece of furniture or household article you need. We control a group of factories and sell direct to you at prices way below any merchant. Send us a postcard saying—I want to save money on my home furnishings" and we'll send you our Catalog and list of Specials that will interest you. Address

PHILLIPS BROS. & WEIL
"DIRECT-FROM FACTORY-TO-YOU"
Dept. E., 819 W. 63d St, Chicago

Christian Emancipation*

PAUL GILBERT, among many stories of men who have by the grace of God been freed from the shackles of some terrible sin, tells of one who went into a Torrey meeting and asked for "Mr. Jacoby." He was Dr. Torrey's assistant and was summoned at once. He recognized the man as a former associate, and saw that he was in a bad way from a long course of dissipation. He fed the poor fellow amply in a restaurant, got his overcoat out of pawn for him, and then said, "George, you know what I used to be. I was just where you are now,—but see what God has done for me. He stands ready to do as much for you. Why not let him do it?"

"Tell me about it," said the man.

So Mr. Jacoby talked with him, and made him read Rom. 10: 13. "Who is 'whosoever,' George?" he asked.

"It means me."

"And what does it mean to 'call on the name of the Lord'?"

"It means to pray,—I can't pray."

"Get down and tell God that."

So he knelt, and with tears rolling down his cheeks looked up and said, "Oh, God, I don't know how to pray, but I want to be a better man."

"And what does it say here of the man who prays, George?"

"That he shall be saved."

"That means saved from sin," said Mr. Jacoby. "Just keep on praying and you will surely be saved."

Six months later this man, who had seemed to be hopelessly given over to vice, was holding a position as stationary engineer at $50 per month, and was respected by all who dealt with him. Every day for weeks, Mr. Jacoby had called on him, praying with him, quoting the promises, and trying to strengthen his faith. The prayers had been answered and the bonds of sin had been broken.

The God who broke those iron fetters is still mighty to save. We may not be enslaved by such strong and cruel shackles as bound that man, but every one of us is the slave of some more or less vicious habit, or one that is at least foolish and unworthy, and we ought to be fighting it every day. The expensive, filthy and unhealthful habit of smoking holds most of our young men in strong bonds; many of our young women are virtually the slaves of fashion; in both sexes, we find scandal-mongers, backbiters, idlers, sycophants of the rich, promoters of caste, neglecters of churchgoing, or those who are unkind and inconsiderate in their home-life.

Can any one of us boast that we are free from one or more of these moral blemishes? Have we sternly examined ourselves, found out our easily besetting sins, and prayed earnestly for deliverance therefrom? If we have not, let us search ourselves. Let us not be satisfied with the comfortable, general admission and petition to our Maker, "Have mercy upon us miserable sinners, and incline our hearts to keep thy law." Let us find out first just how we are sinning, and let each one of us resolve, with God's help, to dash to pieces "the dearest idol" on the throne of our souls.

The idea of slavery is always abominable to the intelligent being. The true soul insists upon freedom—the right to work out its destiny in its own way—to pursue its chosen path, without let or hindrance from others; and so far as men can do this without infringing upon the rights of others, our government is supposed to grant that freedom. The fights now raging everywhere against the different forms of mercantile and political despotism are only a part of this great struggle for freedom. Our fight against the sin in our souls is a still fiercer one; but God is with us, for he is ever on the side of freedom.

*Topic of the Epworth League for Sunday, October 8. TEXTS: Rom. 8:1-6; 6:6, 22.

OWNING A BOND

Encourages Saving for Permanent Income

It is a notable fact that in those American communities possessing the greatest per capita wealth, bonds make up the largest item in the list of investments held. They are very generally regarded as forming one of the most desirable methods for the permanent investment of savings from the standpoint of safety, income and convenience.

The individual who would acquire wealth will find that the purchase of his first $100, $500 or $1,000 bond contributes greatly to the fulfillment of his purpose. Pride in the ownership of this first security stimulates the wish to own another. The desire that is here created is a most valuable factor in the establishment of an independent fortune.

Let us aid you in the problem of making your money earn more money—making your savings grow into permanent wealth.

Whether your surplus funds are large or small, we can aid you in placing them so that you will obtain the greatest income yield consistent with sound security.

Many of the bonds we handle are in $100 and $500 denominations in addition to the usual $1000 denomination.

The security of the public utility bonds we offer is well established by expert engineers and competent attorneys.

Since the organization of this house there has been no default in principal or interest payments of any bonds it has brought out, evidencing the thorough efficiency of the examinations made by these experts.

We shall be pleased to consult or correspond with investors regarding any securities in which they may be interested.

Write for our latest circular giving brief descriptions of water works, hydro-electric, traction, and public utility bonds we are now offering

To Yield from 5% to 6%

Our Municipal Department carries at all times many attractive tax-free County, City and School Bonds to yield from 3¾ to 4½%. Send for our latest list.

Address DEPARTMENT V

J. S. & W. S. KUHN, Inc.

Bank for Savings Building, PITTSBURGH, PA.

CHICAGO PHILADELPHIA NEW YORK BOSTON

WANTED—MEN

BRAKEMEN, FIREMEN, ELECTRIC MOTORMEN, CONDUCTORS, TRAIN PORTERS

Hundreds put to work. $65 to $150 per month. 500 more wanted. Experience unnecessary. Application blank and map of new lines free. Give age and position wanted. Enclose stamp.

I. Railway C. I., No. 16, Indianapolis, Ind.

THE "BEST" LIGHT

One burner will give as much light as ten ordinary oil lamps; six 16 candle power electric bulbs—six 16 candle power gas jets or 5 acetylene gas jets. Costs 2 cts. per week. Produces a pure, white, steady, safe light. Over 200 styles. Every lamp warranted. Agents wanted. Write for catalog.

THE BEST LIGHT CO.
3-70 E. 5th St., Canton, O.

"A Machine a Minute"

That was the Remington announcement several weeks ago. This remarkable sale, breaking all records in typewriter history, is the direct result of the constantly growing fame and tremendous popularity of the Remington Visible Models. In selling these latest Remingtons, previous models were accepted in part payment. We saw our opportunity for a "Home Run," and put in a bid with the Remington people for the turned in machines. We got them at an unheard of low figure, and are thus enabled to offer a limited number of the finest selected

No. 6 REMINGTONS for $27.00

Think of it! Remington No. 6 model at a price never heard of before! The world's standard! The typewriter you always wanted! The machine that always sold for $100.00. The best built machine of its day and now the best rebuilt! Little used when we got them. Now thoroughly reconstructed, realigned, readjusted, they perform like new. Refinished and renickeled, they look like new.

Absolutely and Fully Guaranteed

Like the brand-new machine as to quality, efficiency, workmanship. They bear our trademark! The white hand under "Factory Rebuilt." That trademark and the company back of it say that our guarantee is good.

How to Get One of Them

Sign attached coupon and mail at once. No obligation—no expense to you. We will mail you full particulars concerning our Free Trial proposition. First come first served, of course. Offer holds good only while limited supply lasts.

MAIL COUPON TO-DAY!

American Writing Machine Co.
345 BROADWAY, NEW YORK

American Writing Machine Co.
345 Broadway, New York

Please send me full particulars concerning Free Trial Offer of Remington Typewriter for $27.00, without any obligation or expense on my part, as advertised in "Christian Herald."

Name.....

Address.....

Inheritance Taxes For Investors

This excellent volume (140 pages, cloth-bound) shows to what extent the Resident of any State is affected by the Inheritance Tax Laws of every other State. Annotated and revised by Gen. Hugh Bancroft, of the Boston Bar. Published by the Boston News Bureau.

"These laws are so new that there is no body of judicial decisions under them, and men of property—or of hopes must form their views of the laws from the laws themselves, which as yet are assembled nowhere better than in this book."
—New York Times.

Inheritance Taxes are of vital importance to every owner of real or personal property worth $1,000 and upwards. The publisher's price is $1.10 (per copy) postpaid.

We have a limited number of copies for free distribution to INDIVIDUAL INVESTORS. Requests will be honored in order received.

George H. Burr & Co.
BANKERS
41 Wall Street, New York
Boston Chicago St. Louis
Philadelphia San Francisco

6% NET INTEREST and the best security in the world!

Principal and interest secured by select Mortgages on Pittsburg Preferred Real Estate

Amounts of any size ($25, $50, $100, $200 or multiples) can be invested, temporarily or permanently. Your money available when wanted. Endorsed by highest financial authorities everywhere.

Our Booklet explains how 6% Interest is paid and security absolutely assured.

If your Savings, or any other money, is drawing less than 6%, read our booklet. Copy free on request.

A. C. LESLIE CO.
Suite 117, Bakewell Law Bldg., Pittsburg, Pa.

GUARANTEED MORTGAGES
For Large and Small Investors

Don't think, because your capital is small, that it can earn only 3½ per cent. or 4 per cent. It used to be so—the small investor for hundreds of years had no chance beside the capitalist. Our

First Mortgage Trust Bonds
On New York and Suburban Real Estate

put you exactly on a par with the wealthiest investor. You have the same security and the same certain returns—5 per cent. or 5½ per cent. You have the same opportunity to withdraw your capital if you should need it.

Under Supervision of New York Banking Department
Write for our Booklet

NEW YORK MORTGAGE CO.
Dept. D, 1470 Broadway, New York City

POST CARDS
10 Hallowe'en . 10c | 10 General Subjects. 10c
10 Thanksgiving. 10c | 10 Birthday 10c
Three packages for 25c. 100 cards, 80c
Special Assortment Hallowe'en, Thanksgiving, Birthday or Remembrance Cards, 100 for 60c.
MADISON ART COMPANY, MADISON, CONN.

The Savings Banks of VERMONT and NEW HAMPSHIRE are large investors in First Mortgage Farm Loans taken in this Northwestern country. They have been investing in such loans for many years. If such investments are good enough for shrewd, conservative New England bankers, why not for you?

For over 33 years, we have been successfully making and selling Mortgage Loans, serving a very exacting class of investors.

Write today for Booklet "A," which explains in detail how we can serve you to your entire satisfaction.

WELLS & DICKEY COMPANY
Established 1878 Security Bank Bldg.,
Capital and Surplus $700,000. Minneapolis

Borrowers and Investors

SOME one has said, and said truthfully, that "the business of the world is done on credit." The word "credit" implies a borrower as well as a lender. If cash payments were insisted upon before the delivery of goods, there would not be enough ready money in the world, supposing all to be available, to conduct the world's business for forty-eight hours. If there were no borrowers the business of the world would practically come to a standstill, as if the heart had ceased to beat, and the chief function of all banks would be destroyed, thus forcing them to shut up shop. But we need not worry over such a possibility, for existing conditions in the business world are as much the result of invariable laws as are the movements of the heavenly bodies, or the directions of the other great forces of nature.

Now and then we read of some great business undertaking, so vast as to be of national, if not indeed of world-wide importance, and, if the capital required is given, we naturally think of the banks and noted capitalists as the sources of supply. We have already indicated the millions of small rivulets from which these great reservoirs of supply are fed, and pointed out how other people's money is utilized to the advantage of borrower and lender even in these great works.

The greatest and strongest of our mercantile and manufacturing establishments are usually the greatest borrowers, for there are periods when they need more cash than is available for their own accounts and they must borrow from the banks under conditions that make for the prosperity of the lender as well as of the borrower. But vast as are the sums changing hands in this way, it is safe to say that they are greatly exceeded by the myriads of small loans made to men doing business in a smaller way, and of which we, of course, hear nothing. The young farmer just married, and who has bought land and given a two-thirds mortgage, the builder starting out with a small capital and high hopes, the clerk who has saved up and has decided to start a country store or other business of his own; these and scores of others, whose callings will readily suggest themselves, must be borrowers at the start, and on their ability to get credit and to keep credit will depend to a great extent their success.

Surplus Earnings

While there are still many failures in business, and it is safe to say there always will be failures unless human nature greatly changes, it is encouraging to note that, in proportion to the numbers engaged and the volume of business done, the failures are decreasing in a way that promises much for the future. This betterment is due to a more thorough business training and the adoption of methods and systems that have their foundations in increased individual honesty and greater common sense.

It is encouraging to note that men who have made their business secure and established reputations for good sense and integrity are fast leaving the borrowing class and becoming investors. In doing this the business man is entering what is to him an untried field, and so his every move should be made with caution. No man wishing to keep his business sound will take a dollar from his working capital to invest in an outside undertaking, no matter how promising; but, if he is winning, there must come a time when he will have a surplus. Now the question will come up: What is to be done with the surplus?

One reason why there are fewer failures in mercantile enterprises that have been established for some time, is that greater precautions are being taken to guard against unexpected contingencies in which money may be needed, and to guard against these it is becoming the practice, wherever it can be done without cramping, to have a reserve fund. This reserve fund is, of course, made up from the surplus. As there is enough money in the bank to meet all expenses, it would not be good business to swell the account at the bank by the addition of this surplus. How then can it be used to the greatest advantage? Clearly the best disposition to make of this money would be to invest it in some form of interest-bearing security, which will be readily converted into cash should there be an unexpected demand for it.

Good Advice

It was Davy Crockett who said: "Be sure you are right, then go ahead." But in business, a wise man can never be absolutely sure that he is right. The failures are the men who blunder ahead, trusting to luck and without any serious thought of the right or the wrong of the conditions presented. Now, next best thing to knowing a subject is knowing where you can learn all about it. If there is not an investment banker, that is, one who makes a specialty of investments, within reach of the man with the surplus, then his own banker will know more about this subject than he does, and he is the man who should be consulted.

Bankers, by the very nature of their business,—we have in mind only bankers of established reputation,—are conservative, while the ordinary business man, by the very nature of his calling, is accustomed to taking "risks," "running chances," as he calls it, and so, if left to himself, he may place his surplus in an enterprise that offers the seduction of large returns, and in this way he is apt to lose sight of that all-important factor —Safety.

There is a principle in scientific investment that requires a clear understanding of the differences between the various classes of securities. It should be ever kept in mind by the investor, and particularly the one we are considering, that all kinds of securities that present themselves for investment may be divided into two classes, viz: Promises to Pay, and Equities. Among the former are real-estate mortgages, bonds of various kinds, and notes secured by collateral. Among the equities may be classed the capital stocks of banks, railroads, or industrial corporations. The latter are not liens, but represent only a residuary share in the assets and profits of a concern, after its fixed charges and all other legal obligations have been met. No matter whether dividends are paid on the stock or not, the owner cannot compel the corporation to redeem it, nor indeed to accept it on any terms.

Here is a simple illustration of the conditions and the differences between the two classes of securities we have mentioned. If the investor buys a $500 railroad bond which he knows to be perfectly safe, and which will be sure to be redeemed when the bond is due, he has made himself, by reason of his purchase, a creditor of the corporation. If he invests the $500 in the stock of the same company, while his money in this case may be quite as secure, perhaps yield him a larger return than from the bond, yet the conditions for its return are not the same. His only chance of getting back the money invested in the stock, should he wish to do so, is to sell it to some one who wishes to purchase. In buying the bond he got a promise to pay; in buying the stock he purchased an equity.

6% BONDS — Certainty Adaptability Convertibili

NO element of an investment approache importance that of certainty — certa that it will conserve and return principal in and pay the contract rate of interest. A-R-E have done this for nearly a quarter of a cent

¶ They are adaptable, being issued to re interest on current funds or to provide for sa surplus earnings, returning the latter with in est compounded at 6%.

¶ Their cash convertibility safeguards investor against temporary financial need.

¶ This Company is engaged solely in the b ness of investment and operation in New Y real estate, a stable and profitable investment fi and offers its 6% Gold Bonds in these for

6% COUPON BONDS
For those who wish to invest $100 or mor
6% ACCUMULATIVE BONDS
For those who wish to save $25 or more a y

¶ Descriptive booklets and map of New York show location of properties sent on request.

American Real Estate Compan
Capital and Surplus, $2,011,247.80
Founded 1888 Assets, $23,026,889.67
Room 534, 527 Fifth Avenue, New Y

5% How Much Does Your Money Ear

Can you get it when you want it?

Is it amply safeguarded from dange loss?

This Company pays 5% interest on y savings. Interest checks reach you alw on the first days of January and July. over sixteen years there has never be day's delay.

You can withdraw all or part of y money at any time without notice—i never tied up and out of your control.

Ask for the booklet telling about the careful, conservative management of this Company, its ample resources and its methods of doing business.

The Calvert Mortgage & Deposit
1046 Calvert Building, Baltimore,

PATENTS That Protect and P
Advice and Books FR
Rates Reasonable. Highest References. Best Serv
WATSON E. COLEMAN, Patent Lawyer, WASHINGTON,

The New Inheritance Tax Law Of New York State

Non-residents may now carry bank balances or deposit their securities in New York City, either temporarily or permanently, with the assurance that they will not be subject to the Inheritance Tax.

The new law, now in force, provides that intangible property, defined by the law as "incorporeal property, including money, deposits in bank, shares of stock, bonds, notes, credits, evidences of an interest in property and evidences of debt," held in New York by bona fide non-resident decedents, is not taxable in that state.

This Company has complete facilities for handling active and reserve accounts and for the safe keeping of securities, and cordially invites such business.

We have prepared a booklet containing the text of the new Inheritance Tax Law, together with explanatory notes, which we will be pleased to furnish upon request.
Ask for Booklet N 342

Guaranty Trust Company
of New York
28 Nassau Street
Fifth Avenue Branch, 5th Ave. & 43d St. London Office, 33 Lombard St., E.C.
Capital and Surplus - - $23,000,000
Deposits - - - - 163,000,000

iginal SIEGEL COOPER & CO., Chicago

During the Year 1911 We Aimed to Secure

One Million More Customers

o Shop by Mail at "The Big Store" his has almost been accomplished, proving the opularity of our policy—"The same goods for ess [money or better goods for the same money," with Free Delivery from Chicago to your ome. WE AIM to ship every order within 24 hours—hich means we save you time also.

Large Winter, 1911, Catalog FREE
Write to-day for your FREE Copy

This Stylish Coat $7.95 Delivered Free

The style and character of this elegant Kersey Coat is due to originality of its designing and the superiority of its workmanship. The popular semi-fitting style is adhered to; the back being made in panel effect. The deep rolling collar is of soft full napped Seal Plush, unequaled for its rich, lustrous appearance. The wide front is fastened in double-breasted effect with handsome silk braid frog ornaments and buttons. The edge of the slant side pockets and wide turned-back cuffs are of seal plush and add just the proper touch of distinction to this chic model. Lined to the waist with fine satin finish Venetian. Can be had in black Kersey only; sizes 32 to 44 bust measure. Length about 54 inches.

Price delivered Free from Chicago to your home $7.95

Order by No. 19Z40

Winter Coat $7.95 delivered Free

Wool Yarn Sweater $1.95 Delivered Free

Sweater $1.95

Smart looking and durable wool yarn Sweater, made double breasted, buttoning with ten large good pearl buttons. The collar rolls attractively and fits smoothly. Two stylish reinforced hip pockets and well-shaped sleeves with closely knitted cuffs. The bottom has rock finish all around. Colors White, Cardinal or Oxford Gray. Sizes 32 to 44 bust measure. Delivered Free from Chicago to your home $1.95

Order by No. 6Z42

Chiffon Panama Dress Skirt $4.95

A most ideal Frenchy model could not be imagined than this handsome novelty skirt of Chiffon Panama. The gores are beautifully and accurately stitched, fitting snugly around the hips and falling in graceful fullness to the bottom. The side seams have inverted slot pleats to insure roominess and ease in walking. The wide front panel is designed in the new aeroplane sash effect, beautifully and artistically braided. The rear panel matches the front exactly with the stylish habit closing to the left. The attached belt is beautifully stitched and tailored. Superbly man-tailored throughout this skirt is absolutely perfect in fit and finish, comes in black only, 26 to 44 length measure. 22 to 30 waist measure. Price delivered Free from Chicago to your home $4.95

Order by No. 81Z41

Dress Skirt 4.95 delivered Free

FREE DELIVERY FROM CHICAGO TO YOUR HOME

OUR GUARANTEE

If you are not pleased more than satisfied with any article, return it at our expense, and we will refund your money as cheerfully as we accept it.

Address Dept. Z for FREE 168-page Catalog.

THE ORIGINAL SIEGEL COOPER & CO
The Big Store Chicago's Economy Center
CHICAGO

THE RIVER OF LIFE*

Sunday School Lesson by Dr. and Mrs. Wilbur F. Crafts

GOD gave Ezekiel a wonderful vision of a river. It was God's way of making known in picture language—by object illustration—what blessing he had in store for the captives in Babylon and for the captives of sin in all the world. Ezekiel wrote on a roll all about the vision, and that is now our lesson. Ezekiel seemed to be walking with God inside and around the temple, and the temple was all beautiful, a new temple that should be built to take the place of the one King Nebuchadnezzar had destroyed. Let us read from our Bibles all about what God showed to Ezekiel at that time, and what God said to him. Begin at the fortieth chapter of Ezekiel and read seven chapters.

The most wonderful part of the vision was "the river." We will read about that in the forty-seventh chapter. The river seemed to flow out from under the front door (the east) of the temple, not a great rushing river at first, but clear and small and beautiful, and then it flowed around the temple, growing wider and deeper, and still it kept on, until it flowed through all of the land; beautiful trees bearing fruit grew on each side of the river, and fishermen cast their nets and caught fish, and so the river was a great blessing to all of the people. God gave the vision of the river to Ezekiel that he might tell it to the captives, and then they would know that it was God's intention to let them go back to their own land, and build again the beautiful temple, and themselves be like the river—a blessing to all the people. Ezekiel's vision was for the whole world, for it is "the blest river of salvation."

Dr. Joseph Parker in The People's Bible says: "We do not need to spiritualize this river, for it spiritualizes itself. The river is Christian life, Christian revelation. It is the revelation of Christ; it is the dispensation of the Spirit. It is the overflow from heaven of all blessing and truth and goodness. Here is a divine outflow, making for itself a channel everywhere, and wherever the channel is, the banks are full of green trees, and the trees are fruit trees, and the leaves are medicinal, and the whole vision is a glimpse of Heaven. We might profitably commit the first twelve verses of this chapter to memory. Teach your children such recitations. They will outlive the comic song, the foolish, impossible romance, the pile of words that ends in evaporation."

Cleansing and Healing

A missionary who had seen thirty years of service, and was on her third furlough, was asked by a lady if the United States really seemed like a Christian land to her. She replied: "The contrast with a heathen land is thrilling. The longer I am here, the more I realize the difference between it and a heathen land; undoubtedly there are great evils here, but for all that the moral tone is high, and there is an atmosphere of true religion. I felt the difference as soon as I landed, and it has grown upon me every day."

Christianity has given our land wondrous architecture in churches, chapels and cathedrals. It has given us noble statuary in monuments erected to those who in the name of Christianity have rendered service to humanity. It has given us sublime art in paintings and engravings. It has given a literature exalted in character because it portrays life as it has been touched by God's truth. It has given us schools, colleges, hospitals, asylums, all of which make for the betterment of mankind. We have lived so long in this beneficent atmosphere that it will be difficult for us to realize that there is anything different in any part of the world, and so it is well for us to compare notes with missionaries who have a realizing sense of what the world would be without Christ.

Ask a child what is the greatest river in the United States, and from his knowledge of geography, he will quickly reply, "The Mississippi River." But teach him out of the heavenly geography that it is "The River of Life." The Mississippi River is at times a source of great destruction of life and property, but the River of Life not only never destroys, but multiplies blessings.

Satisfaction, Peace and Joy

In Palestine we heard the proverb, "Wherever the Turk sets his foot no grass will grow." That pictures the universal blight of sin. In contrast we read in our lesson of the River of Christianity, "Everything shall live whithersoever the river cometh." Of this the Nile is the most impressive illustration. Long ages ago all that we now call Egypt was a desert of barren sand lying under the burning sun. But the melting snows caused the Nile to overflow, and so covered the sand with the fertile mud brought by the river from far away, until at last the river made the most fertile land in all the world. Seen from the top of the pyramids, Egypt is a narrow belt of green stretching about five miles back from the river on each side and broadening out like a fan in the yet more fertile delta. While at the seaside we behold an ocean of green breaking on a beach of sand, in Egypt we behold an ocean of sand breaking on a shore of green. All of which describes the course of Christianity, flowing out of the hills of God in the coming of Christ, through Palestine, up into Syria, on into Asia Minor, through Europe, over to America, thence in the missionary movement to the islands of the sea and to Africa and Asia; other streams flowing from Europe also.

Everything good has been quickened into life whithersoever this river of Christianity has come. In all lands people have had their hunger for soul-bread satisfied. A missionary about to leave India on account of ill health, sat down with the native church for their last communion service. In the center sat the pastor of the church, a man of middle caste; on his right were a Jew and a Mohammedan; on his left a Brahman and an outcaste. As the missionary watched the cup pass from the Jew to the Mohammedan, and from the Brahman to the outcaste, she realized that she was looking upon five modern miracles.

In all ages and in all places since Christ came down from heaven, because God so loved the world, oppressed women and children, hopeless slaves, all the poor and weak as well as the noble, have found the Gospel glad tidings indeed. "Thou shalt make them drink of the river of thy pleasures." Strange that any one should suppose that God sent this "river of his pleasures" to lessen our joys. Religion takes nothing away that would not in the long run take away from life's gladness. It gives "peace like a river"—not the peace of stagnation, but of onward progress.

Some years ago all who used the telephone in a certain city found that they could hear nothing but music. Every telephone in the city vibrated with musical notes. "What can it mean?" asked every one in surprise.

Continued on next page

* The International Sunday School Lesson for October 8, 1911. The Life-Giving Stream. Ezekiel 47: 1-12. GOLDEN TEXT: "Whosoever will, let him take the water of life freely." Rev. 22: 17.

The Man
Who Knows Watches

HERE is an instance of what South Bend Watches do.

Engineer Floyd of the Twentieth Century Limited carries a South Bend Watch.

Floyd's watch has run steadily for five months and has varied but 14 seconds—not enough variation to detect on the minute hand.

And this railroad test is one that few watches can stand. For an engine cab sways, jolts, pounds and vibrates as nothing else does. A watch that will remain accurate under conditions like these will keep perfect time in your pocket. Don't you want "Engineer's time"?

The South Bend Watch that this engineer uses is called "The Studebaker." You can get a South Bend Watch in a solid gold case for $75—or in less expensive gold filled and other cases at very reasonable prices. But every South Bend Watch is a Master Timepiece. See them at your jeweler's.

South Bend
The Master Timepiece

Write for the free book. "How Good Watches Are Made." It tells all about the South Bend. How it gets 411 inspections. Why it takes from six months to a year to make each watch, and other interesting things that prove South Bend superiority. Send us a postal to-day. (70)

THE SOUTH BEND WATCH COMPANY
Dept. 137 South Bend, Ind.

On new walls or old—in the home or place of business—the highest requirements of decorative harmony, of healthfulness and service, are best satisfied by

SANITAS
THE WASHABLE WALL COVERING

The dull finished Sanitas reproductions of all the finest papers and fabrics are really wonderful in their soft, beautiful effects. These, too, are as easily cleaned and possess the same unequalled qualities as the glazed Sanitas reproductions of plain and fancy tiles for bathrooms, kitchens, pantries, etc.

Sanitas is printed in oil colors on strong muslin. It is fade proof, stain proof, dust and dirt proof, never cracks, never tears, and is instantly cleaned with a damp cloth. It costs no more than good cartridge paper.

A Dull Finished Sanitas Design

Sanitas Tile Design with Border

See the full line of Sanitas samples at your dealer's or decorator's. Have its wonderful service qualities demonstrated. Or write us your needs fully, describing the room or rooms you wish to decorate, and you'll receive suitable Sanitas samples and interior sketches free.

STANDARD OIL CLOTH CO.
322 BROADWAY Dept. 17, NEW YORK

STAMPED ON MERITAS OIL CLOTH EVERY YARD

MERITAS
The Guaranteed Oilcloth
When buying table oilcloth ask for it by the name "Meritas." GUARANTEED by the trade-mark stamped on the back of every yard.

5% A Safe Investment Is Best for Idle Money

IT is possible to earn 6, 8, and 10% in unusual enterprises. But it is better to be sure of a liberal percentage, without risking your capital. This Company has paid 5% per annum, compounded semi-annually for eighteen years, and deposits can be withdrawn upon short notice at any time.

Assets of Over $2,300,000

Deposits received personally or by mail. Our mail certificate system of deposit prevents the possibility of loss of bank book. Our patrons, situated in all parts of the world, are careful investors.

Write for Booklet

Industrial Savings & Loan Co.
2 Times Bldg. B'way & 42d St., New York

INDUSTRIAL SAVINGS & LOAN CO. NEW YORK CITY

DAVIS KLEANS E-Z MOPS & DUSTERS

You can do more real dusting in 15 minutes with the Davis Kleans E-Z Duster than in an hour with the ordinary kind. Chemically treated, not oily—sanitary, dustless. Absorbs dust and retains it. Can be washed like ordinary cloth without injury to its dusting properties. Both cloths and cleans. Removes finger marks, leaves fine polish, can't scratch. Use on floors, pictures, woodwork, walls, mirrors, brass, bric-a-brac, leather, etc. The same principle is employed in making the Davis Kleans E-Z Mops. For use dry on hardwood or painted floors. Mops and dusters sent post-paid anywhere on receipt of price.

No Oil to Soil — Saves Time and Labor

DAVIS KLEANS E-Z COMPANY
227 Weeks St., Bennington, Vt.
Agents Wanted.
Money Refunded if not Satisfactory

DAVIS KLEANS E Z

Large Size $1.00 Post-paid

2 for 25¢ Large Size Yd. Sq. 25¢ each Post-paid

Sunday School Lesson

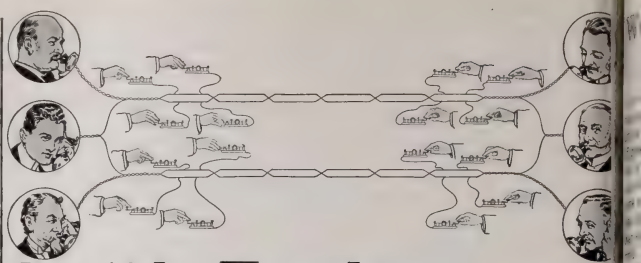
Continued from preceding page

This happened more than twenty years ago, when people were not so well acquainted with telephones as now, and so the reason for the musical tones remained a mystery for some hours, when it was finally discovered that a wire which carried music from an agency to several houses had become connected with the main telephone wire. How a whole city would vibrate with joy if every heart could but touch Christ!

Missionaries have gone to places so savage that even sea captains urged them not to remain, but to continue with the ship. Such was the case with the first missionaries who went to the Hawaiian Islands. What a change has Christianity wrought! Hawaii to-day exemplifies the brotherhood of man as no other spot on earth does. The Fiji Islands were once the most cruel habitation in the world, but to-day the entire population are numbered in Christian churches, and this we state on the authority of a missionary who has been laboring there for nearly forty years.

Power

Glacial rivers have by their power changed the contour of continents. The River of Life has made this a new earth. Dr. Parker says: "We hear it said what a gracious thing it was for the Thames River to come to London. The Thames never did come to London; the Thames made London! Yet how many people act as if they thought London had brought the river, and act as if they thought that they were the creditors of religion and not debtors of it. The truth is, men do not go back to facts; they accept civilization as it is without tracing it back to its fount and origin.



"World-power" which is of the right sort, power to help the child races, power to release nations from destroying sins, as opium in China; power to break the bonds of slavery in Africa; power to break the spell of false religions, as in India, China, Japan; power to bring all nations of the world together in peace—this is the strength which a nation may gain by allowing itself to be formed by the River of Life as London is made by the Thames.

Beauty

It is likened to a river with green trees on both sides of its banks, fruit trees, which put forth new fruit every month. Beautiful lives have those who are planted along the River of Life. With all their thoughts given to what they may do for others, they yet attain to the greatest happiness on earth, and at the same time lay by rich stores in heaven. Who, in the town or city where you live, is an exemplification of this? Is this the kind of beauty you yourself are trying to cultivate?

A Hint for the Primary Teacher

A stained glass window was put in a new church which was being built. It was called "The Flower-Sermon Window." One day the minister took it for the subject of his sermon, and the text he chose was: "Can the flag grow without water?" He explained the nature God had given the flag (Iris); that it must have water—indeed it will grow best in water, and so it would be foolish to try to make a flag grow by simply wetting its leaves. God has made us to love and serve him, but we must have the water of life, the love of God, in our hearts or we cannot grow up to please him in our ways. It is said of the Lord Jesus that when he was a boy he grew in wisdom and stature, and in favor with God and man. So will all children grow whose heart-roots are planted in the River of Life. It is said that children are universally fond of flowers, and that we shall do a good work for them if we will associate religious thoughts with the things they so much love.

Double Tracking The Bell Highway

Two of the greatest factors in modern civilization—the telephone and telegraph—now work hand in hand. Heretofore each was a separate and distinct system and transmitted the spoken or written messages of the nation with no little degree of efficiency. Co-operation has greatly increased this efficiency.

The simple diagram above strikingly illustrates one of the mechanical advantages of co-operation. It shows that six persons can now talk over two pairs of wires at the same time that eight telegraph operators send eight telegrams over the same wires. With such joint use of equipment there is economy; without it, waste.

While there is this joint use of trunk line plant by both companies, the telephone and telegraph services are distinct and different. The telephone system furnishes a circ and lets you do your own talking. furnishes a highway of communi tion. The telegraph company, the other hand, receives your m sage and then transmits and deliv it without your further attention.

The telegraph excels in carryi the big load of correspondence tween distant centers of populati the telephone connects individu so that men, women and child can carry on direct conversatio

Already the co-operation of Western Union and the Bell S tems has resulted in better a more economical public servi Further improvements a economies are expect until time and distan are annihilated by universal use of el trical transmission written or personal co munication.

AMERICAN TELEPHONE & TELEGRAPH CO. LOCAL AND LONG DISTANCE TELEPHONE BELL SYSTEM AND ASSOCIATED COMPANIES

AMERICAN TELEPHONE AND TELEGRAPH COMPAN
AND ASSOCIATED COMPANIES

One Policy One System Universal Servi

Prevents Heel Running Under

Here Is Swift Relief For Tired, Aching Feet

THIS little metal device, the Diamond Foot Support, is simply wonderful in its ability to banish foot troubles. The speed with which it relieves tired, aching feet and ankles, remedies the dreaded "broken arch" and makes nervous people forget their nerves, is truly remarkable.

The Strong est Brace for the Weake Place

One of the First Symptoms of a breaking down arch is a feeling of weariness when on your feet for a considerable time. The feet become tired and ache, smart and burn. There is pain in the arch and around the ankle, and sharp, twinging pains often extend up through the calf, knee, thigh, back, and as far as the back of the neck. We want you to know that

Diamond Foot Supports

Positively prevent these troubles. They brace the whole shoe, prevent "running over" and keep the heel from running under, as shown by illustration above. Diamond Foot Supports make walking a pleasure, a buoyancy and grace to your carriage, and more than pay for themselves in the added wear of your shoe 50c At All Dealers Diamond Foot Supports cost you only 50c attached to your shoes by you of heel and whether for man or woman and we will send you a pair, prepaid. Money back if not satisfied. Endorsed by leading physicians. Thousands of testimonials from grateful users.

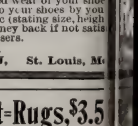
Write for Valuable Free Booklet on Foot and Shoe Troubles.

DIAMOND FOOT SUPPORT CO., 311 Equitable Building, Dept. J, St. Louis, M

LASTING MEMORIALS

Over $90,000 worth of White Bronze memorials sold to readers of The Christian Herald. It is as enduring as the pyramids. Marble and granite get mossgrown, chip, crumble and decay. White Bronze is more artistic and less expensive. Write for FREE illustrations and prices. State approximate cost desired. Distance no obstacle; we deliver anywhere.

Good Agents Wanted—Liberal Pay.



THE MONUMENTAL BRONZE CO.
355-E Howard Ave., Bridgeport, Conn.

Near-Brussels Art-Rugs, $3.5

Sent to your home—express prepaid

Sizes and Prices
9 x 6 ft.	$3.50
9 x 7½ ft.	4.00
9 x 9 ft.	4.50
9 x 10½ ft.	5.00
9 x 12 ft.	5.50
9 x 15 ft.	6.50

Beautiful new attractive patterns. Made in all colors. Easily cleaned, warranted to wear. Woven in one piece, reversible. Straight from the makers and sold direct at one price. Money refunded if not satisfactory

Send for New Catalogue showing goods in actual colors—Fre

ORIENTAL IMPORTING CO., 691 Bourse Bldg., Philadelp

SOCIAL WORK—The New Profession

Training with field work under Specialists in Civics, Charities, Child helping, Settlements, Recreation, etc. Single Course $12.00. Year's Diploma Course $75.00. 9th year opens October 2. Graham Taylor, Pres. Julia C. Lathrop, Vice-Pres.

Chicago School of Civics and Philanthropy, Chicago

BLYMYER CHURCH BELLS.

UNLIKE OTHER BELL SWEETER, MORE DU ABLE, LOWER PRIC OUR FREE CATALOGU TELLS WHY.

Write to Cincinnati Bell Foundry Co., Cincinnati.

Women's Work in Portugal

Continued from page 947

do not do; it is the one exception. No matter how heavy or how light the article, it is placed on the head, and off goes the bearer without giving the load a second thought. The art of balancing a thing on the head has become second nature through long custom, and only on very windy days is it ever supported by the hand. My most vivid recollection of the women's work in this special connection is of the two extremes of head-burdens which I witnessed. At Oporto I saw a woman walking unconcernedly down a very steep hill with a huge empty cask on her head, and at Coimbra I observed another woman sauntering along eating an orange, the section she was actually eating in her hand, the rest on the top of her head!

It seemed to me that there was no age at which the women did not work, so long as they were able. I saw little girls and old women hard at work. One day down by the river at Oporto I came across two little girls loading a boat with red tiles. I do not think they could have been over eight and ten years of age. They carried the tiles on their heads after the custom of the country, a woman doling out the heavy tiles as fast as the children could work. On the head of the older girl she placed four tiles, and on the head of the younger one two tiles.

Another time I noticed an old woman carrying a large and heavy sewing machine on her head. On and on she walked without thinking of taking a rest. But I felt that the record for weight-carrying and sheer strength and endurance was broken by a woman whom I perceived coming up a hill so precipitous that I slipped on the cobblestones more than once under the weight of my own body. This woman was carrying a gigantic pile of heather, used for kindling. It was bound over her head and shoulders. In her arms she clasped a baby!

A fascinating sight, especially in Oporto, where the scenery is marvelously picturesque, is to see the women going to and from the wayside wells with their water-jars on their heads. These jars rest on a small, very thick hoop of cloth, which is generally used when carrying anything heavy on the head. A popular receptacle for water is a tiny barrel, with a handle on one side, and to see the girls returning home of an evening with these little water-barrels balanced on their heads is indeed a pretty picture.

It was very interesting to watch these women at work on the ships, in their "bucket" hats, brilliantly colored rags, double waists and bare feet. I photographed two of a group of women busy unloading a sandboat, and gave them twenty reis, or two cents, each. This greatly delighted them, for the average wage of these women is only about seventy reis, or seven cents, a day.

Market-places are naturally associated with women, and in Portugal as in other countries the women do all the marketing. But nowhere have I seen the same kind of markets as in Portugal. The Mercado do Bulhau in Oporto is typical of the markets of the country. At this market there are three long rows of covered stalls, devoted for the most part to vegetables and tinware of all sorts suitable for kitchen use. Parallel with the stalls are three broad stone pavements, alternating with the stalls. These pavements are thronged with women in the morning sitting behind baskets full of live chickens, meat and oranges, each pavement being used for a single commodity. The live chicken vendors proved the greatest attraction for me. As I passed down this long row of animated poultry a chicken would occasionally be swung in my face, cackling and fluttering, while its good points were rapidly recited by the saleswoman, to the satisfaction of herself and the intense disgust of the hapless bird.

The most interesting market in Portugal is the fish-market at Lisbon. It is held out in the open, and the business is done entirely by women. Hundreds of girls come here with boat-shaped baskets on their heads to buy fish. The bottom of each basket is covered with a piece of green oilcloth, contrasting charmingly with its burden of large silvery fish. Before they are sold the fish are stretched along polished stone counters running the length of the market. The girls line up on one side of the counter, the vendors on the other, and while the market is on, the bickering, arguing and frantic waving of hands and arms creates a scene long to be remembered. Here as elsewhere among the poorer class women the girls go about in bare feet, although they may sometimes be seen scuffling along in heelless slippers. After the fish has been bought the girls immediately depart to a nearby shed, where they clean the fish in big troughs.

My last impression of Portugal was of women at work. The boat which was to take me back to Liverpool lay anchored close to a coaler discharging her cargo at the Lisbon docks. Women were busy taking off the coal. Never before have I seen human beings more hopelessly dirty. The faces, hands, feet and clothes of these women were literally ingrained with filth. And yet they were happy. As they went to and fro along the plank which connected the coaler with the shore they laughed and chaffed with each other, or burst into snatches of song.

A. W. CUTLER.

Among the Workers

—INTELLECTUALLY and spiritually, this has been a great season at Northfield. The last two weeks of August were devoted to "Post Conference Addresses," the speakers including the Rev. W. H. Griffith Thomas, D.D., of Toronto, Canada, the Rev. James A. Francis, D.D., of Boston, Mass., and the Rev. John McDowell, Park Presbyterian Church, Newark, N. J. The Fall Training Conference of the secretaries of the Foreign and Student Department of the Y. M. C. A. under the leadership of Dr. John R. Mott holds an eight-day session. With the closing of the Conference work, the regular institutional work begins.

—THE PRAYER life of the Moody Bible Institute begins in the early morning with what is called a "quiet time" of fifteen minutes, which the students keep in their rooms before going down to breakfast. After breakfast a brief devotional exercise is conducted. After supper the men gather in one hall and the women in another for a "fellowship meeting." While the superintendents are responsible for its conduct, usually they choose a student to have charge of it—a different student each night. This is a prayer meeting where requests from all over the world are brought to the Lord. It lasts about thirty minutes and is a great spiritual uplift.

Rémoh Gems

Not Imitations

The greatest triumph of the electric furnace—a marvelously reconstructed gem. Looks like a diamond—wears like a diamond—brilliancy guaranteed forever—stands filing, fire and acid like a diamond. Has no paste, foil or artificial backing. Set only in 14 Karat Solid gold mountings. 1-30th the cost of diamonds. Guaranteed to contain no glass—will cut glass. Sent on approval. Money cheerfully refunded if not perfectly satisfactory. Write today for our De-Luxe Jewel Book—its free for the asking. Address—

Remoh Jewelry Co.
448 N. Broadway
St. Louis, Mo.

Mince Pie!

—the greatest of all desserts—beef, apples, raisins, currants, cider and spices—baked between two crisp, flaky, brown crusts! A dessert that has more enthusiastic worshippers than all other desserts put together.

And yet, in many homes, the most infrequent dessert of all because those homes have never tried mince pie made with

NONE SUCH MINCE MEAT
"LIKE MOTHER USED TO MAKE"

Think of there being at your own grocer's a paraffine-lined, dust-proof package of Mince Meat so good that any housewife would gladly claim it as her own—made of the choicest beef, apples, raisins and spices, in a sunlit, kitchen-clean factory—a package costing but 10 cents and big enough to make two large family-size pies, and people going without mince pies because of the labor and cost of making them!

Are you a member of such a family? If so, stop at the grocer's this morning—ask for None Such, leave a dime and hurry home for dinner.

MERRELL-SOULE CO., Syracuse, New York Member of Association for Promotion of Purity in Foods

The Bread and Butter Question

TO a widowed mother with children to support, the future looks a little brighter if there comes to her each month, as the result of her husband's foresight, a monthly income.

That is just what the Guaranteed Low Cost Monthly Income Policy of The TRAVELERS INSURANCE COMPANY does. It guarantees a specified income payable every month for life. It cannot be diverted from the purpose for which it was taken out. It cannot be lost by the inexperience or misconduct of others, nor diminished by taxes or attorney's fees.

The TRAVELERS acts as a Trustee without charge and assumes all risks. The policy will not lapse if you become unable to pay the premiums in consequence of total and permanent disability from accident or disease.

This policy yields the wife and children a bread and butter income and now and then a little cake and cream. It is worth looking into even though you already carry some insurance. Send coupon for particulars.

The Travelers Insurance Company
HARTFORD, CONN.

Please send me particulars regarding The Guaranteed Low Cost Monthly Income Policy

Name _____

Address _____

Christian Herald

The Little White Room

By MARGUERITE GOODE LAIRD

THE tall man with the grey eyes opened the door of the room softly, stood on the threshold a minute, then stepped in and gently closed the door behind him. It was a pretty room—more than a pretty room—it was a characteristic one, one that reflected as a bright clear mirror the inward spirit of its owner. It spoke in an almost audible whisper of the daintiness, the refined sweetness, the culture of the woman to whom it belonged.

It was unmistakably the room of a woman—one could not have thought otherwise for a second. The soft carpet that sunk under the slightest touch of one's foot; the windows curtained in muslin of snowy whiteness; the heavy brass bed with its clinging canopy, its soft pillows, its white coverlet; the dressing table, that pride and delight of dainty femininity, strewn with silver brushes, combs, powder-boxes and numerous trifles of seeming uselessness; its long oval mirror which caught, reflected back and added to the coziness of the room. The big arm chair drawn up before the bright little fire which crackled and burned merrily as if well pleased with the myriad reflections it caught of itself in the mirror, the high polish of the white furniture, the brass of the bed; each article told its own story. The whole presented the embodiment of a living, breathing spirit.

The tall man with the grey eyes held in his arms a big bunch of roses—white roses—and the fragrance of them filled the room like the incense of a shrine. He held them close to his face for a little while, then slowly put them one by one in the tall vase of cut glass that was standing in the middle of the table.

When he had put the last one in he stood off and looked at them a minute, then slowly shook his head. "She likes them arranged more loosely," he mused, but he did not change them. He had already done the best he could. While he arranged them, there had been a quiver about his strong lips, and the lines in his face seemed hard and drawn, but as his gaze lingered on them his face grew softer, and when he had seated himself in the big arm-chair before the bright little fire the quivering of his lips ceased altogether.

He looked around the room as if to drink in more fully its beauty. Across the bed lay a dressing gown of soft, shimmering white. At its foot were two little Turkish slippers adorned with big bunches of gold fringe.

The man's gaze rested on them the longest of all. Then he turned and looked at the picture over the mantel—Taylor's "Hanging of the Crane." He had given it to her on their wedding day and she had said that she loved it best of all his gifts.

And it was thus they had sat together that first night when he had brought her home. She would come in presently, then she would put on the dressing gown of shimmering white and the slippers with the golden fringe. The big chair would be big enough for two, and he could feel even now the warmth of her cheek against his, the softness of her hair, the clasp of her little hands which he would hold close in his own strong ones. He would listen to the sweetness of her voice when she would whisper happily "I love you" just as if it were something new he had never guessed before. How he would have to beg her to say it again, as he always did and she would not—not until he should cover the redness of her lips with many kisses! He could see the dimples come and go, and hear the rippling music of her laugh as she would yield in self-defense. He thought of a thousand things too beautiful, too exquisitely intimate to be written. Had there ever been such a heaven on earth below, or in the sky above? He smiled as he thought of it.

Long he sat thus. The fire ceased to crackle and burn, only the ashes were left with a bright little coal or two peeping from their grayness to stare at the tall man who still sat in the big armchair—the one that was big enough for two. And the lamp burned dim—still more dim—till with a little flicker it went out, and the room was left in darkness save for the coals which still burned on. The tall man with the gray eyes looked long into their glowing depths, then quietly turned and left the room. Noiselessly he closed the door behind him and locked it once more.

. . .

Long he had waited and she had not come, often and often he would wait again and she would not come, for many days had passed since she left him to go to that land where there is no sorrow, where there is no night, and where the sound of weeping is not heard. But the spirit of her was still in the little white room—the Gethsemane in which weary hours of agony had taught him to say "Thy will be done." Whatever the past had held for him, whatever the future might have in store for him, he had had that one perfect year in which he had drunk deep of life and love and joy.

Once more the tall man with the gray eyes went forth to face the world, and the soul of the man was whiter, the spirit of the man was sweeter, and the strength of the man was greater, for in the emptiness of the little white room he had learnt God's lesson that out of the bitter shall come forth sweet, and out of great weakness shall grow great strength.

The Woman Who Jumped in the Dark

Continued from page 955

eat bread and sugar for tea; but we didn't either of us care. It was the best I had, and all I had, and we've had more than one good laugh over it since. There's going to be a schoolhouse next year, and they're talking of forming us into a municipality this winter—oh, the country is getting better every day.

"Am I lonesome? Not a bit of it! With all these new things going on, and a new branch of the Grand Trunk Pacific coming in, and a garden and a home, and two of the best boys anybody ever had! I should say I'm not lonesome. All I wish is that there were twenty-four more hours in the day, there are so many things to do around the place."

Mrs. Caithness laughed again, and turned up the kitten's chin to tickle it skilfully, as it purred in her lap. "No," she said, "I haven't a thing to complain of, and I can tell you that if you're ever half as happy as I am here, you can count yourself lucky. Now I've got to flax around and get supper. What do you say to hot biscuits and honey?"

Meetings at Scottdale

—LAST FALL THE Davis-Mills evangelists were invited by the Scottdale, Pa., Ministerial Association to hold a series of meetings in the mill town. The preaching was bold, pungent, yet loving, and it went home to the hearts of the vast throngs which crowded into the tabernacle. All denominations lent their help, led by the pastors of the various churches. Hundreds of souls professed faith in the Lord Jesus Christ. The results are gratifying. Men's and women's Bible classes have been organized, temperance societies and missionary societies have been increased; works of organized charity have been set on foot; the Sunday Schools have increased from twenty to forty per cent. in their attendance and the Old Book is being studied as never before.

You'll Save Money, Trouble and Later Disappointment, if You Always Buy Stoves at Home

Smokeburn-Garland
Heater for Coal, Coke or Wood

If you expected to break up housekeeping and go to boarding in a few years, it might pay you to send away from home for a stove. But as you are going to need stoves the rest of your life, why not buy good stoves—stoves that last many years? Is it not poor business judgment to buy stoves that last but a third as long as they ought to, just to save a dollar or so at the start?

Home Dealers Give Better Values

In return for the slightly higher price you may pay for stoves bought at home, you get this:

1—A stove that far outwears any ordinary stove.
2—A stove that burns less fuel.
3—A stove on which the freight is paid.
4—A stove which is guaranteed to give permanent satisfaction.
5—You have no waiting to do. No squabbles to adjust with the Railroad Company. No draying. No loading. No unloading. No uncrating. No fussing with stovepipes. No blacking to fool with.
6—You get more liberal credit accommodations.

Disadvantages of Sending Away

Stoves bought away from home, though sold on 30 days' free trial, are hard to return; troublesome to crate and to haul to the station. You pay a higher freight rate than your local dealer. You take chances and risks that you need never take if you buy at home.

The World-Famous Garland Line

The kind of stoves that have proven best by forty years' test are sold only through dealers. These are the world-famous Garland Stoves and Ranges, now used in more than FOUR MILLION homes and sold by leading dealers everywhere.

No matter what style of stove you want, or how much you have in mind to pay for your stove, be sure to call at your dealer's and see the great Garland line. We will send you the name of the Garland Dealer in your town.

You will know Garland Stoves by the trademark here shown, which appears on every Garland.

8 Stove Books FREE

We now print and give away eight different Stove Books for the benefit of Stove Buyers. If you will send us your name and address and tell us what style of stove or range you want, we will send you the proper books. (37)

Please state which of these stove subjects interests you just now:
Steel Ranges, Cast Ranges, Cook Stoves, Base Burners, Heaters, Gas Ranges, Furnaces, "The Only Safe Way to Buy Stoves and Ranges"

Today is none to soon to begin thinking about home comfort in cold weather. Write at once for the books. All free. Address

GARLAND STOVES AND RANGES
The World's Best

The Michigan Stove Company
Largest Makers of Stoves, Ranges, Gas Ranges and Furnaces in the World
Detroit Chicago

New Light on BAPTISM Facts found in the Original Authority under which John first baptized prove that sprinkling is the true Mode. Nodoubt about it. Book, 68 pages. 16c BIBLE MODE CO., Box 9, Clinton, S. C.

FOOD AGAIN

A Mighty Important Subject to Everyone

A Boston lady talks entertainingly of food and the changes that can be made in health by some knowledge on that line. She says:

"An injury to my spine in early womanhood left me subject to severe sick headaches which would last three or four days at a time, and a violent course of drugging brought on constipation with all the ills that follow.

"My appetite was always light and uncertain and many kinds of food distressed me.

"I began to eat Grape-Nuts food two or three years ago, because I liked the taste of it, and I kept on because I soon found it was doing me good.

"I eat it regularly at breakfast, frequently at luncheon, and again before going to bed—and have no trouble in 'sleeping on it.' It has relieved my constipation, my headaches have practically ceased, and I am in better physical condition at the age of 63 than I was at 40.

"I give Grape-Nuts credit for restoring my health, if not saving my life, and you can make no claim for it too strong for me to endorse." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

Read the little book, "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs. "There's a reason."

Ever read the above letter? A new one appears from time to time. They are genuine, true, and full of human interest.

3 in One Oil

every part of any sewing machine, making each action point work just right. Won't collect dust or gum or soil thread or goods like "so-called fish" oils. Even old SEWING MACHINES run like new. Cleans and polishes wooden case—prevents rust on every metal part. Has thirty other household uses. Sample bottle and "dictionary" free. Write, FREE 3 in One Oil Co., 42 BS. Broadway, N.Y. City

FREE THIS ALADDIN LAMP FREE
BURNS KEROSENE (Coal Oil)

Outshines city gas or electricity. Simple, noiseless, odorless, clean, safe, money-saving. Guaranteed. Write nearest office for catalogue M and learn how to get an Aladdin Mantle Lamp FREE.
AGENTS T. H. BALL SOLD 850 on money back guarantee, not one returned. Stacey sold 12 in one hour. Newsom sold 12 in 10 calls. Gibson sold 48 in 6 days. Sells itself. Needed in every home. Our Sunbeam Burner fits other lamps. Complete line for homes, stores, etc. Ask for our liberal agency proposition.
MANTLE LAMP CO. OF AMERICA, Dept. 3 I
Offices at Chicago, Ill., Portland, Ore., Waterbury, Conn., Dallas, Tex., Winnipeg, Montreal, Canada

Low Prices for this Handsome Fence
100 other styles. Many cheaper than wood—all better. For Lawns, Churches, Parks, etc. Write for Pattern Book and special offer.
THE WARD FENCE CO., Box 904. Decatur, Ind.

You Can Weigh Exactly what You Should Weigh

You can be Strong—Vigorous—full of life and energy.

You can be free from Chronic Ailments—every organ of your body strong as nature intended.

You can have a Good Figure—as good as any woman.

You can have a Clear Skin.

I no longer need to say what "I can do," but what "I HAVE DONE." I have helped 49,000 of the most cultured, intelligent women of America to arise to their very best—why not you?

NO DRUGS NO MEDICINES

My pupils simply comply with Nature's laws.

What My Pupils say:

"Every one notices the change in my complexion; it has lost that yellow color."

"Just think what you have done for me! Last year I weighed 236 pounds, this year 146, and have not gained an ounce back. I am not wrinkled either. I feel so young and strong, no more mattress, or sluggish liver, and I can breathe now. It is surprising how easily I did it, I feel 15 years younger."

"Just think! I have not had a pill or a cathartic since I began, and I used to take one every night."

"My weight has increased 20 pounds. I don't know what indigestion is any more, and my nerves are at rest!" I sleep like a baby."

"Miss Cocroft, I have taken off eighteen and my corsets is so much better. Isn't that good?"

"I feel as if I could look every man, woman and child in the face with the feeling that I am reason in spirituality, physically and mentally. Really I am a stronger, better woman. I don't know how to tell you or to thank you."

Reports like these come to me every day. Do you wonder I want to help every woman to vibrant health and happiness? Write me your faults of health or figure. Your correspondence is held in strict confidence. If I cannot help you I will tell you what will.

My free book tells how to stand and walk correctly, and contains other information of vital importance to women. Even a woman is come to it. Write for it. If you do not need me, you may be able to help a dear friend.

I have had a wonderful experience, and I'd like to tell you about it.

Susanna Cocroft

Dept. 18-K, 624 Michigan Ave., Chicago

Miss Cocroft is the best authority in America upon the regaining of woman's health and figure thro Natural, Scientific means.

John Wanamaker

ANNOUNCES

that on request a copy of the Fall and Winter Catalog will be sent you postpaid.

Over 1000 fine pictures of still finer merchandise.

A valuable book, for reference or for ordering goods; you should get one.

We never seem able to print enough to meet all requests, so write us TODAY:

"Send Catalog No. 44."

JOHN WANAMAKER
New York

NEW WORK*

THE Persian poet, Hafiz, who said so many wise and beautiful things, wrote: "On the neck of the young man sparkles no gem so gracious as enterprise."

Another poet, our own English Campbell, admired as much the spirit of hard and active work, though we are wont to regard poets as valuing it lightly. He said that "a man accustomed to work was equal to any achievement he resolved on, and that, for himself, necessity, not inspiration, was the prompter of his muse."

Perhaps he would have stood higher if he had trusted more to inspiration, but, again, perhaps he would not have stood as high. Certainly these two testimonies from a class which we do not connect with hard effort, mean much as endorsements of the value of work.

It is quite possible that as youth grows older, it may come to find its greatest satisfaction in work. That may not seem possible now. You, perhaps, cannot conceive of a time when sport will not be your supreme delight. Duty may not yet have shown to you the charm of her enchanting face, but if you live an honest, industrious life, doing with your might, and in the best way you know, your daily work, you will learn that the joy of seeing a good thing grow under your hand, come to its perfection and be sent forth into the world for its help and comfort, is a wonderful joy; and as your work largely represents your duty, you will come to love it, and can enter warmly into the spirit of Wordsworth's great "Ode to Duty," which he calls "Stern Daughter of the Voice of God," and can say with him:

Stern Lawgiver! yet thou dost wear
The Godhead's most benignant grace:
Nor know we anything so fair
As is the smile upon thy face
Flowers laugh before thee on their beds,
And fragrance in thy footing treads;
Thou dost preserve the stars from wrong,
And the most ancient heavens through thee are fresh and strong.

Your work may be, like that of Haggai, to move others to do long neglected tasks; you may be the Zerubbabel or the Joshua who is to build a house to the Lord; or you may be a great lawmaker like Pericles, of whom it was said that during the whole period of his administration, he never once dined in the house of a friend; or you may have only a small work to do in some obscure place. Whatever or wherever it may be, that work is to be the touchstone of your happiness and the gauge of your consequence, if not here, then hereafter. Men may not recognize the painstaking and the skill that you have put into it, but God knows, and he will not let any honest effort go unrewarded.

Perhaps a lesson not often emphasized may be found in the story of the talents. It is that of the duty of trying, merely trying. The man with the one talent did not even try to increase it. He was timid, and this timidity was counted to him for sin. We may possibly attribute to him laziness also; and laziness and timidity are accounted to mankind as sin. Industry and courage are not only admirable qualities, but it is our positive duty to have them. A distinct corollary from this proposition is that, being our duty, we are able to acquire industry and courage, for God sets us no duty without granting also the ability to do it.

"More are made good by practice than by nature," said a wise old Greek.

This is most encouraging. Let us try our best, laying our hands faithfully to the work which God has given to us, and endeavoring to break new paths for it. Then at the last day we may show better results than he who was far more highly endowed at birth.

*Christian Endeavor Topic for Sunday, October 8. TEXT: Matt. 25:13-30.

The Men We Love and The Men We Marry

Are there generally two men in a woman's life—the man she loves and the man she marries?

A woman, keenly observant, and who has seen much of girls and women, holds that it is more often true than many suppose. Then she explains how it comes about: what it can mean, in suffering, to a woman, and what is the duty of a woman to be the wife of the man she married, not that of the man she wishes she had married.

A thoroughly feminine article is this. Men will not understand it, but women will.

It is in the October LADIES' HOME JOURNAL.

15 Cents Everywhere

The Giant Heater

Will heat any ordinary room in zero weather at almost no cost

Heat and Light at One Cost

Easy to apply, clean and odorless. A handy economical, positive heater that insures comfort wherever and whenever wanted. Just the thing for sick-room bath, bedroom, heating water for shaving, making tea or coffee, etc.

On Gas Flame

On Round Wick Lamp

Mr. H. P. Howe, 712-21 Ave., Minneapolis, Minn., writes: Giant Heater is a perfect success. I would not be without it on any account."

Price: Polished Brass, $1.50 Nickel Plated, $2.00

Remit by express prepaid.

Satisfaction guaranteed or money refunded if returned in 10 days. Book Free

GIANT HEATER CO., Inc.
1163 TEMPLE ST., SPRINGFIELD, MASS

Beauty and Health Bath for 2 Cents

Same principle used by old Romans. Cleans and refreshes—revivifies body scientifically. Purifying steam opens millions of pores. Dirt, germs, waste matter and incipient disease flow out with perspiration. The pink complexion—buoyancy—vigor of youth and health returns.

Buckeye Vapor Bath Cabinet

Nature's Cure for Human Ills.

Price $5.00

Better—safer—cheaper than medicine or turkish baths. Germ breeding cloths or brushes unnecessary. Marvelously relieves colds, grippe, fever, rheumatism, kidney and liver trouble, etc. Wonderful for children—keeps them healthy and robust. Can be used anywhere—at home or traveling. Over 600,000 sold. Write today for free copy of Health and Beauty Book, illustrated. Local and traveling agents wanted. Sales easy—profits big. Write today for territory offer.

McCREERY MFG. CO. 60 Dorr St., Toledo, O.

GUARANTEED Freight Paid

Our Gold Coin Stove Guaranty is to take back the stove at our expense, any time within a year and refund your money if you are not satisfied.

Freight is prepaid; safe delivery insured, ready to set up—even polished. Send for our Free Catalogue, Price List and Offer.

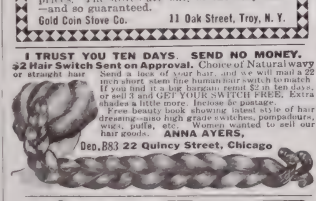
Our prices are $5 to $20 less than any dealer's prices. The stoves are only of the very best—and so guaranteed.

Gold Coin Stove Co. 11 Oak Street, Troy, N. Y.

Amazing Profits



MADE IN MUSHROOMS

Anybody can make big money raising mushrooms entire year in cellars, sheds, barns, boxes, etc., in spare time. I tell you where to sell them. Write to-day for Free Illus. Instruction Booklet.

HIRAM BARTON
326 West 48th St., New York

I TRUST YOU TEN DAYS. SEND NO MONEY.

$2 Hair Switch Sent on Approval. Choice of Natural wavy or straight hair

Send a lock of your hair, and we will mail a 22 inch short stem fine human hair switch to match. If you find it a big bargain, remit $2 in ten days, or sell 3 and GET YOUR SWITCH FREE. Extra shades a little more. Increase for pompadour. Free beauty book showing latest style of hair dressing—also high grade watches, pompadours, wigs, puffs, etc. Women wanted to sell our hair goods. ANNA AYERS,

Dep. B83 22 Quincy Street, Chicago

TYPEWRITERS ALL MAKES

VISIBLE WRITERS

or otherwise

L. C. SMITHS, OLIVERS, UNDERWOODS, Etc.

¼ to ½ M'F'RS PRICES

Shipped ANYWHERE for Free Trial, or RENTED allowing Rent to APPLY

PRICES $15.00 UP

First class Machines Fresh from the M'f'rs—Write for Illustrated Catalog 71

Typewriter Emporium, (EST. 1892) 92-94 LAKE ST., CHICAGO

ALL FOR 20¢

Three beautiful 12-inch LINEN Centerpieces, Holly, Eyelet and Daisy designs, 4 Doilies and our catalog showing over 600 designs of art embroidery goods are 70 different EMBROIDERY STITCHES. All delivered for 20 cts.

P. W. KELLER CO., Waterloo, Iowa

EARN FROM $21 TO $50 PER WEEK

LEARN ABOUT OUR FREE COURSE IN SHOW CARD AND SIGN WRITING

A Great Opportunity!

We are offering, for a limited time only, a complete learn at home course in show card and sign writing to those purchasing a trial assortment of our new and excellent "Litholia" ready to use Colors. This is a great opportunity for ambitious persons to increase their earning capacity. Good show card writers earn from $21 to $50 per week. Send 4c in stamps for booklets and complete information. Please note that the Show Card Course is not a book of alphabets, but a thorough course in lettering compiled by an expert New York Show Card artist especially for us.

LITHOLIA CO. COLOR CO.
247 West 125th Street, New York

Here is the first Hornless Graphophone for $25 - the "Lyric"

HERE is the newest musical instrument in the field—a hornless Columbia Graphophone offered at $25 to those who want the latest improvement in Graphophones, and yet who believe $25 is enough to pay.

The "Lyric" Columbia is everything that a high grade instrument ought to be, and very much more than one could expect who knows the seeming simplicity but actual delicacy of the construction of a perfect sound-reproducing mechanism.

Its Quality of tone is beyond improvement—and its volume of tone is surprising. It is remarkably condensed and compact, the cabinet measuring 13½ inches square at the base, and 7 inches high. It is built of clear-grained oak, and well joined and finished. The reproducer is the Columbia "Concert Grand"—the latest type and the best ever produced. The motor is a typical soundless Columbia double-spring motor, running three 10-inch records with one winding, and can be wound while running. It plays either 10-inch or 12-inch records (Columbia or any other make). Convenient adjustment of speed is provided for in connection with the start-and-stop device. The "Lyric" is an extraordinary $25 worth.

"Hearing is believing." Columbia dealers everywhere are prepared to play the Columbia "Demonstration" Double-Disc Record on this instrument, and hand you new catalogs of all Columbia instruments, and of records by Nordica, Fremstad, Mary Garden, Alice Nielsen, Bonci, Zenatello, Constantino, Bispham, Lipkowska, Boninsegna, Cavalieri, Emmy Destinn, Sammarco, Anselmi, Baklanoff, Mardones, Amato, McCormack, and scores of others—a majority of all the greatest singers of all the world.

Columbia Phonograph Co., Gen'l, Box 221, Tribune Bldg., New York
London: Earlsfield, S. W.

Creators of the Talking-machine industry. Pioneers and leaders in the Talking-machine art. Owners of the fundamental patents. Largest manufacturers of Talking-machines in the world. Dealers wanted. Exclusive selling rights granted where we are not actively represented.

The new catalog of Columbia Double-Disc Records—just out! Also complete catalog of Columbia Graphophones and Grafonolas. At Columbia dealers or direct by mail.

Columbia Records

Reg. U.S. Pat. Off.

Columbia Phonograph Company

Christian Herald

UBSCRIPTION, $1.50 PER ANNUM
'UBLISHED 52 TIMES A YEAR

COPYRIGHT, 1911, BY THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

New York, October 4, 1911

VOL. 34—NO. 40. PRICE 5 CENTS
OFFICES: BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK

OUR · MAIL · BAG

Questions and Answers

C. H. S., Lebanon, Pa. Is it wrong to be a member of a secret organization, where intoxicating drinks are sold and cards, billiards, pool and other games are played on the Lord's Day?

The question carries its own answer. It is wrong to be a member of such an organization at any time. Societies, secret or otherwise, where gambling and drinking are permitted, should be avoided. However many good features they might have, the fact that they have these unquestionably bad ones is sufficient to condemn them outright. We cannot imagine any self-respecting man, young or old, who would belong to an organization where it was customary to drink or gamble at any time; and to do those things on the Lord's Day would be adding the sin of Sabbath desecration to other offenses.

D. J. McL., Sydney, Nova Scotia. In World's Great Sermons, Vol. VII, page 49, the Psalmist is quoted as using the words "the round world." Where can this be found?

The nearest approach to such an expression is found in Isa. 40: 22—"That sitteth upon the circle of the earth." This may or may not imply the earth's roundness. See also Job 22: 14.

C. I. S., Seattle, Wash. Is theater-going a proper amusement or recreation for a Christian? Is the theatre a place where a Christian would want to be found if the Lord should return?

There are good and bad plays; some that are elevating and instructive; but, unfortunately, many others that are vicious and demoralizing. Many efforts have been made to reform the theatre, but none have succeeded to any great extent. In its present condition, it must be admitted that the objectionable features prevail. Such being the case, we are compelled to answer your question in the negative.

W. A., Los Angeles, Calif. Can one person bear the penalty of another? If not, how could Christ take upon himself the penalty of our sins?

The principle of sacrifice for sin is as old as religion itself. The burnt-offering, the scapegoat, etc., are familiar illustrations. Christ was the last and crowning sacrifice in that he gave himself for the sins of the world, being the reconciliation for all who believe in and accept him as Saviour. See Lev. 1: 4; 7: 18; Gal. 2: 20; Rom. 14: 5; II. Cor. 5: 15; I. Pet. 1: 18, 19; Heb. 9: 26, 28; Rom. 5: 8, 10; Heb. 10: 10, and many other passages on the same subject.

B. M., Jr., Syracuse, N. Y. I know THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is ever ready to help the inquirer. Can you supply a brief definition of a Christian's privileges in such compact form that it will be easily remembered?

A Christian is (1) one who believes in Jesus Christ the divine Son of God, and that through his life and atonement we have everlasting life; (2) the Christian through his fellowship with Christ receives the adoption of a child of God (see I. John 3: 2 and 5: 1); (3) he enters into fellowship and communion with God. See Heb. 2: 11, 16; I. John 1: 3; Prov. 18: 24. (4) He is sanctified and separated. See Rom. 1: 7; I. Pet. 1: 14, 15; I. Thess. 5: 23. (5) He is a soldier. I. Tim. 6: 12; II. Tim. 2: 3, 4. (6) He is an heir of glory. Rom. 8: 17; Gal. 3: 29; Gal. 4: 7; Titus 3: 7; I. Pet. 1: 3, 4.

E. F., Cumberland, Md. Have any of the sacred books that are accepted as authoritative and inspired ever been lost? What is known concerning the missing books of the Bible?

It is generally held by eminent authorities that no writing, either Jewish or Christian, which is sacred or inspired, was ever lost, and indeed could not be, so that the canon of Scripture is complete. The so-called missing books of the Old Testament were mainly records or memoranda of matters and events which the sacred writers incorporated in their histories. The "Book of the Covenant" referred to the Jewish law; the "Book of the Wars of the Lord" was a record of Jewish battles; the "Book of Jasher" was a compilation of chronicles and military matters; the "Book of Solomon" contained proverbs, songs, chants and philosophic sayings. Of less importance were the Books of Gad and Nathan, the "Prophecies of Ahijah and Iddo," the "Book of Shemaiah," the "Book of Jehu," and the "Sayings of the Seers." The loss of these books is greatly lessened by the conviction that practically all there was in them of value is incorporated in the present canon of Scripture.

Mrs. N. E., Cestos, Okla. What are some of the personal blessings which come to us through the death of Jesus? What are some of the national blessings? In our Sunday School the last one was answered, but not satisfactorily.

The personal blessings are many, and include assurance of salvation now and eternal life hereafter; keeping us from the power of sin and strengthening us to resist temptation; the divine peace that comes to the soul that rests upon God having made surrender of our will for his will; the blessed presence of the Comforter, besides the promises to which every redeemed child of God may justly lay claim. The national blessings of Christianity are obvious, and may be summed up in the one sentence: "Blessed is the people whose God is the Lord." The Christian nations to-day are the nations of progress, of humanity, of education, of social and political enlightenment, as contrasted with the nations that still "sit in darkness."

G. W. W., Odessa, Texas. What is meant by Rev. 20: 7 and 8?

As already explained in THE MAIL-BAG some time ago, Magog is a general name for northern nations of Japheth's posterity, whose ideal head is Gog (see Gen. 10: 2). The words signify "lofty, elevated." In Revelation they are mystical names, representing the final adversaries led by Satan in person. The blood running up to the horses' bridles is a figure of speech implying the fulness of slaughter, the completeness of destruction.

S. R., Boise City, Idaho. Much of Christ's teaching is in parables. Can any explanation be given why he adopted that style of teaching so largely, when his disciples and Christian teachers generally deal more with argument than illustration?

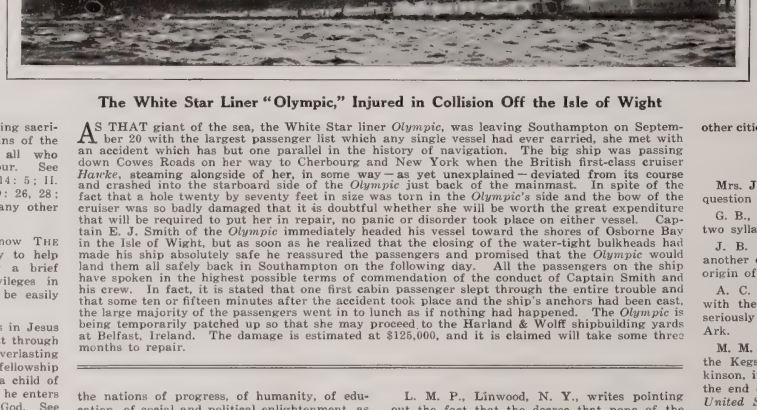
The use of the parable to convey a moral and philosophical lesson is very ancient. Rev. David Smith, the celebrated Bible scholar, calls attention to the fact that the Orientals loved to use the parable as a vehicle for their teaching. Isaiah has frequent instances of this, and for other illustrations see Judges 9: 7-15; II. Sam. 12: 1-6 and 14: 6-11; Kings 16: 9; Ezek. 17: 3-10; 19: 2-9 and 24: 3-6. It was not exclusively a Jewish literary trait, but was also used extensively by the Greeks in their fabular literature, as witness Aesop's Fables. Above all else, the parable is the most popular and effective method of conveying spiritual truth to the multitudes.

Mrs. G. W., Cecil, O. Please explain Isa. 45: 7: "I form the light and create darkness; I make peace and ercate evil." It surely does not mean that God is the author of evil, as I heard a man say a few days ago.

It does not refer to moral evil, but to discord or disturbance in the order of the universe as a whole. Thus as light and darkness are opposites, so in the next clause of the verse peace and disorder are opposites. Evil is the negation of good and distinction must be made between natural and moral evil. Among natural evils are wars, earthquakes, storms, plagues or whatever disturbs or disarranges the perfection of natural things; whereas moral evil is thought, word or act that is contrary to the revealed law of God and is therefore sin.

L. M. P., Linwood, N. Y., writes pointing out the fact that the decree that none of the Israelites of the generation that came out of Egypt should enter Canaan, applied only to men of war and not to the Levites, who were not numbered (see Deut. 2: 14; Num. 1: 49), also that it did not include those who were children when they left Egypt (see Num. 14: 31). Eleazar, the priest, was also excepted (see Num. 34: 17).

S. M., North Ferrisburg, Vt. 1. Was the meat offered in sacrifice to idols refused by Daniel because he was a vegetarian? 2. Swine is pronounced unclean. How is it, then, that so many people eat of it?



1. It was the custom to throw a small portion of the viands and the wine on the hearth as an offering to the gods, so that the whole entertainment might be consecrated to them (see Deut. 32: 38). To partake of meat or drink offered to idols (as was habitually done by the idolatrous nations) would have been to sanction idolatry. Besides it was forbidden even after the legal distinction between clean and unclean meats was largely done away (see I. Cor. 8: 7, 10). 2. Orthodox Hebrews [illegible] it as food and so do many others, wholly on sanitary grounds. Yet multitudes eat it. It would appear, too, that many of the Jews of Christ's time violated the Mosaic law in this respect. In hot countries swine's flesh induces skin diseases. The Egyptian held the pig a sacred animal, since by turning up the ground with its snout, it taught men the art of plowing.

G. V. B., Boyd Station, Pa. Please explain what "sin unto death" is.

The sin "unto death" is one against the Holy Spirit, and which tends toward or is designed to result in spiritual death. Alford makes it the act of "openly denying Jesus to be Christ, the Son of God." Such wilful deniers are not to be received into one's house (see II. John verses 10 and 11). The apostle's meaning is evidently that this chief sin is one by which faith and love are destroyed and the new life killed by a palpable rejection of grace. When such a person knowingly thrusts aside spiritual life from him, no human intercession can avail. See James 5: 14, 18; Matt. 12: 31, 32, as to the obstinate rejection of the Holy Ghost's plain testimony to the Divine Messiah. Jesus on the cross pleaded for those who knew not what they did in crucifying him, not for those wilfully resisting grace.

Mrs. W. V. P., Waldo, Fla. For the sake of the young boys and girls of America, help to prevent the presentation of one of the leading figures in the Virginia tragedy from acting her role in the moving picture shows. It has been terrible to have the press drag the disgraceful trial in all its infamous details and degeneration, before the reading public. I have two sons, the youngest seventeen, and it was impossible to keep the papers out of their sight. The disgraceful story will certainly have a demoralizing effect on young girls and youths, and the end is not yet. I think the Christian parents should rise en masse to prevent this disgrace being used in moving picture shows.

We have already expressed our opinion of the proposed exhibition. Boston and New York have both prohibited it and we hope that the authorities of other cities will follow their example.

The White Star Liner "Olympic," Injured in Collision Off the Isle of Wight

AS THAT giant of the sea, the White Star liner Olympic, was leaving Southampton on September 20 with the largest passenger list which any single vessel had ever carried, she met with an accident which has but one parallel in the history of navigation. The big ship was passing down Cowes Roads on her way to Cherbourg and New York when the British first-class cruiser Hawke, steaming alongside of her, in some way—as yet unexplained—deviated from its course and crashed into the starboard side of the Olympic just back of the mainmast. In spite of the fact that a hole twenty by seventy feet in size was torn in the Olympic's side and the bow of the cruiser was so badly damaged that it is doubtful whether she will be worth the great expenditure that will be required to put her in repair, no panic or disorder took place on either vessel. Captain E. J. Smith of the Olympic immediately headed his vessel toward the shores of Osborne Bay in the Isle of Wight, but as soon as he realized that the closing of the water-tight bulkheads had made his ship absolutely safe he reassured the passengers and promised that the Olympic would land them all safely back in Southampton on the following day. All the passengers on the ship have spoken in the highest possible terms of commendation of the conduct of Captain Smith and his crew. In fact, it is stated that one first cabin passenger slept through the entire trouble and that some ten or fifteen minutes after the accident took place and the ship's anchors had been cast, the large majority of the passengers went in to lunch as if nothing had happened. The Olympic is being temporarily patched up so that she may proceed to the Harland & Wolff shipbuilding yards at Belfast, Ireland. The damage is estimated at $125,000, and it is claimed will take some three months to repair.

Miscellaneous

Mrs. J. C., Dover, Fla. See answer to [illegible] question in MAIL-BAG of September 13.

G. B., Saco, Me. Pronounced as written [illegible] in two syllables, with accent on the first.

J. B. McN., Atmore, Ala. See answer to another correspondent in a recent issue on the origin of names and surnames.

A. C. M., Rockford, Ill. We are familiar with the account in Maccabees, but it is not seriously considered in connection with the Ark.

M. M. S., Huntington, L. I. "The Battle of the Kegs," a poem written by Francis Hopkinson, in December, 1777, is printed in full at the end of Vol. I. of Spencer's History of the United States.

W. H. P., Covington, Tenn. The answer given with respect to the non-teaching of [illegible] ordination in the churches (in the old-new Calvinistic sense) was not opinion, but a matter of fact. It is no longer emphasized, for human merit has nothing to do with the case.

A. M. H., Hartford, Conn. The poem entitled "The Blackberry Girl" is printed in the book, Songs for the Little Ones at Home (published by the American Tract Society in 18[illegible]) with no author's name attached. As most of the verses in the volume are by the Taylor sisters, this poem is generally attributed to one of them.

H. A. P., Hartford, Wis. The future life cannot be disposed of in a mere paragraph. The Bible and especially the New Testament is the great revelator regarding it. Read it reverentially and prayerfully, especially such portions as John, 14th chapter; I. Cor., 15th chapter; II. Cor., 5th chapter; Rev. 21st and 22d chapters. Read also the book After Death—What? which presents the whole subject very fully.

NEW YORK, OCTOBER 4, 1911

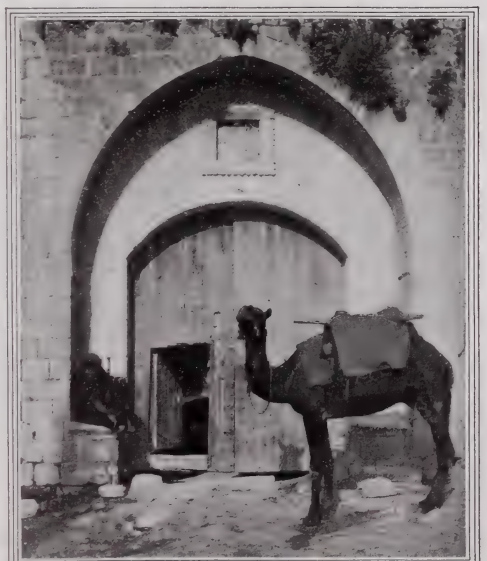
THE · CHRISTIAN · HERALD

A WEEKLY ILLUSTRATED NEWSPAPER FOR THE HOME

A Village Woman of Samaria

The Anglican Church at Nazareth

In the Path Through the Wheat Field



PALESTINE YIELDING TO CHANGE

By A. FORDER, Jerusalem

AMONG the people of the Holy Land, perhaps none are so interesting as those resident between Jerusalem and Galilee, for the simplicity of their life is not only instructive, but the variety in the cut and color of their garments calls forth comment from the most casual traveler. Unfortunately, the costumes of the country are fast disappearing and Western cut and fashion are taking their place; but no native looks so well in European costume as in his own clothes. In only a few villages are the original costumes now preserved. In spite of changing costumes, the women and girls of Palestine are still attractive and their bright eyes and white teeth, often encircled in jet-black hair, would make a subject for any artist. The one thing the natives wonder at is, "Why do these strangers (travelers) leave their country and come to ours? for what is there to see here?" It is the question they put to themselves as often as a party of tourists passes along. Many an oriental maid, in a dress of stuff made in Manchester, leans on a wall and watches the tourist pass by with this question in her mind, and she goes home to tell her friends what she has seen or perhaps heard from the strangers through their guide.

The Roman temple or palace recently unearthed by American excavators at Samaria is supposed to have been built by one of the Herods on the site of the palace of Omri, who, it will be remembered, had his capital and palace there quite a thousand years before the Herods. The presence of an important ruin was indicated by several partly buried columns, but few imagined that they formed part of so important a ruin as that of one of Samaria's finest buildings. Now not only the extent of the palace has been revealed, but also the style of architecture, and halls with stone benches and recesses, where probably court and receptions were held. Mosaic and well-paved floors all bear witness to a period previous to the blight and devastation caused by the Mohammedan invader's hand. With the continued work of the excavators probably other important things will come to light, witnessing to the splendor and wealth of a city of which it was predicted, "Samaria shall be plowed as a field." This has literally come to pass.

Speaking of large buildings, I am reminded of a trip to Nazareth. The Protestant church there is the native church of the Church Missionary Society. From any roof at the south end of the town this sanctuary is visible; but few know what an interesting history is attached to it. It was related to me by an old man, a native of the town. When it was considered advisable to erect a church in Nazareth to accommodate the growing congregation of the mission, the only site that the Turkish government would allow for such a purpose was the dunghill of the town. This was accepted and cleared of the accumulation of rubbish. Underneath was found rock on which to put up the church. In time, bells were needed to call the people to service, but there was no money available. About that time, Emperor William I. visited Palestine and went to Nazareth, and came in touch with the missionary in charge, who was a German subject. On being asked if anything was needed for the church, he told the Kaiser about the bells. To this His Majesty replied by saying: "There are many of Napoleon's old cannon lying about. I will have some sent to Germany and cast into bells, and send them for the church." This was done, and if the story is correct, what was once intended for destructive purposes is now used in quite another way, and for the general good. If the old native's story is true, it ought to make the church at Nazareth one of the most attractive sights by the wayside at the end of the journey from Jerusalem.

"The Needle's Eye," the Small Door in an Eastern Wall Gate

During the months of blossoming, Palestine is carpeted with flowers growing in the most unlikely places. From tiny holes and cracks in the hard rocks beautiful clumps of cyclamen raise their heads, the banks, that generally look as though nothing could ever come from them, are radiant with white, red, and purple anemones, poppies, iris of many hues, wild roses, and a variety of other blooms.

Last spring during a trip to Galilee, the writer with some friends held in their hands at one time forty-seven varieties of wild flowers, and in less than two days they gathered more than one hundred and twenty kinds of flowers, all growing on the banks, plains, and roadsides of the country. In the enclosures of some of the natives' homes grow plants and flowers that in other lands would need care and protection; but here they flourish and blossom unheeded, dying off and coming up year after year, without any attention being given to them.

Many ancient sepulchres by the roadside tell of a people that expended much time and energy in the disposal of their dead. Tombs of different periods, varying in size and form, may be seen on all hands, the country between Jerusalem and Nablous being full of them, for the rocky nature of the land lends itself to excavating of this kind. In the valley known as the Robbers' Valley, and near the springs that bear the same name, is a tomb of unusual interest. It is probably Jewish, and may be quite three thousand years old. He who had the tomb hewn, or who was interred in it, left

Continued on page 985

The American Pulpit

A SERMON BY

Rev. Hugh Black, D.D.*

JOY AND STRENGTH

TEXT: Nehemiah 8:10—"The joy of the Lord is your strength."

THE great work which Ezra and Nehemiah did first of all was to infuse some national unity and patriotic spirit into the feeble and discouraged remnant of Jews who had returned from exile. The reformers then proceeded to publish the law, to take it from the exclusive knowledge of the priests, and make it accessible to every Jew. This was done by making the written law the standard of life. Our text is from the passage which describes the first public reading of the law in the hearing of all the people. Beyond all else that Nehemiah did for his people, beyond his wise statesmanship, his political and social reforms, his practical works, this step did more than all else to make the Jews what they became, a distinct and separate people, saving them from extinction and absorption, giving their national life a centre which enabled them to survive any outward fortune. The written law became the standard of religion and of life henceforth for all Jews.

"Neither Be Ye Sorry"

The scene which depicts the first step in this great progress is very dramatic. The people gathered themselves together, and the sacred Book was opened before their eyes. The solemn words of God's law were read out and expounded to them; the law that was to be henceforth their only rule. The people, when they heard the words of the law, wept perhaps as they thought of how they had transgressed it, and how they had to come through sore trial to be in the mood to accept it unreservedly. Nehemiah, however, felt that the appropriate temper for them should be not sorrow but joy. It should be celebrated not as a fast but as a feast, a great festival of rejoicing, as with hope and confidence they looked forward to the future. He said unto all the people, "This day is holy to the Lord your God; mourn not, nor weep. Go your way, eat the fat and drink the sweet, and send portions unto them for whom nothing is prepared: for this day is holy unto our Lord: neither be ye sorry; for the joy of the Lord is your strength." Their faith in God's providence and love ought to bring with it great gladness of heart. In proportion as they believe they should rejoice; and in proportion as they truly rejoice will they be strong for all the tasks of life, and for the greatest task of all, to build up their nation in the fear and service of God. Because the day was a great event full of solemn and inspiring thought, because the day was holy unto their Lord, they must put away all sombre and sorrowful things, they must take hold of the deep secure joy associated with their new faith. "Neither be ye sorry; for the joy of the Lord is your strength."

Is it too much to say that this reasoning seems very novel and unnatural to us? Does it not strike us at first as rather a strange argument? We think the Jew might well weep, might well be allowed to weep, if not constrained to weep, on such a solemn and sacred occasion. It even appears to us to be quite in keeping with religion generally that there should be at least a minor key. We sometimes even look upon religion as a somewhat doleful thing, associated more with sorrow than with joy. We might imagine also that the natural sorrow, which came to these Jews as they heard the law they had violated, would make a more lasting impression on them and lead them to make more permanent use of the occasion. Let us then consider the words, and see if Nehemiah's reasoning has not some cogency.

In our deepest thinking we usually underestimate the place and value of joy in life. Even as a matter of temperament we are inclined to think that the bright and sunny nature must be shallow, and that the melancholy temperament is more likely to be the deepest and greatest. It is a prejudice which has been fastened on our mind by much writing about certain attributes of genius, of a piece with the modern theory that genius is a sort of affection of the nerves and is therefore closely allied with insanity. I have seen it stated in books more than once that most men of real and indisputable genius have been melancholy. Well, my standard of natural genius is Shakespeare, absolutely sane, absolutely healthy, with no mawkishness of feeling so common in pinchbeck genius, of cheerful temperament, and a bright sunny view of life. The fact is that it is confusion of thought which is responsible for the other opinion. We assume that if Shakespeare, or any other, sees below the surface of things, and recognizes the tragedy of life and all the sin and sorrow of men, that therefore his temperament must be melancholy. Schiller's judgment is a profound one and a true one, "A gay, serene spirit is the source of all that is noblest and good. Whatever is accomplished of the greatest and noblest sort flows from such a disposition. Petty, gloomy souls that only mourn the past and dread the future are not capable of seizing on the holiest moments of life." The affectation of sentiment and the spurious pathos, so easy to do and so common in our literature, have made it easy for us to believe the opposite of Schiller's judgment.

Further, our common view of religion has greatly helped in the growth of the error. Is it not spoken of in many quarters as the sorrowful way, and the melancholy inn, and the like? The Christian faith even has been succinctly defined by a great master of literature as "the worship of sorrow." We know the element of profound truth in this exaggeration; just as we know that in every deep soul probably sorrow of some kind has had much to do with its making; but it is to put the emphasis on the wrong thing when we disparage joy and exalt mere sorrow as a sign of either greatness or goodness. It is not even an infallible instrument of grace. It can come to a life and leave it poorer than before. It can come to a heart and leave it only the harder. It can engulf a mind, and only take from it its strength; whereas joy may be a source of insight and a secret of wisdom and a fountain of strength. Indeed joy is naturally associated with strength. Mere sorrow,—the sorrow of the world,—is a narrowing, weakening thing. It dams back the natural forces. It shuts a man up within himself. It gives a jaundiced eye which sees the world clothed in drab, making nothing worth striving for, nothing worth living for. It robs the soul of its native force, killing aspiration as the rain puts out the kindling beacon. We need to free our mind from cant here also. There is a shallow cheerfulness, but there is also a shallow melancholy. We speak glibly of the refining fire of sorrow, but in itself it is only a fire that can consume as well as refine. It altogether depends on the way it is received, the spirit in which it is met; and that can be said of every other experience in life.

"The Deep Power of Joy"

Our common talk is even an injustice to God, and a libel on his character; as if all natural joys were but lures of the devil, and only grief were a divine messenger. The companions of the sorrowful way may have much to teach us; but when we walk with them we may be looking only at the stones among our feet and never at the blue sky above us. We may learn much at the melancholy inn, but the company there may be pretty poor after all as at any other inn. Rather we should realize that joy is strength. It is the fundamental principle of life, and the condition of growth. It is the expansive, enlarging force, as sorrow is the narrow, weakening force. We just need to look at the child opening out in every power through the joy of youth, as the flowers open in the sunshine. Great work also is done with something of the spontaneity and expansion of joy, done because it is a delight to do it. Sorrow rightly used may often give insight, forcing the mind to think and the eye to see; just as disease may read us many a lesson. At the same time joy is the normal, as health is the normal, and life all disease would only be death. Is there no opportunity for a keener insight through the uplifting, exulting power of happiness? With the "deep power of joy," said Wordsworth, "we see into the heart of things." Should this not be true, if there is at the heart of things, as we believe, perfect life, perfect joy, perfect love?

We discredit joy as a divine agent because of another common confusion of thought between joy and what we call pleasures. It is the confusion between the inner and the outward. There is pleasure which leaves a bad taste in the mouth so to speak, and which is to be judged not merely by the passing pleasure, but by its after-effects, n and otherwise. The test of all true, healthy j that it strengthens and sweetens life.

Now if this is the function of joy, even nat joy, we can enter into the force of the argur that the Jews on that great hopeful day were to sorrow, "for the joy of the Lord is strength." The comfort and delight of their in God was to be used by them as a strengt their life, endowing them with confidence power. They would do better work and nc service if they did so appropriate the gladness buoyant force of their faith. It would keep t from craven failure which might be easy to a pirited and half-hearted faith. If they looked ward to the future with a tearful eye they c not do for God and country what would be sible to the high heart of hope and the deep po of joy. "The joy of the Lord is your strength

"Enter Into the Joy of Thy Lord"

If we too believe in God and accept the mess of his love, should not the same be true of us? we believe in the revelation of the Father, if believe in the forgiveness of sin and the life Christ, should we not accept gratefully the ter's heritage when he left his legacy of joy, ' joy I give unto you that your joy might be f Thus to the Christian, joy should be not only privilege but his duty; and not only his duty his strength, his force. We have seen that all is strength; and this Christian joy should b source of strength that can never run dry. joice evermore," exultingly cried St. Paul, doughty fighter, knowing what a weapon it wa the believer's hand. Joy should be his habit mind, his temperament of faith. Sorrows c and will come; but faith is not made perfect they are driven out by the strong hand of The one and only cure for sorrow is joy. A thing else is only a half-cure at the best. Re nation is only a palliative. And if we are to doubting and timid, anxious about the present fearful about the future, is it not because we h not accepted the full consequences of our fa have not plucked the rich fruits of believing? Paul's prayer for the Roman Church was that t might be filled with all joy and peace in believi that they might abound in hope. Can faith wh has none of these blessed fruits be rightly cal faith at all? Who should be so filled with pea and so abound in hope, and be so moved by joy, those who know in whom they have believed? S rows may even compass them about; misfortu may surround and dog them; but within they h a fount of joy that is a perennial strength.

Think also what a misfortune it is, to say least, that the young should have so much cause imagine that religion means gloom and darkne instead of joy and light. Dr. Johnson compa the sour narrowness of some men to the neck o vinegar bottle. We know with what measure truth the comparison can be applied to some for of religion. It is a calamity when the good ne should be perverted in what is its essential featu Instead of being narrow and gloomy and dism religion is the biggest and brightest and grand thing that can come into a man's life, transfor ing every power and inspiring every energy, ba ing it in peace and flooding it with joy. His w is the way of joy, a deeper joy than the wo knows, for it is independent of fortune, and in pendent of mood, born in the very soul, born of t love of God. Who should be joyful if not we whom has come the vision, to whom has come t assurance of eternal love? Who should know t thrill of joy and the music of happy hearts, if r we who have heard the glad tidings of great jo Who should abound in peace if not we who ha learned that underneath are the everlasting arm

Lay firm hold on the full consequences of t faith. Enter into the joy of thy Lord. And out to the tasks of your life, strengthened by t deep power of joy. Lift up your face and s Lift up your heart, though it falter and fear, a believe. Strengthen the weak hands and confi the feeble knees, as the word comes to them th are of a fearful heart. Be strong, fear not; beho your God will come. "The joy of the Lord is yo strength."

* Professor of Practical Theology, Union Theological Seminary, New York.

THE REAPER'S JOY

A WE read the words of the Master,
One sows while another will reap," Thonging grows in the loving heart
t it be not found asleep;
Rejoicing with the joyful reapers be;
I all of His workers know
Ho often the burning teardrops fall, hen we try good seeds to sow.

We should not faint by the wayside,
I if the ground is good,
We know, then, that some time—somewhere, ir work will be understood.
Gladness will come when the harvest appears,
..d the reapers come and go.
We know the Master was with us then,
hen we tried good seeds to sow.

Be glad if your work be hidden,
orget the things that annoy,
Toilo, all those who "sow in tears" hall also "reap in joy."
We the reapers then we have a share;
comfort indeed to know,
Not us be joyful all the way,
we try good seeds to sow.

Oakland, Calif. MARY E. HITCHCOCK.

How Little Joe Built a Church

EIGHT years ago, Little Joe, a tot of about six summers, was admitted to an orphan home at Bairum Springs, between Statesville and Charlotte, N. C. He proved to be the most remarkable child that ever had a part in the home life of Bairum, beloved by everybody and a great pet. But a day came when Little Joe could no longer live with children on earth. On February 1, 1904, the Master took him. Before he fell sick he had said, "When I gets to be a man, I'm going to build a church with a porch to it." The dear little fellow had 45 cents, which he treasured as a nest egg to build his wonderful church. This consecrated gift of a little child has become the foundation of a beautiful church. Joe's wish has been realized, for there is "a porch to it." The money for this church was given largely by the Sunday School children of the Presbyterian Synod of North Carolina, and it goes by the name of "Little Joe's Church." It has a membership of between 250 and 300, including the larger children of the Barium Home. It was wonderful how willingly the poor children contributed under such circumstances to perpetuate the name of little Joe for the generation to come.

W. S. MOORE.

Greensboro, N. C.

Anvil Sparks

..WHERE sin abounds, some people are bound to sin a little.

..MAN shall give account of his idle words—and also of his idle time.

..THE time to "make good" is to-day. To-morrow may not need it.

..GOD calls men to pray in secret. Men call on each other to pray in public.

..—BETTER than a long train of thought is a long thought, well defined.

..HE WHO shortens his prayer in the morning may have to lengthen it at night.

..WITH the energy some people use in hating one enemy they could love a dozen friends.

..WHEN the preacher gets warm enough to wilt his collar, he may be getting ready to wilt some of the cold hearts in the audience.

SILENCE

IN silence mighty things are wrought,
Silently builded, thought on thought,
Truth's temple greets the sky;
And like a citadel with towers,
The soul, with her subservient powers,
Is strengthened silently. LYNCH.

Wants and Needs

By EUGENE THWING

"GIVE me some of the luxuries and I'll get along very well without a good many of the necessities of life," exclaimed a man, in jovial defense of an indulgence which, observing a right proportion of things, he could not afford. He spoke lightly, but revealed the dominating rule of his life. He cared more for sensation than for common-sense; more for the gratification of the moment than for provision for the future.

The most difficult problems of public, social, and private economy arise from the fact that so many men and women—still children in this respect—are dominated by their wants rather than by their needs. A correct analysis of business failures, of "high cost of living," of social and church quarrels, of family difficulties, brings the searcher again and again to this same source: Wants have been clamoring so loud, and have been crowding so insistently to the front, that they have monopolized attention; while needs have been forced to hover neglected and unrecognized in the background.

The front parlor in many a home assumes more importance than the kitchen or bedroom; the garage becomes a more sacred place than the library or the church; the instalment on the piano-player crowds ahead of the coal bill. Clara E. Laughlin tells, humorously, in her book Just Folks, of a family who had only twenty-five cents left, until the daughter should come home with her wages. The family stove was to be taken away on Monday because of non-payment of instalments due. The father was at home, out of a job. Just then a smart book agent called, and, before he left, the father had signed a contract for a many-volume encyclopedia on the instalment plan, hoping that by its use his infant son might one day become President of the nation.

A slumworker tells of a woman who boasted how good she had been to her children: "Yes, I've had nine children—all dead now, bless 'em; an' I may say I've nothin' to regret. I give 'em all they wanted. If one of 'em waked up in the middle of the night and cried for pie I'd send the old man right out for it." All dead, and no wonder! Their wants were gratified, their needs almost entirely neglected.

. . .

"MY GOD shall supply all your needs according to his riches in glory by Christ Jesus." How often, misunderstanding the promise, we burden down our petitions with a load of wants rather than needs. How often we presume to judge the hearing and answering love of the Father according as he has or has not granted us the things we want so passionately, rather than by his wise protection of us against our foolish selves and his wonderful development of us by supplying some of our unrecognized needs.

Through experiences very different than those of our own planning this supply may come, and this development often is gained through the apparent setting at naught of what seems to us our best work and highest purposes. Many such mysteries of the Father's providence can be met only by unquestioning trust in his wisdom and his love, and by unreserved submission to his will.

. . .

A MAN recently undertook to do an important work which he believed would be a means of good in the world. Trusting in his leadership many others joined him. He spent his energy and his money without stint. All his highest aims and ideals were called into action. Sure of his own integrity of purpose and strong in his conviction that the work was actually proving a blessing in many lives, he committed it to the Master and asked his help and guidance.

Obstacles, one after another, confronted him, but he regarded them as things sent to test and strengthen him in the overcoming rather than to prevent him from going on. He fought battle after battle with eager hope and belief in final victory. He implored God, constantly, with passionate desire, to give him the help of his countenance and to establish the work.

"Behold my extremity, dear Father, and give me wisdom and power for my task. I bring it all to thee. Do thou take command and bring it to success."

At times help seemed to be given just when needed. At other times a voice seemed to say, "My son, what seekest thou? to make thy will and thy work mine, or to find out my will and my work and make it thine?"

. . .

IT IS difficult, when the heart is set passionately upon a thing, to get the wants out of the way and to gain a clear vision of the real needs. And so the man kept on striving and praying for the result he wanted so earnestly, and which, because of his consuming want, and the wants of others interested with him, he had come to regard as an imperative need. Now and again he was dimly conscious of warning messages coming to him from some deep source of truth telling him that God's law in material as well as spiritual things is fixed and immovable and cannot be violated in any particular without penalty. Miracles are not made to order to overcome man's mistakes.

Then the man prayed more than ever for wisdom to avoid mistakes, but he wanted success at the same time, as a child who would build a mansion of blocks wants the completed structure despite the wrong placing of the foundation blocks. Only through the penalty of the falling house does he gain the wisdom to avoid the mistakes of building. So the man continued to pray, with an agony of desire, for his wants and for his needs. And the one contradicted the other. The loving, wise, indulgent Father could not grant the whole of so inconsistent a prayer, and he began therefore to supply the needs. The house the man was building tumbled down, and he was hurt, and others were hurt with him. It wasn't God's fault. His ear had not been heavy that it could not hear, neither had his hand been shortened that it could not save.

Through trouble and downfall the man began to learn many things needful for better work in the future. His prayer for wisdom and strength was answered through experiences which supplied these needs. But these experiences meant the denial of wants the granting of which would not have brought him the needed development of ability and character.

It is often so. Weeping over disappointed desires may continue for a night, but joy in the Father's rich supply for our needs cometh in the morning.

TRUE RICHES

BE RICH—be rich toward God,
Before beneath the sod
Thy form is laid.
Forsake the dross of earth,
Thou art of heavenly birth;
All else will fade.

Have treasure in the skies,
Which moth and rust defies,
Nor thieves can steal.
Lay up a goodly store,
That, when time is no more,
No pang you'll feel.

Live but for God alone,
All that thou hast His own,
Nothing kept back.
Then, in that home above,
Whose wealth untold is love,
You'll nothing lack.

I. H. B. H.

The Further Shore

ON a dry and desert island of the great ocean lived a father and mother with two children. The family had been cast there by a shipwreck. A cave on the rock was their dwelling, a few herbs and roots was all they had to eat, and one little spring of water furnished them drink. The children had no remembrance of the manner in which they came to the island. They could not tell what bread was, nor milk, nor fruits, and all the joys of the world were unknown to them. But one day, there came a little boat to the island, rowed by four black men. This event caused joy to the parents, for it gave them hopes of being delivered from their sufferings. The boat was too frail, however, to take all the family at once to the mainland, so the father undertook the journey first. The mother and children wept when they saw him enter the boat, which seemed too light to hold him and the four black men; but he told them not to weep, for he would be better off on the other shore, and they should soon follow.

When the boat returned and took away the mother, the children again wept bitterly. She, also, told them not to weep, for they should soon see each other in a better country. Finally, the boat came back and took the two children. They were much afraid of the black men. They trembled when the little bark was tossed upon the waves; but in the midst of their fears and tremblings, they approached the looked-for land. Great was their joy when they saw their parents on the shore running toward them, with arms extended to embrace them! They led them under the shadow of some great palm-trees and placed them upon the flowery turf, and gave them milk and honey and delicious fruits to eat. "Oh! how foolish was our fear," said the children. "Instead of being afraid, we should have been rejoicing at the approach of these black men who were to bring us into this beautiful country."

"But, my dear children," said the father, "our passage from the desert island to this happy place ought to teach us a lesson of deep meaning. We all have, some day, another long journey to make, and it will be to a country full of delights. The whole earth is a place which we must soon leave. The beautiful country on which we have just landed is an image, although a very imperfect one, of the heaven to which we are going. The passage over the great ocean is death. The bark which brought us here is an image of the casket in which four men clothed in black shall carry us from the dark night to a glorious day. Therefore, when the hour of departure shall sound for you, for your mother, or for me, do not be frightened, for death, to virtuous souls, is only the passage from the valley of tears to the land of blessedness and beauty." EARL WM. GAGE.

Jamestown, N. Y.

A National Memorial to the Pilgrims

UNDER the leadership of the Rev. S. A. Dyke, the Baptist Church of Plymouth, Mass., is about to erect a church building which shall take the form of a national memorial to that heroic band which landed upon Plymouth Rock in 1620. This building, which is designed to be a fitting expression on the part of the Baptist denomination of its reverence for the Pilgrim Fathers, is planned by the denomination in Plymouth to take the place of the old building which was recently purchased by the Federal authorities and which will be demolished to make room for a new post office building. It is the desire of the promoters of the memorial to make it a tribute to the ancestors of many others as well as Baptists who trace their descent directly back to Mayflower stock. In addition to this personal phase of the memorial there will be that of national significance. Plymouth is a national heritage. As the landing place of that indomitable band which was destined to place its indelible stamp upon the life of all New England and upon the thought and development of a large part of our nation, it holds a place unique in the history of the country. It is becoming more and more a national shrine which is visited by thousands of pilgrims to its historic points each year. Around the early history of New England there twine innumerable stories of heroism, pathos, tragedy, poetry and love. It was the cradle of that austerity which proved the saving grace of the land. The words of Governor Wolcott, voiced once in a memorable address at Plymouth, come to none of us as a surprise.

"The shore, the streets, the sloping hill of Plymouth, make the most deeply interesting and significant spot in the western hemisphere. Nay, I should go further than that and state that to an American at least, excepting only the Holy Land, pressed once by the feet of the Nazarene, there is no spot in the wide world that represents more to the discerning mind than this town in which we stand to-day."

So we can understand the emotions that stirred the heart of General Grant on his visit to Plymouth Rock after his journey around the world, when he, the usually impassive, silent man, said that that unhewn boulder of granite was to him a more affecting and inspiring memorial than all the monuments of human events that he had seen in all his journeys in other lands.

Plans have already been drawn and a site selected. The new church will stand at the junction of Main and Leyden Streets, Plymouth, on land which once formed a part of the garden of Elder Brewster, the first Pilgrim pastor, and on it is the celebrated Pilgrim spring of sweet waters, which tasted to the colonists "in their great thirste as pleasante as wine or beer had been in foretime."

Rev. S. A. Dyke, D.D.

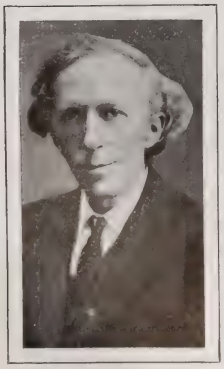
A Photograph from the Architects' Drawing of the Pilgrim Memorial Church

The body of the building, as planned, will be an auditorium with a seating capacity of 250, which upon occasion can be extended to 684 by opening doors with leaded glass at the rear into the chapel and at one side into the parlor. These doors or screens are lowered into pockets in the basement and raised by motor, giving an uninterrupted floor space and view in an auditorium which would measure 68 feet by 98 feet.

The roof of the main portion of the auditorium will be constructed in the form of a dome supported on four large arches, in the spandrels of which four memorial windows will give light to the interior. The heavy corner piers from which the arches spring will have pilasters with decorative capitals and cornices.

The baptistry, pulpit, choir and organ are shown in a semi-circular apse, from which stairs lead down either side to the choir and robing rooms. The pastor's room is in the second story on the left. The chapel, or Sunday School, directly opposite the pulpit, opens into the auditorium, affording the extension to the auditorium mentioned above. In the rear of the chapel is a gallery divided into three class rooms, also the portion under the gallery is similarly divided, all having a clear view of the baptistry, pulpit and choir. The large room opening into the auditorium on the right by sliding doors above referred to would be used as a parlor or large classroom, and would seat ninety-six.

The principal entrance will be through the colonnade porch into a spacious vestibule opening into b auditorium and chapel. There is a entrance at the opposite side the building convenient to the par From the vestibule, staircases scend to the basement or gro floor, which, owing to the slope of land, will be a full story, li and attractive. This story will planned to accommodate the Sun School, which would be entered fr the lower grade and would virtu be the first story of the building.



The Georgian or colonial style architecture has been adopted as ing most appropriate to the tra tions of Plymouth, lending itself mirably to the idea of a memor church. The portico and dome impressive, and the bell towers interest.

The Baptist Church in Plymou of which the Rev. F. J. Scott is present pastor, has had a life growing prosperity since 1809, wh it began its struggle for a foothe in the face of the opposition of Ad iram Judson, Sr., who followed distinguished son into the Bapt Church only a few years later.

A generous response is expected the promoters of the new chur from persons all over the country Pilgrim ancestry, and it is hoped th donations will be made which w render possible special memorials Pastor Robinson, Elder Brewster, Conant, Dea. Faunce, Adonira Judson and other worthies, in t towers, chapels, rooms, windows, gan and the chime of bells, or in ta lets.

It is also the dream of Mr. Dy that from Wales may come so memorial remembrance of th sturdy Welshman, Roger William To both His Majesty King Geor the Fifth of Great Britain and H Majesty Queen Wilhelmina of H land it has been suggested that the one case it would be a gracef tribute to those who loved the land their birth so sincerely that even u der the adverse circumstances whi greeted them in the new land th gave it the name New England, a in the other to those who havin found a refuge from persecution Holland brought with them such de memories of that land that to th day its names are found in the o streets of Plymouth, some gift ded cated to their memory should co from the old lands with which the history is so closely bound up.

ATLANTA'S NEW TABERNACLE

Rev. Len G. Broughton, D.D.

AN EVENT of more than usual interest in religious circles was the dedication of the great Tabernacle in Atlanta, Ga., on Sunday, September 17, which is pronounced the largest and best equipped institutional church in the South. The pastor, Rev. Dr. Len G. Broughton, was assisted in the dedication ceremonies by a number of prominent clergymen from other cities. Some fourteen years ago, Dr. Broughton began his ministry in the Jones Avenue Baptist Church, Atlanta. His work grew wonderfully, and it soon began to be apparent that a much larger church would be needed. He has now a membership of between 3,000 and 4,000 and a Sunday School of 2,000.

The new Tabernacle is 147 feet long, 130 feet wide, and five stories high. The foundation and first floor are laid in cement. The walls are of red-faced brick, trimmed in Georgia granite. The roof, beams and sleepers are iron and steel. The floors are hard wood with the exception of the lower Tabernacle, which is cement. There are 12 outside doors, 2 steel stairway fire escapes, 18 toilets, and 100 outside windows. The lower Tabernacle or Sunday School Auditorium contains two stories. The first story is the main Sunday School hall. In front are offices for church secretary, book stall, Sunday School superintendent, Sunday School secretary, and Sunday School library. In the main Sunday School hall is the Boys' Department, the Girls' Department, the Senior Department, and rooms for special classes. At the rear is the room for the Beginners' Department, the Primary room,

Atlanta's Tabernacle, Institute Building and Infirmary and a large church kitchen with pantry. The sec ond story in the lower Tabernacle or Sunda School Auditorium is a balcony extending acros the building and opening into the main Sunda School Auditorium by roller partitions. The re maining three stories are devoted to the main aud itorium. The seating capacity is approximatel 4,000. The lower Tabernacle or Sunday Schoo Department has a capacity of 2,000. The buildin is heated by vapor heat, and contains churc phones, call bells, acousticons, stereopticons, and phone from the Tabernacle pulpit to each bed i the Tabernacle Infirmary (connected with th church), to enable the sick people to hear th preaching and music.

The Tabernacle Infirmary where the sick ar cared for was a part of the plan of Dr. Broughton About 5,600 sick people have been treated in th Infirmary. Near it is the Tabernacle Dormitor for young working women which has enabled man a struggling girl to find the protection of a home Since its establishment over 2,500 young wome have found shelter and protection.

Great Profits from Hat Checks

—COAT AND CLOAK-ROOM concessions in the large New York hotels and restaurants are a source of almost princely revenue In a recent suit in the Supreme Court, it came out in the evi dence that one holder of a hat-checking concession in a well-known hotel was paying $1,750 yearly for it and $1,500 renta besides, and was clearing a handsome profit until some one, a he alleges, offered the hotel $6,000 yearly for the same privilege It was shown that there were many such concessions for whic sums varying from $6,000 to $8,000 were paid.

Some Men and Events of the Day

A Popular Oriental Visitor

REAR-ADMIRAL Ching Pih Kwang, the commanding officer of H. I. C. M. S. Hai-Chi, has proved himself one of the most popular foreigners who have visited our shores in some time.

Rear-Admiral Ching Pih Kwang

The Admiral, who both from education and long contact is familiar with the customs of Europe and America, has entered heartily into the various celebrations arranged in his honor. He has visited President Taft, been entertained by the naval and civic authorities at New York, and has gained the friendship of the crowd by his democratic ways and his cordial reception of visitors on his ship.

On Sunday afternoon the visitors simply took the ship and went everywhere. In the ward room they took possession of the big leather lounges and comfortable chairs and ordered tea. On the decks they fingered the guns, thumped the lenses of the searchlights to determine the thickness of them, and some of the bolder ones even opened the door leading into the Admiral's quarters and peered in. During the afternoon the Admiral held a conversation with a representative of one of the great newspapers of the city.

"What do you think of the President?" the reporter asked.

"He is a wonderful man," he replied, "and I have the greatest admiration for him. I had a long chat with him the other day, and he told me that he was greatly interested in my country and its progress. President Taft is known to the people of China, who realize that he is their friend. They respect and admire him very much. The President and I talked of the Panama Canal, and he said that he had been down there five times. He is a fine sailor and has sailed all over the world, and he has no sympathy with persons who get seasick.

"The President said that my Government was to have a constitutional one some day, and then he said it would have a lot of work to do, pointing out in proof of it all the traveling he has to do. He said he had to go great distances all over the country, greeting the people. I told him what a great thing the Panama Canal was going to be for the United States, and how it would increase your country's commerce with the Far East. The President invited me to go down there and see it, but I shall not be able to do so, for my Government has cabled me to return by way of England and the Suez."

"What do you think of the American dreadnoughts of the Florida and Delaware types?"

"Splendid," he answered. "Particularly am I impressed with the masts the United States Navy has adopted. I saw the Delaware at the Spithead review during the coronation, and her masts made her easily the most conspicuous vessel in the international fleet. Your kind of masts remind me of your wonderful high buildings."

"And those buildings—what do you think of them?"

"They are great," Admiral Ching replied.

* * *

Peter A. Stolypin

Russia's Premier Dies from Wounds

AFTER six days of excruciating agony, Peter A. Stolypin, the Premier of Russia, who was shot during a gala performance at the Municipal Theatre in Kiev by Dimitry Bogroff, died from the effects of his wounds. Stolypin was a tall, handsome man, about 55 years of age, and possessed of great ability as a statesman. As Governor of Saratov he took such steps against the terrorists and liberals as won the hatred of the advanced parties, who threatened and in 1905 attempted his assassination. He was appointed Prime Minister by Imperial ukase on July 22, 1906, and stamped out the revolution that had grown to threatening proportions during the administrations of M. Witte and M. Goremykin, and which they had not been able to control. When the Czar asked him to become Premier he first declined. The Czar insisted, and knowing what peril the acceptance of the office involved he sent word that he was willing to die for the Emperor. When he was shot he looked across the theatre at the royal box, and noticing that the Emperor was safe he crossed himself in recognition of the Providence that spared his monarch, and then sank into unconsciousness. M. Stolypin was one of the ablest and most fearless champions of autocracy that Russia has had in a generation. He was tactful, yet relentless against his foes. He appeared to pay tribute to the Duma while he was in the act of nullifying its authority. He stretched out his arm of protection over the constitution while he was consenting to its violation. He was pure Russian. He was Russo-Tartar in heart and mind. Count Witte is Dutch and took the commercial view of things. M. Plehve persecuted Finns and Jews mainly because they were insurgents, but M. Stolypin opposed the Finns and Jews and Turkomans and Khirgizes largely because they were not Russian. It is a significant fact that neither the Nihilists nor Jews nor Finns, nor those who felt themselves aggrieved, wreaked vengeance upon him, but it was the representative of a rival Russian faction.

* * *

Persia's Ex-Shah Struggling to Regain Power

ONLY two years ago Persia, by the deposition of her ruler, Mohammed Ali, and the elevation of the heir apparent to the throne, attracted the world's attention to her struggle for a constitutional form of government. In January, 1906, Mohammed Ali consented to the convocation of a National Council or Parliament. This body met for the first time in October of that year. The new constitution of the country, which the Shah signed in 1907, limited the power of the ruler, really establishing limited monarchy, and granting liberty of conscience and of person, of the press and of education.

Ahmed Mirza
Shah of Persia

Mohammed Ali
Persia's Deposed Ruler

By his attempt to abolish this constitution the Shah but added fuel to the fires of the Nationalist movement in Persia, and when it was realized that despotism again threatened the land discontent became open revolution. All through the spring and early summer of 1909, the country was in the throes of civil war. In July, however, the Shah was compelled to abdicate and the heir apparent, Ahmed Mirza, became nominally ruler of the country, though the actual duties of the position are discharged by the regent of the kingdom.

During the last few months the ex-Shah has been intriguing for a return to power, and early in August an army of his supporters set out for Teheran. There have been a great many small skirmishes and two or three battles of considerable proportion, in which the fortune of arms has favored first one side and then the other. The latest dispatches, however, state that the ex-Shah's army, which was nearing the capital, has been totally defeated and several of the most prominent leaders captured and imprisoned by the loyal troops of the young Shah.

The New Premier of Russia

THREE days after the death of Peter A. Stolypin, one of St. Petersburg's leading newspapers announced that the Czar had chosen M. Kokovtzeff as the new prime minister of the administration. M. Kokovtzeff has been minister of finance since the formation of the present cabinet and will continue to discharge the duties of that portfolio as well as acting as president of the cabinet. M. Makaroff will succeed M. Stolypin as minister of the interior.

M. Kokovtzeff

* * *

Honoring Christian Endeavor's Founder

SEPTEMBER 12 commemorated the sixtieth birthday of Rev. Francis E. Clark, D.D., LL.D., the founder of the Young People's Society of Christian Endeavor. This occasion was made memorable by two very unique and unusual services, as well as by special young people's meetings in many churches, and Christian Endeavor Unions.

Dr. Clark's summer home is at Sagamore Beach, Mass. His neighbors tendered him a complimentary birthday dinner and presented him with a handsome silver loving cup, carrying this inscription:

FRANCIS E. CLARK
IN COMMEMORATION OF HIS SIXTIETH BIRTHDAY,
FROM THE INNER CIRCLE OF HIS LONG-TIME ASSOCIATES IN CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

A feature of the occasion was a sheaf of congratulations from eminent leaders of the civic and religious life of the country, foremost among whom were President Taft, Hon. Champ Clark, ex-Vice-President Fairbanks, Judge Ben B. Lindsey, Dr. Russell H. Conwell, and Principal Booker T. Washington.

Fanny J. Crosby, the "blind hymn writer," sent this greeting:

Parent of Endeavorers,
Love inspires our lay;
Sixty sparkling jewels
Crown your brow to-day.
Ere your footsteps falter,
Or your work is o'er,
May our blessed Master
Grant you sixty more.

Dr. Clark's birthplace was Aylmer, Quebec. The provincial Christian Endeavor Unions of Ontario and Quebec arranged a birthday pilgrimage to Aylmer, which included a monster mass meeting at Montreal, a big rally at Ottawa, a "family gathering" in the little church in Aylmer, where as a boy Francis Edward Clark was baptized. Dr. Clark was the honored guest at all these gatherings. The memorial service in the Aylmer church was rendered extremely impressive by an address delivered by Dr. Clark, which was a beautiful tribute to his mother. "She lives to-day," he said, "in the lives of many here, whom she taught in the little private school which she conducted in Cherry Cottage nearly sixty years ago. . . . If there is anything of value in Christian Endeavor, it is because there is something of her life in this organization, which God has so wonderfully blessed the world around. . . . Hers was a life of service, and Christian Endeavor stands for universal service for all."

Dr. Clark has gone five times around the world, paying his own way with his pen; twelve times to Europe in the interest of young people; he is the author of twenty books and numerous leaflets, and the writer of more than two thousand magazine articles. He sails shortly for a winter of Christian Endeavor activity in Europe.

JOHN R. CLEMENTS.

Francis E. Clark

OUR EDITORIAL FORUM

OTTO KOENIG, President | GEO. H. SANDISON, Managing Editor | THEODORE WATERS, Secretary

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is published weekly by "The Christian Herald," at the Bible House, Fourth Avenue, 8th and 9th Sts., New York City. The officers are: Otto Koenig, President and Treasurer, Bible House, N. Y. City; Geo. H. Sandison, Vice-President, Bible House, N. Y. City; Theodore Waters, Secretary, Bible House, N. Y. City.

Subscription Price, $1.50 a year, in advance.
Remittances should always be made in the safest manner available to the remitter. Register cash remittances.
Foreign Postage.—For each copy to be mailed outside the United States, Canada, and Mexico, add one dollar a year.

Change of Date.—It takes at least two weeks to change the date, after your subscription is renewed.
Expiration of Subscription.—The date on the wrapper indicates when your subscription ends.
Change of Address.—It requires three weeks' time to make the change. Give both old and new address.

Subscriptions may commence with any issue.
Letters should be addressed, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, New York.

Entered at Post Office, New York, as Second-class Matter
Entered as Second-class Matter at the Post Office Department, Ottawa

Rounding Up a Loose-Talker

THERE is a good deal of loose talk regarding foreign missions. The work and the workers have frequently to suffer from misrepresentations which are not always easy to trace to their source. In the course of a long experience in missionary and benevolent work, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD has run across the tracks of not a few of these loose talkers. In the interest of truth and fair play, it has hunted them home to their holes, though the game in many cases has been insignificant and hardly "worth the powder," as the saying goes.

Of late, China seems to have become the special target of the loose-talking fraternity. Not long ago, a pretended Chinese (who was simply a European loose-talking fakir in disguise) wrote a book anonymously in which he misrepresented pretty nearly everything about the missions. We punctured that book, after an exchange of cablegrams, and it collapsed like a paper balloon. Then a business man of Indiana was quoted widely in the press as saying that he had been over in China and it was useless to send relief to these people, as practically everything was stolen by the government and provincial officials. This particular loose talker, when brought to task by THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, took the back track ignominiously and would have denied even his identity to get out of the scrape. A single prod brought him to his senses and made him ashamed of himself.

. . .

But the really accomplished loose talker is one who assumes a wide knowledge of affairs which is calculated to deeply impress people who don't know this particular type of Munchausen. Such a past master of the delicate art of misrepresentation lately sent out a press dispatch from Seattle in which he declared that Judge Rufus H. Thayer of the United States District Court in China, lately here on vacation, had said that the famine relief cargo of flour sent on the troopship Buford last spring to China, had to be sold at a heavy loss and rice purchased with the proceeds, as the natives knew nothing of the use of flour. The Seattle loose-talker was careful to add that the Judge did not give this information as the result of his own observation, but he got it "from a man experienced in the flour business."

. . .

It is a comparatively easy matter, with the evidence at hand, to prove that this latest story about China is, like its predecessors, "made out of the whole cloth." There were two Relief Committees operating in China, one a Civic and Official Committee with headquarters at Shanghai, the other THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Missionary Committee at Chinkiang. Mr. M. J. Walker, chairman of the latter Committee, wrote us on April 7 last, giving all the details of the landing and distribution of the flour (16,000 bags being allotted to this Committee), and of its being forwarded to its destination. A train of forty special railway cars, each one labeled "Famine Relief," bore it away inland, to be distributed finally by missionary and civic local committees. On April 8, U. S. Consul-General Amos P. Wilder wrote us from Shanghai announcing the arrival and unloading of the Buford, the distribution arrangements for sending the flour to Northern Kiangsu, and to Pukow (opposite Nanking) for Northern Anhui, and named the missionaries who would be the ultimate distributors. On April 10, Chairman John C. Ferguson of the Shanghai Civic Committee wrote us on the same subject and described in detail the unloading of the flour in sacks. He wrote: "She (the Buford) discharged cargo all day Saturday and we loaded sixteen cars, which were sent off into the famine district Sunday morning, reaching there Sunday night, when they were unloaded into boats and by Monday noon all were on their way to our centres of distribution." On April 29, Chairman Ferguson again wrote, quoting a letter from Dr. Junkin of Suchien, giving the facts covering the receipt of 4,800 sacks of the Buford's cargo at Pichow and of 2,200 sacks being shipped to Hsuchowfu. He adds "the flour was in good condition both here and at Suchien. The flour is greatly praised by the Chinese." Mr. Ferguson himself adds: "I know it will please you very much to learn that your efforts in sending out this flour have been thoroughly appreciated." On May 1, Chairman Walker of the Chinkiang Committee wrote about "the Buford flour having been safely forwarded up-country. Now we are getting news of its safe arrival at the outstations and the great pleasure it gave to the people." On May 23, Chairman Ferguson of Shanghai wrote: "All of the flour has been distributed and you will be glad to know that reports from every quarter say that it reached them in the best condition and was greatly appreciated."

. . .

We might add more from the mass of letters we received from the workers in the China famine field, showing how they welcomed and used America's gift, but the extracts we have given are enough to show that this latest instance of loose-talk, misrepresentation, lying—call it what you will—cannot stand for a moment when it is brought face to face with the truth. What the object of such falsehoods can be it is hard to understand, unless they are instigated by a deliberate purpose to injure the cause of foreign missions.

The following cablegrams, just received, complete the exposé of the Seattle fabrication:

SHANGHAI, Sept. 22.

CHRISTIAN HERALD, New York:
Not one pound Buford cargo sold. All unloaded at Chinkiang for Grand Canal and at Pukow for railway.
(Signed) FERGUSON,
Chairman Shanghai Committee.

The second is from Hon. Amos P. Wilder, United States Consul-General at Shanghai:

SHANGHAI, Sept. 23.

No Buford grain sold. (Signed) WILDER.

Judge Thayer has yet to be heard from. He will find a message from THE CHRISTIAN HERALD awaiting his arrival in China.

The Fate of Reciprocity

CANADA'S reply to the reciprocity proposals, which took the form of the Knox-Fielding treaty, was certainly unequivocal. It is self-evident that our northern neighbor feels quite sufficient unto herself, economically as well as politically. The campaign, which closed with the election of September 21, was one of the most spirited and relentless that either of the great North American countries has ever witnessed. On the Liberal side there was the wish to enlarge the markets of the country for the farmers, and with a fine disregard for troublesome minor details, they talked expansion, growth and development. The Conservatives took up the financial and transportation side of the question, and these, together with the annexation bogy, evidently served their purpose surprisingly well. All sorts of charges and countercharges and vituperations were indulged in by both parties.

The return of the Hon. Mr. Borden and his colleagues to power has deep significance for the people of the United States. The Conservatives are pledged to a policy of development within the Empire, and no relaxation of duties between Canada and the United States may be expected for some time to come. Mr. Borden's working majority is of such proportions, and the popularity of the Conservative party is so great, that there is little fear that the so-called Nationalist party, which elected three members from the Province of Quebec, will exercise any influence on the legislation of the new Parliament.

The results of the election were a great surprise to many on this side of the line, though keen observers in Canada have for weeks been expressing their doubts as to the final decision. The rejection of the pact seemed incredible to those whose only information, before the event, had been gained from the newspapers which were sanguine of the success of the proposition. To most Americans the inauguration of reciprocity seemed sure to operate to mutual advantage, and the Canadian farmer was expected to share that belief. Either he has not done so or other arguments have appealed to him as more powerful. Canada is highly imperialistic, very British, and proud of it. The granting of reciprocity has been strongly represented as the "thin edge" of the wedge which would separate her from what she still loves to call "the mother land," and there is no question that her wish to repudiate before the world all inclination toward such separation has been t most powerful motive in the decision of this conte The United States, as a whole, is disappointed. had hoped for a broad and generous reciproc agreement which would make for closer friendsh and better times in both lands. While we recogn with appreciation Canada's loyal spirit, it seems many of us that she has, in this event, raised barrier to her own progress.

Euthanasia

EUTHANASIA was formerly a word of r ligious association, meaning a happy and pai less death as an end to a well-spent, religious lif In these days, however, it has come to have a si nification so wholly different as to include in i meaning the actual taking of life by painless mea —a polite word for painless and private executio not to call them, as many do, murders.

The old controversy as to whether euthanasia the latter sense of the word is ever justifiable h been revived and is now attracting nation-wide i terest owing to a recent instance in the Shaker c ony at Kissimmee, Fla., where one of the membe whose death from consumption seemed inevitab was chloroformed in accordance with her own r quest for an easy, painless death. The matt coming to the attention of the authorities th caused the body to be exhumed. Advocates of swift, painless death to end lingering and hopele tortures contend that the practice means only t same mercy to loved ones that is shown to dun animals. They seem to forget, however, that ma is something more than an animal, that he is e dowed with an immortal spirit and that consider tions which would be convincing, applied to an an mal have absolutely no weight, rightly considere when applied to a human being. Such consi ations seem never to have occurred to those who d fend a practice abhorrent alike to man's immort instincts and forbidden by the laws of God an man. For in reality the whole matter is summe up in the commandment "Thou shalt not kill"— command that is in force in every civilized countr by legislative enactment against murder and su cide. The Florida case may be useful in awaker ing the public conscience to vigorous protes against an easy, shallow sentimentalism whic would avoid physical suffering at any hazard, eve that of jeopardizing an immortal soul.

A Healthy Example

—IT IS A HEALTHY moral indication of the awakening spir of the times to note that the attempt to thrust one of th feminine characters in the Virginia tragedy into the limeligh by means of moving pictures, has been firmly frowned dow both in New York and Boston. Other cities should follow th example. If moral rehabilitation or vindication be sought, should not be by the way of the stage or the moving pictur theatre, but by more legitimate and suitable means.

Contents of this Number

Wednesday, October 4, 1911

	PAGE
Our Mail-Bag	970
Palestine Yielding to Change (Illustrated). By A. Forder	971, 985
Joy and Strength. Sermon. By Rev. Hugh Black, D. D.	972
Wants and Needs. By Eugene Thwing	973
A National Memorial to the Pilgrims (Illustrated)	974
Atlanta's New Tabernacle (Illustrated)	974
Men and Events of the Day (Portraits)	975
OUR EDITORIAL FORUM	976
THE BIBLE AND NEWSPAPER (Illustrated)	977
The Canadian Election (Illustrated)	978
In the Mellow Autumn Days (Illustrated). By Margaret E. Sangster	979
From Ocean to Ocean by Aeroplane (Illustrated)	980
Our Boys and Girls (Illustrated). By Miss Janet-Porter	981
A Wreath from Admiral Ching (Illustrated)	982
The Heart of Mehitable. By R. L. Weatherlow	983, 984, 985
The Decline of Darwinism	986
God-Given Freedom. Sunday School Lesson, by Dr. and Mrs. W. F. Crafts	987, 988
Peace Circles Multiplying	989, 991
A Voice from a Past Era	990
Views on Canada's Election	992
Believing the Bible. Christian Endeavor Topic	993
Some Things We May Know. Epworth League Topic	994

THE BIBLE AND NEWSPAPER

Conducted by FERDINAND C. IGLEHART, D.D.

...a's Forward Religious Movement

...VER five hundred Protestant ministers met ... at the Broadway Tabernacle, New York, Sep... tember 19, to launch a country-wide religious ...al for men and boys under the auspices of the ...nittee of Ninety-seven of the Men and Religion ...ward Movement. James G. Cannon, vice-presi... of the Fourth National Bank of New York ... is the chairman of the committee. The cam... leader, Fred B. Smith, acted as chairman of ...reat meeting. Addresses were made by Mr. ...ion, Mr. Fred Smith, Rev. Charles D. Stelzle, ... Arthur Brown, Fred S. Goodwin, John Alex... and Rev. David Russell, a South African ...gelist, representing the various phases of the ...undertaking. Thirty trained men in teams of ...ach are to organize committees of one hundred ...venty-six of the principal cities in the United ...es and Canada, and also in 1,500 of the minor ...s. The lines of work are five, namely: work with ..., social service, study of the Bible and Biblical ...ature, evangelism, and community extension ... among dock and factory employees. The five ... in each team will be specialists in this kind of ...t, each in a separate branch. The local com...ees of one hundred will be selected from the ...ous Protestant churches and their affiliated ...herhoods. It is expected that 23,000,000 of peo... will be touched by this nation-wide evangelism. ...ry Rood said: "There is no attempt in this ...ement to supplant the churches. All the work ... be done through the churches. The services of ...hirty trained men will be simply loaned to them. ... clergy will be represented on all the committees, ... the majority of the committees will be made up ... laymen, repre... ...ing the leading ...essions and bus... ...s enterprises of ...community." Mr. ...non declared that ... Committee of ...iety-seven was ...ely an instru... ...t in the proposed ...k and was deter... ...ed to recede as ...idly as possible ... the background, ...ving it to the ...rches to foster ... work which it is ...ting. "Our sole ...pose is to build ... existing church ...anizations by lay... before them new methods." There will be a great ...vention in New York City at an early date, ...ch will last several days, to project the great ...l-saving movement for men and boys. After the ...at meeting at the Broadway Tabernacle, Mr. ...non entertained about thirty of the workers at ... Metropolitan Club, after which they left for ...neapolis for a week's conference in the woods ... th of the city preparatory to the active campaign ... the movement in the Northwest. Some of the ...est men of the United States are back of this ...vement, and many millions of dollars will be ...red out for its material support. In these days, ...en there are so many temptations to men and so ...ny instrumentalities employed for the destruc... ... of young men, it is a hopeful sign to see men of ... at wealth and business ability and those of ...aller means and sincerest love giving themselves ... to this large undertaking worthy of the mind of ... heavenly Father and the affection of our Sav... in obedience to the Lord's command:

... ye into all the world, and preach the Gospel to every creature. ...rk 16:15.)

...serving Eggs

...Eggs, so important an article of diet and so ...y to decay, have taxed the ingenuity of genera... ...ns in preserving their freshness. They were ...ked in dry salt, put into brine, and now the cold ...rage process seems to be a great improvement on ...er methods of preservation. It is claimed that a ...lifornian has recently made the discovery of a ...ocess of egg preservation superior to all others. ...is this: Believing that the air carried the forces ... dissolution to the eggs through the pores of the ...ell, he has made a compound that will fill the pores ...d shut out the air. It is claimed that his experi... ...ntation has proven that his eggs can be kept ...rictly fresh for a long time. Whatever the process ...y be, there are enormous quantities of bad eggs ...at are thrown upon the market, disgusting the ...te and injuring the health of large numbers of ... population. There is such a popular and just uprising against impure foods that the venders of foul eggs are arrested in many places and in some instances thrown into prison. The public, when it buys eggs, has a right to fresh eggs at the high rate that is usually charged, and it is a fraud to offer it the nauseating and deadly thing which an egg becomes when touched by the finger of time. The child asking an egg of a parent does not expect in its place a poisonous thing.

Or if he shall ask an egg, will he offer him a scorpion? (Luke 11:12.)

Fatal Racing Car

President Taft had only left the New York State fair grounds at Syracuse, N. Y., a few minutes before one of the racing cars driven by Lee Oldfield at

W. R. Lane — David Russell — John S. Alexander — James G. Cannon — Roy B. Guild — F. S. Goodwin

Clarence A. Barbour — Charles D. Stelzle

Some Leaders of the National Revival

the rate of seventy-five miles an hour got out of control and dashed into a crowd of spectators, killing ten and injuring a score of others. Six were killed outright and four others died of their injuries. The track was an ordinary dirt one for horses and unfit for automobile contests; besides, the track had been sprinkled to lay the dust and had been made slippery, which increased the danger. Despite the wholesale slaughter, the race, instead of being declared off by the authorities, was continued to the finish and De Palma won the victory. The racing mania in this country in many places amounts to insanity. The recklessness of the contests on the earth and in the air has gotten to be so great that there is hardly a great meet without from one to a dozen killings. At the recent meeting in Chicago, where two aviators met their death on the same day, airships went up from an unsafe field into more perilous winds, and the unnamable brutality of continuing the contests with the black shadow of death over the day is matched by that of continuing the race at Syracuse when the second foremost car had made a slaughter-place of the field. The reckless speeding is done on the water as well as on the land and in the air. The very day of the butchery at Syracuse Dixie IV., a motor boat at Buffalo, was under such momentum that before it could be stopped it had run up on the bank and into the crowd, injuring two so severely that they are expected to die. Our modern inventions, which under wise direction are a blessing, have so many perils connected with them that recklessness must be counted a criminality, and if our laws are not strong enough there should be new ones enacted that will protect the public against such wholesale murder as that at Syracuse and at many other places. For the law is needed to protect those within the cars as well as those without them, whose rights at present are poorly regarded. These safeguards of human life remind us of the instruction given in olden times for the preservation of precious lives.

When thou buildest a new house, then thou shalt make a battlement for thy roof, that thou bring not blood upon thy house, if any man fall from thence. (Deut. 22:8.)

Dr. Wiley Vindicated

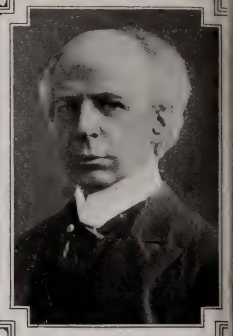
Just before starting on his trip around the continent, President Taft made public his decision which completely vindicates Dr. Harvey W. Wiley, Chief of the Bureau of Chemistry in the Department of Agriculture, rejects the charges preferred against him by the Department's Board and severely condemns those responsible for the trouble to which the government's food expert has been subjected for years. Attorney-General Wickersham, who approved the report of the Committee, had recommended that Dr. Wiley's resignation be asked for. The board recommended that Dr. Rusby, the chief chemist of the bureau, should be dismissed, that Dr. Kebler, chief of the drug laboratory, should be reduced, and that Dr. W. D. Bigelow, assistant chief of the bureau, be allowed to quit the service. The Congressional investigation indicated that there had been a determined plot of the enemies of pure food in the different industries of the nation, including the brewers and distillers, to discredit and drive from the service Dr. Wiley, a man of great ability, incorruptible integrity, all-daring courage, and singular devotion to duty, and that certain persons in the Agricultural Department had been in some way led into the plot for his degradation and removal. Deep and widespread national indignation has been the result, as the public believed that tens of thousands of lives had been saved by the fearless and incorruptible manner by which Dr. Wiley has used his bureau to discover dangerous food adulterations and bring punishment upon those responsible for them. The persecution of Dr. Wiley has proved a boomerang. The President in his report makes a strong hint that if Congress shall not investigate the weakness or treachery of the Agricultural Department, as a protector of the pure food of the nation, he himself will be compelled to take notice of the abuses and compel a reform. Thus the pit dug for Dr. Wiley is full of the men that dug it.

He made a pit, and digged it, and is fallen into the ditch which he made. (Ps. 7:15.)

Vaccination Against Typhoid

The entire army of the United States, officers and privates alike, is to be inoculated against typhoid fever. Major-General Leonard Wood issued an order making it compulsory for every officer and enlisted man in the army under forty-five years of age to subject himself to the typhoid fever vaccine. Heretofore such protection was voluntary. It is now obligatory. The order was issued at this time largely because there was such singular success in inoculating the division of the army at San Antonio against the dreaded typhoid. It is news almost too good to be true that the deadly scourge of the army, navy and private citizens generally is to be eliminated by the marvelous effects of anti-typhoid inoculation. The triumph of medical science over this fearful disease in our army is almost as miraculous as the cure of the general in the Syrian army from his deadly malady.

Then he went down, and dipped himself seven times in Jordan, according to the saying of the man of God; and his flesh came again like unto the flesh of a little child, and he was clean. (II. Kings 5:14.)



The Canadian Election Surprise

Hon. R. L. Borden

The Dominion House of Parliament at Ottawa

Sir Wilfrid Laurier

WHEN, on September 21, the electors of the Dominion of Canada declared their will regarding the fate of the United States' Reciprocity proposals, they provided a surprise not only for most people on this side of the international boundary, but for many of their own countrymen as well. From the Atlantic to the Pacific the reciprocity proposals of Mr. Taft's government were voted down, and with them the Liberal government of Sir Wilfrid Laurier was defeated. Though there were other issues before the electors, the entire campaign was carried on respectively for and against reciprocity. The result of the election was a landslide for the Conservatives, who have wiped out a liberal majority of forty-five in the Dominion Parliament, and will go to Ottawa with a still greater majority of their own. The first returns from the Dominion gave the Conservative party a majority of fifty members, out of a total Parliamentary membership of 221. It is altogether likely that these numbers will remain practically unchanged after the various contested seats have been decided, and the by-elections have been held.

The Liberals lost ground in practically every Province of the Dominion. Where they won their majorities were small. Where the Conservatives won their majorities were tremendous. In Ontario, the most densely populated Province of Canada, where the anti-reciprocity sentiment was the strongest, the Conservatives made almost a clean sweep. Even Quebec largely forsook the banner of the Liberal party, and whereas for the last Parliament it returned fifty-three Liberal and twelve Conservative members, it this year returned thirty-six Liberals, twenty-seven Conservatives, three Nationalists and one Independent. Throughout the entire Dominion the results were very similar to those of Quebec. In the middle western provinces, where the wheat farmers had been expected to return large majorities in favor of reciprocity, they surprised even the Conservative party itself by electing their majorities on its side.

It is doubtful which side is most surprised at the landslide, for it was nothing less. The Conservatives had claimed victory, but they expected nothing like they got. Not only did Sir Wilfrid Laurier, receiving the returns at Quebec, see his majority swept away, but one after another he saw his Cabinet Ministers beaten.

Mr. W. S. Fielding, Finance Minister, and William Patterson, Canadian authors of the reciprocity pact, were both defeated. George P. Graham, Minister of Railways, was defeated in Ontario. W. L. Mackenzie-King, Minister of Labor, Sydney Fisher, Minister of Agriculture, Sir Frederick Borden, Minister of Militia, and William Templeman, Minister of Inland Revenue, were all defeated, in most cases by large majorities.

Sir Wilfrid himself, who has been for fifteen years the Premier of the country, was elected without opposition in Quebec East, but whether he will consent to lead a minority opposition in Parliament is as yet unknown. Before the election the veteran statesman announced that in case of his defeat he would immediately retire from active politics. If this should be the case it is altogether likely that Sir Wilfrid, than whom there is none in the Dominion better fitted, will fill the post of Canadian High Commissioner in London, now occupied by the venerable Lord Strathcona.

When the results from enough constitutencies to decide the issue had been received at Sir Wilfrid's hotel in Quebec, he said: "There is no doubt but that we have been decisively defeated. I gladly lay down the Premiership, a burden I have carried for fifteen years. We believed that in making the reciprocity arrangement we had done something which would be greatly to the benefit of the people of Canada. The electors have declared otherwise, and I bow to their decision. I regret that we have been unable to carry reciprocity, which I still believe would have promoted the material advancement of Canada and would have promoted the growing friendship between the United States and Great Britain. However, the country has spoken. We must bow to the inevitable, and I cheerfully do so."

The Honorable Robert Laird Borden, who successfully led the forces of the Conservative party against reciprocity, was elected in Halifax by the comparatively small margin of 200 votes. Mr. Borden is one of the few well-known Canadian statesmen who have not reached prominence after a long career of political activity. Mr. Borden was first elected to Parliament when the Conservative party was under the leadership of Sir Charles Tupper. Previous to that time he had been a member of one of the most famous law firms of lower Canada. He is a descendant of one of the United Empire Loyalist families, and is a cou of Sir Frederick Borden, the defeated Liberal M ister of Militia.

Mr. Borden is now in Ottawa organizing the n government, and Earl Grey, the retiring Govern General, has postponed his departure until a f days after the expiration of his term, so that t administration may be intact before the arrival the new Governor-General, the Duke of Connaug on October 14.

There were a number of influences which operat to produce the results which the election has show Among these, perhaps the most potent were a co trywide desire to "let well enough alone," the sy pathetic opposition of Canada's manufacturi industries which have thriven under protection, t agitation of the annexation bogy, and the stro influence of the British imperialistic and tariff form propaganda. The victory is so decisive th the Borden government will not be dependent up the French Nationalists, who, under Henri Bo rassa, took seats from the Laurier government the naval issue. Mr. Borden's naval policy is l the closest kind of co-operation with the imper Admiralty in matters of naval defense. Sir W frid Laurier's was for the establishment of a Can dian navy, but the contracts for the ships have n yet been awarded. The Nationalists disliked t Laurier way enough to fight him over it; they d like Mr. Borden's more. Some fear had be expressed that this new Nationalist party mig gain sufficient strength to assume the attitude the Irish party in the British House of Commo but that is now entirely out of the question. M Borden enters office bound by no tariff plad except to create a Tariff Commission. He is n pledged to respect even the tariff preference thirty-three per cent. now extended to products the British Isles.

President Taft heard the returns from the Can dian election while attending a banquet tende him by the citizens of Kalamazoo.

"I have just been informed that reciprocity h failed in Canada. For me it is a great disappoi ment. I had hoped that it would be put through prove the correctness of my judgment, that it wou be a good thing for both countries. It takes two make a bargain, and if Canada declines we can s go on doing business at the old stand," he said.

TOPICS OF INTEREST THROUGHOUT THE WORLD

—As a result of the rioting and general disorder in Vienna, Austria, due to the advances of food prices, that city was on September 18 in the hands of the military authorities, the garrison being reinforced by several other regiments. All the palaces and public buildings were guarded. Martial law was declared in the Ottakring district, where the most serious disorders occurred. This district was occupied by 6,000 troops.

—Apartment-house life is extending rapidly in New York City. Gigantic buildings, ten and twelve stories in height, are crowding out the single dwellings on many of the finest streets and avenues. The record figure for apartments was reached a few days ago when a millionaire leased one on the tenth story of a new fire-proof skyscraper on Fifth Avenue, consisting of twenty-two rooms and eight bathrooms, at $25,000 a year. Two other apartments on the fourth and tenth stories were leased at $20,000 each.

—During the week of September 17, the revolutionary mutterings that have been heard in Spain of late took the form of strikes and rioting in several parts of the country. The most serious outbreak took place at Valencia, where the city was cut off from all outside communication, and martial law declared. Premier Canalejas, who heads a government which though in no way revolutionary, is in fullest sympathy with the labor agitations, has said, "Martial law notwithstanding, the government wonld respect the right to strike, if legally followed," but he gave fair warning that if the employees of the public services go out without giving the legal notification the promptest measures will be taken to end the strike. At the slightest sign of revolt," he added, "the troops would use their arms without hesitation. I am determined, once for all, to finish with these mutterings of revolution," he declared. The latest reports indicate that the whole affair has been a failure from the Socialists' and Republicans' point of view. The labor element failed to sympathize with its nominal leaders, and the general strike did not materialize. Most of the leaders have been arrested as rioters and conspirators against the government.

—The most recent dispatches from Cheng-tu, China, announce that the foreigners who remained in the city have not been molested and are being civilly treated by the authorities. Food is again entering the city, and the shops are reopening. A cablegram from the British Consul says: "There has been no fighting within the city since September 7, but there have been several engagements outside the walls, the insurgents losing considerably and loyal troops inconsiderably." Apparently, the proclamation issued by General Chao has not been hee Dispatches to the French and German legations from Cheng dated, respectively, September 10 and September 11, indic that the commander of the troops in the capital of Sze-Ch attempted to conciliate the besieging forces by promising to decapitate the leaders of the anti-railway movement and offering to indemnify the families of the insurgents who been killed. The anti-railway loan movement seems to be ing on an increasingly revolutionary character throughout country, and the government is concerned over the recent m ing of anti-loan agitators at Hong-kong. At this meetin was resolved to organize the opposition in the Provinces Hu-Peh, Hu-Nan, Kwang-Tung, and Sze-Chuen. In Pek the palaces and the residence of the officials are protected extra guards.

—The Rev. David Russell, the famous South African ev gelist, arrived in New York on September 13 on the White S liner Oceanic to take part in the "Man and Religion" m ment which is to be conducted by the Religious Work Bur of the International Committee of the Y. M. C. A. A series evangelical services is to be held in ninety cities of the Un States and Canada, and the campaign will last until May.

IN THE MELLOW AUTUMN DAYS

By MARGARET E. SANGSTER

Manner and Dress

THE person who prides himself upon hiding a kind heart under a brusque manner is making one of the greatest mistakes in life. Manner expresses personality and good manners are the outgrowth of a fine nature. Think of it as you choose, and as you do so, mentally run over the list of your friends. One of them is serene and dignified. To violate a courtesy, to commit a rudeness, to make any one uncomfortable by look or word would be to her impossible; another is impulsive and emotional, a woman with quick birdlike movement giving the impression of haste even when she is at leisure, and this habitual manner of hers belongs to her just as does the color of her hair and the curve of her lips. She too has polished manners, the manners that indicate genuine goodness and ready sympathy. A third acquaintance rises in memory and this one is deficient in tact, thoughtless in criticism and prone to say the wrong thing at the wrong time; a rough diamond her friends call her, as though they would excuse by the phrase her custom of trampling on polite usage and leaving at her back a trail of wounded feelings. A diamond is always a diamond but it is when polished that its rare beauty and great value are combined.

The tactless woman leaves her house in the morning and walks down the street. Meeting a neighbor she bluntly exclaims, "Is anything the matter? You look ill. Your complexion is sallow. You ought to see the doctor." Addressed after this fashion nine out of ten women although they have felt perfectly well are immediately convinced that they are below par. The suggestion that they are sallow, that they are looking ill, while a neighbor advises them to go to the doctor, robs them of energy, depletes their vital force, and produces the very condition which would have been theirs had the fancied symptoms existed. Equally in fault and equally an ill-mannered woman is she who assures her friend, unsolicited, that her new hat is unbecoming, her skirt too narrow and badly hung, and the goods she has chosen likely to fray or fade or otherwise prove unsatisfactory.

. . .

THERE is a type of comparatively well-mannered woman who is so stiff, reserved and unresponsive, that she holds everyone else aloof; it may be that she is shy, but people in general imagine that she is haughty; she has never learned the art of greeting strangers cordially and of showing the world a sunshiny face. She may be the truest of Christians but she is not winsome, and Christ-like folk should possess that sweet and radiant quality.

Speaking of dress, there is absolutely no merit in neglecting its essential points. One's dress should befit the occasion when it is worn; to drag a trained gown over the kitchen floor while preparing a meal is as much a sin against good taste as to trail lace and velvet across a muddy thoroughfare, although the kitchen may be as clean as hands can make it and the greatest contrast in its shining purity to the muddy street. Both street and kitchen are areas of business activity, and the gown that is suitable for the drawing room suits neither of them. Dress need not be costly or extravagant but the rule is imperative that it shall fit the occasion.

. . .

AN eloquent clergyman preached a sermon not a great while ago to an audience of five thousand people. The sermon was one of profound spirituality, wide learning and rarely felicitous phrasing. Its effect was singularly marred by the incident that the preacher was neither in clerical dress nor in a costume that might have been worn by a business man on a week day. Possibly his luggage had been detained on the road, or possibly as the day was very warm he was indifferent to appearances, but a soiled and crumpled linen suit diverted the attention of fastidious hearers from the message he gave to the untidiness of the messenger.

We must not overlook the importance of externals; they have much to do with success in life, much to do with influence, and much to accomplish in the education of the next generation.

. . .

Women in Council

AT this season the prudent housekeeper is careful to see that the heating arrangements of the home are in good order for the winter. To guard against the danger of fire is as much a duty of the season as to supply the bins in the cellar with coal and to lay in a stock of kindling wood. Dwellers in the larger cities and towns make different arrangements as to the winter fuel from those necessary in the country, but whether a large or small amount of fuel is purchased at a time, whether a house is heated from a central plant by which several adjacent houses are warmed, or has its independent arrangement, the first essential to be sought is safety. Fire is the most alarming experience as well as the most perilous that can befall a household. The man of the house or the plumber should be sure by investigation that chimneys and flues are in perfect order and that there is nowhere the chance of casuality from them. The housekeeper who uses oiled cloths to polish floors ought not to put these away in a closet or drawer, spontaneous combustion being sometimes the result of this special carelessness. Matches should not be thrown into waste baskets or anywhere else unless they have ceased to burn. A match may appear to be out when its flame is not exhausted. In two instances occurring lately in a suburban town near New York, in a single week domestic helpers lost their lives through taking risks about fire. One usually careful woman poured alcohol into a lamp under a chafing dish while the lamp was still burning; this replenishing cost her hours of agony ended only by death. In a house a few squares away another woman drenched her kitchen fire with kerosene and in consequence perished. Housekeepers should stand on guard against recklessness in the management of fires great and small. And fire once started may destroy a whole village or an acre of city blocks.

. . .

The Mother's Opportunity

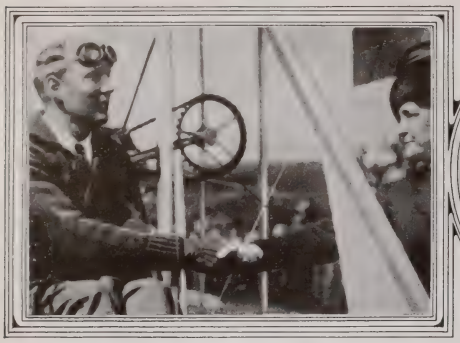
GOD and mother have the children first. Before the world has a chance to mar the purity and innocence of the little one in the cradle, the mother may lead the child by the hand straight to the feet of the Master. The earliest impressions are indelible, and in the first three years of life a child receives and retains them with amazing quickness. Before children are old enough to go to Sunday School, the mother at home may teach them to pray, tell them about the Saviour and make them familiar with the dear stories of the Bible. Here, too, the father may lend assistance. A woman who is herself a grandmother recalls with vivid delight the days when she sat as a small child on her father's knee with his arm around her, while in the gathering twilight of a Sunday evening he told her about Jacob and the vision of angels, about Joseph sold into Egypt, about Samuel, Elijah, David and Daniel, so that the heroes of Bible history were familiar figures to her before she ever took her seat in a Sunday School class. Those who are afraid to tell children that sweet story of old because they fear that the immature mind will not understand it, have not themselves received the Saviour into their hearts with the simplicity of childhood.

. . .

A Prayer

Keep us, Lord, obedient still
To the promptings of Thy will.
Make us very quick to know
Whither Thou wouldst have us go.

Pardon, Lord, the weak complaint.
Low desires and efforts faint;
Help us that we strive anew.
On this earth Thy work to do.



May we listen for Thy voice,
May we hear it and rejoice;
Round each task and duty then
With a trustful, glad Amen.

A Glimpse of the Past

THE happy party who are spending a summer day on the water chatting gayly, singing bits of song and enjoying every moment, long ago laid by their oars, and having had their fill of earthly pleasure fell peacefully asleep. Summers come and summers go; successive parties of people glide down the stream of time. There is nothing to make us sad but everything to make us happy in this reflection. Each generation comes to its own, does its work and leaves to its successors a legacy of wealth gained and hopes fulfilled. In 1830 men and women were contented with the dreamy progress of the rowboat; in 1911 they are satisfied with nothing less than the airship; at least present indications point that way.

From Ocean to Ocean by Aeroplane

Robert G. Fowler Bidding His Mother Goodby

James J. Ward

Calbraith P. Rodgers, Ready to Start the Journey

IN SPITE of the fact that the last few months have seen the death roll of aviators draw perilously near the century mark those same months have witnessed probably the greatest developments in the art which tend to its final usefulness and success. Harry N. Atwood of Boston as he voyaged above the country with his handbags strapped beside him on his aeroplane made us begin to feel that the day when the airship would be a vehicle of far more general use might soon be expected. Man's ambition to learn the paths of the air and turn them to his service seems to be indomitable. At Atlantic City Arthur Vaniman, in spite of the keen disappointment which he experienced when he assisted Arthur Wellman in a similar experiment last year, is constructing a dirigible balloon in which he plans to cross the Atlantic. From Paris comes the announcement that M. Mamet, a French aviator, is about to start upon an attempt to encircle the globe with a Bleriot monoplane, carrying a passenger, while from England the dispatches tell of the inauguration on September 9 of the first regular government mail service by aeroplane. A few days ago a group of notables gathered at the Hendon Aerodrome to witness the start of the young aviator who was to carry from there to Windsor, a distance of about twenty miles, the first bag of official mail which had ever been transported by the airline.

Here in America almost nation-wide attention is being devoted to the adventures of three young aviators who are competing in an attempt to cross the continent for a prize of $50,000 which was offered by William Randolph Hearst, the publisher of several newspapers in different parts of the country. Two of these young aviators, Calbraith P. Rodgers and James J. Ward, are making the attempt to fly from the Atlantic to the Pacific, while Robert G. Fowler commenced his journey from Los Angeles and has New York for his goal.

Mr. Fowler was the first of the competitors to make a start. After he had said good-by to his mother he set off on the first stage of his journey, confident that he would be able to cross the Sierra Nevada mountain range on the following day. Before he reached his appointed stopping place for the night he met with an accident and was compelled to land at Colfax, California. This landing was disastrous to the biplane which he was using and necessitated a delay of several days while new parts were shipped to replace those which were damaged. As the time allowed for the completion of the journey is thirty days Mr. Fowler has been making all possible speed since his biplane was repaired and he was enabled to resume his flight.

James J. Ward, who was the second starter in the contest, rose from Governor's Island in New York harbor early on the morning of September 13. It was his intention to follow the tracks of the Erie Railway through the State of New Jersey, but due to the labyrinth of tracks running out of Jersey City he lost his way and spent most of his first day in the air in searching for the route he had chosen for himself. After he had spent the first night at Paterson, N. J., he flew on to Callicoon in Sullivan County, N. Y. There night overtook him and he decided to stop. On the following day he reached Corning, N. Y., where he was compelled to lose a day on account of trouble with his engine. Only twelve miles were added to his total the next day for he was again brought down by a balky motor.

All along the route of his flight whole villages and towns turned out their population to see the first aeroplane which had ever visited that part of the country.

While he was still at Addison, N. Y., his last stop, he received a telegram of sympathy for his misfortune and best wishes for the future from his fellow contestant, C. P. Rodgers. Mr. Rodgers had started from the midst of a dense throng at Sheepshead Bay, N. Y., on the afternoon of the seventeenth and in one successful flight reached his first intended goal, Middletown, N. Y. All through the late afternoon his crane-like machine could be seen moving at great speed about two thousand feet in the air against a background of gray clouds or sunset gold. Mr. Rodgers was delayed in Middletown by the non-arrival of the chief mechanician from the Wright Brothers' factory at Dayton, O., by whom he wished to have his machine examined and put in perfect condition.

An Indian Mountain Mission

TEHRI is a native-ruled State of India with 5,000 square miles of mountains, on whose steep and rugged sides are villages, with a population estimated at 3,000, all unevangelized. Landour, which touches the border of Tehri, is the principal market town for the greater part of the State. It is a land of idolatry and heathen superstition. Each summit has its god. Nag, the serpent god, rules in our district.

During a recent Gospel tour we visited Kakru, and found it a good centre for mission work. The valley is thickly peopled, having villages at every mile, and along the river course a path used by all. Sometimes a group would sit for a long time listening to the reading and the explaining. We spent five days visiting the surrounding villages, selling copies of the Gospel and preaching. My boots were so worn that I had to tie them together with wire.

At Airi one who had laughed told me later his story. He had never heard such things as I had spoken about a resurrection, and he wanted to hear more. He would come to our camp for more medicine and more Gospel and would follow us about while we remained in the neighborhood. He took with him some of the written Gospels which we gave him. Another man, who showed interest, took me about to the people, and himself bought a Gospel. He was an old accomplice of the famous bravo Gabbu.

This season some Christian devotees from the plains have come to see us, for a quiet consultation concerning Scriptural methods and teachings.

It is now eleven and a half years since my wife came with me to India. Since she came out we have never been away from the Tehri Border Mission more than for a tour in India itself. Our future is as unknown at present as ever it was. One thing we know—that Christ can be both eyes and hands for us, as far as we need, until we celebrate his supremacy in the kingdom.

Landour, India. WILLIAM GREET.

Himalayan Mountaineers in the Tehri District

Maine May Yet Be "Dry"

ALTERNATELY "wet" and "dry" as the canvass of the vote for and against the repeal of State-wide prohibition in Maine proceeded, the prospects on September 20 suddenly took a turn which may prove favorable to the friends of temperance. The latest figures on that date were as follows:

On repeal of the constitutional prohibitory amendment: For repeal, 60,487; against repeal, 60,461; majority for repeal, 26. The State-wide primary system was adopted by a majority of 44,036, there being 65,810 votes in favor of it. The majority in favor of locating the State capitol permanently at Augusta was 18,384.

Attorney-General Pattangall stated, however, that the question of the repeal of the prohibitory amendment was still in doubt, and it was his belief that corrections would show a considerable majority against repeal. The Council will serve notice of any intended corrections, and will set a date on which a hearing will be held. The time for receiving corrections will not expire until October 9. Governor Frederick W. Plaisted is authority for the statement that corrections would be made in the returns of several towns which might materially alter the result. The prohibitionists do not by any means give up the fight, or consider it hopeless. They believe that the final hearing on the canvass will give them the State by a small majority.

Our Boys and Girls

To Get Up a Successful Fair

MANY Cozy Corner girls have asked for suggestions for getting up a Fair, a Sunday School Bazaar or a Church Sale of some kind in October.

The most successful church fairs usually include a fancy-work table, a sweetmeat table, and an entertainment corner. The main hints for a successful fancy-work table are these: Have every bit of work on the table daintily and carefully made, and do not ask high prices. Prices should not much exceed the cost of materials; your work should represent your donation to the sale.

The Fancy-Work Table

FROM a yard and a half of white linen and three quarters of a yard of nainsook for bands, many collars and cuffs can be made and embroidered. Keep the designs simple. Glazed linen thread is best for embroidering and buttonholing. Linen handkerchiefs hemstitched or with roll-and-whip hems are pretty and sell well. Needle books, glove cases, pincushion covers done in shadow embroidery and drawn work are always pretty. Shield-pin holders and all varieties of bags, shoe bags, stocking bags, string bags, dusting bags, broom bags, laundry bags, dainty handkerchief bags to hang on the bureau, canton flannel bags for the silver, work bags and reticules, little silk bags for rings, embroidery and sewing bags made of cretonne, silk or linen, and aprons with large pockets to hold embroidery, worsteds or clothes pins, find ready sale at a fair. Girls and boys who have burnt-wood outfits can make many pretty fair ornaments. Doilies, pincushions, bureau scarfs, tea cozies, covered rings for necktie holders, handkerchief, ribbon and veil cases—there is almost no end of the pretty, easily made things girls can make to find a ready sale at a fair.

The Sweetmeat Table

PEPPERMINTS, old-fashioned molasses candy, fudge and popcorn balls and patties, candied orange peel and home-made jams and jellies always sell well. If you plan to have a sweetmeat table be sure to write to the Aunt in the Cozy Corner for recipes. She will gladly send them on request.

The Entertainment Corner

ANY bright, entertaining girl who will trim up a Fairy-tale Tent where she will tell two or three of the most charming of the fairy tales at stated intervals will attract all the children at the fair. A small charge of five cents admission will soon mount up, for a fairy-tale booth is never known to be a failure.

Lady Bountiful

LADY BOUNTIFUL is always a drawing card. Some energetic and attractive girl should be dressed quaintly and stand on a draped box or barrel. In her hand she should hold a large bag of toys, each wrapped up in a little package. She should pick out each package and talk about it and the good times any child is sure to have playing with the toy contained therein. When she has succeeded in working up enthusiasm about it some one who has been listening is pretty sure to call out, "I will take it!" and by paying five, ten or fifteen cents he buys the package.

I should be quite sure that there are no worthless toys hidden away in Lady Bountiful's bag, for after all it is Lady Bountiful, who should not be disappointing to any one.

For further hints and suggestions concerning church fairs, Sunday School fairs or fêtes or festivals on either a little or a big scale, you may write to the Aunt in the Cozy Corner; she will gladly help you out.

"HAVE YOU HEARD?"—Painting by Carl Marr, Metropolitan Museum of Art, N.Y. City

October Souvenir and Prize Offer

IN ORDER that every girl and boy, big and little, may feel included in this Special Prize Offer, the Aunt in the Cozy Corner will award for best copy of the picture on this page, or verse, or story in less than 300 words, entitled "Have You Heard?" a first prize of a gun-metal watch, a second prize of a Brownie Eastman kodak, a third prize of a box of best Japanese water-color paints, and twenty charming extra prizes in order of merit. In every instance the age of the boy or girl entering the Cozy Corner Prize Contests is taken into consideration, and prizes awarded accordingly. All work in this competition should be in by the 16th of October.

The October Souvenir

EVERY one who writes for the first time to the Aunt in the Cozy Corner, and all others who enclose postage stamp to cover the expense of sending, will receive our especially lovely Souvenir for October.

Good-Night Verse.—I love them that love me, and those that seek me diligently shall find me.

The Aunt in the Cozy Corner

Bible House, New York.

You ought to try Hinds Honey and Almond Cold Cream—it's simply fine for the complexion.

Just now every woman needs this delightful Cold Cream to restore the natural beauty of skin and complexion after the ravages of the hot summer sun.

HINDS Honey and Almond COLD CREAM 25c

will assist Nature to free the pores of impurities and will clear the skin of blemishes and unsightly eruptions. It dries in quickly—is not greasy or sticky—is guaranteed to contain nothing harmful even to the most delicate skin. It cannot possibly cause a growth of hair.

If you will continue the use of Hinds Cold Cream every day you'll be delighted to find what a wonderful beautifier it is, and how convenient to use. It will prevent and relieve chapping, windburn and dry, rough skin; also will keep the skin fresh and girlish in spite of wind and dust.

Hinds Honey and Almond Cold Cream comes to you in an attractive air-tight tube that keeps the cream always fresh and in perfect condition.

Men who shave are enthusiastic about Hinds Cold Cream. It prevents dryness, soothes irritation, relieves cuts, keeps the skin soft and in a fine healthy condition.

Price 25c in air-tight tubes, at all dealers, or postpaid by us if not obtainable. Remember that Hinds Honey and Almond Cold Cream is entirely different from ordinary Cold Cream. Order by name and do not accept substitutes. We want you to try this COLD CREAM and will send you a sample tube FREE, with illustrated booklet.

If you prefer a liquid cream, you will like Hinds Honey and Almond Cream. A favorite in many refined homes. Sold everywhere in bottles, 50c. Sample bottle free on request.

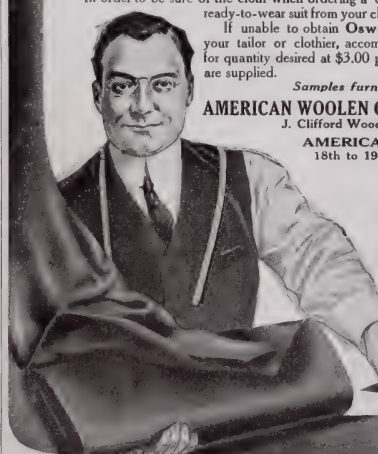
A. S. HINDS, 90 West Street, Portland, Maine

Oswego Serge is a staple year-round fabric for men's wear, a Serge-at-its-best, which—owing to its dependability—has been produced year after year in increasing quantity by the

American Woolen Company

Wm. M. Wood, President.

Oswego Serge grows in popular favor, possessing those characteristics which appeal to well dressed men, and stamp serge as the fabric of universal wear.



You seek style, fit and finish. Let us speak for Oswego Serge—a masterpiece of the loom, possessing wear, feel, hang and finish. Made of finest wool, and—quality considered, priced low.

In order to be sure of the cloth when ordering a custom suit from your tailor, or a ready-to-wear suit from your clothier, insist on Oswego Serge.

If unable to obtain Oswego Serge, send us the name of your tailor or clothier, accompanied by money order or check for quantity desired at $3.00 per yard, and we will see that you are supplied.

Samples furnished on request.

AMERICAN WOOLEN COMPANY OF NEW YORK
J. Clifford Woodhull, Selling Agent
AMERICAN WOOLEN BUILDING
18th to 19th St. on 4th Ave., New York

How to Keep Floors New

Every floor that has no carpet should be coated with Elastica Floor Finish. There is nothing to take its place.

Elastica is the only thing needed on a natural wood floor. It protects the paint on a painted floor, indoors or on porches. It makes old paint look new. It doubles the life of oilcloth or linoleum.

Rough usage doesn't mar it. Heels and casters don't injure it. Water cannot turn it white. It is tough and elastic and clean.

There is no other floor finish ever created which actually keeps a floor new —which gets rid of all floor troubles.

Rich in Oil

Elastica Floor Finish is the final result of our 40 years of experience in the making of varnish.

We have worked out a way to combine in its manufacture a large percentage of properly treated oil. Thus the varnish is made extremely tough and elastic. And that oil is so treated that the varnish dries quickly and becomes very hard.

The result is a mar-proof, durable varnish which meets every idea of a floor finish.

There is nothing else like Elastica, for the secret of making is ours alone. Other finishes are called "elastic," but only the genuine Elastica —marked as below—will do what you expect. You will never use a brittle floor varnish or wax when you once have tried Elastica.

TRADE ELASTICA MARK.

FLOOR FINISH

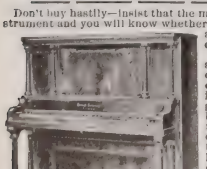
Look for this Trade-Mark on a Yellow Label. All others are imitations.

Sent Free—We want to send you a book, "How to Finish Floors," filled with expert suggestions about finishing old and new floors. Also samples of Elastica coated on paper for tests. Also a beautiful bookmark—just to repay you for writing us.

Simply send us your name and address—a postal will do.

Ask for Book 113

Address Standard Varnish Works, 29 Broadway, New York, or 2620 Armour Av., Chicago, or 301 Mission St., San Francisco, Calif. Or International Varnish Co., Ltd., Toronto, Canada.



STANDARD VARNISH WORKS

ASK YOUR DEALER (61)

Cornish Sent On A Year's Trial

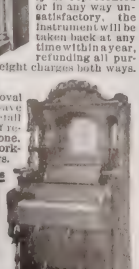
Sold Under Bond To Please

Don't buy hastily—insist that the maker prove his instrument and you will know whether it will please you, and is all the seller claimed.



Cornish pianos and organs are sent on trial to demonstrate quality without obligating prospective buyers to keep them and are sold on a binding basis that, if not exactly as represented or in any way unsatisfactory, the instrument will be taken back at any time within a year, refunding all purchase money, together with freight charges both ways.

Sold At Factory Prices

By the Cornish "Year's Approval Plan" you buy intelligently, save one-third or more of regular retail price, and get an instrument of renowned quality and superior tone.

Perfection of material and workmanship guaranteed for 25 years.

You Choose Your Own Terms

Send today for the handsome Cornish Book, which explains fully our very liberal terms of selling plans and shows the latest styles of pianos and organs. You should have this beautifully illustrated book, whether you buy or not.

Cornish Co. Washington, N. J.

Established Over Half a Century

A Wreath from Admiral Ching

A DETACHMENT of sixty Chinese marines from the cruiser Hai-Chi, which was visiting New York harbor, marched in perfect formation up Riverside Drive on the afternoon of September 18, just behind a big automobile in which were Rear Admiral Ching Pih Kwang, the commander of the cruiser, and the Mayor of New York City. The occasion was a ceremony in which the talented Chinese sailor on behalf of his government placed a laurel wreath on the sarcophagus of General Grant. The Mayor of the city met the Admiral and his detachment of marines at Ninety-Sixth Street, and after a bugler from the mounted police squad which formed the Mayor's escort had blown a salute, during which the Admiral stood attention with his hand at the salute, the two entered the Mayor's automobile and the procession started up the Drive.

The Detachment of Marines Marching to Gen. Grant's Tomb

The squad of mounted police led the way and were followed by the automobile. Immediately behind this came two gunners of almost gigantic proportions, who bore between them an immense laurel wreath. These two men formed part of the detachment, under the command of a lieutenant of marines, which astonished the crowds that gathered to see the parade with the clean-cut precision of their movements and marching.

Arriving at the tomb the police and the marines took up their positions in front of the broad walk before the steps. Captain Burnside, the veteran custodian of the tomb, met the Mayor and the Admiral as they stepped from the automobile. The police saluted, the marines presented arms, and the two gunners bearing the wreath stepped forward and handed it to the captain. To find a place for this new tribute to General Grant's memory it was necessary to remove a number of the wreaths already on the sarcophagus. One of these was that which was placed there by Admiral Togo during his recent visit to America.

After the ceremonies within the tomb the Admiral addressed a crowd of about five hundred people who had gathered at the steps. The marines stood with bared heads as the Admiral stepped forward and bowing to the crowd addressed it in excellent English. "It is a great satisfaction to me," he said, "to be able to pay this small token of respect and esteem to the distinguished general lying here. The great respect borne the late general by our country will always be held in the greatest reverence. I am heartily thankful to Mayor Gaynor for arranging this visit and this ceremony for me."

Admiral Ching's decoration of Grant's tomb recalls the manifestations of respect shown for the great general in 1897 by the Chinese statesman Li Hung Chang at the ceremony attending the planting of a tree near the tomb, and by Chinese Minister Wu Ting-fang, who eulogized Grant at the memorial exercises on May 30, 1901.

For the Perplexed Young Woman

THE question of just how a young woman may find out how best to invest her life for God is sometimes a difficult one, and frequently puzzles the minds of those who are longing for greater Christian activity, or who at least are not at ease in their present work, feeling blindly that they are not using their life to the full for God. Many keenly realize their need of a wider outlook upon the world and a better knowledge of their own ability, to enable them to decide this question.

It was to meet just such questions as these that the Chicago Training School for City, Home and Foreign Missions was established. This school is in its twenty-sixth year of operation. More than three thousand women have been its students. Out from it have gone two hundred fifty-three to the foreign mission field, about one hundred to various departments of the missionary and evangelistic work at home, and a thousand into deaconess work. And (possibly more important still) many hundreds of others of its students are in their own private homes, better mothers, better workers in the church and Sunday School than they would have been without the Bible work and the training.

Attendance at this institution for a month or a term for any perplexed or restless young woman would be absolutely without risk or loss of any kind. The small expense would be abundantly repaid by the uplift and inspiration of the Bible study.

It is not necessary to determine to devote one's self to any form of religious work before entering the school; it is only necessary to desire to know more of the Bible and to get wide views of life and the world. What better finishing to the education of any young woman, even if she has no thought of special religious work, than a year or two of earnest Bible study and Christian Social Service? What better place to decide just what work the Lord is calling one to do? Friends who desire to make personal investigation are very welcome at "The Club," next door, and the expense is very moderate. The expenses are reduced to a minimum and assistance is given wherever possible to worthy applicants. It costs about $125 per year for board, heat and lights. There is no tuition charge, only an entrance fee of five dollars. Further information will be gladly given. Address, Lucy Rider Meyer, 4949 Indiana Ave., Chicago, Ill.

"A penny for your thoughts?"

They are worth more than that to us. We will pay for YOUR thoughts of the Richelieu.

We simply seek reasons why you believe the Richelieu Union Suits for women are the best.

We Want Ideas

$150.00 for best.
100.00 for 2nd best.
50.00 for 3rd best.
25.00 for 4th best.
10.00 each for 5 next best.
5.00 each for 10 next best.
75 Richelieu Union Suits for 75 next best.

All payments will be made in orders drawn by us on any underwear dealer you name.

Excepting where Richelieu Union Suits are designated orders will be honored for any merchandise desired, valued at from $150 to $5.00

Spelling, grammar or punctuation will not count. Tell your story in your own words--not over 200.

The only ideas considered will be those written on blanks furnished FREE at your dealer's underwear counter, where you may see the Richelieu; or furnished by us direct.

This opportunity is open and free to everybody, excepting employees of this company, and the best 94 ideas will be paid for as shown opposite. We reserve the right to publish such as we choose.

Replies will be received at the Richelieu Knitting Company's office, 65 Broad Street, Utica, N.Y., until November 30, 1911. Announcement will be made in the Saturday Evening Post, January 27th, 1912.

Richelieu Patented Union Suits for Women

"WIN-SUM"
Winter Summer

The only fine-ribbed union suit uniting without seams the weights for winter and summer.

For women who are precise in their demand for a light, seamless vest to be worn with a heavier lower garment, the "Win-Sum" is a decided innovation, and to many a long-wished-for relief. It is really a two-weight garment combined in one, knitted from the finest yarns to fit your particular figure and without side seams to worry or irritate the flesh.

"SEEM-LESS"
No side seams

The only fine-ribbed union suit knitted seamless to your form, from sleeve to hip, with thinner texture at the waist line. The one garment for discriminating women, who wish to feel well and look well.

The glove-like waist fit gives freedom and comfort beneath snug-fitting corsets, and induces the gown to hang neatly, gracefully, perfectly.

Unequalled in fabric, fit and finish; no waist seams to rub, rip or ravel.

If your dealer cannot supply you, we would thank you for his name and address, and will be glad to attend to your orders direct. Send your height, weight and bust measurements.

Priced from $1 to $3
Unusual booklet—FREE

RICHELIEU KNITTING CO.,
65 Broad Street, - - Utica, N. Y.

For years manufacturers of the famous Richelieu Summer Underwear.

Barcalo Buffalo

Buy Barcalo Unbreakable Beds

100 beautiful designs of brass or iron beds and cribs. Every one guaranteed for 35 years, built to be better than other metal beds, and with a very durable finish. $10 up.

Send for Booklet, FREE, mention furniture dealer's name. Look for the name Barcalo on every bed.

BARCALO MANUFACTURING CO.
No. 27 Louisiana Street, Buffalo, N. Y.

HARTSHORN SHADE ROLLERS

Bear the script name of Stewart Hartshorn on label. Get "Improved," no tacks required.

Wood Rollers Tin Rollers

The Heart of Mehitable

By R. L. WEATHERLOW

A LITTLE, ragged, unkempt urchin stood peering in through the slats of Miss Mehitable's garden fence at the old fashioned flowers that filled every available space of the small enclosure.

"Now I wonder what that little beggar wants," exclaimed Mehitable in a cross, grumbling tone to her crippled brother, who sat with clasped hands on the bar of his crutches that always stood beside his chair.

"Very likely he covets some of your bright flowers, Hittie," he returned.

"Well, he can covet, and that's all the good it will do him, the little ragamuffin! I'll go and send him about his business in quick time."

"Oh, Hittie! you wouldn't begrudge that little mite of humanity a few flowers! You would never miss them, and judging from his eager looks they would please him very much. Hittie, don't forget that little seeds of kindness go a great way in this world," admonished her brother.

"Oh, well, if I must, I must," she exclaimed irritably.

"And, Hittie, find out who he is, and where he comes from; he surely doesn't belong around here."

"Oh, nonsense, Abner! What do you care about every forlorn piece of human squalor that comes tramping this way? I get sick and tired of them. Your tender heart would make paupers of us, were you to have your way."

"Now, Hittie, I have cause to know that you're not half so hard-hearted as you make out. What am I but one of the unfortunates? And it makes me feel for those who are not blessed as I am with a loving sister to care for them."

"There it is again, Abner. Why will you trade on my weak points?" she said disgustedly, as she arose and proceeded down to the gate and accosted the little waif.

"Say, you little tramp, where did you come from? Where are your parents?"

"Didn't gotted any," he returned looking at her out of great solemn blue eyes.

"But who do you live with?"

"I don't live with nobody but Grannie."

"But where does Grannie live?"

"Oh, mostest anywhere."

"Well, where is mostest anywhere?"

"Dest now she's down the road," nodding his curly head in that direction.

"What does Grannie do?"

"Dest drives Billie and the wagon, and stops when she finds folkses what will give her work to do."

"What does she do that for?"

"Dest so's she can getted something for us to eat. But sometimes folkses are cross, and won't let her do nothing." And then, with an expressive shake of the head, and placing his dirty, pudgy hand to his stomach, he said, "We's most awful hungry."

"But why does Grannie travel that way? Why does she not stop somewhere and make a steady home?"

"Oh, she's dest looking for her son, what wented off somewhere, and she's never, never gotted a letter from him; see? And now, please, woman, won't you give me some of them nice flowers to take to Grannie? She likes flowers, 'tause I heard her talking to Dod in de nighted time when it was all dark about them."

"What did she say about flowers?"

"Oh, I can't mostest 'member all what she said, only she say, 'O Lord, please bringed me to my boy, and then let me goed home where booful flowers growed. I's so tired.'"

"Well, little boy, what is your name?"

"I didn't got much name."

"What does Grannie call you?"

"Dest Turly," he answered, wearily.

"You mean Curly," said Mehitable. "Es, ast the way Grannie says it," he answered; and now, woman, please give me some flowers; I's splained all I knowed, and Grannie will be waiting for me."

"But, Curley, aren't you hungry? Don't you want something to eat?" said Mehitable as she went vigorously snipping flowers here and there.

"Oh, 'es; I's mostest always hungry; but will you give me something to take to Grannie?" he eagerly inquired.

"But don't you want some for yourself?"

"I's liked some, 'tause I's hurted in my 'tumach."

"Mehitable Johns, you are a little fool to let your feelings be worked upon by such a dirty mite," she grumbled sotto voce, as a great lump came in her throat, and she hastily returned to the house and began filling a basket; then going to the gate she gave the boy a generous sandwich, and gathering up the flowers she had cut, she said: "Now, Curly, come along with me and I will go and see your Grannie."

So he, eagerly devouring the sandwich, went trudging down the road beside her.

"There is the wagon and Billie," he suddenly exclaimed.

And there beside the road, under the shade of a tree, stood a forlorn-looking covered wagon, and cropping the grass beside it was a scrubby pony that looked as though he too might have had a "hurted" stomach, but no Grannie was visible. On coming up to the wagon a feeble voice called out from within: "Curly, have you come at last? What has kept you away so long?"

"Oh, Grannie, I's broughted a woman with me." And springing into the wagon he knelt beside a form lying on some blankets.

Mehitable quickly followed, for she saw there was need of assistance.

"Why did you not tell me your Grannie was sick, Curly?"

"'Tause you didn't astest me," he answered.

"My poor woman, what is the matter, and what can I do for you?" At the same time she uncovered the basket; as she did so an eager gleam flashed into the sick woman's eyes. "Starved," murmured Mehitable to herself, as she propped the poor woman up and gave her something to eat, which she clutched with such vehemence that it startled her visitor.

After the sick woman had eaten all Mehitable thought prudent, she asked Curly if he could hitch up the pony with her help, and he, having his mouth filled with bread and jam, nodded his head, and they clambered out and began hitching up.

Mehitable grumbled, "I can't see what folks want to go and starve for in a country like this. Abner will think I have parted with my senses."

"Now, Curly, can you drive?" and he nodded again. So they started, Mehitable walking beside the wagon.

As they came in sight of the house, she saw Abner standing in the doorway leaning on his crutches, gazing out at the strange outfit in amazement. Coming down to the gate, he exclaimed: "What have you here, Hittie?"

"A poor sick woman," she answered laconically.

"My, my, Hittie! What will you do with them?"

"What do you suppose?" she answered brusquely. "Let 'em starve and die in sight of plenty?"

"No; oh, no; we couldn't do that."

Continued on next page

The Fashion Book You Want

This De Luxe Bedell Book of Fashions

Write for it To-day Sent Postpaid FREE

A big picture Fashion Book, showing every new authentic style. The largest, most costly, and most exclusive Fashion Book published. The recognized style authority, with superb lithographed colored cover, is yours for a postcard request.

Shop in New York FREE

The opportunity is yours to select your Fall wardrobe from New York, and pay the same low prices as the fashionable women who patronize Bedell's Famous New York Stores.

Just think of the opportunity—the comfort of shopping at your leisure in your own home and enjoying the same low prices.

ADDITIONAL ADVANTAGES

Think of being able to grasp opportunities like these without more effort than it takes to write a post card for this

Bedell Fashion Book Sent Postpaid FREE

Stylish Winter Coat Double Faced Mixture $5.98

Exactly Like Picture—Express Prepaid

No. 20 H—This extra special offering in a coat is made to form a lasting advertisement for the House of Bedell. We have spared neither work nor expense to have it perfect in every detail and you have never before had an opportunity to secure such a handsome, warm winter wrap at this price. The smart distinction is given by the fancy plaid back of the material used as a trimming. The model is the very last thought in design. It is full length, gracefully semi-fitting, and has the wide sailor collar, beautifully inlaid with the fancy plait back, and finished with tailored tab and a large ornamental button. The carefully shaped sleeve has a deep cuff of the plaid back, which has also been effectively used to fashion the deep patch pockets, the tailor stitched tab of the material button trimmed, carrying out the design of the collar. The one piece back is slightly fitted and has plaits from below hip to give the necessary fullness. The material is a heavy wool English cloaking, woven to resist severe weather, and of unexcelled wearing quality. It comes in diagonal stripes in mixtures of dark green and brown, with the plaid back in smart contrast. Seams well bound and tailor stitched. Avail yourself of this bargain. $5.98

We Pay all Mail or Express Charges to any town in the United States no matter where you live. We send every garment with our guarantee of perfect satisfaction, or your money back.

THE Bedell COMPANY 16-18 West 14th St. New York City

PATENT YOUR IDEAS

$8,500 offered for one invention. Book "How to Obtain a Patent" and "What to Invent" sent free. Send rough sketch for free report as to patentability. Patents advertised for sale at our expense in Manufacturers Journals.

Patent Obtained or Fee Returned

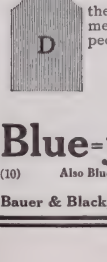
CHANDLEE & CHANDLEE, Patent Att'ys

Established 16 Years

925 F. Street, Washington, D. C.

I will send—as long as they last—my 25c. Book

Strong Arms



For 10c in stamps or coin

Illustrated with 20 full-page half-tone cuts showing exercises that will quickly develop, beautify and gain great strength in your shoulders, arms and hands, without any apparatus.

PROF. ANTHONY BARKER

226 Barker Bldg., 110 West 42d St., New York

Corns Ended or Your Money Back

Your druggist pays your money back if Blue-jay plasters don't remove the corn. This little plaster is attached in a jiffy, and the pain of the corn ends at once. Then a bit of soft B & B wax gently loosens the corn. In two days the corn comes out.

No pain, no soreness, no inconvenience. And the corn comes out. No more doctoring at all.

It is folly to have corns. Paring them is risky. Nursing them is fruitless. Corns should be removed. This simple method which we have invented is now used by millions of people. Go get a package now.

A in the picture is the soft B & B wax. It loosens the corn.
B protects the corn, stopping the pain at once.
C wraps around the toe. It is narrowed to be comfortable.
D is rubber adhesive to fasten the plaster on.

Blue-jay Corn Plasters 15c and 25c per package

(10) Also Blue-jay Bunion Plasters. All Druggists Sell and Guarantee Them.

Sample Mailed Free.

Bauer & Black, Chicago and New York, Makers of Surgical Dressings, etc.

The Heart of Mehitable

Continued from preceding page

Miss Mehitable bustled inside and began the vigorous preparation of a room for the sick woman. When all was ready she and Curly managed somehow to get her into the house, and after she had rested, Hittie brought fresh clothing, and after bathing and dressing her, soon left her in a sound, restful sleep.

Then she took the little boy and gave him a vigorous scrubbing, and, combing his curly locks, was astonished at the sweet face and wonderful eyes, that looked into her own with such a beseeching, thankful gaze.

"You's mostest awful dood, and will you let Grannie and me stay here forever and ever, in this booful place?" Then with an expectant unsatisfied mien he said: "Grannie always tisses me when my face is clean."

And Mehitable, startled out of herself, caught the little fellow in her arms and kissed him on both shiny cheeks. "Oh, you precious, innocent baby!" And tears shone in her eyes, and the love that is every woman's heritage for a helpless little child filled her heart.

Now, looking gravely into her eyes, he again asked the question: "Is you doing to let Grannie and me stay wif you?"

"Haven't you any one related to you and Grannie?"

"Nope; we's dest Grannie and me."

"You poor little beggar!" she murmured; "it looks as though it would be only me." And she took him with her and they turned the pony into the pasture.

"Now, Curly, can you play around while Grannie sleeps?" So she left him admiring the flowers, and went in where Abner was waiting to hear all about it.

In a few minutes the little boy came up to Abner and said: "She tolded me to come in and talk wis you. What does you want me to say?" Then looking wonderingly at the crutches, asked what they were for.

"Well, little man, you see I am obliged to use them to walk with," came the answer.

"What is 'bliged?" asked the little fellow; "is that what hurted you?"

"Oh, no!" laughed Abner; "I am afraid such big words are most too much for that little curly pate."

But the boy only looked with puzzled eyes at Abner and shook his little head over the problem.

"Now, listen, Curly. I was hurted, as you say, by a large piece of timber falling on me from a building, and my legs were crushed so I have to use these crutches to walk with; but I was more fortunate, or less so, I cannot say which, than a poor man who lost his life by the same piece of timber. Poor fellow!" he continued musingly; "I often wonder where his friends are, if he had any. We could not find them or any clue." Then looking into Curly's blue eyes, he suddenly exclaimed: "By the way, Curly, he had just such wondering blue eyes as yours."

"Did he have turly hair like me? 'tause if he did, his name mustest have been Turly too, 'tause that is whatest they called me Turly for."

"Is that all the name you have, my little man?"

"Dest all the name I knows of," he answered.

. . . .

The poor woman slept a long time, and when she awoke appeared much refreshed, but still very weak.

Mehitable gave her chicken broth, and dainties of her own manufacture, and when she seemed to have gained strength asked her to tell as much of her story as would enable them to know in what way they could help her.

She said she and her son lived in a little cottage they owned, and some years back he married and brought his little wife home. Everything went along smoothly until work became scarce, and he did not know what to do. Finally it was thought best for him to start out and see if he could not find work farther away from home. So he went, and he being a good carpenter soon obtained a short job some twenty miles away. After finishing that, he sent home nearly all the money, and wrote that he had heard of work farther on and would write as soon as he arrived there, but did not say where it was.

That was the last the poor wife and mother ever heard from him. Then began a terrible struggle to keep the wolf from the door. The mother went out to work at whatever she could find to do, the wife not being in a condition to do more than keep the little cottage and tend a small garden that gave them a few vegetables for the table. The terrible suspense and worry told on them both, and when the wife's hour of trial came she only lived long enough to look into the blue eyes of her little son and leave him a legacy for the grandmother's care.

But, alas! the grandmother would willingly have given up the struggle and lain down beside the daughter, had it not been for the sweet-faced baby that was so much like the father who had so mysteriously disappeared from their lives, and the thought that he might come back some day kept her from utter despair.

And now, as year after year went by without any word from him, she formed a plan that when Curly was old enough to travel, she would go in search of her boy, hoping to find some clue to his fate or whereabouts.

She had started with a little money, but that had soon given out; still she kept on, making inquiries as she went; at the same time stopping and doing work in a farmer's kitchen as their needs required.

Many had been very kind and fitted her out with enough to carry her a long way on her search. Others would treat her as a tramp; but she braved it all until the hardship and anxiety had sapped her strength. They were in dire straits, and when Mehitable found her she had been unable to provide for herself or Curly, and nothing had passed their lips, except a few crusts, for several days.

Mehitable had sat and listened to her story without interruption until she ceased speaking; then she asked what her son's name was.

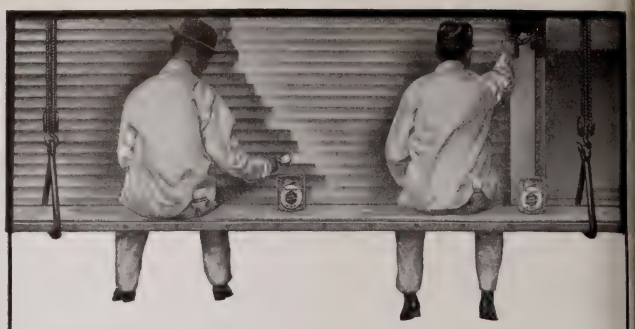
"Charles Howard," she replied.

"Now, Mrs. Howard, you rest a while; you have talked long enough." And leaving the room, she sought her brother.

"Abner," she exclaimed, "do you remember what that man's given name was who was killed when you so miraculously escaped?"

"Why, Hittie, I do not know as I ever heard it. All I remember was that he gave in the name of Howard."

"Abner, I do believe that man was this woman's son; his name was Charles Howard."



"Why, Hittie, it must be the same. Well, I will find out as soon as she is able to bear the inquiry. You remember there were a few things we found in his satchel after he was buried. I put them away thinking some day they might be the means of identification to his friends.

A number of days went by; still the sick woman did not appear to gain much strength, and the doctor told Hittie and her brother that there was not much hope for her recovery, she had gone beyond the limit of endurance.

So the next day Hittie asked her if she would remember the clothing her son wore when he left home.

"Oh, can I ever forget what he had on the last time I saw him? Why, Miss? What do you mean?" in a startled tone.

Continued on next page

PAINT that will not curl nor blister nor chip, paint that will not fade, that gives that fine appearance that every home should have, is the kind to choose when you paint the house exterior. Any other kind means a loss—means that you must buy more paint sooner than you should. Acme Quality House Paint, like all other

ACME QUALITY

Paints, Enamels, Stains and Varnishes is made for highest durability as well as beauty. Most economical because of its great covering power. Every shade made specially to avoid chemical reaction and insure greatest durability and beauty. And the result—the perfect, durable, non-fadable house paint that holds its fine appearance season after season.

Your dealer should have Acme Quality Paints and Finishes. If not, write us. Send to-day for the

ACME QUALITY PAINTING GUIDE BOOK

A complete painting handbook that suggests attractive treatments. Tells just what should be used for a given purpose and how. Beautifully illustrated in full color. Sent free. Address

ACME WHITE LEAD AND COLOR WORKS
Dept. O , Detroit, Mich.

PAINTS ENAMELS THE ACME QUALITY KIND STAINS VARNISHES

Let Us Send You Free the Handsome Book of Home Interiors

It is beautifully illustrated with photographs showing the wonderfully artistic effects possible with Utility Wall Board.

Every man or woman who owns or rents a home ought to have it.

Utility Wall Board is very tough and very durable fibre board. It is made in various lengths and widths and is attached directly to the studding—thus doing away entirely with the need for lath and plaster. It is waterproofed on both sides and is impervious to moisture, and once put on, is there to stay as long as the house lasts.

Can be decorated in any way you want—with wall paper and burlap—tinted and stenciled—painted or enameled for bathroom or kitchen. You can use it in a hundred ways in making over the old house—or building the new—Ask us for suggestions.

Utility Wall Board is more lasting than lath and plaster—more impervious to heat and cold—more nearly fireproof and soundproof—much more easily put on and much less expensive. You can put it on yourself, if you want, simply with a saw and hammer.

Write today for the book and a free sample

THE HEPPES COMPANY, 4511 Fillmore St., CHICAGO, ILL.

VELLASTIC is just what the name implies—soft like velvet and elastic.

VELLASTIC

Ribbed Fleece-Lined Underwear

VELLASTIC is made of patented ribbed fleece. Ribbed for elasticity and fit. Fleece-lined for warmth and comfort. Because of its peculiar weave, the fleece cannot knot, mat, or wear off.

For Men, Women and Children

Though medium weight, it possesses the warmth of heavy underwears. VELLASTIC is made in separate garments and union suits at 50c and up. Most dealers can supply you.

VELLASTIC is one of the famous Bodygard Underwears. Look for the Bodygard Shield. It is your safeguard.

Write for Bodygard Book No. 33

UTICA KNITTING CO., Utica New York

Makers of Bodygard Underwears, including Lambsdown, Twoiayr, Springtex, Airyknit.

Palestine Yielding to Change

Continued from page 971

his testimony that he was a Hebrew, by having cut in the rock on one side of the entrance a representation of the seven-branched candlestick, which was part of the Temple furniture of those times.

On the slopes of Mount Gerizim is a projecting rock which, when looked at from a certain standpoint, is not unlike the profile of a face. It has been known for many generations as "Jotham's Rock," and local tradition says that from the level platform on the top, Jotham uttered his parable about the trees. See Judges 9: 7. To any one wanting a fine view of the Vale of Shechem and the whole of the town of Nablous, there is no better view than from Jotham's Rock.

Companion of Gerizim, Mount Ebal has an attraction because of its associations with Joshua and the children of Israel; but to those who pass under its shadow, nothing is seen but the prickly pear bushes that grow and flourish on its slopes. These prickly pear plants are useful in many ways. First, they are used as hedges to the fields and gardens. Then again, they serve for food to both man and beast, for the camels make many a hearty meal off the juicy and thorn-covered leaf. During two months of summer, the native gets his share in the shape of the fruit that grows around the edges of the large leaf, and which presents a very pretty appearance when the pears are turning ripe. The edible part of the fruit is encased in a thick coating covered with innumerable invisible thorns. In summer, even on the hottest days, the fruit is ice-cold; hence it is very refreshing and acceptable. In the market towns of Palestine it finds a ready sale.

At most of the wells or springs may be found companies of women or girls, who have come to fill their jars or wash their clothes. In Samaria and Galilee, the water is carried in jars, not skins, as in other parts of the land. Girls in their teens often make three or four trips a day to fill their jars, and one wonders how they are able to carry on their heads such heavy weights.

There are many bits of pretty landscape and hill country to be seen in Palestine by those who have eyes for it. In the spring, just before harvest, many a patch of grain is made picturesque by having a few olive trees dotted about in it and a path running through it. The owners of the fields object to this trespassing, as it means loss to them, for both man and beast will help themselves as they pass through the field of grain. These paths remind us of the doings of the disciples in the days of our Lord.

In the towns and villages, one of the most interesting sights is the "needle's eye," which many have concluded is the small door in a larger one which is used only for small traffic. In the villages of Galilee there are many of these small doors cut into the larger gate that opens into the caravansary where animals are stabled for the night. Were it not for the large gate, nothing bigger than a donkey could get inside. With this illustration always in sight, the words of Jesus become plain, "It is easier for a camel to go through the eye of a needle, than for a rich man to enter into the kingdom of God" (Mark 10: 25.) To attempt to get a camel into the caravansary through the small door, would certainly be a hard job. It is one that is never attempted.

The Heart of Mehitable

Continued from preceding page

"Did he have a ring with the initials C. H. on it?"

"Oh, what do you know of my son?" she exclaimed. "Tell me quick."

And Hittie with much feeling told her how a stranger had come and hired with a builder who was putting up a barn close by, and had engaged board with her and her brother, who was one of the carpenters; and the following day, before they knew anything about him, a terrible accident happened, wherein he lost his life and her brother was made a cripple.

They had tried to find some clue to his friends, but all efforts had failed, as no one appeared to claim any kinship.

And the woman, with wide staring eyes, hoarsely said: "Show me the things."

Mehitable went and brought them in. As her eyes glanced over them, and Hittie handed her the ring, she grasped it exclaiming, "His father's ring that he prized so much. Oh God, help me to bear this!" and she swooned away.

Hittie flew for restoratives, but she worked over her for a long time before consciousness returned. Then when she realized that her quest was over, she lay talking to herself. "My poor Curly! An orphan, and his Grannie must soon leave him. Oh, what will become of my precious lamb?" And that was her plaint day after day as she grew weaker. In the meantime the sunny-haired Curly had found his way into the hearts of the brother and sister, until, all unspoken by either, they felt it would be hard to part with the quaint little fellow. Finally Hittie talked with Abner and they decided to adopt the child if his Grannie was willing. So Hittie told her they would take him and care for him as their own.

The poor woman clasped Hittie's hand in her trembling fingers and said: "May Heaven reward you for your kindness to the widow and fatherless!" And reaching underneath her pillow she drew forth the ring, and handing it to Hittie told her to keep it for Curly until he was old enough to understand.

. . .

Now Curly grieved a long time for his lost Grannie, but Mehitable blessed the day that her heart had softened to the baby waif, who came to bless and cheer two lonely lives.

Fanny Crosby and the Bowery

IN a recent letter to Superintendent Hallimond of the Bowery Mission Fanny Crosby, the blind old hymn-writer, gives this interesting reminiscence:

"I recall the period of more than sixteen years when it was my privilege to be a humble worker for the Bowery Mission. Hallowed communion carries me back to the fervent, heartfelt testimonies of those who, evening after evening, told of the peace flowing like a pure river which had entered their stained lives, and had washed away their sins, and made them clean. One evening, a man for whom we had been praying said (his face radiant with joy), 'Now I can meet mother in heaven, for I have found her God.' That night I wrote my hymn 'Rescue the Perishing.' I love your Mission and the men whom you are striving to save, and my hopes, my prayers, and my most fervent interests are still with the Bowery Mission.

"I can appreciate the feeling of Paul when he wrote the following to the church at Rome, and pray that when we all appear before our Father's throne, that I may say of the Bowery Mission, 'I thank my God through Jesus Christ for you all, that your faith is spoken of through the whole world.'"

Pozzoni's Complexion POWDER

